31st Indiana Eldership.—Some serious disaffection developed in the Eldership during the year, which required careful handling. At least five ministers were involved in the difficulties, but they are enrolled as present, and their cases were disposed of by a strong vote. The Eldership was presided over by a minister of mild but resolute disposition, and he kept the situation well in hand. The body met at Eel River Bethel, Wabash county, October 2, 1876. Seventeen teaching elders, twenty-seven ruling elders and three delegates reported. W. P. Small was elected Speaker; I. W. Lowman, Clerk, and I. Schrader, Treasurer. After some routine matters were disposed of, the cases of five ministers charged with non-co-operation came up one after the other. The first was that of J. Martin, one of the five who refused further to co-operate with the Eldership because it was in fellowship with Free-masonry. Without disposing of his case, that of E. B. Bell, another one of the five, was called. His license was withheld. Pending the consideration of Martin's case, the Committee on Resolutions reported the following: "Whereas, Free-masonry seems to be causing so much dissatisfaction in the Church, and inasmuch as some of the brethren look upon it as a great evil, and it seems to be the meat of offense; therefore, Resolved, That the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God have no fellowship with any person or persons belonging to any Secret Society." This would have adjusted the matter, but it was voted down, and Martin's license withheld. When the third name was called, that of B. F. Bear, a yea and nay vote was taken on the renewal of his license, resulting in yeas, 7; nays, 29. Next came the names of J. S. Shock and O. Clem, and "being asked if they would co-operate with those brethren belonging to Secret Societies, they refused to do so," and their licenses were withheld. And finally a resolution was adopted, declaring "that it is the sense of this body that the above-named brethren are dismembered, and no one to blame for it but themselves." Immediately the Licensing Committee reported "the name of J. S. Shock with an affirmative recommendation, and a license was granted him. A resolution "abandoning the itinerant system, and adopting the congregational, was defeated. While "the Eldership withdrew its support from the Mutual Aid Society," it continued the Sisters' Missionary Society, and commended its work. A Sabbath-school Convention, a Ministerial Association and a Pentecostal meeting were directed to be held, and committees were named to arrange for them. To prevent a disruption of the Eldership because of the disfellowshipping of five ministers, the Eldership refused to threaten to discipline churches which might "invite or permit any of those brethren not holding a license from this Eldership to preach for them;" but it insisted that "it is the duty of the churches to receive, co-operate with and support the ministers sent them by the Eldership." The territory was divided into eleven charges.

32nd Indiana Eldership.—Few Elderships had as large and efficient a lay representation as the Indiana Eldership. At the session held at Compton's School-house, Whitley county, beginning October 4, 1877, there were present twenty-two teaching elders and forty-six ruling elders. J. E. McColey was chosen Speaker; I. W. Markley, Clerk, and I. Schrader, Treasurer. The Eldership made all the arrangements for a Pentecostal meeting, a Sabbath-school Convention and a Ministerial Association, including the making of the programs. It agreed to "approve of and assist in any act to purge the evil of intemperance from the land." It also decided that in making up the Roll of each annual Eldership "only members present shall be enrolled. Some form of ordination of elders was agreed upon. Fort Wayne was made a part of Roanoke circuit, which had five preaching points. Besides this, there were six other circuits. The largest field—Blue River—had nine preaching points, with two pastors. J. Bumpus, Z. Garrison and W. Pearce were appointed General Evangelists. Encouragement was found in the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion, which showed during the year 235 conversions, 188 accessions, 159 baptized, and one church of forty-one members organized. The Opening Sermon of the Eldership was preached in the evening of October 3rd, by A. B. Slyter, and W. P. Small was designated to preach the Opening Sermon in 1878.

33rd Indiana Eldership.—The ranks of the Indiana ministry were reduced during the year by the deaths of two members. Not even the name of one can now be determined, as the Committee on Obituaries refers to him only as "one of our young ministers who has fallen, but away from home and friends." The other one was George Thomas, who was located at Pleasant Hill, Mo., and whom the Eldership regarded as "one of our fathers in Israel whom we had learned to love and esteem." The Eldership convened at Zanesville, Wells county, October 2, 1878, the Opening Sermon having been delivered by W. P. Small the evening previous. Upon the enrollment of members present twenty-one teaching elders were recognized, but the number of ruling elders fell to nine, with six delegates. J. Bumpus was chosen Speaker; I. W. Markley, Stated Clerk; E. Miller, Transcribing Clerk, and Isaac Schrader, Treasurer. Small decided to return to the Ohio Eldership, but the Eldership had two accessions of experienced ministers, Oliver, of the Ohio Eldership, and Ober, of the Texas Eldership, but later of the Illinois Eldership. Rejoicing in "the widespread revival on the subject of temperance," the Eldership was ready to do its full part to the end "that this good and much needed work of reform may go on until it shall sweep like a tidal wave over our whole land, and the entire liquor traffic shall be wholly overthrown." It also "recommended to all our ministers and people that they use only unfermented wine for Communion purposes when such can be secured." A course of studies was approved, and a committee was appointed to prepare one, and also a committee to examine ministers in said course. W. W. Lovett was the committee. The action of the General Eldership, to publish "The Workman," was approved. It laid down the principle, that "the actions of the Standing Committee are binding upon all members of the Eldership until either adopted or rejected by the Eldership at its first succeeding session." Seven items were named under which each pastor was to report after this Eldership. The sitting after evening services on Friday evening was "devoted to the interests of Fort Wayne Mission." The conclusions reached were: That "the mission can be sustained;" accepting "the proffer of W. W. Lovett to serve it." Lovett was also appointed "collecting agent to secure moneys and notes for the liquidation of the mission indebtedness." Besides Fort Wayne Mission, there were seven circuits, Oliver and Ober each being assigned to one. They were required to bring their transfers before entering on their fields.

34th Indiana Eldership.—A very generous feeling pervaded the Eldership of 1879. A sister led in the movement to restore the ministers who had been disfellowshipped. She was probably only an advisory member, though sisters were eligible as delegates. The Minutes only state that "on motion, Sister H. C. Smith, J. Bumpus and D. Keplinger were appointed as a committee to draft a resolution touching the uniting and reconciliation of those brethren who were dismembered from the Eldership." The committee reported: "That we heartily invite them to come back, and we will meet them on the one great platform of the word of God revealed to men, and we will do all in our power and by God's help to effect this much needed union." The Eldership approved this resolution. Ten of the twenty-one preachers were present, fourteen ruling elders and eighteen delegates. The Eldership made choice of W. M. Lovett for Speaker; I. W. Markley, Clerk, and I. Schrader, Treasurer. The recommendation prevailed, that "every minister of the Church of God put on the temperance badge, let it be a red or a blue ribbon; wear it, and keep it sacred before the people." W. W. Lovett was selected "to preach at the semi-centennial gathering." A resolution prevailed that "the Eldership agree that the month of October be used in finishing up the work on the circuits, and that all ministers be on their work by the first of November." Ministers were required to "work up a more systematic system of finances on all the circuits, and that the churches get up their subscriptions the first of the Eldership year, said subscriptions to be paid quarterly." The Eldership controlled the general meetings—Pentecostal, Sunday-school Convention and Ministerial Association. There were six circuits, with two General Evangelists. The debt on the Fort Wayne Mission at this time was "about five hundred dollars;" but as the Eldership had voted to sustain the mission, brethren were encouraged to give. Seven brethren offered $20.00 a piece to pay off the debt, on condition that the whole amount be raised. The Standing Committee, the Board of Missions and the Sisters' Missionary Society agreed to co-operate together to secure this end.

35th Indiana Eldership.—The Indiana Eldership in 1880 convened on Saturday, October 16th. The Opening Sermon was preached on Lord's Day evening, by I. W. Markley. Eleven teaching elders were present, and eleven absent. Eight ruling elders were present, and fourteen delegates, one of them a sister. A lay elder, Isaac Schrader, was chosen for Speaker, and another one, J. Mowrey, for Treasurer. And I. W. Markley was elected Clerk. The name of "Eldress McColey was dropped from the Roll of ministers of this Eldership" without an assigned reason. The Eldership resolved to "continue to demand legislation which will entirely prohibit both the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage." Desiring "all the reports of ministers to be made to appear on the Journals of the Eldership," it was directed that "there be a schedule of reports kept and published as an item in the Journals, to consist of the reports in full of all the ministers." The Eldership appointed the Pentecostal meeting and the Sunday-School Convention. The Ministerial Association was to hold its meeting at the same time and place with the Pentecostal meeting. The Eldership condoned the action of the Standing Committee in "having held several meetings contrary to rule, less than a quorum being present," on the ground "that the business thus transacted was not derogatory to the interest of the Eldership, except as a precedent;" but it "advised and insisted that at all times a quorum is necessary to the legal transaction of business." The Eldership had $699.00 in the Superannuated Fund; $4.50 in the Missionary Fund, and $17.62 in the Contingent Fund. The State of Religion in the Eldership inspired a hopeful spirit, as "the dark clouds are breaking away, and a bright future is looming up before us, and we feel confident that a great harvest will be gathered in the near future within the bounds of our Eldership." The Eldership acquiesced cheerfully in the request of the General Eldership "to collect at least twenty-five cents or more from each member of the Church for the support of the mission cause in general." It was decided "to hold a camp-meeting in the month of August," and a committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. When a license was granted to Geo. E. Komp, it was resolved that he "be ordained by the laying on of the hands by the ministry present." There being no minister in the Eldership willing to serve Ft. Wayne, the Board of Missions was directed "to correspond with any minister who would desire to serve" said mission, and to "secure a minister as soon as possible." Committees were appointed on Ministerial Association, Sunday-school Convention, and a "Board of Sisters' Mission" elected. A blank form was adopted for reports of ministers, containing twenty different items. The Report of the Stationing Committee contained six circuits, with an aggregate of forty-one preaching points. There were three General Evangelists, two General Missionaries and one Colporteur and General Assisting Minister.

36th Indiana Eldership.—October 3, 1881, was the date when the "thirty-sixth Annual Convention of the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God" began its session at Syracuse, Kosciusko county. There were enrolled as present twelve teaching elders, and nineteen ruling elders and delegates; while six teaching elders were absent. W. W. Lovett was elected Speaker; I. W. Markley, Clerk, and I. Schrader, Treasurer. Five minutes were fixed as the limit of "speeches upon the merits of any question," and "no member shall be allowed more than two speeches." The Standing Committee was made to consist of five members, defeating a motion to make it three, and "the one receiving the highest number of votes be announced as Chairman of the Committee." The Eldership expressed itself as in hearty "co-operation with the General Eldership in carrying forward its plans and purposes in the erection of the college building enterprise." It expressed its conviction that "an educated minister is necessary in order to the conversion of sinners and the building up of the church of the living God." It also concurred fully with all the other actions of the General Eldership; welcomed the General Collecting Agent for missionary funds, and advised "the brotherhood to contribute liberally to the work." The Eldership evidently felt that it had been insulted by the sending of certain documents to it from a minister of the German Eldership, and it gave evidence of its resentment by adopting a motion by B. Ober that "said documents be laid under the table." Misappropriation of "the Superannuated money on hand to the mission debt" was prevented by a motion by I. W. Markley "that we loan said money to the Board of Missions." The "missionary moneys on hand" were appropriated to the benefit of the Fort Wayne Mission. The Eldership was pronounced "one of the best we have enjoyed for a number of years. The wounds are fast healing over, and the joy and peace of former years are returning to our much-loved Zion. All hail to the few who have stood the storm."

87th Indiana Eldership.—When the session of the Indiana Eldership began on Monday morning, as it did in 1882, the members gathered on the Saturday previous. So Saturday evening, September 30th, and Sabbath, October 1, 1882, "were spent in religious services, preaching being had by E. Miller and William Booth, J. Bumpus delivering the Annual Sermon." Monday morning, October 2nd, the Eldership was constituted, after which W. W. Lovett was chosen Speaker; I. W. Markley, Clerk, and I. Schrader, Treasurer. The Sisters' Board of Missions, formerly elected by the Eldership, after making its report, was discontinued. It was declared to "have done efficient work in the interest of the mission work in the Indiana Eldership." The Board of Missions of the General Eldership having secured the services of I. W. Markley as General Missionary Collecting Agent, the Eldership reluctantly consented to release him, and expressed its "entire confidence in him," and strongly commended "him to the confidence of the entire brotherhood." "Prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage" was unanimously approved, as was "the submission of the proposed amendment to the State Constitution to the vote of the people at a special election." The Eldership strongly insisted on "the duty of all ministers to collect funds on their work when required by the Eldership to do so," and "those who refuse, or neglect to do so, shall be deemed derelict in their duty to this Eldership, and shall be called in question for such indifference." There were seven fields of labor, of which two were missions. There were also appointed one General Missionary, one General Evangelist and four General Workers.

88th Indiana Eldership.—As women could be ordained to the ministry in the Indiana Eldership and also represent churches as delegates, they enjoyed all other rights of members of the body. At the Eldership which convened at Beaver Dam, Kosciusko county, October 1, 1883, Libbie B. Shanks, Sarah Thomson, Elizabeth Mowrey, Eliza Jane Beaver, Eliza F. Komp and Caroline Barnett were delegates, and Libbie B. Shank was chairman of the Committee on Temperance, whose Report recommended "that the ministers and laity of the Church of God make diligent use of all legitimate means to educate the public sentiment in favor of total abstinence from all alcoholic drinks, and that all who have the right to vote see that they vote for no man for office, nor support any party which will not openly oppose a legalized liquor traffic, and favor the prohibition of the manufacture, sale and use of all intoxicants as a beverage." This was the Eldership's answer to the liquor men, who had formed "The Liquor League and Anti-Prohibition Party." The Committee also expressed its detestation of "the use of tobacco in all its various forms," as "the use of the poisonous narcotic is an extravagant, filthy and useless habit," and "entreated those of the ministry who are addicted to the use of tobacco to free themselves from this filthiness of the flesh." The organization of the Eldership was effected by the election of I. Schrader, lay elder, for Speaker; I. W. Markley, Clerk, and J. Simonton, Treasurer. The organization of local Missionary societies was encouraged, and they were urged "to hold their regular meetings and make every effort to raise funds to carry on the general mission work of the Church." Two teaching elders during the year had gone

"Where love has put off in the land of its birth
The stains it had gathered in this."

These two "beloved brethren" were Z. Garrison, Sr., and J. Walters. The last evening of the session was "set apart for memorial services in honor of their memory." After appointing one General Evangelist, one Missionary at Large and five General Workers, the Eldership defined a General Evangelist to be "a co-worker with the circuit preachers, and should assist them when called upon to do so, and to look up neglected points and organize new ones."

89th Indiana Eldership.—So large a proportion of ruling elders and delegates seldom constituted an Eldership as did so when the Indiana Eldership was organized at Oak Grove, Whitley county, Ind., September 29, 1884. There were forty-five members enrolled as present, of which thirty-two were lay members. Eight ministers were absent. A layman was elected Speaker—I. Schrader; a minister was chosen Clerk—W. W. Lovett, and J. Simonton, lay elder, Treasurer. There were no women enrolled as delegates, but seven were received and "made members during the present session." Two of them were placed on the Committee on Temperance, one on the Committee on Obituaries, and one of them, Maria B. Woodworth, was granted a license to preach. The Licensing Committee was given permission "to recommend persons worthy of exhorter's license, and such license shall be issued to them." A Sunday-school Evangelist was provided for, whose duty was to visit as far as possible all the churches of the Eldership, to organize Sunday-schools where there are none, and encourage those that are." J. C. Smith was appointed by the Eldership to this office. The Report of the Committee on Temperance made it "the duty of every minister during the coming year to preach a sermon or give a lecture, or cause a sermon or lecture to be given, at all his appointments against intemperance." The "wives of our ministers and delegates" were "requested to use their influence to secure the teaching of temperance in all our Sunday-schools." The importance of pastoral visitation was emphasized by the adoption of a resolution making it "the duty of all ministers in charge of circuits or stations to visit all the members of said charge at least four times each year." Every minister was required "to attend the Sunday-School Convention, unless providentially hindered." The Eldership rejoiced "in the success that has attended the efforts of the churches in the past year." The Treasurer was required to give bond in the sum of $1,000.00. There were seven circuits and one mission—Doann. Mrs. M. B. Woodworth was appointed Eldership Evangelist. Some of the money in the funds of the Eldership were diverted, and were appropriated to Ft. Wayne Mission as "borrowed."

40th Indiana Eldership.—The Eldership which convened at Union, Union township, Huntington county, Monday morning, September 28, 1885, had something of a thanksgiving festival over the preceding Sabbath, closing with the Opening Sermon in the evening by J. Bumpus. "For the work thus accomplished," they said, "we give to God, the Great Head of the church, all the glory and honor." "It has been a work of which any people may well be glad and thankful." And while they "rejoiced in the success of the past," their "hearts were filled with hope for the future." The membership present consisted of thirteen teaching elders, two exhorters, and twenty-seven ruling elders and delegates. They made choice of I. W. Markley for Speaker, and W. W. Lovett, Clerk. The Licensing Committee was elected, instead of appointed by the Speaker. The three annual meetings—Pentecostal, Sabbath-school Convention and Ministerial Association—were under the supervision of the Eldership, which through appropriate committees prepared programs and fixed times and places. The liquor traffic was denounced as "a disgrace and a detriment to our civil, social and moral interests, and a sin against God and the highest interests of humanity," and "an enemy of all righteousness." It was decided to "sell the Ft. Wayne Mission property, and pay the debts thereof." "Through the open door of death" the Eldership saw "the haven" which had beckoned one of their number thence, in the person of Wm. Booth, and it expressed its deep sense of loss in the departure of so useful a minister. The College enterprise and the publications of the Church were cordially endorsed; while special mention was made of the "Plea of the Church of God," the "Centennial Sermon" of R. H. Bolton. The "Publishing House and Book Rooms" established at Harrisburg shortly before the Eldership convened, was highly appreciated, and commended "to the liberal patronage of the brethren." J. E. McColley, who had "dissolved his relation with the Eldership," appeared, gave his report and was given "a right royal welcome," and "warmly, earnestly and in the spirit of Christian love and confidence" was reinstated "in his former relations." Some restraint was thrown around Mrs. Woodworth by advising her "to conduct her labors in the interest of the Church of God." Funds were quite limited, as J. Simonton, Treasurer, reported "received in cash, $3.81; Contingent Fund, $44.62; Superannuated Fund, $3.57; Mission Fund, $16.00." There were seven circuits, one unsupplied, with Mrs. Woodworth, General Evangelist.

41st Indiana Eldership.—During the year it developed that a small indebtedness on "the Adams county church property," which had been placed in the hands of a committee, made it advisable to effect a sale. And as the debt had "to be paid immediately" the trustees of the Eldership were authorized to sell the property. While such failures had a tendency to dampen the zeal of the body, yet it "was glad in God to learn of the unusually large number of conversions, baptisms and accessions that have occurred during the past year." The year ended when the Eldership convened at Potter's, Allen county, Monday, September 27, 1886. On the Sunday evening previous F. Komp delivered the Annual Sermon. Only six of the twenty-five ministers were absent; twenty-nine lay elders and delegates were present. John Huff, Iowa, Secretary of Findlay College, was in attendance, which incited the Committee on Education to report a very strong series of resolutions in commendation of the work of the Board of Trustees. The churches were exhorted to give liberally toward the Endowment Fund. The Christian Mission Church was represented by Isaac Crago, who applied for, and received, license to preach, along with H. H. Spiher, E. H. Shanks, C. P. Dilts and J. F. Pence. W. W. Lovett, on a motion, was appointed on Thursday forenoon to "preach a doctrinal sermon to-night, setting forth the distinctive doctrines of the Church." The Eldership resolved "to do all in our power by voice, example and ballot, and money if necessary, in order to banish the saloon from our land." No minister had died during the year, but according to rule or custom the Committee on Obituaries gave the names and residences of deceased members of local churches "who had been transplanted from the church militant to the church triumphant," thirteen in number. The fields of labor had increased to ten, one being in charge of Spiher, Evangelist, lying between the two Elderships in the State.

42nd Indiana Eldership.—The Indiana Eldership again honored a layman by electing Isaac Schrader, Speaker, to preside over the session which began at Columbia City, Whitley county, September 26, 1887. Twenty-two of the thirty teaching elders were present, and thirty-six ruling elders and delegates. W. W. Lovett was chosen Clerk, and I. W. Markley, Treasurer. Sale of part of the Ft. Wayne lot was effected "to pay off certain claims against the property and the Eldership," and the remaining part of the property was "assigned to I. W. Markley, he making up the deficit." The Stationing and Standing Committees were composed of five members each, one on each being a layman. The Woodworths, husband and wife, after their reports, were granted transfers to the Southern Indiana Eldership. Trustees of the Pleasant Ridge Bethel were instructed to sell the property, as the "house is not fit for church purposes." Consideration of the interests of Findlay College was made a special order, J. M. Cassel, of Ohio, College Agent, addressing the Eldership. Sentiments of approval were voiced in the resolutions. The churches in some localities had trouble with "a certain sect, calling themselves 'Saints,' " whom the Eldership charged with "forcibly monopolizing bethels owned by the local churches of God 'in trust.'" They had thus secured the use of the house at Beaver Dam "for every alternate Sunday;" but the Eldership did "not endorse the said compromise," but declared it "null and void." The Eldership was still not in favor of insisting on "uniformity of observing the ordinances." "New churches," it declared, "are being formed, new houses built, new points are being taken up, for which we have great reason to be encouraged." The W. C. T. U. and its work were endorsed, and the body declared that it "will not support any man for public office who will not fearlessly lift his hand and voice against the great curse of the liquor traffic and in favor of its total prohibition." Though the property at Ft. Wayne had been assigned, the work had not been abandoned, for of the ten appointments Ft. Wayne is classed as a station, with W. W. Lovett as pastor.

43rd Indiana Eldership.—The Act of Incorporation, by direction of the Eldership in 1887, was inquired into by a committee created for that purpose. It reported "the papers on Act of Incorporation too elaborate; some Articles could be abridged, and others left out altogether." The Committee advised that they be rewritten, and alterations made. This was done, and at the session of 1888 the "Acts of Incorporation" were readopted. They were called "Articles of Association," and declared "the object of this Association is to be the annual conference of the Indiana Eldership of the Church of God, convened for the purpose of transacting business pertaining to said conference: For the better control of its members; the dissemination of Bible truth; to organize local churches; to purchase, hold and convey real estate for religious, educational and benevolent purposes, and to protect and keep the same in good repair." Art. II. repeats the name and place of residence of each subscriber. The third Article fixes the membership—"all the teaching and ruling elders;" gives during the interim between sessions all power to a Standing Committee of five, and specifies the officers and outlines their duties. This brief Act was approved by the "Association." The business of the session, which was held at Syracuse, Kosciusko county, beginning October 1, 1888, was conducted by the re-elected officers of 1887, and J. Bumpus, Treasurer. E. Miller had preached the Opening Sermon on Sunday evening previous. Seventeen ministers were present, and eleven absent, with thirty-two ruling elders and delegates. During the year A. Anglemire entered into his final rest, having the confidence and esteem of all his fellow ministers. "Sister B. D. Masters passed a favorable examination," and "a license was granted" her. While the funds were meager, the Eldership cheerfully "apportioned the General Eldership mission money" to the different churches. These churches were by name included in the ten fields of labor, and numbered forty. "Fort Wayne Mission" was part of the Zanesville circuit.

44th Indiana Eldership.—While at the Eldership held at Butler, DeKalb county, beginning September 28, 1889, only thirteen of the twenty-seven ministers were present, there were in attendance thirty ruling elders and delegates. These controlled the election, and for the third time in succession elected one of their number, Isaac Schrader, to preside. W. W. Lovett for the sixth session, except when in 1886 he was Speaker, was chosen for Clerk. The Pentecostal meeting, the Ministerial Association and the Sunday-school Convention continued under the control of the Eldership. While "the Board of Missions reported nothing done during the year," the body strongly urged "the ministers and churches to put forth all possible effort to extend the borders, hold all the points of work now in possession, and gain new ones." The Women's Home Mission Society "had been doing good work," which was approved and commended. Josephine Woods was "appointed to look to the organization" of societies throughout the Eldership. The Board of Missions was empowered "to appoint missionaries and levy assessments as they deem necessary for the extension of our Zion." Arrangements were agreed upon to select "a course of reading for all ministers under five years' membership." To make surer of having loyal men on its fields of labor, the Eldership decided "to appoint no man to fill appointments who is not in harmony with the rules and practices of this Eldership." On education and the College there was a strong favorable sentiment which was embodied in a few suitable resolutions. The publications of the General Eldership were heartily endorsed. Two ministers were adjudged "untrue to the doctrines and practices of the Church," and declared "unworthy of our fellowship." The Eldership voted in favor of "the enactment of laws prohibiting the sale and use of intoxicating liquors." "The increase of membership during the past year, the occupation of new fields, the erection of new houses of worship and remodeling of old ones," the Committee on the State of Religion declared gave "unmistakable evidence of the zeal and spirituality which characterize the ministry." Leaving Ft. Wayne "unsupplied," the Stationing Committee made appointments to ten other fields of labor, with two "Helpers," one "General Evangelist" and one "General Solicitor," whose duty it was "to see that the various assessments are collected." The addition of four newly licensed ministers to the Roll gave the Eldership men enough for its territory.

45th Indiana Eldership.—The Indiana Eldership did not look with approval on the action of the General Eldership in 1890 relative to the order in which the twin ordinances of God's house should be observed. No opposition, however, was made on the floor of the General Eldership; but when the matter was brought before the Annual Eldership session, held at Collamer, Whitley county, beginning September 27, 1890, it "was indefinitely postponed by an aye and nay vote." W. W. Lovett, who was President of the General Eldership in 1890, and endorsed its action on the subject, was also President of the Indiana Eldership in 1890, and J. A. Wood was the Clerk, and J. Bumpus, Treasurer. There were twenty-eight ministers in attendance and thirty ruling elders and delegates. "Routine business was the order, with no discussions of interest." The majority of the members of the Eldership were apparently sensitive on the question of the order of the ordinances, and indisposed to consider the recommendation of the General Eldership on the subject. When the resolution was introduced, "That we advise ministers and churches of the Indiana Eldership that they conform to the advice of the General Eldership in the observance of the ordinances," it was first "ordered laid on the table." There were eleven appointments, and thirty-four churches.

46th Indiana Eldership.—Temporary "hurt to the Eldership" followed the action of 1890 on the order of the ordinances, and "lines of division are being drawn." This fact doubtless accounted for the absence of sixteen of the thirty-one ministers from the session of 1891. "A goodly delegation of ruling elders and delegates was present." The body convened at Auburn, DeKalb county, September 26, 1891, remaining in session until the 28th. The officers elected were—President, I. W. Markley; Clerk, W. W. Lovett; Financial Clerk, Isaac Schrader; J. Bumpus, Treasurer. Interest centered to quite an extent on the delinquency on Mission Fund assessments by the General Eldership. It verified the scriptural principle of "guilty in one thing, guilty in all." The spirit of non-co-operation spreads. "Many of the ministers of the Eldership are too careless as to this Fund," is the Correspondent's comment. And he added: "A revolution as to collecting this Fund in the Eldership must in some way be brought around." "Nothing was done as to the non-co-operation of certain ministers of the Eldership with regard to the usages of the general body." During the year occurred the death of Mrs. Elizabeth McColley, who was licensed to preach in 1863. Memorial services were held, and suitable expressions of esteem were entered on the Journal. There were thirteen fields of labor, with a total of thirty churches; but for want of active ministers some fields were unsupplied. Provision was made by the Eldership for the Ministerial Association, Sunday-school Convention and Pentecostal meeting.

47th Indiana Eldership.—During the Eldership year 1891-2 the Board of Trustees carried into effect the action of the Eldership in 1891, authorizing the sale of the Ft. Wayne Mission property. It was sold on April 8, 1892, to the Plymouth Congregational church, for $2,725. This sum, minus expenses, was "converted into a Permanent Church Extension Fund." The session of the Eldership was held at Olive Branch Bethel, Miami county, where the Opening Sermon was preached on Sunday evening, September 24, 1892, by J. Bumpus. On Monday morning the Eldership convened for business, when the enrollment showed a membership of twenty-eight ministers and twenty-seven ruling elders and delegates. The ballot for officers resulted in the choice of I. W. Markley for President; S. W. Shultz, Clerk; J. Bumpus, Treasurer. The Licensing Committee was elected, instead of being appointed by the President. A Pentecostal meeting, Sunday-school Convention and Ministerial Association were provided for. The three funds were low, the Contingent Fund being 84 cents overdrawn; Building Fund had a credit of $71.45, and the Mission Fund was square. The Eldership declared that it "will vote and pledge our utmost endeavors, religiously, socially, politically and financially, against the sale and use of intoxicating liquors." It was "delighted over the growing sentiment in the Church in favor of a better educated ministry," and believed it to be the "bounden duty of the Eldership to urge in every laudable way our young men contemplating the ministry to secure for themselves the advantages offered by a liberal education." The state of religion was "encouraging and hopeful," and there was "an increase of substantial members, with a bright outlook for the future." An assessment of $152.00 was made on the churches for missionary purposes. Five specific "duties were required of all ministers receiving charges." These were: 1. To preach two sermons on temperance at each appointment. 2. To urge all members to read the Church literature. 3. To visit every family of his charge twice during the year. 4. To hold quarterly meetings, at which all matters of differences shall be adjusted and the minister's salary paid up. 5. Assist in organizing W. M. societies at all the appointments. The Treasurer's bond was fixed at $4,000.00. There was one station, and the balance of the territory was divided into seven circuits. J. Bumpus was the General Evangelist, and N. W. Fuller, General Missionary. The Eldership was "the most pleasant and profitable held for a number of years."

48th Indiana Eldership.—The forty-eighth session of the Indiana Eldership was in a number of particulars dissimilar from previous ones. The attendance was large—twenty-one ministers and twenty-four ruling elders and delegates, four of them women. An unprecedented number of prominent subjects were discussed at length, and actions taken with great unanimity. The body convened at Trinity Chapel, Wells county, October 2, 1893. The Annual Sermon was delivered on Sabbath evening, October 1st, by I. W. Markley. W. W. Lovett was elected Speaker; Lewis B. Fretz, Clerk. The plan to raise funds for the liquidation of the College debt adopted by the General Eldership was approved, and each pastor was instructed to solicit $1.00 per member of each church on his field. The Report on Temperance of the General Eldership was adopted. Instead of taking action on the proposition changing the name, style and title of Elderships, a resolution was agreed to, asking "the East Pennsylvania Eldership to publish through The Advocate, or otherwise, its reasons for the request to change its style and title, that we may intelligently act thereon." On "the itinerant system" the conviction was expressed "that said system should be continued by us as a people." The question of Life Certificates of Ordination, submitted by the General Eldership, was carefully considered, and a resolution adopted, "that it is the sense of this Eldership that the yearly renewal of licenses is preferable." The "ordination of ministers by the laying on of hands" was "disapproved, esteeming the giving of a license to preach the gospel and perform all the functions of the ministry to be sufficient ordination in every particular." The amount of the Ft. Wayne Mission Fund aggregated $2,644.93. Other Funds were comparatively low. The appointments consisted of five stations and five circuits, two of them unsupplied. J. Bumpus was appointed General Missionary; J. E. McColley, General Evangelist; T. H. Stewart, General Worker; W. W. Lovett, General Superintendent. The state of religion as reported was such as to "impress the Eldership with the thought that there are many reasons for great rejoicing and hopeful anticipations." The ministers received better support; various "points have gained in membership."

49th Indiana Eldership.—Prosperous conditions prevailed throughout a great part of the territory of the Indiana Eldership following the session of 1893. The work of the Eldership in 1894 was, therefore, taken up with "zeal, energy and in a Christ-like spirit." The meeting was held at Potter's Station, Allen county, from September 30th to October 2nd, inclusive. The eleven fields of labor were represented by twenty of the twenty-seven teaching elders and twenty-nine ruling elders and delegates. J. W. Bloyd was made President; J. E. McColley, Jr., was chosen Clerk; Wm. Schrader, Treasurer. A "membership fee of 25 cents" was collected. The Church Building Fund had to its credit $130.35; the General Mission Fund, $45.47; the Permanent Mission Fund, $146.00. The deferred question of Eldership titles was acted upon, and it was decided that "the Eldership of the Church of God be deemed the proper title." The amount of "$1,000.00 of Findlay College debt was assumed, to be paid on or before ten years, giving note bearing 6 per cent. interest," and "a man be placed in the field to secure notes and pledges to bear 6 per cent. interest." The Eldership was to have a scholarship of $1,000.00, which was an objectionable feature to other Elderships, and required adjustment. Geo. E. Komp was named as collector. Assessments for the Mission Fund were made on the twenty-eight churches of the eleven appointments, amounting to $473.00. These "assessments are to be collected by the ministers in charge of the several churches on or before the annual meeting of the Eldership."

50th Indiana Eldership.—Internal evidence clearly indicates that the Indiana Eldership was a well organized body. It had all the interests of the Church under good control. Among its members were ministers as well as laymen who brought to its business management not only a sound judgment, but practical administrative experience, and a determination to subordinate other considerations to efficiency. It early in its history provided a Committee on Business, which kept diligent watch over the proceedings, and saw to it that no interests were overlooked. This was the case at the session which was held at Oak Grove Bethel, Whitley county, beginning September 30, 1895. As this was Monday, the members gathered on Saturday, and there was preaching on Saturday evening by M. S. Hemminger; Sabbath morning, by I. W. Markley, and on Sabbath evening the Opening Sermon was delivered by J. Bumpus. Twenty-seven ministers and thirty-seven ruling elders and delegates were enrolled. The election resulted in the choice of I. W. Markley for President; Geo. E. Komp, Clerk, and William Schrader, Treasurer. The sisters were active in mission work, having organized local societies under the Eldership Woman's Missionary Society, which was required to report to the Eldership. The Eldership also had under its control the Ministerial Association, Sunday-school Convention and Pentecostal meeting, and appointed committees, arranged the programs and appointed preachers. Opposition and criticism make friends. The more so if there is no evidence of resentment, and one goes on in the line of duty contemplating it with callous patience and Christian fortitude. And so when other Elderships closed their doors against Mrs. Woodworth, and prominent ministers assailed her, the Indiana Eldership, from which she received her first license, "recognized her successful efforts," testified to "the great number of her friends," and "most heartily invited her and her co-workers to come as soon as possible and hold a series of meetings within the bounds of the Indiana Eldership." The Eldership had "a delinquent debt" caused by "churches failing to pay in their full assessments," and to protect faithful churches directed the Clerk to give them receipts in full, and thus "release them from future responsibility as to the payment of the delinquent debt." Censure was threatened upon any minister or church refusing to provide for the payment of arrearages. The use of "unfermented wine for the Lord's table" was encouraged. The Treasurer was required to give bond in the sum of $5,000.00. The assets of the Eldership were notes to the amount of $2,496.45, Permanent Mission Fund; Mission Fund receipts, $220.50; General Eldership Mission Fund, $80.66, and Church Building Fund, $155.35. On the questions submitted to the Annual Elderships by the General Eldership it was decided that the delegates be "instructed that we are satisfied with our present title;" that they "go uninstructed regarding ordination of ministers." There were nine fields of labor, with twenty-nine appointments. J. E. McColley, Sr., was made the General Evangelist, and H. A. Croy, General Missionary.

51st Indiana Eldership.—The fact that at this time the Indiana Eldership had but nine fields of labor, or but nine of its twenty-seven ministers were in the active work, probably accounts for the fluctuations in the number present at different Elderships. Eighteen were in attendance in 1896; but there were thirty-two lay delegates, of which number at least four were sisters. The Eldership convened "with the church at Blue Ridge, Whitley county, on Saturday, September 26, 1896." On Sunday evening the Annual Sermon was delivered by M. S. Hemminger. The body was organized by the election of J. W. Bloyd, President; I. W. Markley, Clerk; Wm. Schrader, Treasurer. The delegates to the General Eldership were required to report, and "J. Bumpus gave a glowing account of said meeting." On certain questions on which the General Eldership had at times acted, the Indiana Eldership was more than sensitive. This spirit developed on the part of some with reference to the change in Eldership titles made by the General Eldership in 1896, and it was moved by J. E. McColley, Sr., that "we retain the old title;" but "the motion was lost," and one adopted, on motion of I. W. Markley, agreeing to "the title as fixed by action of the late General Eldership of the churches of God." The preachers were authorized "upon entering on their fields to call together the church councils, and enter into contracts with them;" and said contracts were to be placed on file with the Secretary of the Standing Committee for approval. "Many appointments" having been "lost by ministers dropping them," the Eldership insisted "that ministers shall not quit serving an appointment without being properly released by the Standing Committee." By some rearrangement of circuits, the number was reduced to eight.

52nd Indiana Eldership.—During the year additional reasons were furnished the Indiana Eldership for standing in defense of Mrs. Woodworth. The Board of Missions of the General Eldership in June, 1897, made it a condition to the appropriation of missionary money to any point in the Southern Indiana Eldership that said "Eldership withdraw its relationship from Sister M. B. Woodworth." Considerable indignation was felt at this action by the Indiana Eldership, and at its session held at Evergreen Bethel, Whitley county, beginning Saturday, September 25, 1897, a resolution embodying a strong "protest against the action of the Board" was adopted. Preaching on Saturday evening by M. S. Hemminger; Sabbath morning by President C. Manchester, and the Annual Sermon in the evening by I. W. Markley. When the Eldership was constituted on Monday morning twenty-four ministers and forty-one lay delegates were enrolled. Of the latter six were women. W. W. Lovett was elected Speaker; J. E. McColley, Jr., Clerk; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer, and G. E. Komp, Financial Clerk. There was general rejoicing over the spiritual condition of the churches and the progress made during the year. The ministers gave "glowing reports" of the year's work. Y. P. S. C. E. work was taken up by the churches to such an extent that instructions were given the Committee on Program to consider the societies in arranging the program for the Sunday-school Convention. The Eldership having decided to give licenses to exhorters, one person was granted such a license. William S. Vaught, a minister of the Baptist Church, was ordained, who, with L. A. Luckenbill, "was formally ordained by the laying on of hands." The eight fields of labor had twenty-five preaching places. Four ministers were appointed "General Evangelists," and fifteen "General Missionaries."

was held at Columbia City, Whitley county, September 24th to 28th, and was attended by thirty-one ministers and forty-three ruling elders and delegates. There was one minister, J. R. Omwig, added by transfer from the Michigan Eldership; and J. H. Bloyd, an ordained minister of the United Brethren Church, was received and licensed. W. W. Lovett was elected President; J. E. McColley, Jr., Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Clerk; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. The President of Findlay College, O. Manchester, was made welcome by a cordial reception, and by appropriate resolutions in favor of "co-operation with him and the authorities of the College in liquidating the indebtedness on said institution." The number of charges was nine, with a total of twenty-four churches. The Eldership had a season of religious services and preaching on Saturday evening and through the Sabbath preceding the business session on Monday morning. On Sabbath evening the members, with the church at Columbia City, listened to the Opening Sermon, by George E. Komp. Commendable interest was taken in Christian Endeavor work. The Convention was held in connection with the Ministerial Association, at which these questions were canvassed: "The objective in C. E. Work;" "the organization of C. E. societies in the churches of this Eldership;" "plans of work;" "how can ministers aid in C. E. Work," and "the organization of C. E. societies in the churches of this Eldership, how effected."

54th Indiana Eldership.—The Indiana Eldership had its dissensions and troubles. These sometimes were the result of doctrinal differences, and at other times they grew out of personal antagonisms. Not even all ministers display that moderation and restraint, or that balance and reasonableness which are wholly convincing as to the integrity of their conduct. But the Eldership, after being vexed for several years by scandal-mongers, decided to put an effectual check upon their disturbing influence. At the session held at Helmer, beginning October 2, 1898, a resolution was adopted, declaring that "the Eldership will hear no grievances from any one, in any of its future sessions, that have not been preferred in the form of charges at the stipulated time previous to the Eldership, or the time of trial." This was no immunity to guilty parties, but a measure to close the mouths of whisperers whose love of the brethren was only "hate grown cold." When these are brought to the test their complaints are evidential of a degree of evasion and an economy in the truth that is something characteristic. Hence, the further plain, caustic language employed: "Any one coming to the Eldership for the purpose of slandering, or of crippling the influence of any of the members, shall receive the censure of the entire body, and be invited to go home." Reviewing the proceedings of the session a devoted worker expressed the hope "that right has prevailed in everything done, and that God's name has been glorified." He voiced its opposition "to any change made in the basis for delegates to the General Eldership." The number of reported conversions during the year was 156; baptized, 70; accessions to the churches, 149. The number of fields of labor as arranged by the Stationing Committee was nine, all supplied with pastors. The officers of the session were as follows: Speaker, George E. Komp; Clerk, J. E. McColley, Jr.; Financial Clerk, L. A. Luckenbill. The W. M. S. had reported sixty members.

55th Indiana Eldership.—The interest in the sessions of some of the Elderships this year was increased by the presence, preaching and addresses of the College Agent, J. C. Forncrook. This was the case at the Indiana Eldership, where he preached on Sunday morning, and in the evening the Opening Sermon was delivered by A. McClellen. Forncrook was also given an hour during the session "to present the interests of Findlay College." The Eldership convened in the Silver Creek Bethel, Fulton county, October 1, 1900, with quite a full attendance. Among the lay delegates were three sisters, who were assigned on committees. The officers elected were A. McClellen, President; G. R. Gano, Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Clerk; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. Assessments had been made for General Eldership Missionary and Contingent Funds, and all paid in full except seven churches. On temperance, the Eldership regarded "the sin of intemperance the greatest curse of the present age;" that "the liquor traffic can not be legalized without sin," and resolved "to do all that is within our power, in accord with God's word, to suppress this great evil." "Quite a number of conversions, baptisms and additions to the churches" was reported. An exceptional action was taken relative to articles in The Advocate on "Mesmerism," "Hypnotism," "and other kindred subjects," in which the author's name was mentioned. It was common to refer names of ministers to the Standing Committee, because of failure to report, four being thus referred at this Eldership. Not infrequently this resulted in the forfeiture of their licenses. Fourteen fields of labor were reported by the Stationing Committee; but five were connected with other fields to secure enough pastors. There were, however, nine "General Missionaries."

56th Indiana Eldership.—The Roll of members "composing the Eldership" in 1901 contained the names of twenty ministers and thirty lay delegates. Ministers were enrolled as "Ministerial delegates." The session was held at Mt. Tabor Bethel, Kosciusko county, September 29th to October 2nd. L. A. Luckenbill preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of September 28th. A. McClellen was elected President; B. D. Eden, Journalizing Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Secretary; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. The Eldership had $1,800.00 in notes in its Permanent Mission Fund, and nearly $1,000.00 in mortgages and cash. The Church Building Fund had $208.61. The Apportionment Committee, in addition to the usual assessments, was authorized "to make an assessment to meet the expenses of delegates to the General Eldership in 1902;" but the Committee recommended that the expenses be paid out of "the interest on the Permanent Mission Fund." There seemed to be no objection, or protest, against such a use of missionary funds. "Good work was done during the year for the Master, and there was advancement made in all lines of Church work. There were quite a number of conversions and accessions." Threatened division of the church at Olive Branch, owing "to certain influences working against the brotherhood and former pastor," was averted by prompt and decisive action to "rescue the church from the leadership" of non-co-operative persons. Renewed complaints were voiced in resolutions against the writings of certain parties whose articles in The Advocate were giving offense. Any church "going beyond the borders of the brotherhood to procure a pastor" was declared to be "non-co-operative and liable to the censure of the body."

57th Indiana Eldership.—To devote the first half day of the session of an Eldership to a "spiritual social service" was wholly unique. This was the case at the Indiana Eldership in 1902. The members gathered at Oak Grove, Whitley county, on Saturday, September 28th. Preaching on Saturday evening by B. D. Eden; Sabbath morning, by J. Bumpus, and the "annual address was delivered by A. McClellen on Sabbath evening." The Eldership convened on Monday morning, and "the entire forenoon was taken up by an unusually interesting and spiritual social service." After constituting the Eldership, composed of twenty-six ministerial and forty-four lay delegates, a newly organized church in Michigan, and one at Akron, Ind., were received. In the list of ministerial delegates are the names of two sisters—Emma Isenberg and Maria B. W. Etter. J. E. McColley was chosen President; I. W. Markley, Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Clerk; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. The Permanent Mission Fund had to its credit $2,300.00 in notes, and $685.90 in cash. A "membership fee" was required, and was increased from 25 cents to 50 cents; "and no name to appear on the Roll unless the fee is paid." "Strong and earnest co-operation on all lines" was affirmed to be "absolutely necessary to the preservation and perpetuation of the Eldership." "Sectionalism" was declared to be "dangerous," as well as "a spirit of secession." Hence, the action of the General Eldership in May, 1902, was "endorsed," and "any disloyalty to the General Eldership" was "discountenanced." "The second-work of grace," the body regarded as "not in accordance with the former teachings of the churches of God." Strongly denouncing the liquor traffic, the Eldership also "appealed to the Christian spirit of every brother that uses tobacco, in the name of God and in behalf of purity, to abstain from its use." The "$5.00 membership fee charged an applicant receiving license from this Eldership" was reduced to $1.00. Of the twelve fields of labor two were to supply themselves, one having Emma Isenberg for pastor. F. M. Iler was appointed Eldership Evangelist, with an appropriation of $150.00 out of the Permanent Mission Fund. He was to devote his entire time to the work, under the direction of the Standing Committee.

58th Indiana Eldership.—The notable historic event of the ecclesiastical year 1902-3 was the perfecting of arrangements by the Standing Committees of the two bodies for the union and consolidation of the Indiana and the Southern Indiana Elderships. The Committees met at Idaville, August 13, 1903, and came to a final decision, whereby it was agreed that both Elderships should hold their annual sessions, and that "the ministers of the Southern Indiana Eldership unite with the Indiana Eldership by transfer, and that the Trustees of the Southern Indiana Eldership transfer the property of the aforesaid Eldership to the Trustees of the Indiana Eldership." Accordingly, when the Indiana Eldership convened at Sugar Grove, Noble county, on Saturday, September 26, 1903, the ministers of the Southern Indiana Eldership were "received in a body by one Transfer," and after the organization their names were entered on the official Roll, and they took part in the work of the Eldership. The Roll of the Indiana Eldership showed the presence of twenty ministers, and absent eleven, and sixteen ruling elders, and four delegates. By one Transfer twenty-four ministers were received from the Southern Indiana Eldership. The Annual Sermon was preached by J. E. McColley. He was elected President; I. W. Markley, Secretary; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Secretary, and W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. As the consolidation of the two Elderships had not been authorized by the General Eldership in 1902, a petition was adopted requesting it "to give the territory of the Southern Indiana Eldership to the Indiana Eldership," the said "Southern Indiana Eldership surrendering its right, name, territory and jurisdiction, and also its ecclesiastical Charter granted by the said General Eldership." Four ministers of the Indiana Eldership requested that their names "be taken off the Roll." By previous action the Stationing Committee was composed of ruling elders. There had been much needless friction in the Eldership. The body had "suffered immeasurable harm and injury as a result of insinuations and slurs cast by those of our number who hold licenses from this body." Their conduct was severely characterized, as being "contrary and rebellious to the Bible teaching," and the guilty parties were warned "to desist on pain of discipline and expulsion." There are evidently among men, even in religious bodies, two ways of being at variance, of which one is merely quarrelsome and the other is stimulating. Favorable action was taken on "the proposed Annual Assembly of the Indiana Eldership," and I. W. Markley and W. R. Covert were named as a Committee to look after the details. There were twelve fields of labor in the Indiana Eldership, and the Standing Committee was empowered to arrange for supplying the six circuits of the Southern Indiana Eldership.

59th Indiana Eldership.—Although the twenty-four members on the Ministerial Roll of the Southern Indiana Eldership were "given a transfer to the Indiana Eldership in 1903," and the list of ruling elders and delegates certified to by the Clerk, and all were received in 1903 as members of the Indiana Eldership, the session of the latter body in 1904 was officially designated as the "First Annual Meeting of the Indiana Eldership of the Churches of God, United." The session was held at Syracuse, Kosciusko county, where the ministers and delegates assembled on Saturday, September 24, 1904. On that evening M. S. Newcomer, of Illinois, preached; on Sunday morning, C. Ishler, and in the evening "the regular Annual Address was delivered by E. M. Love. It was a large Eldership, as forty-four ministers were enrolled, and forty-four lay delegates. Two of the ministers and ten or eleven of the lay delegates were women. New "Articles of Association" had been drafted, which were "received, considered and unanimously adopted." The officers of the previous year were re-elected, the Financial Clerk, L. A. Luckenbill, by "direction of the body, cast a ballot electing them." Sister M. B. Newcomer delivered the sermon on Monday evening. The assessments for the Missionary Fund, amounting to $251.36, were all paid but $21.50, which "were carried forward." For Contingent Fund, $63.00 were assessed, and all but $5.10 paid. The "Indiana Assembly or Chautauqua" of 1904 was reported as "quite a success," and the Eldership decided to extend it, "embracing all Elderships of the churches of God." There were now twenty fields of labor, including St. Louis First church; St. Louis Mission, and St. Louis Second church. One of the active ministers was Emma Isenberg, appointed to Disko circuit. Benton Harbor and Sodus, Mich., were included in the list of appointments. W. H. Blake, a minister of the M. E. Church, South, who had united with the church of God at St. Louis, was received into the Eldership, and ordained and appointed to the St. Louis Mission.

60th Indiana Eldership.—The Indiana Eldership kept before the public the fact that it had united with it the Southern Indiana Eldership, by having the title page of its Journal in 1905 to read: "Journal of the Sixtieth Annual Meeting of the Indiana Eldership, and the Second Annual Meeting of the Indiana Eldership, United." This was continued for eight years. At this second annual meeting of the United Eldership the transfer of Eldership property was completed, the Indiana Eldership receiving eleven deeds from the Southern Indiana Eldership; also its Protocol and seal, as well as the books of the Financial Clerk and the Treasurer, and the Trustees' book. The meeting was held at Idaville, White county, the first sitting having been had on Monday morning, October 2, 1905. On Sunday evening previous W. W. Lovett preached the Opening Sermon. A Committee on Credentials made up the "Eldership Roster," enrolling forty-four ministers and twenty-eight delegates. The names of women were on the ministerial Roll, and four on the Roll of delegates. A "membership fee" was taken up at the first sitting. W. W. Lovett was elected President; I. W. Markley, Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Secretary; J. D. Anglin, Treasurer. Close relations existed between the Eldership and Woman's Missionary Society, the latter presenting its Constitution to the Eldership, by which it was approved. Overtures were extended by the Eldership to "churches located in central Indiana, known as the Conference Churches of God, who hold a like common faith with us," "to come and unite with us in church fellowship and co-operation." The "Inter-state Assembly" was approved, and Elderships in other States invited to join in the movement. Having no Course of Studies for ministers, the Eldership adopted the "course of reading in preparation by Findlay College for other Elderships." Regular apportionments were made for the Missionary and Contingent Funds. The churches within the territory of the Eldership were urged "to organize Christian Endeavor societies" as helpful agencies in church work. While the spiritual condition of the churches was commended, yet "ministers and laity" were recommended to "strive to take still higher grounds in the religious life, by earnest prayer and work." The reading of the Bible in the public schools was heartily approved. The Eldership admonished all its "people, in the discharge of their Christian duties, to use all the means in their power to suppress the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors." There were nineteen fields of labor, three of which were not supplied with pastors; but there were four State Missionaries. The session was regarded as "a most pleasant and profitable one." "The elements of distraction and destruction have been overcome."

61st Indiana Eldership.—On the "Roster" of the sixty-first Indiana Eldership the members are divided into ministers, of which there were forty-six; ruling elders, thirty-five, and delegates, four. Two of the ruling elders were women, as well as two of the ministers. The session was held at Auburn, DeKalb county, beginning October 1, 1906. H. H. Spiher preached the Opening Sermon on Sunday evening previous. There was preaching on Saturday evening by E. M. Love, and on Sabbath morning, by I. W. Markley. The Official Directory gives the following: President, H. H. Spiher; Clerk, I. W. Markley; Financial Secretary, L. A. Luckenbill; Treasurer, B. F. Magley. Five members constituted the Standing Committee; three, the Board of Trustees; five, the Board of Education. All these were ministers, except the Treasurer. The Trustees during the year had sold the Bethel at Eel River, near Roann. The Standing Committee had "concurred in the proposition to appoint a commission to arrange plans for the organic union of the two Woman's General Missionary Societies," and its action was approved by the Eldership. "Spiritual conditions" were reported "in some places very bad, and in some places pretty good;" hence the ministers were required to "preach God's word in its purity, and to live clean lives, for the uplifting of humanity and the salvation of souls." "All persons entering the ministry in the Indiana Eldership" were hereafter "required to take the Eldership Course, and pass examinations before the Board of Education." For others an annual license was provided for. The Course extended over a period of three years, with six branches in each year, and an "Entrance Examination" of four branches. The interest felt in education influenced the Eldership, through its College Committee, L. A. Luckenbill, W. J. Beatty and J. E. McColley, to give a note of $2,000.00 to Findlay College, at 3 per cent. interest. An assessment was to be laid of such amount as to pay the annual interest, and the principal in ten years. The object was the endowment of "the Chair of Biblical Training." A Fund was directed to be established, to be known as "The Indiana Eldership Widows' Fund," and Miss Lula Cook was "constituted the Solicitor for this Fund during this Eldership year." On temperance the Eldership "urged that our people do all in their power, by preaching, teaching, praying and voting, to suppress the liquor traffic." Regular accounts with the churches were kept by the Financial Secretary, and where a church was delinquent on its assessments, it was charged against it. The Statistical Report for the year showed the following items: Churches, 38; accessions, 163; baptized, 76; value of church property, $31,100.00; salaries of pastors, $3,531.06. But nine charges failed to report the value of church property, and seven, the salaries of the pastors. Small amounts were paid into the Church Extension Fund by eleven fields of labor.

62nd Indiana Eldership.—The coincidence of a dedication and a session of the Eldership occurred at Mt. Tabor, where the "newly repaired bethel was re-opened for divine worship on Sunday morning," C. I. Brown preaching the sermon, and in the evening "E. M. Love delivered the Annual Address." On Monday morning, September 30, 1907, the session began, when H. H. Spiher was elected President; I. W. Markley, Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Secretary; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. The Committee on Temperance consisted of Emma Isenberg, Orlan Fleck, Geo. E. Platt, Mary O. McColley and Emma Gearhart. It declared that the "liquor traffic is blighting homes, wrecking young men, and, sad to say, young women, too; breaking mothers' and wives' hearts, causing little children to become beggars and homeless wanderers on the streets, filling our jails and penitentiaries," and therefore the people of the Church were counseled to "do what they can in every way to drive this enemy of mankind from our land." The preachers were "recommended to tell from their pulpits the evil effects of liquor upon humanity." One minister, J. Hanna, "was called from labor to reward. His age was 83 years. He had "labored faithfully all these years in the interest of his Master's cause." He was "respected and loved by all." He had been a member of the "White County Conference of the Church of God" the greater part of his life, where he was instrumental "in bringing many precious souls to a knowledge of the truth." The Treasurer, who was under bond in the sum of $10,000.00, held balances in the different Funds aggregating $3,854.34. The Board of Trustees found it necessary to institute legal proceedings against certain disloyal parties to get "possession of the church property in the town of Akron, Fulton county." The church property at Indianapolis was also in litigation, but the case "was settled by compromise," but it cost the Board $384.30. The diversion of money to uses different from the original intention was disapproved, and money so used was ordered to be "returned to the Fund so diverted." The Eldership emphatically approved the efforts in progress "to bring about union in our foreign mission work," through "the duly appointed Commission and the Board of Missions of the General Eldership." Mission work was directed to be opened in Indianapolis "this year, if a suitable man and means can be procured." The Stationing Committee, consisting of three laymen and two ministers, made sixteen appointments, and named four General Evangelists.

63rd Indiana Eldership.—The "Eldership Roster for 1908" contained the names of forty ministers and forty-one elders and delegates. One of the former and five of the latter were women. The annual session was held at Zanesville, Wells county, September 26th to 30th, but the first sitting was on Monday morning, the 28th. Saturday evening and on Sabbath there were preaching services, the Opening Sermon being delivered Sabbath evening, by J. E. McColley. The Eldership elected H. H. Spiher, President; J. E. McColley, Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Secretary; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. Considerable anxiety was expressed with reference to "the slow growth of the churches of God in the State of Indiana," and accordingly it was decided to "take action in the election of a Board of Missions, choosing not less than three of the best business men, with others, to execute plans, ways and means of gathering funds in behalf of the Permanent State Missionary and Extension Funds, to swell these Funds to at least $10,000.00, to the end that we shall be enabled to push the Church work more earnestly and thoroughly in the State, especially in the cities." A Board of Education was also to be elected, "whose duty it shall be to make diligent search for young men who realize a call to the gospel ministry, and to devise ways and secure means in a financial way and otherwise to assist all worthy persons to enter Findlay Theological Department and secure a good education." The lawsuit against the trustees of the church at Idaville was "compromised in consideration of the sum of $400.00 paid to said trustees." The spiritual condition of the churches in southern Indiana was reported to be "poor, and on the decline;" but in the northern part of the State there was "a very marked degree of improvement, and conditions generally compared favorably with, and were even better than in, recent years." The loss by death of two ministers, "who passed to the heavenly home," was deeply felt. These were Joseph Neil and J. W. Swingfellow, "for many years members of our Eldership." "They did good work for Christ and the Church." The Eldership gave its "endorsement of the work and agreed to join hands with every organization that has for its aim the total annihilation of the liquor traffic." It also condemned "the habitual use of narcotics," as its tendency is "to undermine physical health, impair mental activity and impede spiritual growth." And it enjoined on all "to be temperate in all things." Each minister was "requested to preach a rousing missionary sermon to his several congregations previous to Thanksgiving," suggested by the early departure of Miss Mary Witsaman, one of their number, as missionary to India.

64th Indiana Eldership.—The work of the General Eldership of 1909 in finally disposing of the problems connected with the Woman's General Missionary Societies was cordially approved by the Indiana Eldership. It also "noted with joy the great success of the Indiana State W. M. S., favored by the Lord, and most graciously growing in the number of societies, members and strength." But it realized that "a crisis has come, as we see it, when we must plead for more home missionary funds for India. Many of our church houses in city and country are standing idle, with new fields calling for help, and our Eldership is shrinking up, as there is a great dearth of available men for our pulpits. "We lack men because we lack funds." With such sentiments pervading the Eldership, it convened with the church at Shiloh, Daviess county, Saturday, September 26, 1909. On Sunday evening I. W. Markley delivered the Annual Address. Seventy-eight names were placed on the "Roster" by the Committee on Credentials. The election resulted in the choice of H. H. Spiher for President; I. W. Markley, Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Secretary; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. The W. M. S. regularly met with the Eldership, and its officers and committees were placed on the "Official Directory." There was also a Young People's Alliance, which held an annual meeting at the time and place of the Ministerial Association, the Sunday-school Convention and the Pentecostal meeting. All were under the direct control of the Eldership. The presence of O. A. Newlin, Field Secretary of Findlay College, gave added inspiration touching educational interests. The body expressed its belief that "Findlay College is doing all in its power to meet the need of Christian education," and pledged its hearty support to said school. An assessment was made on each church annually for the College, to meet the Eldership pledge, and each church received credit for amounts paid, and was charged with its assessments plus any delinquencies. Initial steps were taken to establish a Church Extension Fund. The Eldership became conscious that it had heretofore "not paid the attention to Sunday-school work during its sessions that it should," and hence decided that "each year there shall be devoted at least two hours one day to discussing questions pertaining" thereto. The Minutes were also to "give the enrollment of each Sunday-school." There were thirty-five schools. Each local church in the Eldership was "urged to open at least one mission work during this year, looking toward the formation of a new church organization." There were fourteen fields of labor, but three were unsupplied. J. Bumpus and W. W. Lovett were appointed General Evangelists.

65th Indiana Eldership.—During the year 1909-10 the Board of Trustees paid on the Eldership's Findlay College Note the sum of $590.00, reducing it to $1,132.45. It also paid $725.00 to the trustees of the Fort Wayne church of God, and secured to the Eldership the deed to said property. Its other Funds were in fair condition, and "the state of religion" was "improving." Under these more auspicious surroundings the Eldership convened for its sixty-fifth annual session at Evergreen Bethel, Whitley county, September 24, 1910, J. R. Omwig preaching on said evening; O. A. Newlin, on Sabbath morning, and L. B. Fretz delivered the Annual Address in the evening. The election at Monday morning's sitting resulted in the choice of H. H. Spiher for President; W. W. Johnson, Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Secretary; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. At the afternoon sitting "an earnest sermon, by N. S. Brundage," was the first item. H. H. Spiher and L. A. Luckenbill were elected delegates to the World's Christian Conference, to be held in Philadelphia, November 16-20, 1910. The need of ministers to serve as pastors was keenly felt by the Eldership, although the "Roster" contained the names of thirty-eight, and the fields of labor numbered but sixteen. Two of these the Eldership failed to supply with pastors. Churches were solicited "earnestly to seek for young men who may realize a call to the gospel ministry, and encourage them to take up the work." Money was also needed, as "the fields are large and the harvest ripe for gathering." In temperance work the chief interest centered in efforts to prevent "the tearing down of legislation along temperance lines." Local option was declared a failure by the opponents of temperance legislation, which the Eldership affirmed that "statistics prove is not true." The Eldership endorsed the local option law, and "pledged itself to support the same, at the same time doing all in our power to make it State and world wide." "At the ripe age of 81 years, Isaac J. Whisenand fell asleep in Jesus." For half a century he had most earnestly contended for what he believed to be the faith delivered to the saints. He was an earnest preacher and a hard worker on many fields of labor in the Eldership. By the payment of $600.00 on the debt of the church at Auburn, the Eldership secured a deed in fee simple to said property. To raise the standard of education in the Eldership, it was "demanded that every one coming into the Eldership for the purpose of preaching the gospel must complete the Course of Studies prescribed in 1906, or its equivalent." Regular assessments were made by the Committee on Finance on each church for Indiana Contingent Fund, General Eldership Mission Fund, and Contingent Fund, and Findlay College Fund. A well-matured system of finance characterized the Eldership, and all its affairs were administered in an orderly manner and upon business principles.

66th Indiana Eldership.—While as yet mission work projected for Indianapolis had not been begun, the "Indianapolis Mission Fund" had to its credit $265.70. One of the drawbacks to successful ministerial work in church building was the worldly occupations of ministers. Against this the Eldership now protested, declaring "that, so far as practicable, ministers should have no other occupation." Neglect of the observance of the ordinances was to be remedied by requiring "each minister to deliver at least one sermon a year upon the subject of the ordinances," and it was recommended that "each church attend to the ordinances at least once every quarter." And to increase the spirituality of the churches "each household in the Eldership be urged to re-establish the family altar of worship." An aggressive spirit was manifested by the Eldership, and it expressed a consuming desire to see "the work grow and its field of usefulness enlarged, by building up our present churches and organizing many others in our cities and the countryside of this great State." The ministry and churches were "appealed to, to devise ways and means to help in our home field in encouraging a forward missionary movement." The Eldership was presided over by H. H. Spilher; I. W. Markley, Clerk; M. W. Johnson, Reading Clerk; L. A. Luckenbill, Financial Clerk; W. J. Beatty, Treasurer. Two ministers who withdrew from the Eldership in 1903, Alpheus McClellen and E. Tatman, made overtures to return, upon the condition "that all troubles and variances heretofore existing between this body and themselves be buried under the Blood, and remembered no more," and "the Eldership by a rising vote invited them to return." W. W. Welling's name as a licentiate was placed on the Roll, and Sarah A. Waltz received exhorter's license. The Eldership resolved to "agree before God, that at the ballot box and in every other way it will try to put down the great curse of the rum traffic." During the Eldership year two ministers, E. M. Love and C. R. Davis, were called to receive "the reward of the righteous in the land beyond the river." Memorial services were held in their honor, and their faithful services were reviewed by those who knew them best. Love was ordained in 1871, by the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, and came into the Indiana Eldership when the two were united. Except a few years spent in Illinois, he labored within the territory of the Elderships in Indiana. He was a diligent, faithful worker, and a beloved pastor. Davis was first ordained by the West Ohio Eldership, in 1880; but for the past nine years was a member of the Indiana Eldership, but lived most of this time in Michigan, where he died. After making appointments to eleven stations and seven circuits, "the Eldership spent half an hour in a praise meeting" before final adjournment.

67th Indiana Eldership.—The session of the Indiana Eldership in 1912 reviewed the year's work with a measure of gratification. Spiritual conditions were "better than some years ago," though improvement was possible, and the Eldership aimed "to raise the standard still higher." A "Young People's Union of Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor Societies" had been organized, and the Constitution submitted by the Committee of the Eldership was adopted. It was a very complete document, always subject to approval by the Eldership, as was that of the W. M. S. The presence of Viola G. Hershey, returned missionary from India, gave fresh inspiration to the work of the W. M. S. and the Eldership, with which it was so closely identified. The session was held at Ari, Allen county, beginning with religious services on Saturday evening, September 28th. On Sabbath evening W. W. Lovett delivered the Annual Sermon. During the year H. H. Spilher, President of the Eldership, "resigned and returned his Certificate of Ordination to the Standing Committee of his own will." Seventy-seven names were placed on the "Eldership Roster"—36 ministers, 27 ruling elders and 14 delegates—a majority of which was present. A membership fee of $1.00 was charged. Officers and standing committees and boards were chosen, as follows: President, W. W. Lovett; Clerk, Thos. M. Funk; Financial Secretary, L. A. Luckenbill; Treasurer, W. J. Beatty; Standing Committee, J. E. McColley, J. G. Wise, H. G. Herendeen, I. W. Markley, Geo. E. Komp; Board of Trustees, I. W. Markley, W. W. Lovett, L. A. Luckenbill; Stationing Committee, J. E. McColley, H. G. Herendeen (ministers), J. D. Anglin, W. J. Beatty, S. Butt (ruling elders). The number of funds, all in fair condition, evidence the good financial system of the Eldership. These are Indiana Contingent, General Eldership Missionary, G. E. Contingent, Findlay College, Superannuated, Fort Wayne Mission, Permanent Mission, Church Extension, Widows', Indianapolis. The Eldership kept all interests and organizations rigidly under its general supervision. The W. M. S., with its own organization and Constitution and Rules, was in close relation with the Eldership. It made an annual report to the Eldership, which, with its Minutes, was published in connection with the Eldership Journal. In like manner the Young People's Convention and Ministerial Association made an annual report, and the place for holding the annual meetings was selected by the Eldership. The annual missionary sermon was preached Monday evening, by J. G. Wise. There were some "unoccupied church houses" in the Eldership territory, which were "ordered to be placed in the hands of the Board of Trustees, said Board to use its own discretion as to the disposition thereof." Among these was the church property at Greensburg, which, however, the trustees "were authorized to sell immediately." Part of the Wednesday evening sitting was "set apart for special prayer for greater union and harmony in all phases of our work throughout the General Eldership." The adoption of the system of Graded Lessons for use in the Sunday-schools was recommended to the General Eldership. Every Sunday-school was urged to "establish a Teachers' Training Course," and "those only who have completed the Course to be chosen for teachers." The Eldership affirmed that "the churches of God in the Indiana Eldership stand as the representatives of the highest type of citizenship in the communities of the State," and hence the "Church records itself as being unequivocally opposed to intemperance in all its departments." The Eldership was not ready to "establish uniformity in the method of observing the ordinances, the same to be in harmony with, and conform to, the method approved by the General Eldership," and so "laid on the table" a resolution to that effect. A Transcribing Clerk was provided for. The Stationing Committee made appointments to sixteen fields of labor, and appointed six General Evangelists. Three young men "were ordained to the ministry in the Church of God."

V. THE IOWA ELDERSHIP.

1st Iowa Eldership.—Iowa was geographically not connected with the territory of any other Eldership. While Indiana had no boundaries on the West, North or South, it could not claim Iowa as part of its territory. Ohio had sent S. Scott as a "missionary to Iowa," in 1844. E. Logue was sent to Iowa by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1845, and reappointed in 1846, and J. Hawk was appointed as his colleague in 1847, yet neither of these Elderships claimed jurisdiction over that territory. The brethren were free to act for themselves, except in so far as they might be subject to the jurisdiction of the General Eldership. But this question seems not to have been raised. Informally a meeting was arranged for, to consist "of the teaching and ruling elders of the Church of God in Iowa, to convene at the home of David Neff, two miles west of Trenton, Henry county, Iowa, on Monday, the 18th of September, 1848, to hold consultation in reference to a more orderly system of co-operation as a brotherhood." Six brethren responded to this call, viz.: teaching elders, Jonathan Hawk, Samuel Scott and Emanuel Logue; ruling elders, Jacob Smith, John Zentmyer and A. G. McCormick. After "some deliberations," they "mutually resolved upon forming ourselves into a regularly organized Eldership of the Church of God in the State of Iowa," and enrolled "as worthy of membership" the above-mentioned teaching and ruling elders. Then they elected Jonathan Hawk, Speaker, and Emanuel Logue, Clerk.

Jonathan Hawk was a native of Pennsylvania, and when not traveling a circuit lived in the Cumberland Valley. He was born the early part of the year 1796; died October 22, 1875. He was one of the early converts under the preaching of the United Brethren ministry, before Winebrenner came to Harrisburg, in the year 1815. When he heard the teaching of Winebrenner he at once accepted the truth, and soon began preaching the doctrines of the Church of God. In 1832 he received his first license from the East Pennsylvania Eldership. For about nine years he served four of the large circuits of the Eldership. In 1841 and 1842 he labored in a local capacity. In 1845 and 1846 he made no report to the Eldership, but his relation was continued. In 1847 he removed to Iowa, and at the East Pennsylvania Eldership in October, 1847, he was appointed to the Iowa Mission. Of limited education, he was a useful minister of the gospel. "He was a fireside preacher, one who loved to feed the lambs of the flock, and lead them out." He enjoyed many precious revivals during his active ministry.

Logue offered eight resolutions, which "were considered and agreed to." These resolutions declare, first, that "the New Testament is the only authoritative rule of faith and practice in matters of religion, and an all-sufficient law for the rule and government of the church and people of God." Second, that "no persons are legal subjects or members of the Church of God but those who are born of God." Third, that "it is the duty of the members of this Eldership, with the members of the several congregations, to do all they can to extend the borders of the Church, and to keep the same pure." Fourth, that "this Eldership disapprove of secret and lodge meetings, such as Masonry, Odd Fellowship, Sons of Temperance, etc., and that no persons belonging and attending to those meetings shall be members of this body." Fifth, that "we approve of a General Eldership, composed of delegates from the several Annual Elderships, and that said General Eldership should transact such business as is of a general character for the Annual Elderships and the General Eldership. . . . ; but not to enact laws for the government of either the Church or the Annual Elderships." Sixth, highly approving of "Sabbath-schools when properly conducted." Seventh, that "the teaching and ruling elders of the Church are the proper persons to license and recommend to the Church and to the world those who are to preach the gospel and administer the ordinances of God's house." Eighth, that "no persons are properly fit for the gospel ministry but those who are experimentally converted to God, and whose preaching and practice are in harmony with the gospel of Christ and the practice of the first church." The Eldership also declared in favor of annual licenses. Of the three teaching elders Logue consented "to travel and preach the coming year" "in case he could be sustained as such." Hawk and Scott "promised to preach as local preachers, and assist in holding protracted meetings as much as they could." Accordingly Logue was by resolution made "the traveling preacher the coming year," the Eldership promising to "do all we can to see him sustained." A call was made on the East for traveling preachers "greatly needed in this new western country." But Logue received "leave of absence from Iowa till next Spring," thus throwing the whole work on Hawk and Scott.

2nd Iowa Eldership.—During the year 1849 emigrants from Pennsylvania and Ohio reached Iowa in considerable numbers. Among these were M. F. Snively and party from the Cumberland Valley, Pa., who left April 18, 1849, and Jacob Lininger, with half a dozen families from Bedford and Huntingdon counties, who started westward in October. Both located in Johnson county, Iowa. Snively and Lininger were ministers in the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Snively reached Iowa in time for the second Eldership, which was again held at the house of David Neff, near Trenton, Henry county, Iowa, September 17, 1849. Besides Snively, Hawk and Scott were the teaching elders enrolled, and Jacob Smith, John Zentmyer and John McCormick, ruling elders. Logue had not returned, and the Eldership resolved that "Elder Logue is highly censurable for taking license from this Eldership last Fall, and promising to travel as minister the present year, and then immediately after taking license from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, without asking leave, or obtaining a transfer, thus forfeiting his promise and dis-appointing the churches." Hawk was elected Speaker, and Scott, Clerk. There were no applicants for license, and no appointments of preachers were made, as no one "consented to travel the next year." A resolution was adopted to "use proper exertions to swell the pledge list in order to sustain a missionary in Iowa." J. Hawk was appointed "to preach a sermon at the opening of the next Annual Eldership."

3rd Iowa Eldership.—In 1850, North Bend, Johnson county, always a strong point in the Iowa Eldership, entertained that body, which began its brief session on October 7th. Five names were enrolled as members, viz.: Teaching elders—M. F. Snively, Jonathan Hawk and Samuel Scott. Ruling elders—Jonathan Hawk and J. McCormick. Hawk was also a minister. He was elected Speaker, and S. Scott, Clerk. J. Lininger, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, having removed to North Bend, made application to become a member, and was received and a license granted, without being transferred. He was a tall, broad-shouldered man, with a clean-shaven, rugged face, a man of strong force of character and remarkable physical and mental powers. A circuit preacher of great usefulness in the East, he did "not feel so much in his element as when traveling constantly in the ministry." Snively did not do so much active work after his removal to Iowa from Pennsylvania. Hawk reported that he "preached but little for want of the English language." Scott preached at "four stated appointments, in regular rotation;" "witnessed some eighteen conversions, and organized one church." Logue brought "charges against this Eldership and certain of the brethren in Iowa," but his letter was "laid on the table." The Eldership "recommended to the brethren in Iowa the propriety of receiving funds by voluntary contributions, at such times and in such ways as they in their wisdom may think best, for benevolent purposes." After appointing a Standing Committee of three, the Eldership closed without making any appointments.

4th Iowa Eldership.—When in 1851, the Iowa Eldership, on October 13th opened its sessions near Trenton, Henry county, there was a notable increase in ministerial strength. The enrollment showed the presence of the three teaching elders of the third session, with M. F. Snively absent, and four ruling elders. But A. Megrew, missionary, and Wm. Vance were present and became members. D. Gill, through A. Megrew, applied for membership, and was received and a license granted him. Jacob Lininger was made Speaker, and A. G. McCormick, Clerk. A committee appointed for that purpose reported nine "Rules of Order for the government of the Eldership." No appointments were made, but Megrew was authorized to "use his own judgment in preaching in the State wherever he has an opportunity of doing the most good." Winebrenner had addressed a letter to the Eldership with reference to a "Printing Establishment;" but as it referred to a "suggestion" in the paper of October 1st, which had not yet reached the Eldership, no action was taken. Only Samuel Scott, in addition to Megrew, "consented to travel as a missionary in the State of Iowa during the coming Eldership year." Megrew was instructed to "write a letter to the Board of Missions, requesting the Board [East Pennsylvania Eldership] to send another missionary to labor in this State."

5th Iowa Eldership.—Seven teaching elders, two of them absent, and four ruling elders constituted the fifth Iowa Eldership, which convened at the Virginia School-house, Des Moines county, Iowa, October 11, 1852. A. Megrew was chosen Speaker, and Samuel Scott, Clerk. The Committee on Minutes of Eldership of 1851 called attention to the request from Winebrenner, which related to "a New Printing Establishment." The Eldership agreed to "co-operate in the New Printing Establishment on the proposition of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, viz.: That the debt now on the old establishment be first liquidated." It also endorsed the "25-cent system for the payment of Winebrenner's claim." The Eldership disapproved "of all Secret Societies, such as Free Masons, Odd Fellows and Sons of Temperance." Only "Wm. Vance agreed to travel, provided he could be supported." The session lasted one day, Monday. On that evening Megrew preached on Feet-washing, after which the ordinances were observed. There were promising openings for Church work, but the great hindrance was lack of support, and so the ministers labored chiefly in the neighborhoods where they lived. "Traveling was almost wholly by horse-back, and roads were practically unknown, and in many places a mere track across the prairie, where it was often a dozen or twenty miles from one house to another."

6th Iowa Eldership.—Again in 1853, the Iowa Eldership convened in Des Moines county, on October 17th, near Dodgeville. Five ministers were present, and two were absent; with two ruling elders, and one delegate. A Megrew was chosen Speaker, and M. F. Snavelly, Clerk. The Rules of Order of "the last yearly meeting" were adopted. J. Lininger had been preaching during the year on "the Iowa Mission." Megrew only preached during the Winter of 1852-3. Vance had "kept up two regular appointments." Up to May, 1853, Snavelly had supplied "Clear Creek every four weeks, and Lancaster school-house every two weeks." Gill had "preached as much as circumstances admitted of." Hawk and Scott had not been heard from. The Standing Committee was made the Camp-meeting Committee. Notwithstanding there were seven regular ministers in Iowa, the Eldership though the Board of Missions of the East Pennsylvania Eldership did not treat it right "in reference to their call through their Standing Committee for ministerial aid;" that they "feel aggrieved and call for redress of the same, by sending us (and sustaining) an efficient minister for the next Eldership year." A resolution was adopted asking "the brotherhood in this and all other States to use their influence in every reasonable and lawful way to have a Prohibitory Law passed in every State, similar to that known as the 'Maine Liquor Law.'" Also one "in favor of a better observance of the Lord's day," and one against "the use of that filthy and noxious weed called tobacco." The Eldership emphatically "disapprove the holding of any human being in slavery. . . . without giving a reasonable compensation." David Gill and M. F. Snavelly "finally consented to travel the ensuing year." Gill was to supply Linn and Cedar circuit; and Snavelly the Des Moines and Louisa circuit. One delegate to the General Eldership was appointed.

7th Iowa Eldership.—The seventh Iowa Eldership is the first at which the record was made that "the opening discourse was delivered," although several times before a minister was appointed for that purpose. This Eldership met at North Bend, in the new bethel, Johnson county, October 2, 1854. Megrew preached the Opening Sermon at "9 o'clock a. m." Five teaching elders were present, and two were absent. There were enrolled two ruling elders and one delegate. A. Megrew was elected Speaker, and Nicholas Zeller, Clerk. The first applicants to the Iowa Eldership for license appeared at this Eldership, all the others having been licensed by the East Pennsylvania, West Pennsylvania, and Ohio Elderships. These new men were F. F. Kiner and J. Funk. Eleven "Standing Rules for the Eldership were adopted, one of which provided that "ministers belonging to the Eldership, elders and delegates shall be entitled to vote, and all others whom this body is willing to receive." Provision was made for statistical reports by each minister, including "amount received as support," "and report the same at our yearly meeting." "The brethren and sisters of the churches of God" were urged "to contribute their free-will offerings toward aiding in the education of Ting-Ing-Kow." The Stationing Committee again divided the territory into two circuits; named three ministers as "Home Missionaries," and one "Missionary at Large." Michael F. Snavelly, appointed to Des Moines and Louisa circuit, in "a little more than a month after this Eldership adjourned, was removed from his labors on earth by death, resulting from injury in a railroad wreck near Joliet, Ill." "He was yet in his prime, with possibilities of great usefulness in the Church."

8th Iowa Eldership.—An increase of four ministers brought the enrollment of the Eldership in 1855 up to eight, with four ruling elders and four delegates. These new men were A. J. Fenton and Philip Shaw, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership; William Wilson, of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, and H. Murray, of the Ohio Eldership. The Eldership convened with the church at Grandview, Louisa county, Iowa, on Tuesday, October 1st, and the Opening Sermon was preached at 10 a. m. by Jacob Lininger, who was then elected Speaker, with A. Megrew, Journalizing Clerk, and Henry Funk, Transcribing Clerk. In the Rules adopted for the session it was provided that "ministers belonging to this Eldership, elders and delegates shall be entitled to a vote, and all others whom this body is willing to receive." A resolution to declare it "scriptural to receive unbaptized persons into the local churches of God" created "considerable debating," and was then "laid on the table." Another resolution which provoked "considerable discussion" was adopted, declaring "that this body will not receive into membership any one known to be in fellowship with Secret Societies." The reasons assigned are: "The great trouble and sore aggrevances in other bodies arising from members thereof uniting with Secret Societies;" and because the Eldership regarded "the mingling of Christians with those Societies as inexpedient and unbecoming." Unnecessary "visiting and traveling on the Sabbath day" was condemned. Provision was made for a "Book of Record" in which to keep the "proceedings of this body." The four circuits and two missions formed by the committee appointed for that purpose were supplied with eight ministers. A. Hollems had come from Ohio, though not at the Eldership, and was appointed to Grandview circuit, and George Thomas moved from Indiana to Iowa and was made the missionary on Guthrie County Mission. The Eldership had no need for a treasurer.

9th Iowa Eldership.—Considerable antagonism had developed during the year, which required careful handling at the Eldership which assembled at Pleasant Prairie, Buchanan county, Iowa, October 20, 1856. Grandview had become a station. There were eleven organized churches in the State, widely scattered, and fourteen other preaching places, with a total membership of about three hundred and ten. A "Constitution of the Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Eldership" was adopted, and the Society organized. The most serious troubles before the Eldership were at North Bend, the Fenton case, the case of "Father Jonathan Hawk," and the difficulty with the Illinois Eldership. "A number of expelled persons of North Bend" had secured the services of George Thomas "in violation of the plan of co-operation." As he "made a frank and open confession," his license was renewed and he received a transfer to Illinois. Fenton had removed to Illinois, leaving under charges; had not "reported to this body either in person or otherwise, and while under charges, identified himself with the Illinois Eldership." His course was "highly disapproved," and he was required to "render satisfaction to" the Eldership. The course of the Illinois Eldership was adjudged "improper in receiving a member of this body while under charges, and without our consent, and in violation of the plan of co-operation as set forth in the Constitution of the General Eldership." When Hawk's name was called a committee was "appointed to confer with" him. The committee "under existing circumstances did not think it necessary or practicable to meet with" him; the "case was taken up in committee of the whole," and "after some deliberation" it was decided that "Hawk is no longer considered worthy of membership." From this action Hawk appealed to the General Eldership in 1857. Churches were urged to build parsonages. "Calls from almost every direction for the ministers of the Church of God to come and preach" were received; but the Eldership could not comply, in part because "some of our most able ministers have been, and are, turning their attention to farming and mechanical pursuits." The "iniquitous institution of American Slavery" was utterly condemned. Delegates to the General Eldership were elected, and also two delegates to the Illinois Eldership in 1857. There are eight fields of labor, three being missions and one a station. One of the missions was in Davis county, on the Missouri line.

10th Iowa Eldership.—Three accessions to the ranks of the Iowa Eldership from other Elderships encouraged the faithful workers when they convened in annual session at North Bend, Johnson county, Iowa, October 19, 1857. These were D. Wertz, Illinois, earlier from Ohio and West Pennsylvania; J. J. Miller, West Pennsylvania, but first licensed in East Pennsylvania, and W. H. Mullenix, East Pennsylvania. The enrollment shows the presence of seven teaching elders, three ruling elders and two delegates. The organization was effected by the choice of A. Hollems for Speaker; H. Murray, Journalizing Clerk, and J. Huff, Transcribing Clerk. The "official conduct of their delegates in the General Eldership" was "highly approved." The persistent efforts to extend slavery into new sections of the territory of the United States, as in the case of the Territory of Oregon, where the question was to be submitted to vote of the people, advocated by its delegate in Congress, and the infamous Dred Scott decision by Chief Justice Taney, of the United States Supreme Court, inspired this Eldership to denounce the decision as "an insult against the Free States," and all efforts to extend slavery as "inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity," and the institution as "an infringement upon the civil rights of the States." The conduct of the Texas brethren is "highly disapproved." Complaint is made by the Eldership of "a disposition among some of the members of this body to be negligent in carrying out and enforcing upon the people of their charge the resolutions and general projects of this body," and they are "earnestly urged to be more diligent" in this respect, and are threatened with the "censure of this body" in case of failure. Ministers and churches which "neglect to represent themselves to this Eldership" are declared to be "highly censurable," and notified "that in the future no apology will be accepted, unless providentially prevented from attending." A plan was adopted, on motion of D. Wertz, "to procure a large canvas tent, to be used in supplying the different towns, cities and churches with practical preaching, by holding protracted meetings where we can not do so for the want of suitable houses of worship." Funds were to be raised during the year, and N. Zeller was named as Treasurer. The territory was divided into four circuits, three missions and two stations.

11th Iowa Eldership.—Whether by authority or not, the Journal of 1858 states that "the Elders and Delegates of the Churches of God in Iowa met at Grandview, Louisa county, Iowa, October 13, 1858." There were four "absentees." At 2 o'clock p. m. "the Opening Discourse was preached." These sermons were always thus far on the ministry. It was preached by the elected Speaker, A. Megrew. Henry Murray was chosen Journalizing Clerk, and Henry Funk, Transcribing Clerk. The matter of securing a tent was brought up by the Committee on Journals, and no action taken. Ministers were recommended "to endeavor, as much as in them lies, to make themselves acquainted with the laws of the English language." To take care of their poor was a duty commended to each local church. The Eldership affirmed that there is "neither precept nor example in the word of God for receiving members into church before being immersed," and ministers were advised to "preach and practice the same." It deprecated "that superfluity of dress which is rapidly increasing in the local churches," and declared that it will "use all lawful means to keep the Church in a humble, Christian-like manner." By adopting the report of the Committee on Resolutions the title of the Eldership was changed to "Eldership of Churches of God." Also "advising churches to co-operate with the Eldership to perpetuate love and harmony by kindly and affectionately advising the brethren to withdraw and throw their influence from Secret Societies." There are four circuits and two missions, one of the latter "yet to be supplied."

12th Iowa Eldership.—A good attendance is indicated by the enrollment when the session held at the Moneka school-house, Cedar county, Iowa, October 17, 1859, was constituted. But three of the sixteen teaching elders were absent; and there were present eleven ruling elders and delegates. J. Lininger was chosen for Speaker; John Huff, Journalizing Clerk, and Henry Murray, Transcribing Clerk. Slavery was denounced as "a great moral sin, and a disgrace on the character of the American people." The tent project received no further encouragement. On Temperance the Eldership rejoiced that "temperance is gaining ground in various parts of the State," and declared that it "will not fellowship any one as a member of the Church of God who is engaged in making, buying, selling or drinking ardent spirits as a beverage." Without assigning any reason but "existing circumstances," the Eldership declined "to make appointments for the churches," but left them "to supply themselves with preaching as they most conveniently can." On account of "our financial embarrassment" the Eldership could do "nothing toward paying off old debts." An interesting program was carried out at the closing sitting, Wednesday evening. Addresses were delivered by twelve members, previously appointed, on The Dignity of the Gospel Ministry, Forgiveness, The Unity of the Spirit and Church, Tribulation; Things as They Were, Things as They Are, and Things as They Ought to Be; The Condition of Ireland—the Judgments and Mercies of God; Let Us Do Good to Others; Hear, For I Speak—Miscellaneous; On the Conquered Scenes of Life, Prayer, On the Support of the Ministry, On Christian Experience.

13th Iowa Eldership.—The political campaign of 1860 created heated excitement in Iowa, which proved detrimental to some of the churches, in some instances not only creating strifes and contentions, but even divisions. The Eldership which met in said year on Monday, October 15th, in the new bethel in the neighborhood of Father Barton's, known as the Home Bethel, near Mt. Pleasant, Henry county, felt the effects of the excitement, as it was when the campaign was at its height, a few weeks before the Presidential election. On Sabbath evening D. Wertz preached the Opening Sermon. Twelve teaching elders responded to Roll call, while five were absent. Sixteen ruling elders and delegates were in attendance. A. Megrew was chosen to preside, with John Huff Journalizing Clerk, and H. Murray, Transcribing Clerk. Very appropriate resolutions were adopted on the death of Winebrenner, "one who has long adorned the doctrine of his profession as a faithful minister, a reformer and a devoted Christian." One resolution approved the "erection of a suitable monument," promising that the Iowa Eldership will do its part toward the same. The Rules of Order of the General Eldership were adopted. More or less serious difficulties had to be settled, involving three or four ministers and several churches. The action of 1859, "establishing the congregational system" having "created general dissatisfaction and thrown many of our ministers and churches out of regular appointments and preaching," was rescinded without opposition. The Eldership having learned that there are brethren in churches of God in Iowa "who are, or are about to become, engaged in the liquor business," adopted a resolution, declaring that "we cannot consistently extend the right hand of fellowship to any person guilty of the habitual use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or to any one who is wilfully engaged in the manufacturing of the same." The churches were "advised to put away from among themselves such individuals as unworthy of a place in the Church of God." Lininger was appointed to deliver a sermon before the Eldership "on the best and most scriptural plan of supporting the ministry and carrying out the temporal interests of the Church of God." John A. Yambert, a minister of the Evangelical Association, applied for, and was granted, license. On Slavery the Eldership expressed its conviction that it "is a sin per se," that "slave-holding is man-stealing;" that the "whole traffic is a constant exercise of the most wicked and barbarous passions," and refusing "to unite in Christian fellowship with any man or woman who persists in the sinful practice." The Eldership also declared against giving ministers appointments who are not members. The Standing Committee, which was also made the Camp-meeting Committee, was composed of two laymen, J. Huff and N. Zeller, and one minister, D. Wertz. Only four ministers agreed to travel, and the Stationing Committee arranged for five circuits, to which the Committee appointed the four, with four others to assist them. Before adjournment the Eldership "spent a short season in Committee of the Whole," when "speeches were made by several brethren on different subjects of interest."

14th Iowa Eldership.—An unusual event transpired at the Eldership which met at North Bend, Johnson county, Iowa, October 21, 1861. Governor Samuel J. Kirkwood was booked to deliver a political speech at North Liberty, a mile or more from North Bend, and the Eldership sent Kiner, Zeller and Huff a Committee to wait on him and invite him to address a meeting in the bethel to "the citizens of this neighborhood this evening," as "it was the most convenient place in the vicinity." The Governor accepted the invitation. D. Wertz preached the Opening Sermon. F. F. Kiner was chosen Speaker, and John Huff, First Clerk, and J. R. Snively, Second Clerk. The Eldership again had a number of difficulties to adjust, and so adopted a resolution "urging brethren to settle their difficulties at home, and not bring them into the Eldership." It pledged itself to "continue with renewed energy to extend the blessings of temperance all over our land and nation." Three times the Report of the Committee on our National Affairs was read, and then adopted. It declared its approval of the Executive and officers of our country in the wise and loyal enforcement of the Constitution and laws," and expressed specifically its high "approval of General Fremont's Proclamation relative to the confiscation of slave property in Missouri." But the "cause of God," says the Committee on the State of Religion, Lininger, Shaw and Huff, "seems to be at a low ebb, in consequence of the existing affairs of our nation and members from the different churches having gone to the war, preachers and brethren, and in consequence of the meager support from the fact of the hard times in the West." Five of the ministers were in the army at one time. To secure better pay for pastors, a resolution was adopted giving each pastor "the privilege of stipulating for a reasonable salary, and if the circuit fails, or refuses to give the same, he will be justified in refusing to travel the same, and not censurable." The Eldership would not agree to the publication of all the Journals in one pamphlet. A resolution "to receive non-baptized members into the local churches of God" was laid on the table.

15th Iowa Eldership.—The Eldership held at Grandview, Louisa county, Iowa, beginning October 20, 1862, was discouragingly small. But two circuits had teaching elders, and the total number of teaching elders in attendance was eight; fourteen were absent, including six who had enlisted in the Army. Only five ruling elders attended the session. D. Wertz was elected Speaker; John Huff and H. Murray, Clerks. There was a disposition to reflect on "ministerial brethren who left their fields of labor and enlisted in the United States service without properly notifying this body and being exonerated from their respective charges;" but "under the circumstances we acquit them." Local preachers were "urged to be diligent and endeavor to supply the wants of those churches within their bounds with regular preaching. The condition of the churches was deplored, "in consequence of the great number of our ministers and brethren having enlisted and gone forth in the service of the United States." Appointments were made to supply vacant fields until Spring, and then the territory was divided into four circuits and one mission. But as only $12.35 was paid into the Mission Fund during the year, no appropriation was made to the missionary.

16th Iowa Eldership.—Three of the twenty teaching elders were in attendance at the Iowa Eldership which convened at Harmony Bethel, in the neighborhood of Father Landee, in Des Moines county, Iowa, November 30, 1863, and nine ruling elders. It was now by official action "the Eldership of the Churches of God in Iowa." The usual routine of business was transacted. The Chicago Mission project was the first item of business, and it was "highly approved, in case it be placed under the supervision and control of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership." Upon this condition the "undivided influence and support of the Eldership" was pledged. The ministers were "earnestly recommended and urged to present the terrible results of intemperance clearly and fully to the people of their charges, and to discountenance the use of alcoholic, vinous and fermented drinks under all circumstances as a beverage." The Eldership lamented the death of two of the ministers—J. R. Snavelly, whose "fate it was to fall as thousands of our brave men have fallen;" and John A. Yambert, "who had long lived a living epistle of piety." There being a shortage of preachers, and no applicants for license, the Committee on License stated that "a number of our official and other local brethren possess talents worthy of improvement by exhortation and preaching," and so it "recommended those brethren to make an effort to improve their talents by holding prayer-meetings and other meetings in their own and surrounding neighborhoods." Emphasis was placed upon "the great importance to young men desiring to enter the ministry that they apply themselves to the study of those sciences that may assist them in their responsible vocation." "The immediate adoption of measures to send out and sustain men who will give their minds, their hearts, their souls and time to the service of the churches and cause of God in Iowa" was the burden of the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion. Local churches were urged "to organize themselves into missionary societies." The total receipts for missions were $41.65. A committee was appointed to report in 1864 "to draw up a more scriptural and efficient system for the support of the ministry." For want of preachers the Stationing Committee consolidated the fields into three circuits, one of which was a mission.

17th Iowa Eldership.—A brighter sky was overhead in 1864, when the Iowa Eldership convened at North Bend, Johnson county, Iowa., October 17th, with twelve teaching elders and seven ruling elders and delegates in attendance. A. X. Shoemaker, of the Chicago Mission, was present, and "was declared Speaker of the house by acclamation." An election for Clerks resulted in the choice of John Huff and H. Murray. The Committee on Chicago Mission, Megrew, Wertz and Murray, brought in an enthusiastic report, being "highly pleased with the project, and promising to stand by the Mission so far as we see it to be our duty;" suggesting the propriety of building a parsonage" and promising "to furnish our share of the funds," and urging brethren "to buy an additional twenty-five feet of ground adjoining the Bethel on the east." By direction of the Eldership "the members of this body be examined as to their loyalty to the Government." The Eldership did not succeed in effectually closing its doors to brethren having difficulties between them, and not less than five or six cases came up. A resolution changing the title of the Eldership to "Church of God" was agreed to. The Eldership decided to hold a Pentecostal meeting at North Bend in May, 1865. It also recommended that "this body use its influence to bring about the establishment of a school in some central locality." "The civil commotions of the war, and political strife," are declared to have been a "detriment to the prosperity of the Church, and have caused a great languishing in Zion, much to be lamented."

18th Iowa Eldership.—The intense loyalty to the United States manifested itself at the Iowa Eldership which convened at the Moneka Bethel, Cedar county, Iowa, October 16, 1865. There were eleven teaching elders present, nearly the half of them ex-soldiers, seven ruling elders and three delegates, while ten teaching elders were absent. Some difficulty arose between two of the ministers, which involved the loyalty of one of them. In Committee of the Whole the matter was carefully considered, and the reports inquired into. But the Committee exonerated the accused, and declared that he "is and always has been considered loyal to his country." The officers chosen were F. F. Kiner, Speaker; John Huff, Journalizing Clerk, and Henry Murray, Transcribing Clerk. The Stationing Committee was composed of three ministers and two laymen. The war being over, which proved almost disastrous to the Church in Iowa, the Eldership greatly rejoiced, as "things appear more encouraging," and ministers and churches were recommended to make "more vigorous efforts to advance the cause and kingdom of Christ in Iowa." A special missionary meeting was held at which $280.00 were subscribed for mission work. With other Elderships, Iowa felt that it ought to have a school of some kind under its own control. It therefore resolved to appoint a committee to select a suitable site for a select or high school, which shall be under the exclusive care and direction of this body." Its Board of Missions was also instructed "to select one or more suitable men, and send them as missionaries to the State of Missouri, and to procure means to sustain the same." In addition, said Board was also directed "to employ a missionary to operate on the western boundary of this Eldership." A Pentecostal meeting was appointed to be held at North Bend, and H. Murray was appointed to preach the first sermon. The Eldership manifested quite a degree of feeling over an article published six months before by a contributor to The Advocate, and disapproved it as "uncalled for, and unjust and unjustifiable censure upon some of the ministers of this body," and denounced its "disloyal tone." The article had direct reference to a "call for a preacher in Iowa," and criticised the qualifications demanded, as "full of the Holy Ghost," "loyal to his God," "loyal to his country," and "must pray for the Government." In view of the deficiency in mission funds "each member of this body" was required to act as "an agent to solicit missionary subscriptions of the largest possible amounts, the interest of which must be paid annually, and the principal at or before the death of the subscriber." As per instructions, D. Wertz was appointed "missionary on the western boundary of this Eldership."

19th Iowa Eldership.—The Eldership in 1866 began its session on Monday, October 15th, the Opening Sermon having been delivered the previous evening by A. Hollems, from Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. Mrs. Martha J. B. Wertz being present, the Eldership desired to hear its first sermon by a sister, and at once "appointed her to occupy the pulpit" on Monday evening. A. Megrew was chosen Speaker; John Huff, Journalizing Clerk, and J. L. Cramer, Transcribing Clerk. Arrangements were made for a missionary meeting to be addressed by A. X. Shoemaker, to devise measures to raise funds more vigorously to push mission work. At this meeting $160.00 were raised. The churches were also "urged to immediate action in taking up collections for this purpose, and an agent was appointed, A. Megrew, "to canvass the entire ground of the Eldership to collect money for the purpose of creating a missionary fund for the use and benefit of the Eldership in employing men and establishing missions in Iowa." A. Wilson was appointed to "Iowa Mission, including Grundy, Tama, Marshall and adjoining counties on the western boundary." The Board of Missions had received about $200.00 missionary money during the year. Iowa Eldership was cautioned by A. G. McCormick, in his written Report, not "to legislate and make rules for the local churches. The great drawback to our Elderships, both Annual and General, is too much legislation. This is a very questionable power, if at all granted by the New Testament Scriptures." The Report of the Iowa delegation to the General Eldership was referred to a special committee, which itemized it, and submitted actions on the several items. It urged collections to buy materials to publish a Sunday-school paper; commended The Advocate and its Editor, and approved the choice of the Assistant Editor, heartily approved "the reception of Centralia College;" were pleased with the report on the Chicago Mission. Five members were appointed a Camp-meeting Committee. The Eldership elected A. Megrew "Agent to canvass the entire ground of this Eldership to collect money for the purpose of creating a missionary fund." The number of conversions reported was 250; baptisms, 150; accessions, 200. John Huff was instructed to secure an Act of Incorporation.

20th Iowa Eldership.—There was an unusual amount of debating at the Eldership which convened in the Bethel at Pleasant Prairie, Buchanan county, October 21, 1867. It began soon after F. F. Kiner was chosen for Speaker; J. Lininger, Treasurer; J. Huff, First Clerk, and J. L. Cramer, Second Clerk. It began with the submission of a resolution ordering "ministers appointed to a charge to assume charge of their appointments immediately after the Eldership," which was adopted. Then came the question of the right of a member of a local church to "appeal from the decision of said church to this body." Murray presented a petition from a member of the church at Cairo, asking for an expression of opinion by the Eldership on this subject. J. Lininger and F. F. Kiner, two of the strongest debaters in the Eldership, were the principal disputants. Lininger affirmed the right; Kiner denied. After continuing the discussion for some time, the matter was referred to a committee consisting of Lininger, Megrew and Evans, which reported that the right to appeal must be recognized, and this report was sustained. Other and minor questions consumed considerable time. There was unanimity in regard to ministers remaining six months longer on their fields, to prepare for the new rule of changing in the Fall; on requiring statistics covering number of pastoral visits, number of members, conversions, accessions, baptisms, expulsions, transfers, deaths, value of church property, salaries, etc.; on "utterly denouncing vanity fairs among churches," and "advising ministers to exert their influence against the same." The Eldership rejoiced over "the omens of future prosperity and success which the Church of God presented in Iowa." Meads was appointed "to purchase a house of worship in the town of Columbus City, Louisa county, Iowa, at a cost of $300.00. Two missionaries, besides Wilson who was missionary the previous year, were ordered by the Eldership to be appointed. These were Marshall Mission, J. M. Klein, and London Mission, D. Gill. Logue, Megrew and Meads were designated "to devise a system of establishing a Superannuated Fund." The Board of Missions reported total receipts of $465.90 during the year. There were seven circuits and three missions, with one Missionary Agent.

21st Iowa Eldership.—The missionary spirit of the Iowa Eldership continued to become more intense, and greater things were planned by the body at its twenty-first session, which was held at North Bend, Johnson county, Iowa, beginning October 15, 1868. The first forenoon was spent in devotional exercises. There were but five absentees. A. X. Shoemaker, of Chicago Mission, was elected Speaker; John Huff, Journalizing Clerk, and J. L. Cramer, Transcribing Clerk. An "interesting and enthusiastic missionary meeting" was held, and missions were projected known as "Marshalltown and Washington, and on the Pacific Slope." "An active Agent" was authorized to be appointed, "to canvass the bounds of the Eldership, to solicit subscriptions and make collections, and to deliver a missionary discourse at each appointment." The missions which the Stationing Committee reported were Marshalltown, Loudon; Washington, Highland and Bound Grove and Guthrie county. A somewhat serious and acrimonious contention arose over the right of F. F. Kiner to "occupy a seat as ruling elder from the church at Cairo." A committee had also been "appointed to investigate the regularity and legality of the church at Cairo." The adoption of this item was objected to, whereupon Kiner presented two "charges against the Eldership." Kiner had been "suspended from the functions of the Christian ministry," and so the matter was compromised by a resolution offered by Shoemaker, declaring that Kiner had "failed to meet the issues fairly; and on the other hand the Committee has acted somewhat prematurely in suspending him;" therefore, it was directed "that Kiner and the Committee make the necessary concessions, and forgive one another." This resolution prevailed by a majority of one. On the charges against the Eldership the body "resolved itself into a Court of Adjustment," "Kiner conducting the prosecution, and Lininger the defense." It sat as such a Court during parts of six sittings. The charges against the Eldership were: 1. "Pursuing a course not in harmony with the usages and doctrine of the Church of God." 2. That "the said Committee of Investigation did exercise authority not delegated to it in declaring said action of the church void." The "course of the Eldership and the Special Committee was sustained." A rule was adopted which entitled each church to be represented by one elder in the Eldership, or one delegate appointed by the church. A general camp-meeting was to be arranged for by the Standing Committee. Kiner and Murray were deputed to effect a settlement in the church at Cairo by inducing them to "bury all difficulties and hard feelings, and return to each other the hand of forgiveness." The church at Grandview was censured for refusing "to sustain the appointee of the Eldership." The Constitution of the Missionary Society was "so amended as to merge the same into the Eldership, and the officers of the Eldership to constitute the Board of Missions." This year there were fourteen fields of labor, of which three are designated missions.

Extra Session Iowa Eldership.—The holding of extraordinary sessions of Elderships was always a rare thing. When held, as a rule, it was owing to contingencies which could not be anticipated. However, the extra session of the Iowa Eldership, held at North Bend, Johnson county, beginning Monday morning, March 22, 1869, was called because of "an amount of important business of a general character which was left unfinished at our last meeting," and also because of "business of a general character which had since accumulated." It was, hence, a session for general business. A committee was appointed "to devise a plan to raise funds for the support of ministers' widows," stimulated, doubtless by the death of E. Logue. He was a native of Maryland, and was first licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1836. Four years later he went to Ohio, by which Eldership he was sent to Pittsburg. After the West Pennsylvania Eldership was formed he traveled different circuits and held prominent positions. He returned to Ohio, and thence as a missionary to Illinois and then to Iowa. He was a delegate to the General Eldership in 1851, 1854 and 1866. He was a man of more than ordinary natural ability, a fearless champion of every cause he espoused, and his ministry was characterized by fidelity and devotion. He died November 7, 1868, at the home of Jacob Courtney, in Jefferson county, Iowa, and his body was removed and buried in the graveyard at Trenton, Henry county, Iowa. He was fifty-three years old. The Eldership put an Article into its Rules embodying the Article in the General Eldership Constitution, requiring ministers of other Elderships to secure transfers before they can labor in Iowa. The resolution of the regular session touching the difficulties in the Cairo church was not carried out, so that C. W. Evans was directed to read said action to the church. In addition to a regular Missionary Agent, persons were to be "deputed to collect subscriptions." The Eldership expressed itself as adverse to "placing young ministers in the field alone." The delegates to the General Eldership were "instructed to advocate a reduction in the rates of representation to one to every fifteen ministers," and that "the General Eldership meet once in every five years."

22nd Iowa Eldership.—The earnest, aggressive efforts to create a missionary fund were so successful, that when the Eldership met at Fairview, Cedar county, Iowa, October 21, 1869, it had a larger Home Mission Fund than it since has had. It amounted to $1,520.85. John Huff, layman, was elected Speaker, a very earnest, active and efficient worker; J. L. Cramer, Journalizing Clerk, and J. D. Meads, Transcribing Clerk. Later N. Zeller was chosen Treasurer of the Mission Fund. R. H. Bolton became a member by transfer from the Michigan Eldership. He was placed on a "Committee on More Efficient Missionary Plan," instead of the Life Membership Plan, which "was abolished, both principal and interest." The question of the Itinerancy coming up, by resolution the Eldership defined the Polity of the Church as being that "of mutual co-operation, or, in other words, a representative form of government," and decided "that we continue to maintain the same." The Eldership was deeply affected at the death of Thomas, Editor of The Advocate, personally so well known to many of the members. A committee, consisting of Shoemaker, Hollems and Bolton, was named to draft resolutions and arrange for memorial services. "Funeral services" were arranged for, to be held Saturday evening, to be conducted by Shoemaker, Bolton, Megrew and Hollems. The resolutions declare that "his life of usefulness has made a brilliant record and good history;" that he was "a valuable, useful and dearly beloved brother;" that he was "an able and successful minister of the Church; a most faithful, self-sacrificing and efficient publisher and Editor." Ministers were also directed "to hold services on their charges in memory" of the deceased. Kiner reported the "purchase of a house of worship in the city of Washington, Iowa," which was approved, and he was "recommended to visit the brotherhood at large to solicit means for the purpose of meeting payment on the same." The "25th day of December next," was set apart as a day "for humiliation and special prayer for the unity and spirituality and prosperity of our beloved Zion in this State."

23rd Iowa Eldership.—Deep interest and much enthusiasm characterized the Eldership in 1870, occasioned largely by several new and successful enterprises and the addition of eleven to the Roll of ministers. The Eldership session was held at Victor, Iowa county, and began September 15th. Twelve of the thirty ministers were absent; fifteen ruling elders and four delegates were present. R. H. Bolton was Speaker; J. L. Cramer, First Clerk, and F. F. Kiner, Second Clerk. A very active interest was taken in the Sunday-school Convention project, and Pentecostal meeting, both of which awakened much interest. Sunday-schools were declared to be "under the special supervision of the church, when conducted in our church houses." The suggestion of "holding a general Sunday-school Convention at some central point" was approved. "After a spirited discussion, a motion prevailed" that the Eldership "issue exhorters' recommends to such as give evidence of possessing the gift of exhortation." Measures were discussed to provide a Superannuated Ministers' and Widows' Fund. One afternoon sitting was "especially devoted to the consideration of the missionary interests," at which the questions of the men, the territory and the means were under discussion. The Treasurer of the Board of Missions reported amount of funds on hand to be $715.00. The Missionary Agent, J. D. Meads, had collected $245.70 during the year. It was provided that the territory of the Eldership be divided into two districts for missionary collections, with J. D. Meads and D. Gill as Agents. A stimulating report was made by the Committee on the State of Religion, showing conversions, 333; baptized, 215; added to the churches, 271; new organizations, 8; new church houses, 6. At the close of the Eldership there were thirty-nine ministers. The amount reported as paid by the churches as salaries to the pastors is $2,633.00.

24th Iowa Eldership.—At the Eldership in 1870 arrangements were made to draft a Constitution and to incorporate the Eldership, the work having been placed in the hands of the Standing Committee. The text of the proposed Constitution had been published in March, 1871. It had these provisions, excluding those referring to officers and their duties: That "the name, style and title of this body is 'The Iowa Eldership of the Church of God.'" The membership to consist of "all the preachers holding a license from the body, together with an elder or delegate from each church within the bounds of this Eldership." The Eldership to "appoint the committees required by the Rules of Order." There is to be a "Standing Committee of seven, and a Stationing Committee of five." To the former is given "the right and authority to act in behalf of the Eldership during the year." Prohibiting one preacher to go on the field of another. Preachers from other Elderships are required to become members before applying for an appointment. Churches are to report annually to the Eldership, as are all the ministers. Transfers are to be granted to ministers desiring to unite with other Elderships; but a transfer is to be good only for one year. "Preachers and churches which fail to comply with the 'Rules of Order' and of 'Co-operation' are liable to rebuke, suspension or expulsion by the Eldership." The Eldership at once adopted this Constitution, after it had elected as its officers A. Megrew, Speaker; J. L. Cramer, Stated Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Secretary. The session was held at Pleasant Grove Bethel, Louisa county, and began September 16th, with an address of welcome by W. Vance. Further impulse was given to missionary interests by the good report of the missionary agents, which showed larger collections, aggregating over $1,300.00. Two missionary collectors were again appointed, with instructions to collect at least an average of 75 cents per member. The Stationing Committee reported twenty-one appointments; of which two were in the State of Missouri. A mission was also created in Nebraska, to which A. L. Nye was appointed. The delegates to the General Eldership were instructed to vote for a change in the ratio of representation. Megrew, Vance and Bolton were appointed delegates to the Iowa Association of Separate Baptists, which differ from the Church of God in their name and polity, they being Congregationalists.

25th Iowa Eldership.—The General Eldership in 1872 passed two actions relative to the Journals of the Annual Elderships. One, that only synopses should be published in The Advocate. This was easy to control. The other, that Journals should be sent to The Advocate office to be printed in pamphlets uniform in all respects. The Iowa Eldership directed Bolton to publish and superintend the sale of 500 copies of pamphlets containing the Minutes. The session was held at Richwood, Jefferson county, beginning September 18th. A fraternal delegate was present from the Free Baptist Church, and one from the Separate Baptist Church. The Speaker was J. Lininger; Stated Clerk, J. L. Cramer; Corresponding Secretary, R. H. Bolton, and Treasurer, J. D. Meads. To reciprocate the friendly overtures of the Free Baptists and Separate Baptists, delegates were appointed to their next annual meetings. Two hundred accessions to the churches were reported, and conditions generally were encouraging, except at Washington, where the work went down. Dissatisfaction with affairs at the Chicago Mission was not wholly concealed. The Committee on Boundaries "reported the formation of eighteen fields of labor." Seventeen were reported by the Stationing Committee, of which four were missions. In some instances these missions extended over parts of three or four counties. One minister was received from the United Brethren Church and licensed, Joel Rawhauser. W. H. Mullinix, originally licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1840, died during the year.

26th Iowa Eldership.—The decreased interest during the year was reflected in some of the proceedings of the Eldership whose session began at North Bend, Johnson county, September 17, 1873. There had been some revivals, but the fruits were not so abundant. The Opening Sermon, instead of an address of welcome, was preached by F. F. Kiner the evening previous, from Eph. iii. 9, 10. He was chosen Speaker; J. L. Cramer, Stated Clerk; R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Secretary, and J. D. Meads, Treasurer. A good deal of time was given to "the Washington Bethel property case," and an assessment was laid upon "the membership of the Iowa Eldership to raise money sufficient to liquidate all claims against it." "The entire Columbus City Bethel property" was ordered "conveyed to Elder J. D. Meads." The large shrinkage which as a rule results from time subscriptions and membership dues was illustrated in the Report of the Missionary Collecting Agents. There were "$1,082.55 total amount of old subscriptions; $275.00 subscriptions taken; unpaid subscriptions on books, $1,102.10." A Course of Studies was approved, consisting of "the Bible, English Grammar, Wayland's Moral Science and Lee's Theology," and "a class formed," consisting of thirteen ministers. Examiners were appointed. The amount of collections for missions was $556.26. There was in the Superannuated Fund $103.43; and a total "belonging to the Eldership treasury of $351.52." The Nishnabotna Mission was added to the list of appointments. John Huff, having been appointed to secure an Act of Incorporation, on November 29th reported to the Standing Committee that "the matter had been properly attended to."

27th Iowa Eldership.—The effect of the Standing Committee's necessary work of rearranging fields of labor is seen in their decrease from twenty-one in 1871 to fifteen when the Eldership convened at Harmony Bethel, Des Moines county, September 16, 1874. D. Wertz on the previous evening preached the Opening Sermon from 1 Cor. iii. 21-23. For Speaker the Eldership made choice of F. F. Kiner, with L. F. Chamberlin, Stated Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Secretary. While in 1873 an effort was made by an assessment to raise money to meet the claims against the Washington Bethel, the property was later placed in the hands of Henry Funk to dispose of. At this session he reported the "sale of the Bethel on May 21, 1874, for $875.00." Total abstinence from intoxicating beverages is insisted upon, with instructions to "ministers and our people to make use of every laudable effort in our power to crush the venomous and mischievous serpent of intemperance." The delegates to the General Eldership were "instructed to use their influence and votes to change the ratio of representation to" said body. "The Sunday-School Record" then in contemplation was strongly endorsed. The establishment of the Ross Bookstore in Harrisburg received very favorable consideration. Strong disapproval was expressed by resolution of the practice of preachers leaving their fields of labor, or engaging their services to other Elderships, or to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership "without first gaining the consent of this body." The successful holding of Ministerial Associations in other Elderships induced the Eldership to appoint a committee to arrange a program for such a meeting in the Iowa Eldership. The death of Elder J. J. Miller, which occurred a few months after adjournment in 1873, was lamented, as he was "a worthy brother, an esteemed co-laborer and a faithful minister." Among the licentiatees was W. R. Covert, of Mercer county, Pa. There were enough German people in various parts of the Eldership territory to induce the Eldership to recommend to them W. Willsdorf as a German preacher. The Eldership also "urged the brotherhood, especially the ministry, to seek for a higher state of spirituality."

28th Iowa Eldership.—When the Iowa Eldership adjourned in 1875 it numbered forty-two ministers, but not one-half were in the active work. Of the thirty-nine who were enrolled when the Eldership was constituted September 16, 1875, twenty-four were in attendance, with eleven ruling elders and one delegate. To get more service out of the local preachers the Eldership required each one to preach twenty sermons a year. Should any one fail to do so, unless providentially hindered, his license was to be withheld. The Eldership elected C. W. Evans Speaker; L. F. Chamberlin, Stated Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Secretary. Henry Funk was later elected Treasurer. The session was held at Pleasant Prairie, Buchanan county, and but for two or three animated discussions was very pleasant. One of these was the attitude of the Eldership toward any minister holding the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead. The result was that it was decided not to grant license to any one believing this dogma. The Standing Committee had assumed the authority to say that a minister was "not officially authorized to fill all the functions of the ministry until he has paid $1.00 into the Superannuated and Widows' Fund," also provoked debate before it "was stricken out." The Eldership arranged to hold a camp-meeting the coming season. Two missionary collectors were appointed. There were twelve circuits and two missions—South English and Decatur. A Contingent Fund was created, and a plan adopted to secure a Permanent Missionary Fund for the Eldership through bequests.

29th Iowa Eldership.—The plan matured by the Standing Committee to secure "a Permanent Missionary Fund" was published December 29, 1875, consisted simply in submitting a form of bequest and urging brethren to remember the Fund in their wills. But it bore some fruit before the Eldership convened in 1876, for one minister who died, J. J. Miller, bequeathed $100.00 to said Fund. The session was held at Colo, Storey county, beginning with the Opening Sermon on Wednesday evening, September 20th, by R. H. Bolton, in the absence of both the appointee and his alternate, C. W. Evans and J. C. Kepford. J. H. Besore was elected Speaker; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk; R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Clerk, and H. Funk, Treasurer. The latter's Report showed $331.80 in the Missionary Fund. The Eldership lost two of its ministers, and one was virtually expelled, having been found guilty of serious charges, and one requested his name to be dropped. The Grandview Bethel was sold by the agent for $100.00. The Eldership then "reaffirmed our former action, that churches deed their church properties in such a way that they may become the properties of the Eldership in cases the local churches become extinct." The policy of raising missionary money through agents was continued, and two collectors were appointed for this purpose. Debts on bethels proved a hindrance to church work. The action of the Standing Committee was disapproved in "detaching Alice from the Colo and Grundy circuit by a vote of 14 to 12. The power of the Standing Committee "to make contracts that will bind the action of this Eldership" was then denied; and in general terms said Committee was forbidden to detach single points from circuits and give them to local resident ministers to supply. The Journal indicates some indisposition on the part of churches to co-operate in the matter of appointments, and the Eldership strongly admonished them to "co-operation and conformity to the arrangements made by this body as far as practicable." There were sixteen fields of labor, three of them being missions, one in Keokuk county; one in Ida and Sac counties, and one "near Sioux City." Reports indicate a good degree of success during the year.

30th Iowa Eldership.—One of those somewhat unusual providences marked this Eldership year, being the destruction by lightning of the Green Mound Bethel. The Eldership convened at North Bend, Johnson county, September 19, 1877. H. Murray preached the Opening Sermon the evening previous, from Matt. xxviii. 18-20. The enrollment showed twenty-one teaching elders present, ten ruling elders and one delegate, while seventeen teaching elders were absent. The officers chosen were H. Murray, Speaker; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk; R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Clerk, and Henry Funk, Treasurer. An unsuccessful effort was made to exclude traveling preachers from the Stationing Committee, and immediately the Committee was elected composed of ministers. Searching inquiry was made to ascertain whether the preachers had lifted collections as ordered, and a resolution was adopted requiring delinquents "to apologize to this Eldership for their past neglect, and that they be admonished to err no more." The Committee on Temperance seemed to have extreme views, so that a minority report was made; but after a slight amendment the report was adopted. It declared that "the Bible idea of the use of intoxicating drink is total abstinence." And the use of tobacco it declared "wholly useless, extremely filthy, ruinous to the human system, and an unnecessary waste of money." The Rules of Co-operation and Rules of Order were placed in the hands of a committee for revision. The Eldership affirmed "that the present age demands an educated ministry." A committee to "devise a plan for the better supporting of the ministry" reported, "that the preacher in charge of a circuit call a financial meeting soon after taking charge of the same. . . . to agree on the amount of his salary and amount of work to be done by him, and to apportion the amount among the churches." The number of accessions during the year were 145, and 96 baptized. The gradual change on the question of Secret Societies is seen in the resolution prohibiting any minister "delivering lectures for or against" them. R. H. Bolton was appointed "to prepare a historical sketch of the rise and progress of the Church of God in the United States, but more especially in the State of Iowa."

31st Iowa Eldership.—This Eldership witnessed the accession to its ranks of a minister who became very prominent in connection with educational interests. He was one of three who were ordained, to wit: J. R. H. Latchaw, D. S. Guinter and S. R. Akes. At the same time Mrs. Martha J. B. Wertz, formerly of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, received license. The Committee to revise the Rules of Co-operation and of Order reported only a few unimportant changes. The Eldership held its session at Moneka, Cedar county, beginning September 11, 1878. The evening previous C. W. Evans preached the Opening Sermon from Ps. lxxxviii. It was a well-attended Eldership, though there were seventeen teaching elders absent. J. H. Besore was elected Speaker; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk; R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Secretary, and H. Funk, Treasurer. The presence of Latchaw, a graduate of Hillsdale College, was made evident in actions taken on education. The Committee recommended ministers "to preach occasionally on the subject of Education," and a sitting of the Eldership was appointed "for the general discussion of the subject." "A spirited discussion took place" on "What is Education?" "What is the Relation of Education to the Cause of Religion?" and, "What Can We Do to Promote Education?" The only practical outcome was a resolve to "create a fund to aid in the education of young men aspiring for the ministry." The Eldership had put itself on record as being "very deficient in education," which "occasions our practical exclusion from many places." Three hundred and forty accessions to the churches were reported. "Due moderation in all things" and "total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks as a beverage" was the gist of the Report on Temperance. Two missionary collectors were appointed, who were to be allowed ten per cent. on all collections, and traveling expenses. There were fourteen circuits and one mission.

32nd Iowa Eldership.—The educational spirit in which the Eldership of 1878 closed was carried over into the session of 1879. For not only was the subject again discussed; but by resolution it was declared that "education is a necessity in this age of progress;" "that we consider ignorance a crime where knowledge is within reach;" and that "we will encourage as much as we are able any reasonable plan for the establishment of an institution of learning under the control of the Church of God." The business of the Eldership was carried on with energy and in a spirit of harmony under the direction of F. F. Kiner, Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Secretary. The session was held at Alice, Grundy county, beginning September 25th. J. Lininger preached the Opening Sermon on the previous evening. The names of five teaching elders were "dropped from the Minutes." The Iowa Missionary Society was "dissolved," and "all the powers thereof delegated to the Iowa Eldership as an Eldership." Allen's Grove, Scott county, was named "for holding the camp-meeting next year;" the fixing of the time was left to the Standing Committee. While "harmony prevailed" in the Eldership, there were several judicial trials of ministers against whom charges had been preferred. Also one appeal case came up, which was disposed of by adopting censures on the church for expelling a member, and declaring a minister implicated "to be highly censurable," his course "being unscriptural and calculated to cause division and strife contrary to the best interest of the said church." Dates were fixed for lifting the collections for Eldership funds, and the ministers which had been delinquent were "instructed to collect the same." There were eighteen fields of labor, one being the Northwestern Mission, and one Dakota Territory.

33rd Iowa Eldership.—In general terms, the thirty-third Iowa Eldership has been regarded as one of rather more than ordinary energy in the dispatch of business and the spirit of harmony which prevailed. A fair degree of success had attended the labors of the year, and special stress was placed upon the cultivation of a greater degree of spirituality on the part of both the ministry and the laity. The session was held in the Bethel at North Bend, Johnson county, beginning September 16, 1880. C. L. Wilson preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 15th, from Matt. xxiv. 45, 46. Twenty-two of the forty-two teaching elders were absent; eighteen ruling elders and delegates were in attendance. C. L. Wilson was the choice of the Eldership for Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk; R. H. Bolton, Corresponding Secretary, and Henry Funk, Treasurer. The Eldership entered heartily into the spirit of "the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the organization of the Sunday-schools," and also "the semi-centennial of the Church of God organization in the United States." A special program had been "prepared for these services, which was carried out." Some trouble was experienced in getting ministers who did not attend the annual sessions to make their reports in writing, and stricter enforcement of the Rule on this subject became necessary. A number of licenses were withheld until such reports were received by the Standing Committee. In ordaining licentiates a minister was appointed to "address them" after which "the Eldership joined in prayer," and then "extended the hand of fellowship to them." The body regarded "a thoroughly educated ministry as one of the great and pressing needs of the Church of God at this time," and "deplored the non-existence of an institution of learning under the auspices of the Church of God." The unusual incident of a minister "falling from the ministry and grace," again "making his peace with God, and preaching" and being "invited to become a member of this body" was a feature of this Eldership. Two "missionary collecting agents" were again appointed, though the preceding year only $278.18 were collected by the two agents, at an expense of $66.04. There were twenty-one appointments made by the Stationing Committee, one being at Peaksville, Mo., and one, Dakota. These fields were in the twenty-three counties: Adams, Appanoose, Buchanan, Cass, Carroll, Cedar, Des Moines, Decatur, Guthrie, Greene, Henry, Hamilton, Ida, Johnson, Jefferson, Keokuk, Louisa, Marion, Page, Scott, Story, Webster and Wayne.

34th Iowa Eldership.—A feeling reflected in reports of the Committee on the State of Religion had been growing in the Eldership that there were some deterrent causes operating against successful work, and so at the beginning of the session of 1881 a special order was made for the afternoon of the second day "for a general investigation of the wants of the Eldership and Church as to a more efficient and successful work within its bounds and the strengthening of its churches and ministry, and if possible to devise or suggest some way to more surely spread the work of Christ in Iowa." The session was held at Fairview Bethel, Cedar county, beginning September 8th. J. H. Besore was elected Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk; C. L. Wilson, Transcribing Clerk, and Henry Funk, Treasurer. Garfield had been "fouly attacked and stricken down by the hand of the assassin," and the Eldership, "knowing and believing in the power and efficiency of prayer," agreed "to spend one-half hour in special prayer for the President." The Eldership highly appreciated the fraternal visits of three members of the Illinois Eldership and one of the Missouri Eldership. Through its Committee on Temperance, F. F. Kiner, J. Rilett and A. C. Garner, the Eldership expressed its belief "that all Christian Churches and people should unite in the condemnation of the use and manufacture and sale of all intoxicating drinks as a beverage;" that "God's people can not afford to legalize or countenance a traffic which is in itself a source and the direct cause of such untold evil and sorrow," and urged "all our ministers and brethren to use every lawful and honorable effort to secure the submission of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of this State to the vote of the people." The fact of "the providential hindrances to the success of the work in the Winter of 1880-'81 by reason of the severe cold and snow" was recognized by resolution; but the Eldership believed "that much more can be done by a proper effort and greater diligence." The building of Findlay College was regarded as a "project to supply a long-felt need of the Church of God," and all the "ministers and members of the Church of God in Iowa" were "urged to heartily co-operate with the General Eldership in this work."

35th Iowa Eldership.—Preceding the Eldership in 1882, the Prohibitory amendment to the State Constitution, so strongly endorsed by the Eldership in 1881, was voted on. In this campaign the Iowa ministers took a decided stand in favor of the amendment. Accordingly the Eldership could "hail with joy the success attending the efforts of the different agencies engaged in the promotion of the temperance cause in the United States," and especially did the body feel "to thank God for the result of the late election, in which the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage became the constitutional law of the State." The session of the Eldership was held at Newburg, Jasper county, beginning September 28th. On the evening of the 27th J. H. Besore preached the Opening Sermon, from Isa. lxii. 2. While seventeen of the thirty-three teaching elders of the Eldership were present, there were only five ruling elders and two delegates in attendance. Balloting for officers resulted in the election of C. W. Evans, Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk; C. L. Wilson, Corresponding Secretary, and J. H. Lighter, Treasurer. The Speaker-elect "declined to accept the office, and J. H. Besore was chosen in his stead." During the year the receipts were as follows: Missionary Fund, $230.05; Superannuated and Widows' Fund, $64.42; Contingent Fund, $17.51. A State Evangelist was agreed upon; but as two circuits remained unsupplied, none was appointed. A missionary meeting was held on Friday evening, when missionary interests were discussed by C. W. Evans, J. H. Besore, A. Wilson, J. Huff, W. Vance, J. Lininger and J. Rilett. The appeal made for money was responded to by a collection of $72.55, and $84.05 in pledges. The Eldership referred the matter of the assessment of $50.00 by the Corporate Board of the General Eldership to the Standing Committee, claiming that it was "an unequal assessment," and that the Board "has overtaxed this Eldership;" that "our just proportion would not exceed $30.00." While "in some places we have not been as successful as desired," stated the Committee on the State of Religion, "in other places a good work has been done." The body placed itself on record against "the use of tobacco in its various forms" as "a great and growing evil, expensive, filthy and unhealthy," and pledged itself to "exert all the influence we can against its use." Findlay College enterprise was strongly endorsed, and the Eldership insisted on "putting forth every effort possible to make it a success, and honor to the Church and a benefit to all who may come within the range of its influence and power."

86th Iowa Eldership.—The year following the Eldership of 1882 was not very prosperous in the way of conversions and accessions to the churches. Other interests of the Eldership were being diligently looked after, and the ministers were admonished "to put forth every lawful effort to enlarge the borders of the Church of God." A sore disappointment was the adverse decision of the Supreme Court of the State, which "set aside and held for naught" the Prohibitory Amendment of the Constitution adopted June 27, 1883, by a majority of 29,729. But the Eldership was as firmly determined as ever to fulfill "the moral obligation which rests upon us, to secure the enactment of such laws as shall provide for the enactment and enforcement" of Prohibition. In this spirit the Eldership convened "at Alice, Grundy county, at 9 o'clock a. m., September 13, 1883, after having listened the previous evening to the Opening Sermon by H. Murray, from Acts xx. 28. A. C. Garner was chosen Speaker; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk; L. F. Chamberlin, Corresponding Secretary, and John Huff, Treasurer, to succeed former Treasurer J. H. Lighter, who died during the Eldership year. The Eldership decided to hold a camp-meeting the following Summer, and a Camp-meeting Committee was appointed. In the Sunday-school work the Eldership realized that it was not doing "what it should," and action was taken looking toward the holding a Sunday-school convention. The "matter was referred to the churches for consideration," which were "to make their wishes known to the next Eldership." It was also agreed "to revise the Constitution," and a Committee was selected for that purpose, to report in 1884. A "Permanent Missionary Fund" was created, and the "Treasurer was instructed to set aside $200.00" for that purpose, "the same to be kept separate from all others." The Treasurer was "required to give bonds in double the amount placed in his hands." On the elective franchise the Eldership put itself on record as "looking forward to the day when women may have the right to express her wish at the ballot box on all moral questions to be settled by a verdict of the people." The months in which pastors were to lift collections for the different Funds were fixed, and the Clerk was "instructed to notify ministers of the time for taking up these collections." The Treasurer was also "instructed to set aside $400.00 of Superannuated and Widows' Fund for a Permanent Fund."

87th Iowa Eldership.—When the Iowa Eldership convened in 1884 the Committee on Revision of the Constitution had no report to make, as it had done nothing. It was continued. The General Eldership had refused to reduce the assessment of the Corporate Board from $50.00 to $30.00 for the past; but made the assessment for the triennial period of 1884-1887 $40.00 a year. The Eldership acquiesced, and directed an apportionment to be made accordingly. The session of the Eldership was held at North Bend, Johnson county, beginning on Thursday at 9 o'clock a. m., September 4th. The previous evening A. C. Garner preached the Opening Sermon, from Rom. viii. 3. Seventeen of the thirty-three teaching elders enrolled were present; four ruling elders and six delegates. The Speaker was J. H. Besore; Stated Clerk, C. L. Wilson, Transcribing Clerk, L. F. Chamberlin, and John Huff, Treasurer. The date for the beginning of the Eldership year was fixed to be March 1st, and the "Stationing Committee was instructed to make all appointments to expire March 1, 1886." The Committee on the State of Religion, J. C. Kepford, W. A. Wells and D. Gill, was "inclined to think there is too much formality and worldliness among ministers and the churches," and advised "the cultivation of a greater degree of spirituality and a large liberality among the churches in the support of the ministers." In addition to a cordial approval of the work at Findlay College, the Eldership "commended the enterprise of the West Pennsylvania Eldership in establishing and taking under their care the Barkeyville Academy." Young men who contemplate entering the active ministry were advised "to take an academic or collegiate course before entering upon the work." The stringent enforcement of the Rules of the Eldership was exemplified in the placing of "G. T. Kimmel's license in the hands of the Standing Committee until he make apology for irregularity in accepting an appointment from the Board of Missions of the General Eldership without the consent of this body." The Eldership voted to "thank God for success in securing the enactment of a statute prohibiting the sale as a beverage of all intoxicating liquors." The death of John Rilett was recorded, as that of "an earnest advocate of the principles of the Church in his public and private life." The territory of the Eldership was divided into fourteen circuits.

88th Iowa Eldership.—There was more than the usual degree of hopefulness in the Eldership, and the future success of the Church in Iowa was apparently assured. Under such inspiring conditions the body met at Pleasant Prairie, Buchanan county, September 24, 1885, with thirteen fields of labor represented by nineteen teaching elders, while fourteen were absent. Only eight ruling elders were present. The choice for Speaker fell to the lot of J. C. Kepford; A. C. Garner was the Stated Clerk; C. L. Wilson was Corresponding Secretary. As Foreign Mission interests had taken more definite shape at the General Eldership in 1884, a resolution was adopted in answer to a letter from Secretary-Treasurer J. R. H. Latchaw, expressing "heartiest interest in the Foreign Mission work," and "urging the ministry and laity to encourage the work by liberal contributions." On temperance, it was the sense of the Eldership that "it is the duty of Christians to vote for only such men as are known to be in favor of temperance." The Eldership "hailed with thankfulness our success so far in our Findlay College enterprise, and the enlargement of our Book Department." Articles II., III., and V. of the Constitution were amended, the VIth. Article being stricken out. As "not as much ground was gained as could be desired," a "more full consecration to the work on the part of both ministry and laity" was recommended. The names of two ministers were "dropped from the Roll," one because "without the knowledge or consent of the Eldership has connected himself with another religious organization." The services of H. L. Soule, earlier of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, but later of Illinois, were solicited as evangelist to labor among the churches. Assessments made by the General Eldership, and amounts needed for Iowa Eldership, were apportioned among the circuits. There were again thirteen circuits. The sweet Christian fellowship, with all the trials incident to the work, was often expressed in the then popular song: "Shall we meet beyond the river?" with which this session closed.

89th Iowa Eldership.—Edward Young, in "Chamber of Death," expresses the sentiment that,

"Heaven waits not the last moment; owns her friends
On this side death; and points them out to men;
A lecture silent, but of sovereign power!"

This was experienced by the Iowa Eldership, which in 1886 lamented the departure of D. Wertz, "a prominent member, who though dead, still speaks to us."

One-half hour was devoted to memorial services. The Eldership held its session at Newburg, Jasper county, beginning September 9, 1886, the Opening Sermon having been preached the previous evening by I. E. Boyer, from Judges vi. 24. The officers chosen were, Speaker, L. F. Chamberlin; Journalizing Clerk, A. C. Garner; Corresponding Secretary, C. L. Wilson. The Illinois Eldership was represented by two delegates—W. I. Berkstreeser and C. Manchester. The Stationing Committee consisted of five members; the Standing Committee, three; which with two additional members was also the Board of Missions. All these were ministers. There were but seven ruling elders enrolled. Jealous concerning orthodox teaching by its own ministers, the Eldership was not content to pass by "certain teachings contrary to the accepted views of this body," which it found in "The Workman Quarterlies," on John iii. 5 and xiii. It demanded "a frank and full explanation as to how this gross oversight occurred." Over no other event was the Eldership so thoroughly aroused as over that of the assassination of Rev. George C. Haddock, a fearless advocate of Prohibition. In his war against the defiant saloon element in Sioux City, Iowa, which resisted the State Prohibitory law, he incurred its inveterate hatred, and was deliberately shot down on the street. The Eldership embodied its sentiments in several most trenchant resolutions, upholding "the healthy and effective statutory law prohibiting the sale of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage;" denouncing "the determined effort of those who are opposed to prohibition to suppress and disregard the law," and reaffirming its determination "from this time forward to use all lawful means to maintain the honor of the State and the good of society by diligently doing our duty as individual citizens in making prohibition a success." One additional field of labor was reported by the Stationing Committee—The Iowa and Dakota Mission, with H. L. Soule and D. S. Guinter as ministers. J. Huff was re-elected Treasurer, after making a very satisfactory report near the close of the session.

40th Iowa Eldership.—The brotherhood throughout Iowa seemed much encouraged during the Eldership year 1886-7. There was general increase of interest in the work of the Church throughout the State. More preaching places were opened, and the new fields, especially in Ida county, were promising well. Newcomer, of Illinois, went to Ida Grove soon after the Eldership, and labored successfully at that new center and in its vicinity. The Eldership convened at North Bend, Johnson county, September 22, 1887. The Opening Sermon was delivered the previous evening, by L. F. Chamberlin, from Ex. xii. 11, 12. There were sixteen teaching elders present, two exhorters, seven ruling elders and three delegates. Seven teaching elders were absent. A. Wilson was chosen Speaker; A. C. Garner, Journalizing Clerk, and C. L. Wilson, Corresponding Secretary. Temperance work held a conspicuous place in the deliberations, and was made a special order for Friday evening, with a special committee, consisting of J. H. Besore, J. C. Kepford and L. F. Chamberlin, to prepare a program. Strong resolutions were adopted, declaring the Eldership's full "accord with the Prohibitory law of the State," and promising its aid and influence "that it may and shall be enforced." The enactment of a "more stringent pharmacy law" was demanded. On no questions before the body was there the least disposition to be delightfully vague in the deliverances made. Even when "considering our publishing interests," which are primarily in charge of the General Eldership, did it speak in positive terms. The provision was adopted to constitute the Board of Missions of the Standing Committee with two additionally elected members. Upon petition, a committee was created to hear and decide a matter of a judicial character in the church at Moneka. Huff, Besore and Garner were appointed "to take initiatory steps to procure a tabernacle for the use of the Eldership." While the amounts received by the Treasurer, John Huff, were comparatively small, the funds were in good condition, to wit: Missionary Fund, $612.90; Superannuated and Widows', $687.76; Contingent, $65.39. The Stationing Committee made sixteen appointments with one "General Worker." The body expressed its appreciation of the action of the General Eldership in naming North Bend, Iowa, as the place to hold its session in 1890. It was especially noted that "the devotional services during the session were spiritual and of more than ordinary interest," and that "the preaching was well-timed, earnest, spiritual and edifying."

41st Iowa Eldership.—During the year 1887-8 Dakota Mission was added to the fields of labor of the Iowa Eldership, making a total of seventeen when the body was constituted on September 20, 1888. A. Wilson had preached the Opening Sermon the previous evening, from Matt. xxvii. 22. The session was held in the Beaver Bethel, Guthrie county, with nineteen ministers present; two delegates, one of them a sister, and eight ruling elders. Twelve ministers were absent. J. H. Besore was the choice of the Eldership for Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk, and L. F. Chamberlin, Transcribing Clerk. After his Report was approved and audited, John Huff was re-elected Treasurer. The liquor traffic was denounced as "the aggregation of viciousness, lawlessness and crime, the murderer of innocents, the financial cancer of economic industries, the cesspool of political trickery and demagogery." The "unqualified prohibition of the traffic, State and national" was favored, and it was considered the duty of "citizens and Christians to renounce all allegiance to political parties which are in affiliation with, or under the control of, the rum traffic." On the use of tobacco it expressed its belief that it is "an expensive, filthy and inconsistent habit, detrimental to spiritual growth, and over which we cannot conscientiously ask the blessing of God." For the General Eldership Missionary and Contingent Funds assessments were made. The Committee on Tabernacle of 1887 had partly complied with its instructions, and when its report was under consideration, subscriptions for the tent were taken on the floor, amounting to $149.00. The time for holding the Eldership was changed "so that the Opening Sermon will be preached on the Sunday morning on or before the full moon of September, the Ministerial Association to be held Friday evening and Saturday preceding. In the toll of death of the year was one veteran of the cross most highly esteemed, Father Charles Huff, "whose history as a Christian and a member of the Church of God was contemporary with the history of the Church of God in North America, and whose life was interwoven with the early history of the Church in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Iowa." The Eldership by an incisive resolution placed itself "on record against the various methods, such as church fairs, festivals, oyster suppers, etc., for raising money for religious and benevolent purposes" as being "contrary to the spirit and teaching of the gospel." Findlay College was emphatically endorsed, the body declaring "that we can not now afford to slacken our hands in financial and moral support of the same." The Eldership having resolved in favor of two General Missionaries, the Stationing Committee, in addition to the seventeen regular fields of labor, appointed H. Murray and W. Vance General Workers. But Moneka and Ida Grove were unsupplied. The Eldership remained in session until Saturday evening; tarried over Lord's day, and joined with the church in the ordinances in the evening.

42nd Iowa Eldership.—As the time was approaching for the meeting of the General Eldership in Iowa, two items were prominent in the minds of the ministers and churches in the State. Some opposition had developed against holding the General Eldership in Iowa, and at North Bend, a country church. Then the necessary preparation to entertain the body involved much work. But the brethren were advised to proceed with the latter, on the positive assumption that no change of place would be made. The matter of purchasing a tabernacle assumed additional significance, the committee declaring that "there appeared no immediate need for the purchase of the same," had "deferred the matter to await the action of this Eldership." The committee was continued, and a committee of four was appointed by the church at North Bend, the two jointly constituting "a Committee on Arrangements, to make such arrangements and preparations as may be necessary for the proper reception and entertainment of the next General Eldership." The session was held at Alice, in Grundy county, beginning on Monday morning, October 7, 1889. On Sunday evening J. H. Besore had preached the Opening Sermon, from Heb. xi: 24-26. Sixteen of the thirty-four ministers were absent; five ruling elders, four delegates and one exhorter were present. M. S. Newcomer was chosen Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk, and C. L. Wilson, Transcribing Clerk. The Eldership mourned the death of I. Whisler, "one of our old ministers, identified with the early history of the Church of God in Iowa, a zealous advocate of the doctrine and principles of the Church of God." The Eldership directed the preparation of "a course of studies for the young ministers now entering this body, and who are unable to attend college." It also recommended that "an educational fund be established for the benefit of young ministers, and that collections for this purpose be taken up at each appointment during the month of November in each year." Churches were recommended to secure acts of incorporation under the laws of the State. A sad incident marked the session, when J. H. Hurley, once Speaker of the General Eldership, but later disfellowshipped by the Illinois Eldership for certain misdemeanors, applied for license. Generously the Eldership, upon promise of restitution, agreed to open its doors for his re-admission to the ranks of the ministry. Congregationalism was in part endorsed when it was resolved that "we do not consider a letter of recommendation or dismissal valid unless ratified by the church." The Eldership declared that it emphatically favors Prohibition, and that it has "no sympathy with the license or tax system." After making a good report, Treasurer John Huff was unanimously re-elected. There were seventeen fields of labor, three of which received missionary appropriations.

43rd Iowa Eldership.—"In a beautiful natural grove, upon an eminence which makes it a very pleasant location," stands the Pleasant Grove Bethel, Louisa county, where from September 29th to October 1, 1890, the forty-third annual session of the Iowa Eldership was held. The Opening Sermon was delivered on Sunday morning previous, by M. S. Newcomer, from Luke xxiv. 49. Subject:—"Source of Ministerial Power." There were sixteen fields of labor, two of which were not represented. The enrollment showed twenty-two teaching elders, ten ruling elders and six delegates present; and eleven teaching elders absent, two of which were sisters. There were also two exhorters enrolled, but absent. The election resulted in the choice of J. S. Miller, Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk; C. L. Wilson, Transcribing Clerk, and John Huff, Treasurer. The funds were in good condition, though receipts were not large. There were balances on hand from the previous year, in the Home Mission Fund, $579.44, and receipts, $174.00; Superannuated and Widows', balance, $819.15, and receipts, $94.69; General Mission, balance, $92.52, and receipts, $116.46; Contingent, balance, $139.05, and receipts, $55.14. Only $245.00 were appropriated out of the Mission Fund. For this fund and the Contingent Fund assessments were made on the churches, thirty-two in number. The Treasurer's bond was $2,000.00. There was a good degree of success, and fair prospects for the coming year. A Course of Studies was reported by a previously appointed Committee. It extended through three years, and consisted of five subjects in each year, instead of text-books on particular doctrines. All ministers were given the option to take the Course. Each minister taking the Course was, however, to study "McIlvaine's Evidences of Christianity," and write a sermon on John I. 1, to be submitted to the Board of Examiners. On "a standard of giving," the Eldership expressed its judgment, "that every person who is a member of the Church of God ought to give at least one-tenth of their annual income, as we believe this is scriptural, right and just." The churches are advised at "the beginning of the Eldership year to assess the membership on this basis." The organization of Women's Missionary Societies in all the churches was recommended. "Only such men and parties who favor the prohibition of the liquor traffic" are to be "supported by our prayers and ballots." Unfermented wine was recommended for Communion purposes. The Minutes were ordered published in pamphlet form.

44th Iowa Eldership.—The extended Report of the Committee on Obituaries in 1891 indicated the acute sense of loss which the Eldership felt in the deaths of A. Hollems, J. B. Sherbon and J. M. Kline. Hollems was "an able minister, a clear and lucid expounder of the word; a logical, systematic reasoner of great power, and a meek, child-like man." Sherbon was "a man of quick penetration, positive convictions and good abilities as a revivalist." Klein was "a missionary of self-sacrificing devotion, and labored with ability and great acceptance." The session was held at Hayes Chapel, Ida county, beginning Monday morning, September 14th. J. S. Miller delivered the Opening Sermon the Sunday morning previous, from 2 Cor. iv. 1, 2. The officers elected were J. C. Kepford, Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk; C. L. Wilson, Transcribing Clerk, and John Huff, Treasurer. An ordinance meeting was held on Tuesday evening, when C. L. Wilson, by action of the Eldership, delivered an address. At the missionary meeting the sum of "$600.00 was raised in cash and pledges." The Eldership also raised $21.50 "to place a memorial window in the bethel at Ida Grove in memory of A. Hollems." The year 1890-1 was "one of more than ordinary success." The body strenuously opposed "the attempt to bring about the repeal of our present prohibitory law," and the brotherhood was "earnestly urged to use their influence and ballots in favor of such men only as are pledged to the retention and enforcement of the present law." An important action was taken to promote more active interest and effort on the part of ministers and churches to "use their influence in retaining the children of the families of the Church, and thereby hold them to the principles and doctrines of the Church of God." Funds for the purchase of a tent for the use of the Eldership were not half sufficient, and pastors were directed "at once to make an effort to secure the full amount necessary." A State Missionary was to be employed as soon as a suitable minister could be secured.

45th Iowa Eldership.—"The work of the Eldership," as reflected in this year's Journal, "was carried on with zeal and energy. The foreign mission work had taken strong hold on the minds of the brethren, and the subject was discussed at some length, and quite an interest created." The session was held at Pleasant Prairie, Buchanan county, beginning October 3, 1892. On the previous Sunday morning I. E. Boyer preached the Opening Sermon, from 1 Cor. vi. 20. When the Eldership was constituted, forty-two teaching elders, of whom nineteen were absent, and eight ruling elders and delegates were enrolled, representing eighteen fields of labor. J. S. Miller was elected Speaker; A. C. Garner, Journalizing Clerk; C. L. Wilson, Transcribing Clerk, and John Huff, Treasurer. Provision was made for a form of Certificate for "all sisters who do not desire full ministerial license." It made them members of the Eldership, with "authority to preach the gospel among the churches of God within the bounds of this Eldership." "The Eldership Missionary meeting and the Woman's Annual Missionary meeting" were to be held together, the latter to receive one-third of the funds secured. The Eldership conceded that it could "not dictate what ticket Christians ought to vote," yet it would "advise and declare what they ought not to vote, as follows: For no party that will not place itself in direct and open hostility to the saloon, in State and nation." The "need of better cultured ministers and Christian workers everywhere" was emphasized, and especially "for men and women filled with the Holy Spirit and wisdom." Memorial services were held "in memory of H. Murray, in whose death 'this Eldership and the Church have sustained a great loss.'" He was a native of Chester county, Pa., born August 28, 1815. In 1821, with his parents, he came to near Good Hope, Cumberland county. Here he was converted in 1835, and baptized by Joseph Adams in the Susquehanna river. In 1842 he removed to Richland county, Ohio, and in the Fall of that year received license from the Ohio Eldership. In 1855 he emigrated to Iowa, and in October became a member of the Iowa Eldership.

46th Iowa Eldership.—The Opening Sermon of this Eldership, delivered on Sunday morning, September 24, 1893, by M. S. Newcomer, was out of the usual line of such discourses. The text was in Matt. xxii. 21, and the theme was "The Ideal Citizen." J. S. Miller was elected Speaker; A. C. Garner, Stated Clerk; J. K. Nelson, Transcribing Clerk, and John Huff, Treasurer. There was a strong sentiment in favor of employing a State Evangelist, and after approving the question, it was referred to the Standing Committee. A motion to invite Mrs. Woodworth to Iowa "to labor in evangelistic work," was not agreed to. Instead of arranging for the collection of General Eldership missionary money through the usual agencies, the Secretary of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership was invited "to visit churches in Iowa and take collections" for that purpose. Clara Landes appeared before the Committee on License, which "found her deeply impressed of the Holy Spirit to do public work for God, and that foreign mission work for the Church of God is to be the ultimate field of her labors." A Certificate of membership in the Iowa Eldership was granted her, and authority to preach the gospel. The Eldership was evidently opposed to local option, as it voted against "any attempt to make a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants in one part of the State, and establishing a license system in another." It also "protested against a high or low license, believing it to be wrong." Emma Stover was "recognized by the Eldership as Singing Evangelist," to "assist in meetings and in the work of organizing Sisters' Missionary Societies." On the questions submitted to the Annual Elderships by the General Eldership, action was taken as follows: Against a general Fund out of which to defray the expenses of delegates to the General Eldership. On "Association of Churches of God," "we do not object to the term 'Association,' yet we do not believe it to be wise to make said changes," "unless it be adopted by all the Elderships." It approved of the action of "the General Eldership in accepting the proposition of the Free Baptist Association in Foreign Mission work." Funds as reported by the Treasurer were—Home Mission, $738.65; General Mission, $148.17; Superannuated and Widows', $727.50; Contingent, $207.80. $250.00 were appropriated out of the Home Mission Fund. The number of appointments was twenty-two, besides mission work in Cedar Rapids was to be done, "as opportunity afforded," by Mrs. A. C. Newcomer.

47th Iowa Eldership.—The matter acted upon in 1893, to invite Mrs. Woodworth to Iowa, and laid on the table, came up at the session in 1894, when J. L. Cramer, after stating that Mrs. W. was "in Iowa unsolicited by this body," proposed to "invite her by telegram to attend the session of the Iowa Eldership, which met in annual session at Moneka, Cedar county, September 17, 1894. She was then at North Bend, but declined to go to the Eldership "owing to so long and continued labor, and tired physical condition." The membership present consisted of twenty-seven ministers, four exhorters, twelve ruling elders and one delegate. Ten ministers were absent. L. F. Chamberlin was chosen Speaker; D. W. Blakely, Stated Clerk; J. W. Nelson, Transcribing Clerk, and John Huff, Treasurer. The death of A. Megrew was the subject of appropriate resolutions. His was "an eventful and consecrated life," and he "left a record of precious memory." He was licensed by the Ohio Eldership in 1841, but removed to Iowa in 1850. He was Speaker of the Iowa Eldership at several sessions, and a delegate to the General Eldership a number of times. He died July 6, 1894. He was one of the converts of the notable prayer-meeting held at Churchtown, Cumberland county, Pa., in 1832. He did the carpenter work of the first Bethel built there. He removed to Ohio in 1836. He was one of the strong and influential ministers of the Iowa Eldership. At this Eldership, along with J. L. Cramer, L. T. Craven and E. E. Heltibridge, Clara Landes received "full ministerial license." Steps were taken to revise the Constitution, Rules of Incorporation, Rules of Order and By-Laws, the committee to report in 1895. If a change is to be made in Eldership titles, the Iowa Eldership this year voted that its preference is "Assembly of Churches of God." Twenty-two appointments were made, to six of which missionary appropriations were made, aggregating $350.00. The Tabernacle Fund was to be increased, which now amounted to $150.90.

48th Iowa Eldership.—It is doubtless next to a truism, that "in all religious controversies, exaggeration, distortion, prejudice and unfairness are certain to characterize, not one, but both of the contending sides." So that it is never in strife of this kind that truth is likely to come forth, which, on the contrary is the fruit of impartial, patient and quiet investigation. But discussion should be something quite different from controversy. It is the statement and consideration of arguments for and against a matter under examination. Mill "On Liberty" says there must be discussion to "show how experience is to be interpreted." But for more than that. If with calmness and judgment propositions are discussed they are illuminated and connected facts are developed to enable parties to reach sound conclusions. In 1895 the Iowa Eldership had protracted discussions on general and local questions, but not any serious controversies. It held its annual session at Alice, Grundy county, beginning September 23rd. Twenty-seven ministers were present, and twelve were absent; eighteen ruling elders and delegates, and one exhorter, while three exhorters were absent. An organization was effected by the election of A. C. Garner, President; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk, and J. K. Nelson, Transcribing Clerk. The first item under discussion was the revision of the Constitution. After a committee was appointed, to report in 1896, the important matter of "examining into the character and reports of ministers" was considered and debated, and then referred to the Revision Committee. The Tent Fund was then disposed of, and the "matter was dropped, and moneys ordered returned to donors." In succession the Eldership discussed items handed down by the General Eldership. On change of Eldership titles it was decided "not wise to depart from the old landmarks," and so the Eldership stood "opposed to a change of titles." But if a change should be made, Iowa preferred "Assembly to that of Association of Churches of God," and so instructed its delegates. Life ordination was discussed at the Ministerial Association on September 21st, and the Eldership voted that "persons called of God to preach the gospel should be ordained for life." It was not in favor of "laying on of hands as necessarily essential to scriptural ordination." After the Treasurer's Report was audited and approved, N. Zeller was chosen Treasurer. The "licensing of the liquor traffic as a beverage" the Eldership "looked upon as a crime and a sin," and hence the body pledged itself "not by our ballots to support any party, men or measures that are not uncompromisingly opposed to the legalization of this demoralizing and diabolical business." The important question: "What can we do as an Eldership to increase the interest taken in Y. P. S. C. E.?" was carefully considered. Assessments were made for General Mission and Contingent Funds, and for expenses of delegates to the General Eldership. There were twenty-two fields of labor. Mrs. M. A. Sutliff was appointed Evangelist.

49th Iowa Eldership.—"A hopeful spirit prevailed" in the Iowa Eldership in 1896, and "the meeting was full of enthusiasm and interest." "All matters relating to the general work of the Church were considered." True, "during the year occurred the death of J. Lininger, and all felt that a great loss was sustained and a wise counselor was gone from our midst." But J. W. Ault, Walter Smith and Conrad Fatland were received into the Eldership, which much encouraged the consecrated workers. Lininger was a self-made man. He was first licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, in 1839. He became one of the pioneer members of the Iowa Eldership. He was firm to a fault in his opinions, yet there was an absence of egotism in his utterances. A man of great energy and natural ability, he became a leading member of the Iowa Eldership. He was tenacious, yet conciliatory. A man of sterling character, he had also a fine sense of honor and a kindly, generous spirit toward all with whom he came in contact, and so he could say with Hamlet: "I think myself in nothing else so happy as in a soul remembering my dear friends." Barbara McFadden, widow of Wm. McFadden, minister in the East Pennsylvania Eldership, who died at Ida Grove, Ia., was lovingly remembered and honored at the memorial services. The session of the Eldership was held at Carroll, Carroll county, and began September 21st, the Opening Sermon having been preached the Sunday morning before, by J. C. Kepford, from 1 Kings ii. 2. A. C. Garner was the President, and C. L. Wilson, Clerk. Three new churches were received after their condition was investigated and favorably reported upon by a committee. The revised Constitution was reported, and adopted. The amendments changed "Church of God" to "churches of God;" "Corresponding Secretary" to "Transcribing Clerk;" "Speaker" was changed to "President;" provision was made for the election of "a Standing Committee which shall also be the Board of Mission;" requiring "all persons receiving license from the Eldership to hold membership in some local church in the Eldership;" requiring "all officers to be actual members of the Eldership, except the Treasurer and the Transcribing Clerk," who need not be, and do not become members by such election. The retiring President was required to deliver before the next Eldership "a message, stating so far as possible the wants and conditions of the churches, and making such recommendations as in his judgment he may deem necessary." The use of permanent funds of Findlay College was characterized as being "dangerous, and is creating distrust, and is closing up the way for securing permanent funds of that character;" but the Eldership expressed its "deep interest in the success of the College." Two sisters "received Lay Evangelist Certificates." In addition to a forcible resolution on temperance, the Eldership "declared its antipathy to the tobacco habit, and opposed those who desire to become members of this body until the use of tobacco in any form is discarded." Churches were urged to organize Y. P. S. C. E., and to send representatives to the next Eldership to organize a State Association. There were twenty-two fields of labor, one General Evangelist and four Lay Evangelists, three of them women.

50th Iowa Eldership.—This is the "fifty-first annual session of the Iowa Eldership," according to its official enumeration. It was held at Pleasant Prairie, Buchanan county, and the Opening Sermon was preached by D. S. Guintner on Sunday morning, September 12, 1897, from 1 Cor. xv. 22. On Monday morning the provision of the amended Constitution went into effect, when "an admirable address by A. C. Garner, retiring President, was delivered." He reviewed the work of the past year; gave an outline of the work to be done by the Eldership, with many valuable suggestions upon matters of serious import. Then the Eldership was constituted, and an organization effected by electing J. S. Miller, President; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk; J. W. Ault, Transcribing Clerk. A newly organized church in Lincoln township, Wright county, was received. Also one at Shellsburg, and one at East Des Moines. A pleasant incident was a letter of greeting from the Illinois Eldership through Sister C. M. Ritchie. By her hand greetings of the Iowa Eldership were sent to the Oregon and Washington Eldership, and to the Illinois Eldership. The first report of Clara Landes, Missionary to India, was read, and was received with absorbing interest. A special order was made for the memorial services to do honor to two ministers who had in their departure left legacies of pious devotion to the common cause. Sister A. C. Newcomer was "a faithful advocate of the gospel, an earnest worker in the Church, and a woman of great faith in God in times of sorrow and affliction. She received her first license from the Illinois Eldership in 1873." W. Burch, who for many years was a faithful minister of the gospel, and one who was always true to the doctrines of the Church of God." An effort to establish a time-limit for pastors, the term being three years, was not successful. Two General Evangelists, A. E. Kepford and J. C. Forncrook, were licensed. The receipts for the Missionary Fund were $362.08; Contingent Fund, $160.61; General Eldership Mission Fund, $269.69; Superannuated Fund, $263.88. N. Zeller was elected Treasurer. The fields of labor numbered twenty-three, with three Lay Evangelists and four General Evangelists.

51st Iowa Eldership.—In addition to the Annual or Opening Sermon, the "Annual Message" of the retiring President was gaining in public estimation. At the session in 1898, J. S. Miller, retiring President, recommended that "the Annual Message be published in The Advocate at least one month before the session of the Eldership." He also recommended that "at least one-half of the afternoons of the first two days be given to committee work," a suggestion which experience in deliberative bodies has proved to be quite generally approved. Also that "nominations in the selection of officers" be adopted. The Eldership convened on Saturday, September 19, 1898, at Glidden, Carroll county. On Sunday morning Jay C. Forncrook delivered the Opening Sermon, from Matt. xvi. 18. The twenty-four fields of labor were represented by twenty-five teaching elders and twenty ruling elders and delegates. There were also three Lay Evangelists, three General Evangelists, one General Worker, one Missionary in employ of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, one Missionary to India, seventeen local ministers and two exhorters. But nineteen of the teaching elders were absent. Four teaching elders were women, and three of the evangelists and one exhorter. After nominations, elections resulted in the choice of D. S. Guintner, President; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk; J. W. Ault, Transcribing Clerk. His "usefulness impaired by failures to meet his financial obligations," the Standing Committee suspended one minister "from the functions of the ministry," and the Eldership revoked his license. In its action on temperance, emphatically declaring against "the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating drinks, both as a beverage and a medicine, the Eldership petitioned the President of the United States to use his executive power to abolish the army canteen." Three newly organized churches, on application, were received into the Eldership. The unique entry of instances in which the Eldership violated its Constitution was followed by the passage of a resolution that "in the future the Iowa Eldership hold sacred its Constitution, and under no case, condition or circumstance violate it." A special effort was to be made during the year to increase the Home Mission Fund, and the last Lord's day in October was designated as the time "to present the claims of the Home Mission Fund and receive money and pledges." The ministers were to be interrogated at the Eldership in 1899 as to whether they complied with this order. One minister was expelled by the Eldership for conduct which brought "reproach to the cause of Christ and disgrace to the gospel ministry." The work throughout the Eldership had "made good progress; the membership had materially increased; four new organizations were formed; several houses of worship were built."

52nd Iowa Eldership.—To meet certain conditions under the order of the General Eldership requiring Life Certificates of Ordination was a perplexing question in the Iowa Eldership. But it was solved by adding to the Life Certificate a certificate of character and standing, "to be renewed every year by the vote of the Eldership." Before organization of the Eldership in 1899, after it was constituted by the Clerk, a Committee on Credentials was appointed, which also reported petitions from the church at Muscatine and the mission church at Iowa City "for admittance to the Iowa Eldership." The session was held at North Bend, Johnson county, and began business on Monday morning, September 18, 1899. J. C. Kepford had preached the Opening Sermon on Sunday morning, from Joshua iii. 4. A. C. Garner was elected President; C. L. Wilson, Stated Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Transcribing Clerk, and N. Zeller, Treasurer. The Eldership not only "condemned any and all political parties which in any way would try to sustain the saloon in Iowa and other States in violation of the law," and "demanded the abolishment of the army canteen;" but it denounced "the use of cigarettes as very destructive to the youth of our land." A half hour was "set apart for memorial services" in honor of four persons who had gone never to "come back from the echoless shore." None was a minister; but John Huff had long been a member of the Eldership, and its Treasurer, and also delegate to the General Eldership, and its Treasurer. The name of Carrie A. Kepford was added to the Ministerial Roll, she having received an annual license. The other regularly licensed women of the Eldership were Emma Isenberg, Mrs. S. A. Rambo, Clara Landes, M. Sutliff and Mrs. M. J. B. Wertz, formerly Beecher, who was superannuated. The Eldership rejoiced that "notwithstanding adversities, victories are ours; some new Bethels are being built, new churches organized and others strengthened." There were 44 churches in the body, 32 Bethels, 1,610 members, 131 fellowshipped during the year, $5,911.78 paid as salaries of ministers. The Stationing Committee made twenty-three appointments. The brethren were "recommended to endeavor to maintain a greater spirit of love and preferment at the Eldership."

53rd Iowa Eldership.—The Iowa Eldership in 1900 had forty-one ministers on its Roll, of which number six were women, including Clara Landes, Midnapore, India. Two had died during the year, and one was suspended. There were also four exhorters, two of them women. The session was held at Newburg, Jasper county, beginning September 10th, with the Opening Sermon on the previous evening, by C. Fatland, from Jude 3. Twenty-six ministers were present, and fourteen ruling elders and delegates. A. C. Garner, retiring President, opened the session by "delivering his Address and making recommendations." Officers were then elected as follows: President, A. C. Garner; Stated Clerk, E. W. Moyer; Transcribing Clerk, F. F. Manchester; Treasurer, N. Zeller. There were twenty-three charges, and I. E. Boyer and J. C. Forncrook were named as Evangelists. The state of religion was not wholly satisfactory, though "some advancement was made along all lines of Church work, and a good degree of spiritual life prevailed." There was a "Committee on Disorganized Churches," which reported four churches "disorganized" or "defunct," and in one instance "the church building gone." But three churches were received "as a part of this Eldership," two of them located in Missouri. The two "well-beloved brethren" removed by death were David Gill and Joel Rawhauser, who had "devoted the best of their lives to the sacred cause of the ministry." Whether or not the prayer was answered, "that their mantle of power may fall on others," it is still true as was said when Webster died: "We do not get another Webster by electing a new United States Senator to take his seat." Reports as to the unfavorable attitude of the Eldership toward C. E. societies had provoked discussion, and the body declared that it "fully endorsed the Christian Endeavor Society as an auxiliary to the church both needful and helpful." On the resolution affirming "that the members of this body shall not in any way oppose any of the institutions sanctioned and adopted by this body, 'a yea and nay vote was ordered, resulting in yeas, 25; nays, 10; not voting, 5. A regular system of apportioning 'the different Funds among the churches' prevailed, and the five Funds were in satisfactory condition. A four years' Course of Studies was agreed upon, and a committee appointed to outline it and fix examinations and establish grades. A candidate for ordination was required to make an average of 75 per cent. in Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Geography, Orthography and History.

54th Iowa Eldership.—The Ministerial Association met the day before the Eldership, and was attended by twenty-one ministers and twelve laymen. The same number, with two added, answered Roll call when the session of the Eldership opened at Alice, Grundy county, Monday morning, September 23, 1901. On Sunday morning E. E. Heltbride preached the Opening Sermon, from Matt. xxviii. 18-20. President Garner "addressed the Eldership, reviewing the year's work, and making recommendations for the consideration of the Eldership." He was re-elected President; E. W. Moyer, Stated Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Transcribing Clerk; N. Zeller, Treasurer. The church property at Arthur was sold—building and lot, $350.00; furniture and bell, $80.00. The money was placed into the Church Extension Fund. The church organized at Royal, Clay county, "was received as one of the churches of the Iowa Eldership." A Board of Education was provided for, which was to meet and examine members of the classes in the four years' Course of Studies on Thursday preceding the Ministerial Association. It was to "recommend all candidates for license to the Standing Committee. A Diploma was to be granted to those who finished the Course. Ira L. Fatland was the first one to be licensed under this provision. Two soldiers of the cross during the year reported to the Great Commander—F. F. Kiner and Geo. Stone. Memorial services were held, at which the characters and works of these departed ministers were duly set forth. They were "aged brethren, who had seen years of labor for the Master." But the glory of their lives came not from what they did, or what they knew; but was found in what they were. There were twenty appointments, all but one supplied. One was the "Missouri Mission." Nine ministers were named as "General Workers." Briefly the Eldership affirmed "that the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is "a sin," thus going back to the original moral ground upon which the question of temperance rested in early years. But it also pledged itself to "use our influence in every legal way possible to destroy the rum traffic."

55th Iowa Eldership.—In 1902 the announcement of the meeting of the Iowa Eldership indicated that a new question of moment would require discussion and action. The W. M. S. had been meeting annually at the time and place of the meeting of the Eldership; but in 1902 "all societies of the W. M. S. are urged to send their full quota of delegates." A "joint session with the Eldership" was asked by the W. M. S. to consider certain questions. At this joint meeting unanimous action was taken by the Eldership on "the action of the General Eldership in 1902," and two kindred questions. "No inflammatory speeches were made," says the Stated Clerk, "or sentiments of disloyalty expressed;" but the Eldership expressed it as its opinion "that the action of the General Eldership in taking the Home Funds of the W. G. M. S. was illegal and unjust, and in direct violation of the Constitution of the W. G. M. S., . . . . . and also of an action of the General Eldership at Decatur, June 18, 1899." The session was held in the Harmony Bethel, Des Moines county, beginning on Monday morning, September 15th. The Opening Sermon was preached the previous Sabbath morning by G. W. Elliott, from II. Tim. iv. 1-8. The officers elected were: President, J. S. Miller; Stated Clerk, E. W. Moyer; Transcribing Clerk, A. E. Kepford; Treasurer, N. Zeller. In addition to the action in joint session with the W. M. S., the Eldership also adopted resolutions alleging "discrimination against the W. G. M. S. in the columns of The Church Advocate," and demanding that its "columns be open alike to all without discrimination." The President of the Board of Publication, D. M. Bare, received these resolutions, and was "authorized to obtain the facts complained of, and make answer to the same." This he did, and published them, with his conclusion, that "it will be found that there has been no discrimination." But as there was "more or less of an undercurrent of dissatisfaction and criticism prevalent throughout the Eldership concerning our general interests," the work in Iowa felt its effects. The church at Smith Grove, Bremer county, and the church at Stahl, Mo., were received into the Eldership. The sale of the Iowa City and the Muscatine church properties was reported. There were thirty-nine churches in the Eldership, with a total membership of 1,101. They paid a total of $4,903 as salaries to the pastors. Being delinquent on assessments for General Eldership Funds, a committee on the subject reported in extenuation, that the Eldership had "paid out a large amount of money in the support of mission work in northern Missouri, which was not in harmony with the conditions on which said work was accepted;" that the Eldership should have credit for money thus expended; that "the membership in Iowa in the past two years has been greatly reduced by removals," and that "many of the churches are now in need of financial help from the Eldership." There were twenty-three appointments made, with Mrs. M. Sutliff and G. W. Elliott, "Evangelists to Iowa and Minnesota." Three of the fields were in Missouri.

56th Iowa Eldership.—The year 1902-3, assuming the accuracy of the Statistics, was not a prosperous one. The number of churches in 1903 was given as 33; members, 739; Bethels, 28; conversions, 293; fellowshipped, 151; salaries, $4,991.35. The Eldership rejoiced most over the report of Clara Landes, whose name stands on the list of Appointments as "Missionary to India." The Eldership expressed its "joy in her victories for Christ and the Church." The Eldership held its session with the church at Pleasant Prairie, Buchanan county, where on Sabbath morning, September 27th, C. L. Wilson preached the Opening Sermon, from 1 Tim. iii. 15. On the morning of the 28th the body effected an organization by electing L. F. Chamberlin, President; A. E. Kepford, Stated Clerk; Conrad Fadland, Transcribing Clerk; N. Zeller, Treasurer. The Eldership through its Committee on Credentials refused to seat a "regularly elected delegate from the church at Mt. Joy" because not a member "with said church." The church at Ninevah, Mo., was received into the Eldership. Two days were to be "the time for the Ministerial Association." The W. M. S. again "requested the Iowa Eldership to grant it a period of time to sit in joint session" with the Eldership. It presented a preamble, with a list of "grievances," and some resolutions. These were considered by "a special committee, of which" the sisters were allowed to select two members." It reported, "deeply deploring the present difficulties and conditions;" that it believed "some, or all of these grievances may be more or less exaggerated, yet there is much room for complaint;" that "union under existing circumstances is impossible," and "endorsing the action of the Iowa W. M. S.," and urging "its continued unity." The prevalent desire for harmony and peace, however, found expression in the admonition laid upon all to exercise "the utmost care, to refrain in conversation, correspondence or publication from those things which increase division and destroy confidence." It suggested the publication of "a monthly, non-partisan paper, devoted to the cause of missions." Local option was endorsed as a measure "to abolish the saloon," while praying and laboring for prohibition.

57th Iowa Eldership.—Within the Iowa Eldership there was a degree of unity which contrasted with conditions elsewhere in some parts of the West. The session of 1904 "was characterized with brotherly love and kindness," though there was evident a degree of acerbity of feeling toward other sections of the Church. There were "many in the Iowa Eldership radical in opposing the General Eldership, at least on the action relating to the missionary situation enacted by the last General Eldership." To adjust matters it was recommended that "the Iowa Eldership petition the General Eldership, asking that a special time be set apart during the session of the next General Eldership for a free and deliberate consideration of the relative merits of all grievances of the W. G. M. S. relative to the acts or actions of the General Eldership, or any of its Boards or agents, with a view to seeking such an equitable adjustment of all acts or actions pertaining thereto as shall induce a spirit of true unity and harmony." This action was taken in response to a resolution of the Iowa W. M. S. The Eldership held its session at Shambaugh, Page county, where the Opening Sermon was delivered by A. E. Kepford, on Sabbath morning, September 13, 1904, from Rom. v. 1. The enrollment from the twenty-one charges consisted of thirty-seven teaching elders, three exhorters and ten delegates. The retiring President recommended: 1. "Course of Study." 2. "Extreme care in selection of delegates to the General Eldership." 3. Avoiding "technicalities." 4. "Assist to lay one stone that might prove a basis of union in the missionary situation." Conversions during the year numbered 179; fellowshipped, 113; C. E. Societies, 6; churches, 31; houses of worship, 27. At one of the appointments the two pastors, Conrad and Ivy Fatland, resigned because "strong drink was required to be administered in the Communion." The position taken by the church was disapproved, and the matter was adjusted. On condition that the church building to be erected at Maynard, Minn., be deeded to the Iowa Eldership, the missionary, G. W. Elliott, was permitted to canvass the Eldership territory for funds. The church at Maynard, Minn., was "admitted into the Iowa Eldership until such time as there may be an Eldership formed in that State." During the year two ministers, William Vance and Martha J. B. Wertz, ended their earthly careers. Affecting memorial services were held in their honor. Vance was a native of Fayette county, Pa., and was converted under the labors of Thomas Hickernell about 1838. He was licensed by the West Pennsylvania Eldership in 1845, and removed to Iowa in 1850. He was one of the active pioneer preachers in that State. He was a man full of zeal, and one of the most successful pastors in his earlier years. He was endowed with the gift of song, and "his volume of voice was wonderful." He reached the age of 78 years. Mrs. Beecher was born in Chester county, Pa., August 29, 1819. She was converted at a Methodist camp-meeting held at London Grove, Chester county, Pa., September 10, 1834, and united with the Methodist Protestant Church. On May 24, 1840, in Allegheny City, Pa., she was married to David Beecher. After Beecher's death she was married to Rev. Daniel Wertz, in Cedar county, Ia., August 9, 1866. She was converted to the faith of the Church, and was baptized by J. M. Domer in 1857. In 1859 the West Pennsylvania Eldership granted her an exhorter's license, and in 1864 preacher's license. In 1866 she removed to Iowa and became a member of the Iowa Eldership. "She did her work well." On account of "grievances existing on some fields" of labor it was decided that "at least one member of the Standing Committee visit each field not less than once a year." On the list of appointments this year was Trenton, North Dakota, to which J. K. Nelson was assigned. The officials of the Eldership of 1904 were L. F. Chamberlin, President; A. E. Kepford, Stated Clerk; Conrad Fatland, Transcribing Clerk; N. Zeller, Treasurer. Five of the pastors received appropriations out of the Missionary Fund.

58th Iowa Eldership.—"The Iowa Woman's Missionary Society" continued out of harmony with the recognized W. G. M. S. of the General Eldership; but the Eldership so interpreted the action of the latter body in 1905 that its relations to the Iowa Eldership were not disturbed. It held its meeting in 1905 simultaneously with the session of the Eldership, which was convened at Mt. Joy, Sioux county, to begin September 11th. On Sunday morning L. F. Chamberlin preached the Opening Sermon, from II. Tim. iv. 2-5. The enrollment showed the following membership: Present, twenty teaching elders, seven ruling elders, three delegates; sixteen teaching elders absent. On the Roll as ministers were four women, and one as a ruling elder and one as a delegate. Elections resulted in the choice of L. F. Chamberlin, President; A. E. Kepford, Stated Clerk; Conrad Fatland, Transcribing Clerk; Treasurer, N. Zeller. The Eldership on its list of appointments had at this time three circuits in Missouri, one appointment in Minnesota, and one in North Dakota. A church organized by G. W. Elliott, at Mount View, Minn., was "received into the Eldership and recorded on the Roll." So also was the church at Mount Harmony, Mo. The Iowa City "church property had been disposed of for $1,320.00." The "Inter-State Assembly of the churches of God," organized in the Indiana Eldership, was "heartily endorsed, believing it will afford a fine opportunity for intellectual culture, the spiritual development and the social intercourse of our young people." Findlay College was endorsed as an institution "which is accomplishing much in the interest of the Church," and "the young people were encouraged to attend it," and the churches "to support it in every possible way." C. I. Brown, the President, being present, "set forth in a candid way the condition and needs of the College." Two of the ministers of the Eldership had completed their earthly journey during the year. I. E. Boyer was the first to reach the goal. He was a native of Pennsylvania, and was first licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1852. For some years he was a member of the Illinois Eldership, and later was transferred to the Iowa Eldership. He was "a man of ability and strength, and thoroughly faithful to the highest interests of the Church." He was noted for "the beauty of a devoted, well-rounded and symmetrical life." W. H. Hickman was a man of good natural talent, and his loss was much deplored. Not accepting "the doctrine of a second work of grace" on sanctification, the Eldership "admonished" one of its teaching elders "to refrain from preaching anything that will have a tendency to produce discord or division." The Standing Committee was authorized "to continue as overseers of the churches," and was instructed to "stimulate interest among the churches in financial matters." An expelled member of any one church was to be so considered by every other church. Pastors were to encourage the building of parsonages, and to this end it was deemed important that "the Iowa Eldership fix boundaries for fields of labor, so that parsonages can be advantageously located." Always decided in its convictions on temperance, the Eldership expressed its judgment, that "the open saloon is legalized by our ballots," and hence "the voters of the churches of God are requested to refuse to vote with parties which fail to put themselves in open hostility to the saloon." The "use of tobacco and all narcotics" was condemned, and "ministers and members of the churches" were required "to use their influence both publicly and privately against their use." The finances of the Eldership were in a healthy condition, although the receipts were below the needs of the Eldership. The funds were as follows: Home Mission, Contingent, General Mission, Superannuated and Widows', Church Extension, Permanent Home Mission, General Contingent and Delegate. There were twenty-five fields of labor, but four of them the Eldership left "to be supplied." Two of the appointees, W. N. Yates and Jesse Huddle, were received on transfer, the former from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, the latter from the Oregon and Washington Eldership. Two of the pastors appointed were women.

59th Iowa Eldership.—Findlay College having prepared a Course of Studies in line with the Ministerial Course in the College and Theological Department, the Iowa Eldership was at once prepared to adopt it for all its "ministers who had not been preaching ten years," and "all coming into the Eldership, except such as may come from other religious bodies." A Board of Education was also provided for, and W. N. Yates, M. S. Newcomer and J. S. Miller were elected. The session of 1906 also took action on "a petition from the Standing Committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, requesting the Iowa Eldership to join it in petitioning the Executive Board of the General Eldership to appoint a Commission for the purpose of effecting a union in our foreign mission work." The Eldership accepted the action of its Standing Committee, agreeing "to ask the Executive Board of the General Eldership to appoint a special Commission, whose duty it shall be to act as a mediator between the W. G. M. S. of 1890 and the W. G. M. S. of 1903, with a view of securing a mutual agreement," subject to ratification by the Incorporate Board of the General Eldership. The Eldership "realized the necessity of laboring for the uniting of all our missionary forces," and pledged itself to encourage every honorable effort to bring about the desired result;" yet its several actions laid emphasis on the character of the proposed Commission as "mediator" only. The position of the Eldership was embarrassing, as it aimed to be loyal to the General Eldership, while its W. M. S. was not in co-operation with said body, but resisted all its actions relating to itself. Under these conditions the session of 1906 was held at North Bend, Johnson county, beginning on Monday, September 17th, and continuing until Thursday. Sabbath morning, September 16th, the Opening Sermon was preached by M. S. Newcomer. Elections for officers resulted in the choice of A. C. Garner, President; W. N. Yates, Stated Clerk; Conrad Fatland, Transcribing Clerk; N. Zeller, Treasurer. The Eldership rejoiced in "the return of Clara Landes for a brief rest, after almost ten years spent in India as missionary." Being present at the session, she reported in person. The Iowa W. M. S. in a body participated in a special program of an hour on Monday. The action of the Standing Committee, that "financial aid for the work in India and the return of Sister Landes might be solicited from the churches in Iowa," was approved. On temperance the Eldership took advanced ground, declaring that "the time has come when the Christian voter can no longer silence the voice of conscience by devotion to parties known to be allied with the liquor traffic without compromising with the forces of evil." The body "sympathized with all organized efforts among men and women for the overthrow of the liquor traffic." The Committee reporting these sentiments consisted of these six sisters: M. B. Newcomer, M. Sutliff, Ivy Fatland, Ellen Green, Clara Landes, Emaline Wilson. Strong resolutions on education were adopted, declaring that "the whole man—body, soul and spirit—is to be dedicated, trained and devoted to the service of God," and so "all our young men are advised to take all the collegiate and academic training possible, but at the same time preserve the pre-eminence and control of the Holy Spirit over all." Obligation was laid on the pastors to preach a special sermon during the year on home missions, one on the duty to support the ministry and God's cause in general, and one on the duty of the churches to patronize our Printing and Publishing House. The eighteen fields of labor, with two exceptions, were supplied with pastors. Mrs. M. Sutliff was appointed State Evangelist, and Rambo and wife Evangelists. The name of Clara Landes is on the list as "Missionary to India." D. Kepford, E. Angel, J. W. Mullen and Walter Smith are the "superannuated ministers," and received appropriations out of the Superannuated Fund, which had a balance at this time of $955.03. The Eldership elected ministers to preach the Missionary Sermon and the Gospel Temperance Sermon.

60th Iowa Eldership.—While the Boards of the General Eldership acted adversely on the reappointment of Clara Landes as Missionary to India, and the appointment of A. B. Chamberlin to the same territory; the Iowa Eldership, of which both were members, decided to "set apart thirty minutes for holding a farewell service to the outgoing missionaries." Otherwise "on the mission question" the "Eldership was silent." The outlook "for better things" was hopeful, and the session of the Eldership was characterized with earnest and spiritual devotional services. After the annual missionary sermon, by Conrad Fatland, $400.00 were raised for home missions. The session was held at Alice, Grundy county, and began on Monday morning, September 23, 1907. On the preceding Sabbath morning W. N. Yates delivered the Opening Sermon. A. C. Garner was elected President; W. N. Yates, Stated Clerk; Conrad Fatland, Transcribing Clerk; N. Zeller, Treasurer. As per custom, the retiring President "delivered an address," this year "speaking of the general condition of the churches, and recommending that special attention be given the work in Sullivan county, Mo." Thursday evening until Saturday the Ministerial Association held its annual meeting. During the year "the church property in Gentry county, Mo.," was sold, and the church at Mount View, Minn., was reported as having "become extinct." The church at Burns school-house, Mo., was received into the Eldership. While the body voted favorably on Findlay College and Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute, and bespoke for "both these institutions the hearty support of the brethren in general, and the patronage of our young people; yet it "recognized the Bible to be the foundation of all true learning," and "urged the brethren to become, or continue to be, earnest students of the Holy Book." The Treasurer reported the receipts for the Home Mission Fund, including balance from the ex-Treasurer, to have been: $738.40; Contingent Fund, $281.20; Superannuated, $1,664.46; General Missionary, $106.84; Church Extension, $1,696.39; Permanent Home Mission, $605.50; General Contingent, $77.43. Regular assessments were made for the General Mission and the Iowa Contingent Funds. To secure a wider distribution of its Minutes, the Eldership directed that 300 copies be printed "for free distribution." And as the Minutes of the W. M. S. were printed with those of the Eldership, "as many copies in addition to the 300 as the W. M. S. may desire" were ordered to be printed. These were all paid for out of the Contingent Fund, each year. The number of fields of labor was twelve, all but one supplied with pastors by the Stationing Committee. There were also seven ministers designated as "General Workers," and several additional names were placed on the Superannuated list.

61st Iowa Eldership.—The sixty-first session of the Iowa Eldership was "held out of the State, yet there were but three votes less than there were" the previous year. The place of meeting was at Hawkeye, Mo., and the Opening Sermon was preached on Sabbath morning, September 6, 1908, by J. C. Kepford. A Committee on Credentials, appointed before the Eldership was constituted, reported two new churches, one at Lakeview, Mo., and one near Hazelton, N. Dak., which were received into the Eldership. The officers elected were A. C. Garner, President; W. N. Yates, Stated Clerk; Conrad Fatland, Transcribing Clerk; N. Zeller, Treasurer. Special sermons delivered on the three evenings of the session were by W. N. Yates, Annual Temperance Sermon; A. E. Schwenk, Annual Missionary Sermon; C. I. Brown, President of Findlay College, on Education. On the "Missionary Question," the Eldership voted, that, "believing that co-operation with the General Eldership and its Boards is the duty of all, and is the only safe way to insure the best interests of all, we urge the Iowa W. M. S. to co-operate with the Commission appointed by the Executive Board of the General Eldership to effect the unification of our missionary societies in the effort for the formation of the Society of the Future." "All were recommended to seek earnestly to bring about union and harmony." The Eldership's attention was specially called "to the thinning of the ranks of the ministry, and the need of more young men in the active ministry of the Church." During the year one had fallen out of the ranks at the call of the death-messenger, E. Angel, a man of "many excellent traits of character; of quiet and unobtrusive temperament, peaceful, loving and easy to be entreated, a man known everywhere as a Christian." The church at Keystone, Mo., was reported "in a disorganized condition, and does not hold services." It was "declared extinct, and recommended that the property be sold." The Eldership "hailed with pleasure the growing popularity of the cause that stands for the total prohibition of the licensed beverage liquor traffic, and the tidal wave of prohibition sentiment which is rolling over our land." The Permanent Home Mission Fund received from "Sister M. E. Luce a donation of $200.00." The Eldership pledged itself "to support the effort to raise the 'Carnegie Fund,' and thereby assure an income sufficient to support the teachers at Findlay College." The balances in the different Funds of the Eldership were as follows: Home Mission, $523.72; Iowa Contingent, $105.21; Superannuated and Widows', $1,042.35; General Mission, $68.38; Church Extension, $1,798.14; Permanent Home Mission, $417.99, making the total assets $3,887.41. There were twenty appointments, but five were unsupplied with pastors. Two ministers, James Shipp and E. E. Heltibridge, were made General Workers, while five were on the Superannuated list.

62nd Iowa Eldership.—The General Eldership in May, 1909, having taken "final action on the missionary question, sustaining the actions of the various Boards and the Commission by a unanimous vote," the Standing Committee of the Iowa Eldership took action on the same, as per instructions of the General Eldership. This action was reported to the Eldership at its session held at Salem, Washington county, beginning September 13, 1909. It "appealed to all ministers and churches, and missionary societies, to unite in one general effort to bring about speedy co-operation with the General body." It also asked "the missionaries in India, who are members of the Iowa Eldership, to join in the effort to adjust the work, so that all may be in harmony, and that all may have a part in supporting the work both in Ulubaria and in Bogra." This "action was made the action of the Eldership by a yea and nay vote of 18 to 7." The Opening Sermon of the Eldership was preached on the previous Sabbath morning, September 12th, by O. A. Newlin, Field Secretary of Findlay College, from Prov. xiv. 34; while in the evening the Annual Gospel Temperance Sermon was preached by M. S. Newcomer. Officers were chosen as follows: President, E. E. Heltbridle; Stated Clerk, William N. Yates; Transcribing Clerk, F. E. Hamlin; Treasurer, N. Zeller. The Eldership expressed its sense of "the need of a thorough preparation for the gospel ministry and other Christian work," and, therefore, "recommended our young men and women to attend either Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute, or Findlay College." It promised "heartily to support the financial needs of our educational institutions by observing the Day of Prayer for Colleges, Children's College Day and Ft. Scott Institute Day, as provided by the General Eldership." Added to several strong resolutions on temperance, in which it was insisted that "their ballots may count first of all for righteousness," was one expressing "hearty sympathy with the various organizations" working for "social purity, personal purity, spiritual power, and for the sanctity of the Sabbath." All were "urged to free themselves from the power of useless, wasteful and filthy habits." The feeling of loyalty to the interests of the Eldership and of the General Eldership, and love for the great truths for which the Church stands, proved stronger than the passions aroused by the divisive controversy relative to the missionary question, so that at the close of the session two members of the Eldership which had voted against the adoption of the resolutions on the W. G. M. S., "M. S. Newcomer and Mrs. M. B. Newcomer, addressed the Eldership, and their addresses were followed by a song and hand-shaking."

63rd Iowa Eldership.—Notwithstanding the action of the General Eldership and of the Iowa Eldership on the W. G. M. S. question, and the adverse course of the W. G. M. S. of 1890, the names of Clara Landes and A. B. Chamberlin were on the Eldership Roll as "Missionaries in India" in 1910. The Eldership convened at Ida Grove, county seat of Ida county, Monday morning, September 12th. On Sunday morning previous W. E. Kelly delivered the Opening Sermon, from I. Tim. iv. 16. E. E. Heltbridle was elected President; F. E. Hamlin, Stated Clerk; A. E. Schwenck, Transcribing Clerk; N. Zeller, Treasurer. A regular statistical report was tabulated, giving eleven different items for sixteen fields of labor. These had 25 houses of worship, valued at $3,920.00; membership, 878; conversions, 181; fellowshipped, 77; baptized, 47; salaries of pastors, $5,340.56. Two ministers received Life Certificates of Ordination instead of annual licenses. One minister, Henry Bittle, was removed by death. "Always loyal to the Church and the Eldership, and an earnest worker in the cause of the Master," the Eldership sincerely lamented his death. A more serious loss was experienced when "W. N. Yates was granted a transfer to the East Pennsylvania Eldership." He had "faithfully labored in the Eldership for five years, and "by his untiring energies and devotion to the work of the Church and Eldership" had "endeared himself to the entire brotherhood." The action of the Eldership "on a Reading Course for the benefit of the ministry," taken some years prior to 1910, was reaffirmed, and it was expressed as "the firm belief that the Church of God should encourage the education of its ministry, and that the Eldership ought to take some steps toward establishing a Reading Course for the benefit of the ministry." There were twenty-four Sunday-schools reported, and it was made the duty of "every minister in the Eldership to do all in his power to encourage the best methods of Sunday-school work." It was agreed to increase the support of pastors and to facilitate their moving on fields of labor by requiring the charge to which a minister is assigned "to pay one-half of his moving expenses, within the bounds of the Iowa Eldership." The body was receiving some new men by transfer from other Elderships, as this year J. C. Forncrook came with his transfer from the East Pennsylvania Eldership. But other workers were locating, and one, W. E. Kelly, surrendered his Life Certificate of Ordination.

64th Iowa Eldership.—Iowa Eldership in 1911 joined the other Annual Elderships in prayer for peace and harmony throughout the General Eldership, "in compliance with the request of the Executive Board." At the first sitting on Monday, "the President of the Eldership called Jesse Huddle to take charge "of this service. He spoke on the subject of the hour, had the Eldership sing, "Blest Be the Tie That Binds," and called on Jay C. Forncrook and G. W. Elliott, who offered prayer for this special end." The brotherhood had wearied of the contention which had attended the solution of the Missionary Question, and all hearts longed for harmony and mutual love and confidence. The session of the Eldership was held at Shambaugh, Page county, September 11-13 inclusive. The Opening Sermon was preached on Sunday morning, September 10th, by Jesse Huddle. The officers elected were, President, E. E. Heltibridge; Stated Clerk, F. E. Hamlin; Transcribing Clerk, A. E. Schwenk; Treasurer, N. Zeller. While the name of Clara Landes was still on the Roll as "Missionary in India," as well as those of A. B. Chamberlin and wife, the Eldership "adopted her report with the understanding that we in no way approve any action not in harmony with previous actions of this Eldership," and it "again urged the speedy co-operation of all our missionary workers." A. B. Chamberlin returned his Certificate of Ordination, which was "annulled." Mrs. M. B. Newcomer, active worker in the W. G. M. S. of 1890, "requested an open transfer," which was given "for ninety days, at the end of said time she ceases to be a member of this body, unless she returns said transfer to this body within the time limit." Divine "providence had called out of this life," said the Eldership, "our beloved and esteemed co-laborer, M. S. Newcomer, D. D., an able expounder of God's word." Memorial services were held before evening preaching on Tuesday, in charge of C. L. Wilson. Newcomer was a native of Franklin county, Pa., born January 15, 1840. Removed with his parents to near Polo, Ill., in 1865. He was converted January 23, 1866, at Mt. Morris, Ill., and was baptized by I. E. Boyer. In 1867 he was licensed to preach by the Standing Committee of the Illinois Eldership. With the exception of ten years in the Iowa Eldership from 1887, and again four years from 1905, his ministerial life was spent in the service of the Illinois Eldership. He died at Freeport, Ill., May 26, 1911. From 1878 to 1885 he was Assistant Editor of The Advocate; was President of the General Eldership in 1881 and in 1893. For twenty-one years he was a member of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, and President of the Board fifteen years. He was a man of talent and ability.

The Eldership manifested quite a degree of concern touching missionary interests, "which have been caused to suffer locally as well as generally, and societies have become disorganized and mission interests paralyzed." Not only was "reorganization" insisted upon; but "the local churches" were "requested to organize local societies, and elect delegates to meet for the organization of an Eldership Society in harmony with the Constitution and By-Laws of the General Eldership." N. Zeller resigned as Treasurer at the sitting of the Eldership on the third day, and the vacancy was filled by the election of "Ernest Myers as Treasurer of the Iowa Eldership."

65th Iowa Eldership.—Monday morning, September 23, 1912, the sixty-fifth annual session of the Iowa Eldership opened. The preceding Sabbath morning A. E. Schwenk delivered the Annual Sermon, from Job xxxvi. 24 and Ps. xlix. 8. Seventeen fields of labor were represented by fourteen pastors, six elders and two delegates, which were women. In addition there were nine General Workers, including Mrs. M. Sutliff, Clara Landes and Mrs. M. B. Newcomer, who had returned her "open transfer granted in 1911." Also three superannuated ministers. Howard W. Cover, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and missionary appointed to India, attended the session, and awakened renewed interest in foreign mission work. The Eldership pledged its "loyalty and co-operation to Bro. Cover in the interests which he represents in India." The officers of the Eldership were G. W. Elliott, President; F. E. Hamlin, Stated Clerk; A. E. Schwenk, Transcribing Clerk; Ernest Myers, Treasurer. The Stationing Committee consisted of C. L. Wilson, Jesse Huddle, D. L. Cox, A. C. Garner, E. E. Heltibridge. The following were elected on the Standing Committee: G. W. Elliott, F. E. Hamlin, Jesse Huddle, C. L. Wilson, A. C. Garner. All these, except the Treasurer, are ministers. The case of Mrs. Newcomer was considered in Committee of the Whole, which "after a lengthy discussion made" report, which was adopted, that she had "violated the action of this body in the adjustment of the missionary controversy," and recommended "that action be taken in her case accordingly." Her report was "placed in the hands of the Standing Committee to be dealt with according;" to this action. J. C. Forncrook returned with his transfer to the East Pennsylvania Eldership. The Eldership realized that in Fornocrook it was "losing a worthy brother and an able minister of the gospel, one who is always ready to do his work for the building up of the Church of God." The Shambaugh church having suffered the loss by fire of its bethel, the Eldership "made a donation of $100.00 for the new building out of the Church Extension Fund." To "raise Home Missionary Money" the Stationing Committee was authorized to "give the amount necessary for the coming year, and the Standing Committee was directed to apportion the amount among the different churches of the Eldership." On temperance the body accentuated former actions by resolving "that none of us cast a ballot with the liquor voters; that we do all in our power not only to prohibit the sale of liquor, but to do away with the manufacture and transportation of the same." There were fifteen fields of labor, but five remained unsupplied by the Stationing Committee. The Funds of the Eldership had the following balances: Home Mission, $705.02; Iowa Contingent, $124.46; Superannuated and Widows', $1,037.48; Permanent Home Mission, $483.58; Church Extension, $2,167.80. "The session of the Eldership was characterized by a Christian spirit and good fellowship."

VI. THE MICHIGAN ELDERSHIP.

1st Michigan Eldership.—The Indiana Eldership for some years after its organization in 1846 had no boundaries on the North, the South or the West. In

Alexander B. Slyter

1849 A. B. Slyter, of said Eldership, as a general missionary, crossed the line into Michigan and began work. His labors were mainly confined to Barry, Allegan and Kent counties, being in the third and fourth tiers of counties north of the Indiana line, and the first and second counties along Lake Michigan on the West. Five churches were organized in these counties prior to March, 1850, viz: One on Duncan Lake, in the Kilmore Settlement; one in E. H. Searles' neighborhood; one in the Hammond Settlement; one at Caledonia, in the home of Bro. Moffit, and one at Clark's Corners. It was estimated that these churches had a membership of sixty-five. Enoch B. Gillaspie, of the church at Clark's Corners, had entered the ministry in Indiana, and Benjamin Farnham also began preaching, so that they counted that they had three preachers. No authority was given these brethren either by the Indiana Eldership, or the General Eldership, to form a new Eldership. They were quite a distance from the territory occupied by the Indiana Eldership, "too far," they claimed, and they were as strong as said Eldership when first organized. Yet their course was not in harmony with the action of the General Eldership in 1848. But these ministers and churches agreed to meet March 2, 1850, "at the house of Bro. E. H. Searles in Thornapple township, Barry county, Mich.," to form an Eldership. In "constituting the meeting" it was found that the following were present and entitled to membership:

Teaching Elders—A. B. Slyter and E. B. Gillaspie.

Ruling elders—John Ferdig and John Kilmer, Sr.

Delegates—E. H. Searles, John Kilmer, Jr., Amos M. Sames, David Wood, Robert H. Kilmer, B. F. Hungerford and John E. Wood. A. B. Slyter was elected Speaker, and E. H. Searles, Clerk.

Alexander B. Slyter was born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., December 2, 1812. He was converted in 1836. Removed to Indiana, where he became a member of the first Eldership, in 1846. In 1849 he went to Michigan as a general missionary, and when the first Eldership was organized he was elected Speaker, and re-elected in 1851 and 1853. During 1853 he served as general helper to pastors in the Michigan Eldership. He was elected delegate to the General Eldership of 1851 and 1854, but was absent at both sessions. He returned to Indiana about the time the Michigan Eldership collapsed, and in 1859 was chosen Speaker. When the Michigan Eldership was revived, in 1859, he again became a member of it. Later he removed to Kansas, and entered on mission work in that State under the Nebraska Eldership, about the year 1877. His mission field was in Pottawatomie and adjacent counties. He was considered an able preacher and a very good counselor. He died April 13, 1886, aged 74 years, 4 months and 11 days. Slyter first united with a church of God in Milford township, LaGrange county, Ind., about March, 1846, and was licensed by said church to preach the gospel. He attended the first Indiana Eldership the same year, and, with T. Hickernell, constituted the Eldership, being enrolled as a teaching elder. By resolution reciting the fact of his ordination by the local church, his "license was renewed." He was a very zealous minister, hesitating at no sacrifice. When a member of the Nebraska Eldership, he traveled 500 miles in buggy to attend its session in 1885. The Nebraska Eldership pronounced him "an able preacher of the gospel and a wise counselor." He was converted under the preaching of T. Hickernell, in Ohio. He was what is called a self-made man, having very limited school advantages; but he was a man of good natural talents; a clear thinker, and of robust moral character, and served his Master and the Church with marked fidelity.

A resolution was adopted to "unite with the other Elderships of the Church of God in the general system of co-operation." Also one "prohibiting any one from uniting with us who holds slaves, or belongs to Secret Societies; and that we will take no book but the Bible as the man of our counsel and the rule of our faith and practice." John Ferdig and Benjamin Farnham were duly licensed. A Standing and a Stationary Committee were appointed. The latter appointed Benjamin Farnham to the Middleville circuit; A. B. Slyter, to Thornapple circuit; E. B. Gillaspie, to labor as much as he can on the Gaines circuit, and John Ferdig, to the Caledonia circuit. There was no house of worship of the Church of God in the State; but the services were held in private houses, school-houses and in the woods. There was great opposition, but it made them more faithful defenders of the truth.

2nd Michigan Eldership.—As it ever was the custom to hold Annual Elderships in the Fall, the first Michigan Eldership adjourned to meet the third Monday in October, 1850. It accordingly met on Sunday, November 10th, in the school-house in the Hammond Settlement, Gaines township, Kent county, the date having been changed by the Standing Committee, and after services "adjourned to the house of Bro. Drake, November 11th, at 8.30 a. m." There were present three of the four teaching elders; three ruling elders, and five delegates. A. B. Slyter was chosen Speaker, and J. Drake, Clerk. A difficulty arose between the Michigan and the Indiana Elderships over the status of E. B. Gillaspie, who had been "wrongfully excluded" from the latter Eldership, and received by the Michigan Eldership. The latter felt "to hold that Eldership accountable, instead of Bro. Gillaspie," and notified it that Gillaspie "appeals to the General Eldership for a final hearing." The delegate from Michigan Eldership was not present at the General Eldership in 1851, and no action was taken on the appeal. J. Drake was licensed at this Eldership. The Eldership declared against receiving "into the fellowship of the Church of God any one who holds slaves, or who belongs to Secret Societies." The "first day of January, 1851," was fixed "as a day of fasting and prayer for the extension of Christ's kingdom." A. B. Slyter was chosen delegate to the General Eldership. There was but one circuit, and it was agreed "that Bro. Slyter should take the circuit, and the rest of the brethren be missionaries." A camp-meeting was appointed to be held in Gaines township, Kent county.

3rd Michigan Eldership.—Conditions at this time in the Michigan Eldership were not encouraging. There was unrest and friction between the ministers, and very limited success attended their labors. But when the Eldership convened at "Kilmer's Mills, in a school-house in the town of Thornapple, Monday morning, November 10, 1851," four ministers, one ruling elder and three delegates answered to their names. One minister was absent, and not heard from, and his name was dropped, as well as that of another minister. B. Farnham united with the Adventists. A. B. Slyter was chosen Speaker, and E. Moffit, Clerk. One circuit was supplied, two ministers being assigned to it.

4th Michigan Eldership.—Notwithstanding the loss of three of the ministers a year ago, when the fourth Eldership convened "in the school-house at Bro. Moffit's, in Caledonia, on the 8th of November, 1852," more encouraging indications were evident. The session began with one teaching elder, two ruling elders and three delegates present; two teaching elders absent. Several churches had been organized, and the work was extended south-eastward into Hillsdale county, on the Ohio line, and Branch, adjoining Hillsdale on the west. J. Ferdig was made Speaker, and John Kilmer, Clerk. It seemed singular enough to make official record of the fact, that "there were no charges brought against any of the brethren of the Church of God. All is peace and harmony." Three brethren were licensed, and one was received from the Baptist Church. Two circuits were made, and a minister appointed to each one. No resolutions were adopted and no action taken on any subjects but such as were purely administrative.

5th Michigan Eldership.—The fifth session of the Michigan Eldership, which met "at the school-house in Kilmer's neighborhood," on Monday, the 3rd of October, 1853, was the longest thus far held, continuing until Wednesday noon. There was "an opening discourse" delivered before the Eldership was constituted. Four teaching Elders, one ruling elder and four delegates were present. A. B. Slyter was chosen Speaker, and Samuel Howe, Clerk. A Committee on Resolutions having been appointed, which "recommended to all our brethren that they abstain from the use of liquors as a beverage." It also named "Thursday before our monthly meeting as a fast day." It also declared by resolution that "this Eldership has no fellowship with slavery, nor with slave laws, and that we use our influence against all such laws, and in favor of humanity." The Eldership also "approved of the efforts now making to bring the Printing Establishment west of the mountains." A book agent for the Eldership was appointed, and the agent was to "sell all books coming into his hands at cost, for cash." An order for several dozen books was at once issued by the Eldership. As the Eldership desired to "co-operate with all the Elderships of the Church of God," a delegate was elected to the next General Eldership, "to get our boundary set off." The elders of each church were recommended "to draw up subscriptions and solicit subscribers, for the term of five years, paying six cents a year, for missionary purposes." Two circuits were formed and two missions, with one pastor on each, and A. B. Slyter was appointed "to travel over the whole ground to hold protracted meetings." The Standing Committee was made a Camp-meeting Committee.

This favorable condition was of brief duration. While "the whole work was revived again," there was apparently a sudden collapse, without any premonition. The Eldership had "adjourned to meet on the second Monday in October, 1854;" it named no place, the Standing Committee being empowered to do that. But this it failed to do, and for six consecutive years no Eldership sessions were held. C. C. Linsley, long a leading minister of the Eldership, in 1880 says: "This period embraces the most solemn parts of our history." Slyter moved away and reunited with the Indiana Eldership. John Ferdig, S. Howe, Sr., Shaw and John Kilmer died. S. Howe, Jr., and C. C. Linsley "kept the churches together" as much as they could, though Linsley "did not call himself a preacher, but an exhorter." Later he received his first license from the Indiana Eldership, and was appointed to the Thornapple circuit, Mich. Slyter also returned to Michigan, and with others who were meanwhile licensed by the Indiana Eldership the work was not only kept alive, but the territory was somewhat enlarged. Three things militated against the work during this chaotic period: The United Brethren were very active, and secured some of the "main brethren;" "we had strong inducements held out by them." "Next came the Adventists. They would come and hold their meetings on the ground after we had prepared it for meeting." And the "tide of emigration was westward. Many of our brethren went West, and some South." After most strenuous efforts to place the work on a more permanent basis, with the assistance of James Haskins, Lovejoy and Calvin, and Moses and Ezekiel Kelly, of Ohio, they felt that the time had come "to establish the Eldership again." In 1858 C. C. Linsley, "as a committee, was appointed to visit the Indiana Eldership and take the preliminary steps to get boundaries set off and be recognized as an Eldership. Those means were used, and we set a time and gave notice to all the brotherhood of the time and place. The time set was Friday, September 30, 1859, with the church at Rocksand, Eaton county, Mich." Eaton county adjoins Barry on the east, being the third county north of the Indiana State line, and also the third county east of Lake Michigan.

6th Michigan Eldership.—While the fifth Eldership in Michigan convened October 3, 1853, the sixth was held in 1859, meeting at Rocksand, Eaton county, September 30th. The Journal makes no reference to this discontinuity of the sessions. The Eldership practically disintegrated through deaths and removals. The territory was gradually reoccupied by ministers from Indiana and Ohio. Co-operation between these and some new men who had been called to the ministry among these shepherdless churches, and through the self-denying, intelligent efforts of Linsley and others, was again secured. As a committee, Linsley went to the Indiana Eldership to "take the preliminary steps to get our boundaries set off and be recognized as an Eldership." Succeeding in this, the time and place for the Eldership to be reassembled were fixed, and a call published. Accordingly, the following brethren assembled at the time and place named: C. C. Linsley, James Haskins, Moses Kelly and Ezekiel Kelly, teaching elders; N. Croft, P. T. Calvin and A. M. Sames, ruling elders; E. Moffitt, J. F. Rist, D. S. Young, Samuel Slyter, M. Thompson and G. W. Lyon, delegates. Only three of these had been members of the former Eldership, but the matter of the ordinal number of this session was the subject of a conference, when it was decided that it should be the "sixth." N. Croft was chosen Speaker; P. T. Calvin, Journalizing Clerk, and C. C. Linsley, Transcribing Clerk. The first two, with Samuel Slyter, Geo. W. Lyons and Morgan Thompson, received license at this session. Two delegates to the General Eldership were elected, "to get the boundary set off for this Eldership." Three circuits were formed, with the first two each one preacher, and the third, four. The title the Eldership assumed was "The Eldership of the Churches of God in Michigan."

7th Michigan Eldership.—Prior to 1860 the General Eldership had not recognized the Michigan Eldership. But at the session of the General Eldership in 1860 C. C. Linsley was present as a delegate from the Michigan Eldership, and in its behalf made application for admission as a member of said body. The Committee on Reception of New Elderships recommended "that a committee of three be appointed to pay them a visit, and report their condition to the next tri-ennial meeting of this body." This Committee, consisting of Weishampel, Bolton and T. Hickernell later was given "discretionary power to receive the Michigan Eldership into this body." On account of a misunderstanding by the members of the Committee as to "the time of visiting the Michigan Eldership," they did not go to the meeting of said Eldership in 1860; but each separately later reported his conclusions in favor of receiving the Michigan Eldership, so that after 1860 it was a regular member of the general body. This year the Michigan Eldership met November 8th, with the church near North Brownsville, Kent county. It was constituted of seven teaching elders, two being absent, and eleven ruling elders and delegates. The lot to preside fell to C. C. Linsley; and E. Kelly was chosen Journalizing Clerk, and N. Croft, Transcribing Clerk. Having no mission funds, a Board of Missions was appointed, consisting of "two preachers and one ruling elder, whose duty it shall be to provide missionary funds in whatever way they may deem proper and expedient, and appropriate said funds in such a way as this body may direct." There was "difficulty to get enough men to devote their entire time to the work of the ministry," and so "some of the places where preaching should have been kept up were neglected," and so the Board of Missions was instructed to provide funds "to have one faithful, energetic and able man to travel constantly throughout the whole bounds." The churches were advised to hold a union camp-meeting in 1861. The opinion of the Eldership was forcibly expressed in favor of "family worship—to keep the fires burning upon the family altars." The Eldership had some trouble with a woman "to whom they had granted permission to exercise as a preacher; but she soon proved herself unworthy of the sanction, whereupon they recalled the permit, but she bids defiance to them," says Weishampel, "and fires away as hard as ever, doing considerable harm." The work of the Eldership was more or less hindered by the existence in Kent and a few other counties of local churches wearing the name of "Church of God," but of Disciple faith. They were independent churches, and not disposed to unite with the Church of God. The territory was divided into five circuits, to which nine ministers were appointed. Provision was made for an Opening Sermon in 1861, by appointing C. C. Linsley to preach one.

8th Michigan Eldership.—A message from R. H. Bolton, member of the Committee with discretionary power to receive the Michigan Eldership, was received and read when the eight annual session convened with the church in Eagle, Clinton county, Mich., October 2, 1861. It notified the Eldership that it is now "a part of, and under the influence of, the General Eldership." Nine ministers attended this session; two were absent, with five ruling elders. Linsley was chosen Speaker, and E. Kelly, Journalizing Clerk, and P. T. Calvin, Transcribing Clerk. The Eldership adopted "the Old and New Testament for our rule of faith and practice." Considerable success attended the labors of the ministers, several new churches having been organized. Two preachers, however, "left in disorder," one under charges. A delegate from the Free-Will Baptist Church was present. The territory was rearranged, making a "Union Circuit" of Grand Lodge, Odessa and Thornapple circuits, to be supplied by four ministers, and one additional circuit, with one minister.

9th Michigan Eldership.—No Eldership spent less time than did the Michigan Eldership in considering and passing resolutions on a variety of subjects. In 1861 no one such resolution was adopted, and the same is true of the ninth Eldership. This Eldership met with the church in Cascade, Kent county, Monday, October 13, 1862. One circuit, Union, was represented by four teaching elders. Six teaching elders were absent. Seven ruling elders and delegates were in attendance. C. C. Linsley was elected Speaker; J. M. Nichols, Clerk, and L. Lovejoy, Transcribing Clerk. The cases of four teaching elders were placed in the hands of the Standing Committee to dispose of. "The cause of God," it was reported by the Committee on the State of Religion, "is prospering among us as well as can be expected under present circumstances. There have been some conversions, some persons reclaimed, some churches organized and a good prospect of more organizations." The scheme to consolidate circuits not proving satisfactory, the territory was divided into six circuits.

10th Michigan Eldership.—While no action appears on record changing the title of the Eldership, the heading of the Journal was so changed as to read "Annual Eldership of the Churches of God in Michigan." The tenth session was held with the church in Woodland, Barry county, Mich., beginning November 4, 1863. Of the nine teaching elders on the Roll, but three were present. Seven delegates and ruling elders were enrolled. The case of L. Lovejoy was unique. The Eldership "concurred in the action of the church in Cascade" in his case, "and in the withdrawal of the right hand of fellowship from him, and that his name be dropped, inasmuch as he says he does not enjoy religion." John S. Smurrah was chosen Speaker; J. Haskins, Clerk, and D. W. Lincoln, Transcribing Clerk. Five circuits were made, to which seven ministers were assigned, while two others were "to labor as much as possible throughout the Eldership." Three Ohio preachers were invited to assist "at the woods meeting in Michigan."

11th Michigan Eldership.—The Michigan Eldership of "the Church of God" held its eleventh annual session with the church near North Brownsville, Kent county, Mich., beginning October 13, 1864. But one of the seven enrolled ministers was absent, and four ruling elders and delegates were present. The officers chosen were J. S. Smurrah, Speaker; J. Haskins, Journalizing Clerk, and D. W. Lincoln, Transcribing Clerk. The Eldership resolved "that the sisters be received as advisory members, if they wish." The Eldership appointed the committees. The reports recorded show that there were one hundred and seventy-five conversions, and three or four new churches organized. The preachers were admonished to "be more zealous in the advancement of the cause of God, by going out and opening up new appointments and hunting up the lost sheep of the house of Israel; not only going where there is a church, but go out into the highways and hedges, and proclaim a risen Savior." Conditions were reported "more prosperous the past year than for a number of years before." Three circuits were formed, with two ministers to each.

12th Michigan Eldership.—The most extreme step taken by an Eldership looking toward union with some other religious body was that of the Michigan Eldership at its session which began at Maple Grove, Barry county, October 12, 1865. After electing C. C. Linsley, Speaker; James Haskins, First Clerk, and W. Seifried, Second Clerk, it appointed a "committee of three members of this body to confer with the Committee of the Church of Christ relative to effecting a union of the two bodies." It appeared that an unofficial meeting of committees of two from each body had been held on June 7, 1865, "for the purpose of securing a union of the two bodies." Resolutions to that end were adopted by the joint committees, "and the two bodies have labored together ever since upon the most friendly terms." It was agreed to appoint "delegates to attend the next Michigan Annual Conference of the Church of Christ. . . . to secure a greater union, and if possible an ultimate consolidation of the two bodies." This action was called "a singular move. . . . which may prove detrimental to the cause of God" in Michigan. And Thomas, as Editor, warned the Michigan Eldership against any alliance with the Church of Christ. This organization was not the Christian or Disciple Church, but a mixture of malcontents under the leadership of Hiram Rathbun, largely fashioned after the United Brethren Church. The Eldership mourned the death of two of its "worthy and much lamented" members, E. B. Gillaspie and E. Moffitt. Notwithstanding the coquetting with the "Church of Christ," which "promulgated a creed while professing to oppose creeds," the Eldership adopted a ringing statement "denouncing all human creeds, believing them to be the commandments of men only." It also declared it to be the "imperative duty of the churches within the bounds of the Michigan Eldership to support their preachers according to their ability." "An educated, energetic and efficient ministry" was declared to be "indispensable," so that "all ministers of this body are recommended to pursue a regular course of study." Preachers were directed "to preach sermons on the propriety of Sunday-schools." The circuits for the year were Gratiot, Thornapple and Maple Grove, with St. Joe as a separate point.

13th Michigan Eldership.—Discarding its old, limited Rules of Order, the Standing Committee was instructed to prepare "full and more appropriate Rules." The Eldership convened at North Brownsville, Kent county, October 20, 1866, and listened to the Opening Sermon by W. Seifried on Sabbath evening, the 21st, from Acts xvi. 17—"The Gospel Ministry." C. C. Linsley was elected Speaker; W. Seifried, First Clerk, and B. D. Bright, Second Clerk. It declared "intemperance to be the vilest of evils, most fatal in its tendency, blasting the brightest anticipations of thousands. . . . and hurling into the vortex of ruin millions of our fellow beings." It resolved "to use every energy, summon every power of the soul. . . . against this abominable compound of crime and vice." Bolton was invited to come to Michigan and "travel as a General Evangelist." As part remuneration $129.00 were raised on the floor. As a treasurer was now needed, B. D. Bright was elected. The Eldership expressed its readiness "to co-operate with other Elderships in establishing a college for the Church." A Board of Missions was organized, consisting of Linsley, Seifried and Bright. Four ministers were willing "to travel this year," viz.: J. M. Nichols, A. J. Hull, just licensed; Seifried and Smurth. Two missions were named in the Stationing Committee's Report—St. Joseph and Nashville.

14th Michigan Eldership.—The Standing Committee of the Michigan Eldership held a meeting at Maple Grove, June 15, 1867, and discharged its duty of preparing new Rules of Order. It selected the Rules of the East Pennsylvania Eldership and submitted them for adoption at the Eldership in 1867, which assembled September 30th, at Stump School-house, near St. Joseph, Berian county, Mich. They were agreed to. R. H. Bolton had removed to Michigan, and besides him there were five teaching elders present, and four ruling elders and two delegates. Five ministers and seven ruling elders were absent. W. Seifried was chosen Speaker, and R. H. Bolton, Clerk. A committee was named by the Eldership to prepare a Constitution for the Board of Missions. The Constitution as reported and adopted consisted of seven Articles. The organization was called "The Missionary Aid Society of the Michigan Eldership of the Church of God." The members were composed of those who paid twenty-five cents per year; and a subscription of $10.00 and payment of annual interest and principal at death made a person a life member. Its object was "to maintain superannuated or disabled ministers;" "to maintain the widows and children of superannuated ministers;" "to maintain missions and missionaries." The use of tobacco was denounced "not only as a filthy practice, but a pernicious expenditure of money, immoral in its tendency, and tends to stultify the noble aspirations of the soul," and so the Eldership resolved to "use our influence to discourage its use in all its forms, and especially among the rising generation." It took over the Genessee Mission, which had been supplied by the Ohio Eldership, as it felt "able to supply said work with ministerial labor." It rejoiced "at the apparent success of the Centralia College, and feels to bid them God-speed in their noble work." One hundred and twenty-two conversions were reported; one hundred and fifty-eight accessions, with a few churches not reported, and four churches organized.

15th Michigan Eldership.—Another Eldership has decided that women may be ordained to the ministry. This the Michigan Eldership of 1868 did when it voted Sister Catharine E. Lincoln, wife of Elder D. W. Lincoln, a license after having "examined her relative to her call to the ministry, qualifications therefor and labors therein." Besides her, eleven ministers and nine ruling elders and delegates were enrolled when the Eldership was constituted at Hyde School-house, Maple Grove, Barry county, Mich., Monday morning, October 12, 1868. The choice for Speaker was J. B. White, and for Clerk, R. H. Bolton. The work had been extended into Sheawasse county, whence came a call for a preacher. In Montcalm county A. W. Parsons had "organized a church of about a dozen members, having in fellowship three preachers." Two of the five members of the Stationing Committee were laymen. While the Board of Missions reported only $26.52 in the treasury, twenty-seven life members were secured on the floor. The churches were urged to "greater liberality and exertion in the support of the ministry, that they may set themselves fully apart from the business of the world, and devote themselves exclusively to the great work of the Christian ministry." There being "a few churches within the bounds of the Eldership" which reversed the order of observing the ordinances, the Eldership advised them to practice feet-washing before the Lord's Supper. The elders of each church were declared to be vested with the ruling power, and to them belongs the authority to exercise discipline. Six fields of labor were mapped out, of which four are styled missions. J. B. White was made the General Missionary.

16th Michigan Eldership.—There were many absentees when the Eldership was constituted at Bangor, Van Buren county, Mich., September 27, 1869. Thirteen teaching elders were present, and eight absent; four ruling elders were present, and twenty-one absent, with five delegates present. The Rules of Order were so amended that the presiding officer had to be addressed as "Brother Speaker." R. H. Bolton was elected to that office, with J. H. Besore, who had emigrated to the State during the year, as Clerk. The delegates to the General Eldership made a written report, recommending "a perfect co-operation of this Eldership with the General Eldership in all the measures to promote the work of the Lord." A committee to secure an Act of Incorporation having failed to do so, another committee was named for that purpose. A complaint which arose in other Elderships, of ministers trespassing on each other's fields, was taken up, and it was declared "not allowable to enter on another man's work, make appointments or solicit money for any purpose whatever, unauthorized by the Eldership, without consent of the preacher in charge of such work." The translation of the Scriptures by the American Bible Union was pronounced "vastly superior to the version of King James," and its "use in public and in private and in the pulpit" was urged. Hillsdale College, Michigan, was commended as worthy of patronage. The Eldership lamented the death of Thomas, "recognizing the fact that we as a Church have lost a good, strong and useful brother." The last evening of the session was set apart to the "paying of a tribute of respect to our departed Brother Thomas." The Course of Studies of the East Pennsylvania Eldership was recommended to "our ministers." The practice of issuing licenses to exhorters was approved, and three brethren were so licensed. Insisting that "the missionary spirit be yet more revived," the Eldership made three missions in the State, to each of which a minister was assigned, and also created the "St. Louis Mission, to include a church near St. Louis," with J. M. Nichols as missionary. Besides these fields there were four circuits, with six ministers. That these ministers might be better supported it was directed that "a financial meeting be held by the officary of each church in concert with the preacher or preachers on the circuit to ascertain amounts needed for their support, and that said amounts be mutually apportioned among the churches on the charge."

17th Michigan Eldership.—The attendance of ministers was good at the Michigan Eldership which held its session with the church south of Hastings, Barry county, beginning September 26, 1870. Fifteen of the nineteen were present, but with only six ruling elders and four delegates. The Eldership met on Monday morning, having listened to the Opening Sermon the previous evening, by J. H. Besore, from Ezek. xxxiii. 7. C. C. Linsley was elected Speaker, and Ira M. B. Gillaspie, Clerk. The Eldership resolved to "change the time of changing our preachers; the change to take place on the 1st of April." Bradshaw, of the Christian Church, was received as an advisory member. He desired to "bring certain matters before the Eldership, concerning a union of this body with the Christian Church." As a result, the Eldership appointed "a Corresponding Secretary, to correspond with a member of like character of the Christian Church on the subject of union." J. H. Besore was appointed, and "Sister Lincoln visited the Christian Conference in behalf of" the Eldership. A General Evangelist was appointed "to labor in this Eldership territory the coming year." The missionary and Church extension spirit was strong, so that of the nine fields of labor five are classed as missions, and are the Geneva, the Cheshier, Montcalm, Genessee and the Alaska, in Kent county. But small amounts of money were received for the various funds. The Board of Missions received interest on Life Membership, $18.00; collections, $20.88. Receipts for the Contingent Fund, $8.45. The total apportionment by the Eldership "for missionary and contingent money" was $62.14. The Statistical Report showed conversions, 140; baptisms, 117; accessions, 121; expulsions, 44; organizations, 4, with a total membership of 450.

18th Michigan Eldership.—Notwithstanding the mission work mapped out by the Michigan Eldership in 1870, it was said in 1871 that "their missionary operations the past year were almost a blank." But to improve this condition "a general worker was appointed, who is to be sustained in part from the mission funds, and so those interests will not be neglected." The session of 1871 had "a fair representation of preachers, twelve of the nineteen responding to their names, and also seven ruling elders, when the body convened in the Town Hall, in the village of Monterey Center, Allegan county, September 28th. There was some friction on various questions; "but contrariety of feelings was harmonized." J. B. White was chosen Speaker, and Ira M. B. Gillaspie, Clerk. By formal action the Stationing Committee was composed of three teaching and two ruling elders. In its report it divided the territory into five circuits and two missions. While no Opening Sermon was preached at the beginning of this session, it was decided to have one on the evening of the first day's sitting, and J. B. White was appointed. A strong endorsement of Sunday-schools was adopted, and churches were directed to organize schools wherever possible. The Eldership favored an effort by the General Eldership "to secure increased educational facilities among us especially adapted for the instruction of those contemplating to enter the ministry." D. W. Lincoln and wife had visited the Christian Conference as fraternal delegates, and made a favorable report; whereupon action was taken to continue correspondence with said Conference, "with a view of consolidating the two bodies, if possible, on a Bible basis." The Missionary Fund was comparatively large, as with "amount in hands" it aggregated $1,329.00. The action of 1870 relative to the time to change preachers was rescinded, and it was resolved that "the change is to take place at once."

19th Michigan Eldership.—The Eldership in 1872 was pronounced "a very pleasant and interesting one." The retrospect was brightened by the hope that there were "measures adopted which will be a blessing to the Church." Of these the one specially singled out for approval was that which required "each local church to have a permanent system of supporting the gospel and the worthy needy among us." The presiding officer was B. D. Bright, with W. Selfried as First Clerk, and W. Redding, Second Clerk. Not half the teaching and ruling elders and delegates were present. This may be accounted for by reason of the place of meeting being in the extreme south-western corner of the State, three miles from Benton Harbor, Berrien county, on Monday, 8 o'clock a. m., October 7th. While the names of three ministers were "dropped," there were four additions, among them S. D. C. Jackson, who later became a member of the Kansas and Missouri, the Illinois and of the East Pennsylvania Elderships, and was a man of rare talents. A. J. Hull was appointed Book Agent for the Eldership. The General Missionary, B. D. Bright, was required "to travel throughout the entire bounds of the Eldership in the State." The territory was divided into three circuits, two stations and two missions. The Board of Missions was working under its own Constitution, which was ordered amended so as to give any person the privilege to "become a member of said Society one year" by "paying one dollar;" "five dollars, five years; ten dollars, ten years, and fifty or one hundred dollars, a life member."

20th Michigan Eldership.—The session of the Eldership in 1873 was much edified by six sermons, of which special mention was made, though no Opening Sermon is reported as having been preached. These were: one by Linsley, on "The Church's Faith and Practice;" one by Jackson, "The Anchor of the Soul;" one by Selkirk, "The Final Resurrection;" one by Gillaspie, "Christ the Witness of the Father," and one by Seifried, "Zion's Peace and Prosperity." The Eldership convened at Bangor, Van Buren county, September 24th, and adjourned on the 27th. A. L. Edwards was elected Speaker; S. D. C. Jackson and B. D. Bright, Clerks. Each minister was instructed "to set forth the missionary interests of this Eldership, and by subscriptions, collections and interest on Life Members raise funds for the same." It was determined "to call a Sunday-school Convention, at such time and place as the Standing Committee may agree upon." A general camp-meeting was also appointed. The Eldership thought each licensed minister "should have at least one preaching place," and accordingly the Stationing Committee assigned twenty to specified points.

21st Michigan Eldership.—If the arrangement whereby each preacher of the Eldership received an appointment did not prove the most satisfactory, the final action of the Eldership in 1874 showed unusual missionary activity. Of the thirteen fields of labor there is one station, five circuits and seven missions. The Eldership was larger than usual, there being but eight absentees. The session was held at Maple Grove, Barry county, beginning October 15th. The Speaker was J. B. White, with S. Smith, Journalizing Clerk, and B. D. Bright, Transcribing Clerk. Shoemaker, of the Chicago Mission, being present, a resolution was passed, stating that "the General Eldership is the rightful owner of the Chicago Mission property, and is the proper authority to control the same." On temperance, education, periodicals, etc., the Eldership contented itself by declaring that it adhered to resolutions adopted at former sessions. But it resolved to encourage the holding of Ministerial Associations; the organization of Sunday-schools; urged that "attention be given to the musical talent, to bring out, as best we can, especially in the young, the power of song," and urging "especially our young ministers to acquaint themselves with good literature."

22nd Michigan Eldership.—Distance and inconvenience of travel doubtless reduced the number of ministers in attendance at the twenty-second session of the Michigan Eldership. It convened at Maple Grove, Saginaw county, on September 20, 1875, "attendance not as large as was desired." There were only four teaching elders present, four ruling elders and two delegates; while twelve teaching elders and six ruling elders were absent. C. C. Linsley was chosen Speaker; I. M. B. Gillaspie, Clerk, and J. B. White, Treasurer. The Eldership decided that it "will license no one who does not, or will not, preach." Perhaps for this reason the names of several preachers were "dropped." There was much "dissatisfaction among the members of the Missionary Aid Society," and "large amounts of unpaid interest on Life Memberships." It was ordered that "a list of all the members of said Society on his field be given to each minister," to collect what is due. Besides, a missionary collection was to be lifted at each appointment. The Stationing Committee, composed of three ministers and two laymen, made eleven appointments, and one General Missionary. An act of vandalism was committed, to which the custodians seemed to be accessories, in "allowing the Protocol of the Missionary Aid Society to be cut to pieces and otherwise destroyed." An explanation of this breach of trust "was required." The Board of Missions had made no report for three years, and a vote of censure was passed, and a full report required from 1872. Conversions had not been as numerous as formerly, and the "religious condition within the bounds of the Eldership was not up to the high standard that is desired."

23rd Michigan Eldership.—Though the Michigan Eldership had eighteen preachers, and but eleven charges, two of which were unsupplied, yet the Board of Missions of the General Eldership sent W. H. Oliver, of Ohio, into the State as a general missionary. The twenty-third session was held at Blooming Dale, Van Buren county, beginning October 11, 1876. There were eleven teaching elders present, and seven absent; one ruling elder present, and ten absent; three delegates, and one exhorter. Wm. Redding was chosen Speaker; S. Smith, Clerk. The support of ministers was so limited that some "who were assigned work have been forced to leave their fields of labor," so that the Eldership resolved "to hold that the churches are morally bound to support the ministers to the full extent of their ability." The deacons were instructed to carry this decision into effect. The Board of Missions was continued, though no report is recorded, and each local church was "requested to elect a Board of Missions, to raise money by call, donation or otherwise, to be sent to the Treasurer of the Eldership." The Eldership decided that "no person shall be eligible to any office in the church unless he has been baptized." "About fifty have been added to the Church" during the year, and the Eldership urged "the brethren to a greater state of activity with their means and talents, and to make more sacrifices for their Master." On temperance the Eldership simply declared it to be "a cause which demands our co-operative labors."

24th Michigan Eldership.—The meagerness of the missionary funds, as per Report submitted, no doubt accounts for the absence of any Report for three or four years. At the Eldership in 1877, the Board reported having received $9.55, without anything having been in the treasury, and all from the church at Maple Grove, except 75 cents "collection on the Eldership floor." The Eldership convened at Maple Grove, Barry county, September 26, 1877. Nine teaching elders were present, and nine absent; two ruling elders were present, and ten absent. Indications generally confirm the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion, that "the cause has not prospered to that extent desired, from the fact that we have not enough active laborers." The Stationing Committee reduced the fields of labor to nine, and then left one unsupplied. The Committee on Resolutions admitted that "the ordinance of Feet-washing is growing unpopular among the brethren," and sought to "impress upon the minds of all the ministers the necessity of attending to it oftener, and to preach more upon it—twice a year." The Committee on Education declared "education to be essential to the advancement of civilization and Christianity, and that ministers should be men of culture, and hence we see the need of a school controlled by the Church of God." The local preachers were "required to help the pastor, and to open new appointments." Larger contributions were asked for, so that the Eldership can at an early day keep a missionary in the field. The session of the Eldership was presided over by A. B. Slyter, Speaker, with I. M. B. Gillaspie as Clerk.

25th Michigan Eldership.—Whatever effect the action of 1877 may have had in securing funds for missions, three of the nine appointments of 1878 were classed as missions. The Treasurer's Report shows $9.55 "in hand." The session of 1878 was held at Bangor, Van Buren county, and began October 10, 1878. "H. Garrett, of Baltimore, delivered the Opening Sermon the evening previous." J. M. Ireland was chosen Speaker, and B. D. Bright, Clerk. A Mr. Robinson, a Baptist minister, applied for, and was granted, a license. Sheldon Smith's name "was dropped from the Journal, he having placed his membership with the Baptists without officially informing the Standing Committee," and censure was voted upon him. The resolution of 1877, relative to the observance of Feet-washing, was called up, and the record made, "Not complied with." The Eldership thereupon declared, "That as an Eldership we believe in washing the saints' feet, and we do urge the ministers to preach it, and practice what they preach. We urge every member to comply with the plain command of the Savior as recorded in the thirteenth chapter of John." The matter of appointing Missionary Boards in the local churches was also again insisted upon. While in "some localities the cause is onward," says the Committee on the State of Religion, "in other places, through neglect, the cause has not prospered as it might." On temperance the Eldership declared that it "stands on the rock of total abstinence, with raised banners floating in the air of truth and justice, until our land shall be free from the blight of the destroyer." An Act of Incorporation of the Eldership was secured in 1878.

26th Michigan Eldership.—The Act of Incorporation was an important measure, under the laws of the State. A religious body, or corporation, had to be in the exercise of the franchises and privileges of a corporation for the term of ten years, when "it shall be presumed to have been legally organized," and "as such can and does hold property legally." The Eldership availed itself of this provision of law as against certain seceders, who threatened to take property belonging to the legal Eldership. W. Seifried was leader in this movement. He had been disfellowshipped, and gathered a few around him, who on November 20, 1878, organized themselves into the "Northern Michigan Eldership of the Church of God," at Carson City. As such they threatened and boasted that "they can take the property of the Michigan Eldership." They also attempted "to intimidate the ministers of the Michigan Eldership from solemnizing marriages, and threatened to prosecute them." The Eldership stood firm, entrenched behind the law, and exhorted the churches and ministers to "mark them which cause divisions and offenses, and have no fellowship with them." The body met in a school-house, at Duncan Lake, Barry county, October 9, 1879, with ten preachers present, and eleven absent; three ruling elders present, and thirteen absent, and one delegate. J. B. White was chosen Speaker, and C. C. Linsley, Clerk. There was an uneasy state of feeling in the Eldership. The independent movement had a moral effect beyond its intrinsic importance, so that there was "a lack of co-operation amongst the ministers," and the Eldership notified all such they they "shall be called to account to this body for their conduct." Under these conditions it is not singular that the Committee on the State of Religion found it necessary to say, that "the state of religion is not flattering;" that "reports of preachers confirm these views; but we believe that by the Great Head of the church a greater work may be done in this Eldership year." The appointments were reduced to seven circuits and one mission. During the year $15.45 were collected for missions. The Eldership promised "to use our utmost effort to establish a school for the education of the youth of the Church of God." The matter of semi-centennial services was placed in the hands of the Standing Committee. The Eldership set an example by observing the ordinances near the close of the session, two of the older ministers "taking the lead in washing the saints' feet."

27th Michigan Eldership.—The attendance at the twenty-seventh annual session of the Michigan Eldership was so small as to be good ground for the feeling of discouragement which is reflected in the Minutes. There were nine teaching elders present, and eleven absent, and there were neither ruling elders nor delegates in attendance. Wm. Redding was chosen Speaker, and Sheldon Smith, Clerk. The session was held in the Hide school-house, in Maple Grove, Barry county, and began at 9 o'clock a. m., October 13, 1880. The Opening Sermon was delivered in the evening of the first day's sittings, by Sheldon Smith. Though weak and poor, the Eldership cheerfully responded to the calls for the small amounts of Missionary and Contingent Funds apportioned to it by the General Eldership. It, however, voted to dispense with its own Board of Missions. The Eldership "specially urged the young men who contemplate engaging in the gospel ministry to use all possible means to make themselves wise and intelligent men of God, and able defenders of the truth as taught in the Scriptures." On temperance it declared itself in "favor of the doctrine of total abstinence." It also regretted "to see the prevailing habit of the use of tobacco, and would recommend that all young men entering the Eldership be requested to abstain from the use of the same." It resolved to "carry out the itinerant plan," and declared "that any church requesting of the Eldership a preacher shall receive and support the preacher sent by this body." "The necessity of organizing Sabbath-schools wherever practicable" was "urged upon the brethren." The Stationing Committee reported twelve fields of labor, six of which were missions. Two ministers "were appointed General Workers." Each minister had been required to collect and pay each year $2.00 into the treasury, and failing to do so, he was to pay it himself. Eleven ministers had complied with this requirement; but $16.00 was due from the others, and to enforce payment licenses were to be delivered only upon payment of dues.

28th Michigan Eldership.—Want of unity is a serious thing in any organization. To conquer by dividing is still the main resource of an enemy. And while the Michigan Eldership in theory realized this, its practice at this distance in time may not seem to merit approval. When the body convened with the church at New Haven Center, Gratiot county, on Wednesday, September 28, 1881, it found "two Elderships bearing the name Church of God in Michigan," and that "they are not in co-operative unity." Realizing that "this division is detrimental to the cause of Christ, and contrary to the doctrines taught by us," the Committee on Resolutions, R. L. Smith, H. A. Garrett and Sheldon Smith, offered a resolution, "that we adopt measures immediately to unite the two bodies, for Christ has not many bodies." But the Eldership "postponed action on it indefinitely." The Opening Sermon was preached the evening previous to the organization, by Wm. Redding, who was elected Speaker, with F. J. Browne, Clerk. Only eight of the twenty-one teaching elders attended the session, and but one ruling elder was present. At the suggestion of the Secretary of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership the appointment of "an active general evangelist within our territory" was agreed upon, and help was requested from said Board, and co-operation promised in its work. The Eldership endorsed the Findlay College enterprise, and members of the Church in Michigan were urged to co-operate in the project. The licenses of a number of ministers were placed in the hands of the Standing Committee on account of the non-payment of arrearages to the Eldership funds. Though no treasurer's report appears in the Minutes, I. M. B. Gillaspie was elected Treasurer. The friction existing in the body is betrayed in a resolution which was adopted, "that any minister found guilty of trying to poison the minds of the people against an appointee of this Eldership, or is guilty of throwing stumbling blocks in the way of any minister, shall forfeit his license." While the Eldership adjourned on Saturday afternoon, it was arranged to hold services and have preaching Saturday evening, Sabbath morning and evening, and close on Sabbath night with an ordinance meeting.

29th Michigan Eldership.—Neither the causes which led to the organization of two Elderships in Michigan, nor the basis of union, is on record in the Minutes. The fact, however, is recorded, that "the election of officers in 1882 was suspended until the report of the Standing Committee is received, giving the proceedings of Bro. Sheldon Smith in regard to the union of the two Elderships in this State." His "report was given, and unanimously adopted, and the two Elderships are one." The Eldership held its session at Salem Center, Allegan county, beginning September 6th. The previous evening Wm. Redding preached the Opening Sermon. He was chosen Speaker; F. J. Browne, First Clerk, and Henry Lyon, Second Clerk. R. L. Smith had "of his own free will, and without the knowledge of this body, joined the Methodist Protestant Church." But repenting, he applied for membership in the Eldership. Restitution was first demanded. One minister was expelled "for gross immorality." The Eldership insisted that ministers "attend to the organization of local missionary societies in the churches under their charge as soon as possible, to raise money for mission purposes." One of the ministers was, by order of the Eldership, "addressed by the Speaker, and instructed to teach and practice the washing of the saints' feet previous to partaking of the Lord's Supper." It was also ordered that "no minister belonging to this Eldership is allowed to officiate at the marriage of parties divorced on other than scriptural grounds." The Stationing Committee assigned the ministers to ten circuits and missions. One sister, Lottie Blackwood, was on the Ministerial Roll, who was "to be furnished work by the Standing Committee." The Funds of the Eldership consisted of $5.45 Contingent Fund; $18.00 Missionary Fund. The Eldership was a "happy and harmonious gathering," as reported by the Clerk.

30th Michigan Eldership.—The hand of an experienced writer Reports of Committees first appears in the Journal of 1883. His name stands at the head of the Committees on Publications, Education, Resolutions and Temperance. Wm. Rice's reports were dissertations, and not preambles and resolutions, and were written with special care. He was one of the eleven teaching elders enrolled as present when the Eldership "convened at the North Side Church, Bangor, Van Buren county, September 19, 1883," and with C. C. Linsley, chosen as Speaker, and S. Smith, was elected a delegate to the General Eldership in 1884. Nine teaching elders were absent, and fourteen ruling elders are also named as absent, and only two as being present. F. J. Browne was elected Clerk. The Report of the Committee on Education was an elaborate argument on "Ministerial Education," closing with a resolution declaring the "renewal and continued and increased efforts of the Eldership, and the promise, so far as possible, of aid by our means, our influence and our prayers, until the capstone of the college is laid." The power of the printing press is enlarged upon, and the excellencies of the General Eldership publications set forth in ringing terms. These publications are commended to the patronage of all the families of the Church. The Eldership promised to "throw our influence on the side of Prohibition," and "our ballots shall count on the side of prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all spirituous and malt beverages." It also declared its purpose to "cry out against the fearful crime of desecrating the holy Sabbath." It seriously "commended to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership the prayerful consideration of the question: What can be done to extend the Church of God throughout these United States?" Two brethren recommended for license "were ordained by the laying on of hands." The mission sentiment and spirit of the Eldership are reflected in resolutions declaring, "that to be lax, or indifferent in this great work is a sin against God and man;" that "a Christian is a missionary," and "that it is the duty of each minister to preach at least one missionary sermon each year, and take up a collection for missions at every appointment on his charge." "The $2.00 Missionary System formerly adopted by this body" was abolished, and the resolution of the Committee on Missions substituted. The penalty for failure to carry out said resolution was that the delinquent "minister shall be held censurable by this Eldership." A State Evangelist was appointed, and other ministers were assigned to nine stations and circuits and four missions, with one circuit unsupplied.

31st Michigan Eldership.—Before adjournment in 1883, the Eldership appointed a committee, consisting of Redding, Walker and Gillaspie, "to draw up a series of resolutions setting forth the duties of ministers, their educational standard, mission work, etc.," to be acted on in 1884. This committee made its report at the second sitting of the Eldership which convened with the church at Carson City, Montcalm county, Wednesday morning, September 3, 1884. It gave three general "requirements of candidates for ordination to the ministry in the Michigan Eldership: 1. "A good, common school education, and have sufficient knowledge of history to give an outline of the rise, leading events and fall of the Chaldean, Medo-Persian, Grecian and Roman Governments." 2. "They should be able to define science, pantheism, materialism, polytheism, atheism, evolution, substantialism, theology, the new birth, regeneration, adoption, sanctification." 3. "They should be able to define and explain the ordinances of God's house, what each represents and commemorates, and the action of Christian baptism, and what we are to understand by the word "being born of the water and the Spirit. Also a general knowledge of the Bible." This the Eldership adopted. Wm. Rice had preached the Opening Sermon on Tuesday evening, and at Wednesday morning's sitting, after constituting the Eldership, Spencer Walker was made Speaker, and F. J. Browne, Clerk. The "probability" of the organization of "a new Eldership of the Church of Christ upon certain conditions," as intimated by D. W. Lincoln, to consist of "himself and some others" whose names "he refused to divulge" resulted in his license being withheld, and "his case being referred to a committee, with discretionary power." Said committee decided that "his request be granted," that "his name be stricken from the Roll." On marriage and divorce the Eldership "demanded more stringent divorce laws, prohibiting guilty parties from remarrying, and a higher moral sentiment on the nature and sanctity of marriage, and a firm, vigorous administration of the laws in our courts of justice, as well as rigorous discipline in all the Churches." It also expressed the sentiment of the body, "that it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to enact such stringent laws as shall promptly and effectually, and forever, suppress the accursed system of polygamy within the Territories and States of this Union." A very favorable report of the state of religion in the Eldership was adopted. After sustaining its Committee on Sabbath-schools in its vigorous report on the urgent need of more diligent work in this department of Christian activity, it appointed "William Rice State Evangelist and Missionary Fund Collector." A Superannuated Fund was created, for which annual collections were to be lifted by all the pastors, the Eldership having already superannuated two of its ministers. The licenses of two ministers were held up for "violating the Rules of the Eldership pertaining to marriage and divorce." It was then made the duty of the Speaker "to ask each preacher after giving his report the proper question regarding this subject." The number of circuits and missions was reduced to ten.

32nd Michigan Eldership.—The assumption seems verifiable that the work in Michigan was more or less hindered by the presence of other religious bodies similar in name and doctrinal tenets and practices. There was the Church of God (Adventists), a small body which withdrew from the Seventh-day Adventists. It had six organizations in the State. Another body of about the same numerical strength was known as the Churches of God (Adventists) Unattached Congregations. In 1888 the Churches of God in Christ Jesus was organized, which had nine organizations in Michigan. Other organizations of similar names, such as Church of God and Saints of Christ (Colored), Churches of the Living God, Church of Christ in God (Apostolic Church) and Church of Christ in God were not found in Michigan, and with few exceptions in the farther west were not found in the same localities with the Church of God. So that even a more united, aggressive and confident body than that which convened as the Eldership of the Church of God in Michigan, at Duncan Lake, Barry county, September 24, 1885, could not but feel the effect of these vagaries in the prosecution of its work. Seventeen teaching elders were present, eight ruling elders and one exhorter, while eight teaching elders were absent. Wm. Redding was chosen Speaker, and F. J. Browne, Clerk. A Committee on Credentials made the enrollment, which also reported charges against four ministers, including the Speaker of the Eldership of 1884, who for this reason was "not allowed to act as Speaker," "nor to act in any official capacity while the charges are pending." Each of the four was found guilty by the Special Committee on Investigation, and the names were "dropped from the Eldership Roll." One minister reported that he "had united with the Free Baptist Quarterly Conference." The only addition to the body was that of John Hall, a Canadian Indian Chief, who received exhorter's license. Elaborate and painstaking resolutions, with labored preambles, evidently prepared in advance by one member, were adopted on Education, Resolutions, Missions and Sunday-Schools. These Reports were all of commendable character, reflecting a spirit of loyalty and devotion to the common interests of the Church. Arrangements were made to have a special sermon preached in 1886 on Church Polity, and one on "Characteristics of the Church of God." And on the last evening of the present session Wm. Rice was "appointed to preach a sermon on the subject of Ordination." It was decided to hold a "Ministerial Association and Sunday-School Institute at Hamilton, in June, 1886." Also a Pentecostal meeting at Duncan Lake. The fields of labor consisted of two stations, eight circuits and one mission—Mason county.

33rd Michigan Eldership.—The same virile writer of reports whose productions made so large a part of the Journal of 1885, did equally good work in 1886. Wm. Rice was the efficient protagonist of the Michigan Eldership while a member. As a writer and preacher he showed the great cardinal virtues of courage, endurance and skill. He had no pet predilections, but was the pronounced advocate and defender of all the interests and institutions of the Church. He only knew Duty, "stern daughter of the voice of God." So it was not strange that in 1886 he was again appointed to "preach a sermon on Ordination" on the evening of the second day. The Eldership was not well attended which met at Bangor, Van Buren county, Wednesday morning, October 6, 1886. The previous evening L. J. Teed preached the Opening Sermon. Only nine of the twenty-five teaching elders were present, two ruling elders and one delegate. But the Act of Incorporation secured eight years before provided for a small number to constitute a quorum. The Speaker was J. B. White, with F. J. Browne as Clerk. Strong resolutions were adopted against immoral literature, tobacco and the desecration of the Sabbath day, and in favor of Sabbath-schools, as the committee believed them to be "the nursery of the Church," and had "reasons for believing that God and the angels take great interest in the early instruction of children in righteousness." The Committee on Constitution recommended the adoption of the Constitution of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, "amended and added to by the Committee." Various Reforms were endorsed by the Committee on Resolutions, and the Eldership was urged to "buckle on the whole Christian armor, to stand united in one unbroken phalanx, ready to 'move directly upon the enemy's works,' pressing the battle to the very gates of the foe, till the last conflict is past." The cause of missions was strongly endorsed as "the cause of God. Christ, our Savior, our leader and guide, and now our advocate with the Father, is heaven's great missionary." "To be lax, or indifferent, in this great work is a sin against God and man." To secure better support for ministers, it was made their duty on entering on new fields "to call a meeting of the official members, whose duty it shall be to fix the amount of the pastor's salary, and apportion the same to the different appointments on the circuit." The fields of labor were reported in "a fair, and some in a prosperous, condition." The Eldership determined to "throw our influence on the side of Prohibition," and the members of churches were urged "not to vote with parties which legislate in favor of the liquor traffic." A State Evangelist was elected, and it was made his duty "to collect all missionary money possible." A Board of Education and a Committee of Church Extension were provided for. Nine fields of labor were mapped out, but one remained to be supplied. The Indian preacher, John Hall, reported, and his license was renewed, but there is no intimation as to his place of work.

34th Michigan Eldership.—There was a larger attendance at the session of the Eldership held at Callahan school-house, Gratiot county, Mich., beginning Friday morning, September 13, 1887. The Opening Sermon was delivered on Thursday evening, by C. C. Linsley, from Acts x. 23. Fourteen ministers were present, eight absent, and two ruling elders. Wm. Redding was chosen Speaker, and L. J. Teed, Clerk. On temperance the Eldership expressed its judgment that "all good citizens should combine to procure an enactment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating beverages," and strongly disapproved "voting for or upholding any party that will not give us prohibition." A sermon on the ordinances was ordered to be preached on Lord's day evening, followed by their observance. The financial weakness of the Church was evidenced in the case of the Salem Bethel. Without means to repair it, or keep up the fence around the lot, C. C. Linsley was authorized to rent it so as to raise funds to make the needed repairs. This condition of things induced the Eldership to resolve to "make an effort to secure means to promote the interest of the Michigan Eldership, and also the general interest of the Church of God, and not leave a stone unturned that should be turned that will make the work a greater success." The body sorely felt and sincerely lamented the death of Elder James Haskins, "one among the first ministers that helped to revive the Eldership that had ceased to meet for the space of about six years." He was originally licensed by the Indiana Eldership in 1856, and removed to Odessa, Iona county, Mich., where he began his labors in the ministry. An order was made requiring each minister of the Eldership to raise $5.00 for the Missionary Fund and $2.00 for the Contingent Fund the coming Eldership year, the penalty for failure to do so was the withholding of license until complied with. There were now ten fields of labor, all supplied with ministers. The Board of Incorporation began its active duties immediately after the Eldership, and it appointed an Executive Board of three members to look after the business concerns of the Eldership.

35th Michigan Eldership.—The fluctuating character of the Michigan Eldership is indicated by the very small attendance in 1888. This seemed a chronic feature of the body, and so the impression is made on the observer's mind that it must necessarily be vacillating in resolve, and wavering in execution. External conditions and influences contributed to this; but the thought is suggested that in the ministry of the Eldership there were too many who were irresolute and undetermined of purpose. The Eldership met at Hamilton, Allegan county, October 5th, with only six of the twenty-two teaching elders present, and four ruling elders and delegates. The Opening Sermon was delivered the previous evening, by Wm. Redding, from Eph. iii. 9, 10, 11. He was re-elected Speaker; C. C. Linsley, Journalizing Clerk, and I. E. Evans, Financial Clerk. Redding was also elected Treasurer. The Eldership was explicit and emphatic in its opposition to "the destructive and baneful influence and power of the license system," and committed itself positively to the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic. The resolution of 1887, that each pastor collect $5.00 for the Missionary Fund and $2.00 for the Contingent Fund, was only partly carried out, and compliance therewith was insisted upon. One minister who had come into the Eldership from the Free Methodist Church returned to its fellowship, and his name was dropped. Two other ministers "left our Eldership and joined another Church," and "their names were stricken from our Roll." The only compensation for this loss was the reception and ordination of E. Robertson, of some other Church, "being well seconded by his Conference." The Eldership realized that "what we need most is men of ability, with good moral characters, to move in our midst and stay." Some of the "bethels are unoccupied by our preachers." There were eleven appointments, to each of which a pastor was assigned. Other ministers were instructed "to open up new points, or supply the places which are not supplied."

36th Michigan Eldership.—When the Eldership met at Bangor, Van Buren county, October 4, 1889, thirteen of the nineteen seats of teaching elders were vacant. There were present two ruling elders, one delegate and two exhorters. The names of two ministers were dropped from the Roll; but one previously dropped was reinstated. Redding was again chosen Speaker, and C. C. Linsley, Clerk. The Report of the Committee on Temperance was still more definite and pronounced in favor of Prohibition, demanding "the utter and speedy legal prohibition of this terrible curse," and promising to "aid the Prohibitionists by vote and voice in saving the people from the destructive influence and power of the licensed liquor traffic." The state of religion was declared to be "low in the bounds of this body." A General Missionary was appointed, on "condition that he agree to travel in the bounds of the Michigan Eldership, and not stay at home." J. M. Ireland was elected Treasurer, but no Treasurer's Report was submitted. On Education the Eldership took advanced ground, urging "all in the bounds of this Eldership to do all in their power to educate their children, especially those who contemplate entering the ministry." It also expressed its full sympathy with "the mission interests of the General Eldership," and urged special collections for this purpose in all the churches. The Publishing House and Book Room of the General Eldership, and the various periodicals were endorsed, and recommended to "the patronage of the brotherhood." The appointments were reduced to nine, two of them being missions.

37th Michigan Eldership.—Responsive to general religious sentiment, the Michigan Eldership adopted strong resolutions against keeping open the World's Fair at Chicago on the Lord's day. It considered such a course as tending "to bring disgrace on our nation and people." It provided for the sending of its resolutions on the subject to the Chairman of the World's Fair Committee under its corporate seal. The session was held at the Wiles school-house, New Haven, Gratiot county, beginning September 25, 1890. The membership consisted of nineteen ministers and nine delegates. L. J. Teed was elected President; I. E. Evans, Clerk. The publications of the General Eldership were strongly endorsed, and ministers and churches were urged to patronize them. Missionary Societies were directed to be organized in the churches. The financial report presented a good condition of the Eldership Funds. The camp-meeting spirit still existed in the Eldership, so that a Camp-meeting Committee had been appointed. The churches, however, were indisposed to bear the expenses and endure the inconveniences, and so none was held. There were four fields of labor, which were supplied with pastors. Three ministers were named as Home Missionaries, "to help where opportunity affords," while one was appointed State Evangelist. The opinion prevailed that "this was the best Eldership that was ever held in Michigan." The only matter for discouragement which some experienced was "the scarcity of ministers," which necessitated the merging of some of the circuits, thus making them "too large for one man to travel, and do justice to the work."

38th Michigan Eldership.—At the session of the Eldership in 1891 there were three additions to the ministry, two of which received appointments, so that six fields of labor were supplied with pastors. The session was held at Sodus Bethel, Berrien county, and began September 17th. The officers chosen were L. J. Teed, President; I. T. Crago, Clerk. The Eldership felt its need of a better educated ministry. It sought to incite to diligent study by requiring all the ministers "who had not been members for a period of ten years should make a special study of Grammar and Rhetoric, and prescribed the text-books in which they were to be examined. "The Eldership all through its session was a decided victory for God." The religious fervor seemed so supreme that little was done besides the routine business.

39th Michigan Eldership.—The more experienced members of the Eldership rejoiced at the close of the session of 1892, that it "left the field re-inforced by nine workers, three exhorters and six ministers, two of the latter of marked ability." "The nightly efforts in the pulpit were in the demonstration and power of the gospel. The altar services were salutary and spiritual." "The cause has received a new impetus." As in 1891, the business transacted was limited, yet attention was given to some extent to matters of Church polity, as it was the opinion that "progress in the great reformation in Church polity is assured." On Sunday evening the ordinances were observed, at which it was noted that "a few out of three different denominations participated." The session was presided over "by one of the old veterans in the ministry," Wm. Redding, with J. S. Eakin as Clerk. It is recorded as a peculiarity of the session that "no resolutions were offered." The Funds of the Eldership were replenished through assessments. The session was held in the Spencer school-house, Montcalm county, and began September 1st. The seven fields of labor were all supplied. Not only the unassigned ministers, but the exhorters were required "to open new appointments where opportunity affords." The Eldership adjourned in the hope "that the near future will bring still brighter days for the Michigan Eldership."

40th Michigan Eldership.—The hope expressed at the close of the thirty-ninth session of the Michigan Eldership seemed to have been well founded. For at the close of the session of 1893 the Clerk reported that "the prospects for Church work in Michigan are gradually brightening, and we hope and pray that this year will be one of great prosperity." The session was held at Bangor, Van Buren county, beginning September 21st. The Opening Sermon was delivered by L. J. Teed. The membership of the body was twenty-three, of which six were exhorters. One sister at this session was seated as a "ruling elder." The ministers "in the active work were stationed on nine appointments." The Speaker, W. J. McNutt, came from the Ohio Eldership by transfer. J. S. Eakin was Clerk. More than usual business was transacted. On temperance the body pledged itself "to do all in our power to suppress the monster evil of intemperance, which endangers our government and its industrial, educational and religious institutions. It committed itself in favor of the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, importation and transportation of all or any intoxicating liquors as a beverage by our ballots and influence." Because of troubles growing out of the readiness to receive untried persons into the ministry in former years, the Eldership declared, that "hereafter we will receive none into this Eldership, or grant to any one a license, without their having belonged to the Church of God and having preached twenty-five times at least previous to making an application for license, and bring a letter of recommendation from the church signed by the ruling elders and preacher in charge." This refers to new applicants for the ministry. The Eldership did the singular thing of accepting the findings of a committee that "there have been wrong actions on the part of" both an expelled minister "and the Eldership," and recommending his reinstatement and mutual forgiveness.

41st Michigan Eldership.—While the General Eldership in 1893 had sent down to the annual Elderships several questions to be considered and acted upon, the Michigan Eldership took up only that of Eldership titles. This was done at the session held at Sodus Bethel, Berrien county, beginning September 19, 1894. It decided "to stand by the title Eldership of the Church of God," by "a unanimous rising vote, and still strengthened by loud acclamations." It also voted to "adhere to the Bible title 'Elder,'" and "denounced the prefix 'Rev.'" J. H. McNutt was chosen Speaker, and J. S. Eakin, Clerk. "One-half hour was set apart for memorial services," when the Committee on Obituaries reported resolutions eulogistic of the life and character of H. A. Garrett, in whose death the body had lost an efficient and worthy minister. He was originally licensed by the Michigan Eldership in 1869, and was "faithful to him that appointed him" to the holy office of the ministry. To assist in raising more missionary money, "the Board of Missions was instructed to organize Woman's Missionary Societies." "L. J. Teed was elected General Missionary throughout the State of Michigan," at a salary of $350.00. When the Report of the Committee on Temperance was read it was objected to because the word "party" was used. The Committee was required to eliminate it. The Report enumerated a number of "protean diseases" caused by the use of ardent spirits; "the ruining of property;" "hereditary transmission of tendencies to diseases," and "insanity," "the blunting of moral sensibilities and their final blotting out," as reasons for favoring absolute prohibition, to which end "the Eldership will use all its influence and all lawful means." The Treasurer, J. M. Ireland, who was re-elected, handled only $51.07 during the year. The Committee on the State of Religion reported total "membership of 250 a year ago," and "that more than two-fifths of this number are good, spiritual workers." But "the spiritual condition is at a low standard." Two newly licensed ministers entered the active work of the Eldership, enabling the Committee to supply all of the ten circuits.

42nd Michigan Eldership.—The reports from Michigan at this time were rather untoward and depressing. The State Organizer, E. Tatman, wrote: "I am almost ashamed to give the true standing of the Church of God in Michigan." Yet some things inspired confidence, although the Eldership itself confirmed Tatman's dispiriting estimate. It declared that "we behold the cause of Christ languishing." However, the Eldership manifested a determined and courageous spirit, and its deliberations evinced sanctified zeal for the cause and a determination to carry on the work with unabating energy. It convened at the Spencer appointment, Montcalm county, September 26, 1898, having listened the previous evening to the Opening Sermon, delivered by J. S. Eakin. The Speaker elected was Wm. Redding, and the Clerk, J. S. Eakin. A new committee was named "to draft a Constitution and By-Laws for the Michigan Eldership," two of the members of the former Committee having died. The Eldership required each able-bodied minister "to preach twenty-five sermons a year, or keep up two regular appointments." Failure to do this would work forfeiture of license. The Treasurer was required to give bond in the sum of not less than $100.00. Referring to the East Pennsylvania Course of Studies, the Eldership resolved to adopt it, and directed each minister under forty-five years of age to take this Course, and to pass a regular examination each year. A committee to examine in the Course was at once appointed for the year 1895-6. Better qualifications were also demanded on the part of applicants for license. A Board of Missions and a Board of Church Extension were elected. A Constitution and By-Laws for a Woman's Missionary Society were prepared and adopted, and the organization of local societies was encouraged. There were thirteen fields of labor, one of which could not be supplied with a pastor, while three were "under the supervision" of ministers not otherwise assigned. There was a General Missionary, and four others were "requested to take up appointments and assist other ministers." The Roll of the Dead had two names of ministers engrossed upon it, in whose honor memorial services were held. M. D. Rogers had been licensed first in 1892, but had developed into "a faithful and valuable co-worker," and was held in high esteem. J. H. McNutt was originally a member of the West Ohio Eldership, from which he received his first license in 1870. He was an efficient minister, and the Eldership keenly felt his loss.

43rd Michigan Eldership.—Two committees were at work during the year, and were ready with their Reports when the Eldership convened. One made a draft of a Constitution and By-Laws, which, after being considered seriatim, was adopted, with minor "corrections." The other prepared a Course of Studies of a more limited character "for all applicants for license, as well as ministers under fifty years of age." The session was held at the Bradley appointment, or Colonville, Clare county, and began September 17, 1896. L. J. Teed presided, and J. S. Eakin served as Clerk. Conditions in the Eldership had improved. One new organization was formed, and the total accessions were 138. "The outlook is hopeful." But there was an exigent "need of more earnest and faithful and honest laborers in the vineyard of the Master." The presence and addresses of Clara Landes gave the body much inspiration. Ministers' names are sometimes "dropped" reluctantly, or indignantly; but this Eldership "dropped" a former General Missionary "gladly from the Roll of the Eldership by a rising vote." On temperance, the "preachers and members of the churches of God" were "requested to vote as they pray." The ministers pledged themselves "to be more earnest and faithful, and more fully consecrated to the great work of the Master, that they may be more efficient in his service the coming year." The funds were exceedingly limited—Contingent, $24.66; Missionary, $13.71; Superannuated, $3.15. D. L. Wiles was the Treasurer, who received from the Finance Committee for the three Funds, $15.85. Thirteen fields were supplied with pastors, and one was to be supplied by the Standing Committee.

44th Michigan Eldership.—The Michigan Eldership held its Ministerial Association during the day preceding the Eldership session. On the evening of said day, September 7, 1897, J. B. White preached the Eldership Opening Sermon. Before the election of officers the Constitution was amended, under suspension of the second section of Art. II., and this Article was stricken out, and the following substituted: "All ruling elders, and delegates elected as alternates in the absence of the ruling elders, shall be full members of this Eldership." L. J. Teed was made Speaker, and J. S. Eakin, Clerk. The ministers and delegates were much encouraged by the presence and counsel and addresses of T. Koogle, of Ohio, who was there in behalf of Findlay College. Also by a communication from Clara Landes, missionary in India. The Eldership condemned the use of tobacco under the inspired requirement of the Scriptures "to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh, perfecting holiness;" and it resolved that "the older members of this body will, in the near future, abstain from its use," and that "hereafter we will refuse to license any young minister who will not abstain from the filthy habit." There was a balance of $56.46 in the treasury, and D. L. Wiles was elected Treasurer. There were thirteen teaching elders at this session, and four ruling elders and eight delegates. Wm. Redding was superannuated. Two out of seven applicants for license were ordained. Appointments were made to eleven fields, with one General Evangelist.

45th Michigan Eldership.—Little missionary or Church Extension work could be done in Michigan for lack of means. There were always men enough to devote their time to such work had an adequate support been guaranteed. There were at this time seventeen teaching elders and exhorters, yet there were only 764 sermons preached during the year 1897-8, and forty-four persons were fellow-shipped, and fifty-one baptized. One church was organized. The missionary spirit was low, as the receipts indicate, being less than for either the Contingent or the Superannuated Fund. The Eldership convened at the Colonville Bethel, Clare county, September 21, 1898. L. J. Teed delivered the Opening Sermon the previous evening. The unusual action of intercepting and recalling a transfer was taken in the case of J. R. Omweg, who had received a transfer to the Indiana Eldership. The difficulty was adjusted. Weak and indigent as the Eldership seemed to be, and with Findlay College no farther removed, it favorably considered "the project of an academy within the bounds of the Michigan Eldership." The Standing Committee was "authorized to look up a site and devise ways and means for the starting of an academy and procuring a principal for the same." It was also empowered to go over the territory of the Eldership "for the purpose of raising money for this purpose." The Constitution was amended by changes in half a dozen sections, in one of which four regular Funds were established, to wit: Missionary, General Eldership, Superannuated and Incidental. Each minister was to be "instructed by the Secretary as to the amount he is expected to raise on his work for the different Funds." Circuits were to be more completely organized, so that the work might be carried on with more system and efficiency. Applicants for license were to be more rigidly examined as to their faith, knowledge of Scripture, grammar, history, and general information, and they must come well recommended. Exhorters' licenses were to be discontinued. Mrs. Woodworth was invited to the State of Michigan, with her co-workers in evangelistic work, and was promised co-operation.

46th Michigan Eldership.—Neither ministers nor ruling elders and delegates were largely in attendance at the Michigan Eldership. Elements were wanting to quite an extent to create enthusiasm. Distance for too many was a serious obstacle. When the Roll was called as the body convened at Sodus Bethel, Berrien county, in the extreme south-western corner of the State, eleven ministers, four ruling elders and one delegate responded. J. S. Eakin was chosen President; L. J. Teed, Clerk, and D. L. Wiles, Treasurer. Being near the Indiana State line, J. Bumpus, of the Indiana Eldership, attended the session, and "his soul-cheering sermons and noble advice given as an advisory member" greatly encouraged the Eldership. The body was in mourning over the death of William Redding, whose "Christian character was unspotted;" a "fearless defender of the truth, and a wise counselor." He was first elected in 1871, and was an active worker to within a year or two of his death. Charges were made against the Eldership by the church at Benton Harbor, and an effort to adjust matters failed. The Board of Missions of the General Eldership proposed to send a missionary to supply said church along with the church at Sodus Bethel, but this was not acceptable to the Michigan Eldership, as it did not wish to relinquish Sodus Bethel. The issuing of Life Certificates to ministers was objectionable. The sentiment of the Eldership was against them, and conditions were unfavorable. A modification was sought by correspondence with the Board of Publication, but said Board had no discretion, as the form of the Certificates had been prescribed by the General Eldership. In addition to other incisive paragraphs in resolutions against intoxicating liquors, a provision was incorporated declaring that "any young man who shall make application for license who is in the habit of drinking or using tobacco shall not be granted one." To secure a larger amount of funds for home missions, "C. Burns was elected Agent to go over the bounds of the Michigan Eldership and collect money for the Home Mission Fund." Ministers were instructed "on entering on their fields of labor to call a finance committee and fix the amount of salary, said amount to be paid quarterly." Two ordinance meetings were directed to be held annually with each church. There were nine circuits and stations, with one General Worker.

47th Michigan Eldership.—The territory of the State occupied by the ministers of the Michigan Eldership in 1900 can not now be determined from the records. The names of but two counties, Clare and Gratiot, near the center of the State, are found in the Report of the Stationing Committee. There were thirteen fields of labor, one of which was divided two months later. Three of them are called missions, and five of the fields had but one appointment. These fields were represented by fifteen ministers and four ruling elders and delegates. When the Eldership convened in annual session in the new Bethel at New Haven Center, Gratiot county, October 4, 1900. J. E. Moffitt was chosen President; W. J. McNutt, Clerk, and J. S. Eakin, Treasurer. C. C. Linsley, one of the pioneer ministers of the Church in Michigan, "passed away." He was originally licensed by the Indiana Eldership, in 1858; but spent the greater part of his ministerial life in Michigan. He was a leader in the Eldership for many years, and was faithful in his generation. Necessary arrangements were made to hold a camp-meeting in 1901, "for the advancement of the spiritual welfare of the Church of God." A State Evangelist was appointed, who also was charged with the duty of "taking up collections and receiving time Notes to be credited to the Home Missionary Fund." There were no missionary societies, and no official action on the subject was taken; but financial boards were authorized in the churches to look after salaries, collections, etc. An appropriation of $5.00 was made out of the Mission Fund to each of three of the fields of labor. On all the fields of labor the ministers were to be active in an effort to secure financial support. They were to see that the Financial Boards were duly organized, they being constituted members by the Eldership. They were instructed to call the Boards together "at least four times during the year."

48th Michigan Eldership.—1901 being the year to elect delegates to the General Eldership, the Michigan Eldership, through its Standing Committee, elected as one on its delegation Mrs. Sarah J. Cooper. Having received her transfer from the Ohio Eldership, she was appointed General Evangelist of the State. The session of the Eldership was held at Seville Center, Gratiot county, beginning September 26, 1901. While the total number of members was twenty-eight, there were only fifteen present—eleven ministers and four delegates. The choice of the body for President was L. J. Teed; Clerk, W. J. McNutt; Financial Secretary, J. E. Moffitt; Treasurer, D. L. Wiles. Every minister under forty years of age was "required to take the Course of Studies prescribed by the Eldership." And every minister and delegate was taxed "50 cents, to be paid into the Contingent Fund before having a voice in said Eldership." The body was interested in, and loyal to, all general Church interests, requiring each minister to subscribe for The Church Advocate, and insisting on the Sunday-schools using Church literature. Appointments were made to eighteen fields. The Board of Missions was composed of Mrs. Sarah J. Cooper, S. S. Teed and Geo. W. Anderson.

49th Michigan Eldership.—During the year 1901-2 Mrs. S. J. Cooper began mission work in Detroit, so that Detroit Mission was added to the list of appointments in 1902. However the number of fields of labor was reduced to ten, several of the charges having been consolidated. The session was held at New Haven Center, Gratiot county, and opened September 18th, with twenty-two ministers and delegates in attendance. The officers elected were: W. J. McNutt, President; L. J. Teed, Clerk; Wm. Narragon, Financial Clerk; D. L. Wiles, Treasurer. The action on temperance placed the Eldership "on record as opposed to the liquor traffic," and the members "pledged themselves to do all in their power by pen, voice and ballot to suppress the evil and wipe the demon out of existence." Whatever deficiencies may have existed in practicing the amenities of ministerial life, the Eldership resolved to "try to cultivate greater respect for each other in courtesy and brotherly love, and manifest that oneness in our evangelistic and organic work for the Master which was manifest with him and the Father." There was an earnest desire for a "perfect labor of love; the saving of souls, and the keeping of the fold securely as under-shepherds until the great Shepherd comes to receive his own." Fields were all supplied with pastors, and J. E. Moffitt was appointed General Missionary.

50th Michigan Eldership.—No semi-centennial services were held either at the Eldership in 1903, nor by the pastors and churches, so far as the records have been preserved. There were twenty ministers and four delegates present at the fiftieth session, held at Pine River Bethel, Montcalm county, beginning with the Opening Sermon on the evening of September 2, 1903, by J. B. White. W. J. McNutt was elected President; C. L. Dilworth, Clerk; William Narragon, Financial Clerk. Funds were unusually limited: "Contingent, $25.42; Mission, $3.98;

Superannuated, $3.98." There were nine fields of labor, while John Lown and L. Childs were appointed General Evangelists, and Joseph Palmer, Assistant General Evangelist. Ten ministers were named "to open up new points."

51st Michigan Eldership.—There was improvement during the year 1903-4 in the condition of the churches and Eldership, so that the session of 1904 "was well attended," and "very encouraging reports were given." The meeting was held at Pine Grove, Montcalm county, where the Opening Sermon was delivered on Wednesday evening, September 21st, by J. E. Moffitt. The following officers were elected: President, W. J. McNutt; Clerk, C. L. Dilworth; Financial Clerk, Wm. Narragon; Treasurer, L. J. Teed. Limiting itself wholly to its own interests, the work of the Eldership was of a routine character—reports of ministers, recommendations of committees, and the stationing of ministers. The eleven fields of labor were provided with pastors, with L. Childs and J. D. Tanner, State Evangelists; J. Palmer, Assistant Evangelist; Mrs. S. J. Cooper to assist in revival work, and J. E. Moffitt, Missionary Collecting Agent. The brethren were "urged strictly to adhere to the admonition of Paul:—"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

52nd Michigan Eldership.—The question of entertainment at even so small an Eldership as that of Michigan had assumed no small proportions by this time. The local churches were relatively small, and it taxed their ability to entertain all who would be present during the sessions. In 1905 the Clerk of the Michigan Eldership published that "ministers and their wives, and delegates and their wives only, will be supported by the Eldership." The ministers and delegates present when the Roll was called at the Spencer appointment, Crystal township, Montcalm county, September 6, 1905, was twenty-three. The officers elected were President, L. J. Teed; Clerk, C. L. Dilworth; Financial Clerk, Wm. Narragon; Treasurer, L. J. Teed. Defective records were not uncommon, and of this session of the Eldership the Minutes furnish no data touching transactions of the body. Resolutions adopted and Reports of Committees the Clerk failed to record. The names of the members of the Standing Committee are M. S. Hemminger, J. D. Tanner, C. Haas, Wm. Shaw. The Board of Missions consisted of J. L. Teed, T. S. Lunbeck, Wm. Narragon. The laity was pretty well represented on the Standing Committee and the Board of Missions, as of the seven members three were delegates. There were seven fields of labor, all of which were supplied. There were two "General Evangelists," and nine "General Workers."

53rd Michigan Eldership.—On Wednesday evening, September 26, 1906, L. J. Teed delivered the Opening Sermon of the fifty-third annual session of the Michigan Eldership. The "total number of members was twenty-six." Ten ministers and six delegates attended this session. The choice for President was L. J. Teed; Clerk, C. Dilworth; Financial Clerk, Wm. Narragon; Treasurer, L. J. Teed. All but one of the seven fields of labor were supplied by the Stationing Committee. J. E. Palmer was appointed Evangelist, and the Eldership elected L. J. Teed, General Evangelist, while thirteen ministers were named as "General Workers." The session was held at Delo Corners, Isabella county.

54th Michigan Eldership.—On Wednesday preceding the session of the Eldership in 1907 the Ministerial Association held its annual meeting. In the evening the Opening Sermon was delivered by L. J. Teed. The session was held at New Haven Center, Gratiot county, and began September 19th. While the attendance of ministers and delegates was small—eight ministers and three delegates—"a large crowd was in attendance at each meeting," and "the ordinance meeting on Sunday evening was especially very impressive." "The spirit of peace and harmony prevailed" throughout the sittings. Officers were elected as follows: President, L. J. Teed; Clerk, S. S. Teed; Financial Clerk, Wm. Narragon; Treasurer, L. J. Teed. One of the ministers died during the year—S. L. McNutt—a man of excellent character and abilities for usefulness. To comply with the requirements of the Constitution of the General Eldership, it was made the duty of "every minister of the Michigan Eldership residing in any other State to take a transfer." Each pastor was required "to preach one sermon to each congregation on the blessing of giving to the support of the gospel." The teaching elders, after this session of the Eldership, were "not to be elected to the office of ruling elder." The church building at Salem, Mich., was ordered to be sold. For mission work in towns the Eldership authorized "the purchase of a tent," and appointed "Sister S. J. Cooper a committee to purchase the tent, and placed the funds in her hands" for that purpose. She was one of the ministers present at this session. Some "missionary funds were raised by collections," and a Board of Missions was elected, consisting of L. J. Teed, S. J. Cooper and Jas. Terwilliger. The seven fields of labor were supplied with pastors, and S. J. Cooper was appointed Evangelist. "New energy filled the brethren" of the Eldership, and "a more prosperous year than any one in the past" was predicted.

55th Michigan Eldership.—On April 30, 1908, "our venerable brother, Elder J. B. White, was called from labor to reward," is the record of the close of a "Christian life which was beautiful from its beginning to its close." White was a native of Pennsylvania, born in Perry county, August 5, 1820. When a young man he removed to Ohio, and thence, in 1850, to Michigan. He was first a member of the Presbyterian Church, but later united with the Church of God. In the Fall of 1853 he received his first license to preach, from the Ohio Eldership. He became a prominent member of the Michigan Eldership, and was frequently elected to official positions. "He was a man of wonderful energy, and possessed those sterling attributes of character which won for him the universal esteem of all within the circle of his wide acquaintance." The Eldership which convened in the Spencer Bethel, Montcalm county, September 10, 1908, lamented the loss of this estimable member of the body. At this session nine ministers and three delegates were present. Elections resulted in the choice for President of J. D. Tanner; Clerk, S. S. Teed; Financial Clerk, Wm. Narragon; Treasurer, L. J. Teed. The Eldership provided for a Board of Education, before which all applicants for license were required to appear and pass a satisfactory examination. S. S. Teed, M. S. Hemminger and W. J. McNutt were elected on this Board. Young men who proposed to enter the ministry were recommended to take a course at Findlay College. Efforts were being made to raise more missionary money; but as there were no missionary societies, collections were lifted for this Fund, and Mrs. S. J. Cooper, C. Haas and L. J. Teed were elected on the Board of Missions. M. S. Hemminger was made the General Missionary; J. E. Moffitt, General Evangelist, and five of the six fields of labor were supplied with pastors.

56th Michigan Eldership.—Forgetting, like Dr. Bangs once in his ministry, that "your duty is to pick, whether the rock yields or not," in 1909 "a number of the brethren of the Michigan Eldership seemed to feel somewhat discouraged." The session was called to be held at Pine Grove, Ferris township, Montcalm county, beginning September 30th, and the attendance was small, and no Opening Sermon was preached; but those "present manifested a good deal of enthusiasm, and some, looking on the bright side, were ready to promise us light ahead." Thirteen ministers and delegates were in attendance. These officers were chosen: President, J. D. Tanner; S. S. Teed, Clerk; Wm. Narragon, Financial Clerk; L. J. Teed, Treasurer. Two brethren received licenses, and "were ready to work," and there were other rifts in the clouds, so that "as the Eldership neared the close the brethren were encouraged." Ministers were strongly solicited "to attend the Ministerial Association, that we may discuss doctrinal points, and become a unit on the same."

57th Michigan Eldership.—The number of ministers ordained by the Michigan Eldership from its organization in 1850 to the close of the session in 1910 was ninety-six. Of this number twenty-three were enrolled when the Eldership was constituted at Colonville, Clare county, October 12, 1910. Nine ministers and six delegates were in attendance. J. D. Tanner preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of October 11th. He was elected President; S. S. Teed, Clerk; Wm. Narragon, Financial Clerk; L. J. Teed, Treasurer. By a Rule of the Eldership the Standing Committee consisted of three ministers and two ruling elders. There was considerable interest awakened in foreign mission work through a "communication received from Mrs. Clara Ritchie," of the W. G. M. S. of the General Eldership, and collections were lifted on the floor of the Eldership and at the evening services. Four young men appeared before the Board of Education and were favorably reported to the Committee on License, which "recommended them for an annual permit to preach." "Greater diligence was observed in the work of the ministry" by the Committee on the State of Religion, and it urged "that every minister of the Eldership put forth a greater effort in the future than ever before to advance the cause of Christ and his church, and to enlarge the borders of Zion." The Eldership "demanded a per capita of $1.00" from every minister when the reports were considered. There were four Eldership Funds, with balances October 13, 1910, as follows: Contingent, $33.50; Tent, $25.25; Missionary, $19.09; Superannuated, $3.98. A three-year Course of Studies was adopted, in which the young ministers were "required to pass a satisfactory examination." It was noted with special gratitude that "during the Eldership session glorious meetings were enjoyed; that there were two souls gloriously saved, one an aged man who had not been to meeting but three or four times in fifteen years, though he lived only one mile from the Bethel."

58th Michigan Eldership.—"One of the best Elderships for a number of years" was held at New Haven Center, Gratiot county, beginning October 4, 1911. The Opening Sermon could not be preached the previous evening because of inclement weather. The President, D. L. Wiles, was elected by "acclamation;" Clerk, S. S. Teed; Wm. Narragon, Financial Clerk; L. J. Teed, Treasurer. Further efforts were made to secure funds with which to purchase a tent, "to be the property of the Michigan Eldership." Subscriptions were taken on the floor, and "every minister in charge of a circuit or station shall do all he can in collecting money for a Tent Fund," and "every local minister was to consider himself a committee of one to collect all that he can for the Tent Fund." The total secured before final adjournment was $115.17. Religious conditions in the churches were considered "in a fairly prosperous state," with "a number fellowshipped during the year, and one new work opened." "The spirit of co-operation prevailed, and the brethren are working in union." An evening was devoted to the discussion of the topic—"How can a minister hurt his influence in and out of the pulpit?" On temperance the Eldership declared that it "deems it wise that the ministers should by every possible means, by pen, voice and ballot, do all they can to create a sentiment that will destroy the liquor traffic." Each member of the Eldership was admonished to "do all in his power to maintain peace and harmony among the brotherhood." The Stationing Committee reported five fields of labor, all supplied with pastors, with J. E. Moffitt General Missionary, and M. S. Hemminger, General Evangelist.

59th Michigan Eldership.—The religious services of the fifty-ninth annual session of the Michigan Eldership were most "inspiring and soul-cheering," beginning with "a real old-fashioned love feast on Sunday morning." The Opening Sermon on Tuesday evening, September 24, 1912, was preached at Pine Grove, Montcalm county, by J. D. Tanner. The session continued from Wednesday morning until Saturday evening, and was throughout characterized by "Christian fellowship and kind brotherly spirit." Religious services were held during Sabbath following adjournment, closing with the ordinances in the evening. Of the twenty names on the Ministerial Register eleven were enrolled, with three lay delegates, as constituting this Eldership. The President was M. S. Hemminger; Clerk, S. S. Teed; Financial Secretary, W. Narragon; Treasurer, L. J. Teed. The Standing Committee, three ministers and two laymen, was composed of W. J. McNutt, J. D. Tanner, D. L. Wiles, Wm. Shaw, Roy Miller. The Board of Missions consisted of three ministers—Witze Buch, M. R. Honderick, G. W. Andrews. The members of the Stationing Committee were L. J. Teed, J. D. Tanner, A. C. Hanes (ministers); Wm. Shaw, Sarah Humphry (lay delegates). The financial support reported by five pastors ranged from $32.50 to $342.61. The number of conversions and accessions to the churches did not reach fifty. Final provision was made to purchase a tent for Eldership use, the Committee being "empowered to draw from the General Fund of the Eldership and pay the difference between the amount of Tent Fund available and the cost of the tent." The Eldership "placed itself on record as opposed to the liquor traffic and the present license system," and that it "will do all in our power to wipe the evil from our land." The small attendance at the annual sessions was a matter of anxious concern, and the body expressed itself as "believing that the time has come when there must be a rallying to the standard of the Bible and the building up and strengthening of the Michigan Eldership." It therefore resolved "that we as ministers and delegates will each pledge ourselves before God and man that we will put forth every effort possible to be in attendance at our regular annual gatherings, and do all in our power to prosper the work and help to make the Eldership a success." "A spirit of peace and harmony" existed, "and a spirit of co-operation" prevailed. Five appointments to fields of labor were made, and the other ministers as General Evangelists were instructed "to work up new appointments wherever they can."

VII. THE ILLINOIS ELDERSHIP.

1st Illinois Eldership.—Illinois was pre-eminently a field for mission work by the East Pennsylvania Eldership. In 1847, when Harn visited the northern part of the State, including Jo Daviess, Stephenson, Carroll, Ogle and LaSalle counties, he found a number of Pennsylvania and Maryland families of the Church of God. He suggested the establishment of "the Carroll and Ogle Mission," and the "appointment of a young man." He thought that if "due attention be paid to this region, quite a prospect lies before us here." He specially mentions "a great number of emigrants from Maryland and Pennsylvania, who were formerly attendants on the services of churches of God." In Ogle county he found a "Maryland colony." In LaSalle county he found John A. Shuler, an emigrant from Middletown, Pa., with "about a dozen brethren and sisters in and around Ottawa, formerly of Pennsylvania." Fulton county, fourth county south-west of LaSalle, also had a settlement of families from Lancaster county, Pa. These facts induced the East Pennsylvania Eldership to take a special interest in mission work in Illinois. A strong effort was made to secure the services of Harn, a Marylander by birth and a Pennsylvanian by adoption, as missionary in the north-western counties of Illinois in 1847. But there was no assurance of sufficient support. Besides, Harn was of too restless and aspiring a character to settle down to hard, self-sacrificing mission work. At the second General Eldership, held in 1848, action was taken "recommending to the Indiana Eldership to prescribe its own boundaries, including the various missions in Illinois." And while several ministers of the Indiana Eldership traveled over different counties in the eastern section of the State, the distance to the northern counties would prove an insurmountable obstacle to co-operation. Accordingly when organized and systematic mission work in Illinois was inaugurated by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, the General Eldership in 1851 authorized "the churches and brotherhood in Illinois to erect themselves into a new and separate Eldership to be called the Illinois Eldership." The same year Klein, Wertz and Sandoe were sent as missionaries to Illinois by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, "and began the labors assigned them." The work was successful, so that by the Summer of 1852 they seriously "contemplated the formation of an Eldership." On November 5, 1851, G. Sandoe asked the East Pennsylvania Eldership for his "transfer to the Illinois Eldership, which I suppose will be organized next Fall." In December of the same year he wrote that "the brethren in the north are doing great things. They have an Eldership started." This refers to what J. M. Klein, missionary, located at Homer, LaSalle county, Ill., called, "Journal of a General Council in Illinois." The record shows that this "Council" was composed of "the preachers and elders of the churches of God in the State of Illinois, met at the town of Homer, LaSalle county, on the 1st day of December, 1851, to transact the following business," that is: "Taking into consideration the great importance of extending our labors in the ministry as far as possible." Sandoe was requested to "extend his labors northward toward the Troy Grove [Homer] Mission, and Klein working southward, and to the north and west, so as to connect the three missions of the State." Other ministers were invited to come to Illinois. This Council also adopted resolutions in favor of Sabbath-schools, of "getting a new Printing Press and Book Concern, the liberal education of the children of Church families, of schools, academies and seminaries and colleges. It also resolved to "make an effort to establish an Eldership Fund, on the scriptural plan, as soon as practicable, to be under the direction and at the disposal of the Illinois Eldership." The final resolution declared, "That we meet some time next Autumn for the purpose of forming ourselves into an Eldership, as directed by the General Eldership, the time and place to be appointed hereafter." But the matter was deferred a year longer, the place had yet to be prepared, in the divine providence. Sandoe on November 15, 1852, says of this delay: "Our intended Eldership proved a failure. This seems somewhat discouraging and perplexing to my mind. Perhaps, however, it will work for the better." "January 3, 1852, a protracted meeting was commenced in Joseph Rife's brick residence, near Boiling Springs," Macon county, conducted by Thomas Hickernell, of Ohio, and George Sandoe, of Pennsylvania, missionary. Rife was a native of Dauphin county, Pa. He died in 1886, Mrs. Rife having died in 1884. A church of God was organized in Rife's house, of nineteen members, of which

Joseph Rife, Sr., and Jacob Schroll were the elders; and Joseph Rife, Jr., and David Houser, deacons. It was in Rife's house, August 23, 1853, where "the elders of the Church of God in Illinois met. . . . to organize themselves into an Eldership." William Adams, of Ohio, conducted religious services, after which the members who wished to be identified with this body gave to each other the right hand of fellowship." The following constituted this first Eldership:

"Central Mission—J. M. Klein, teaching elder; J. Myers, ruling elder.

Rock River Mission—D. Wertz, teaching elder.

Southern Mission—G. Sandoe, H. Rupp and Isaac E. Boyer, teaching elders; J. Bear, J. Schroll and G. Schroll, ruling elders.

Adams and Hickernell did not join the Eldership. Rev. Robert Henson and Rev. S. Dispain, of the Baptist Church, were also present, and "were invited to take part with us in our deliberations." J. M. Klein was chosen Speaker, and George Sandoe, Clerk.

Jacob M. Klein was a native of Berks county, Pa., of German descent. He was born in 1818. When he reached his majority he removed to Juniata county. His conversion occurred when he was fifteen years old, and within a year he began to preach the gospel. From Juniata he went to Bedford county, whence he came to the session of the East Pennsylvania Eldership held at Fayetteville, Franklin county, Pa., November 7, 1842, and made application for, and was granted, license to preach. He was appointed to Indiana county, and reappointed in 1843. When the West Pennsylvania Eldership was formed, Indiana county became part of its territory, and Klein became a member of that body, and in 1844 was reappointed to Indiana county, and in 1845 to Indiana and Cambria counties. In 1846 he was assigned to the Harmony, Venango county and Columbiana county, Ohio, circuit. He preached on parts of this territory until 1850, when he was appointed to the New York State Mission. In 1850 he was Speaker of the West Pennsylvania Eldership. In 1851 he was back in Venango county, Pa., whence, after his appointment as missionary to the Central Illinois Mission, he started for his new field of missionary labors. This was on April 26, 1851. Klein was active in calling the meeting on December 1, 1851, at Homer, LaSalle county, Ill., to take preliminary steps to organize an Eldership, the date for which was fixed in the Autumn of 1852. But for some unknown reason this meeting was not called. But on August 23, 1853, the first Eldership was organized of which Klein was made Speaker. He had been Speaker of the West Pennsylvania Eldership in 1850. In 1855 he was again chosen Speaker of the Illinois Eldership. He represented the Illinois Eldership at the General Eldership in 1854. In 1866 he emigrated to Iowa, where he did effective work, until 1886, when he removed to Kansas, and thence to the State of Missouri, where he died April 21, 1891. His body was interred in the cemetery at Alice, Grundy county, Iowa, where years before he had organized the first church of God. He was a man of fine natural ability, and was useful in soul-winning to the close of his life.

The missionary character of this Eldership is evidenced by its first resolution, to "raise a missionary fund, in the following manner: The elder or deacon of every church to take out a subscription paper, soliciting subscribers for the term of five years, paying six per cent. interest each year for the sum annexed to their names. At the expiration of said term the principal to be null." This money was to be applied solely to the cause of missions. It also declared that it "has no fellowship with, nor charity for, slavery nor slave laws, and will use its influence against all such laws. It approved of "the effort to bring the Printing Establishment west of the mountains," and promised to "use all laudable and honorable means" to this end. H. Switzer was licensed. Klein, Wertz, Boyer and Sandoe agreed to travel. And as D. Kyle, East Pennsylvania Eldership, expressed "a wish to come to this State," he was appointed on the Decatur circuit; I. E. Boyer on the Martinsville circuit; D. Wertz on the Central Illinois Mission; J. M. Klein to Mount Carroll circuit, and George Sandoe on a new mission, called Winchester Mission. J. M. Klein was appointed delegate to the General Eldership in 1854.

2nd Illinois Eldership.—The second Illinois Eldership met in the heart of the Central Mission, over one hundred miles north of the point where the first one was held. It convened at Homer, LaSalle county, September 9, 1854. Five ministers were present, and three absent. The officers elected were George Sandoe, Speaker; David S. Byers, Clerk, and Jacob Bear, Treasurer. The Eldership recommended "payment of a claim in favor of Winebrenner and Harn, as urged by the General Eldership. It placed itself on record in favor of "prohibiting the vending, importation and sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage." The project of a new Printing Press and the getting up of a Hymn-Book was heartily endorsed. It was almost a Pennsylvania Eldership as to ministers and members, and it did not fail to express its appreciation to said Eldership for what it did to spread the gospel in Illinois. It fully coincided with the General Eldership in its condemnation of slavery and "the Douglass Nebraska Bill." Perhaps its plan to raise missionary funds proved abortive, for it directed the "taking of collections on each charge" for this purpose. It appropriated its first missionary money, $75.00, to Sandoe on the Winchester Mission, and $50.00 to D. S. Byers, licensed by the Standing Committee, on Rock Island Mission. In addition to approving the license of Byers, the Eldership received and licensed "Bro. Lough, formerly a minister among the Free-Will Baptists."

3rd Illinois Eldership.—By resolution, the Eldership which met at West Bureau, Bureau county, Ill., Monday, September 17, 1855, changed the name of the church to that of "the church of God at Enon." There were present five teaching elders, and six ruling elders; four ministers being absent. Jacob M. Klein was, on motion, elected Speaker, and George Sandoe, Clerk. The lifting of missionary collections was "almost a total failure." Because of the "difficulty of getting suitable houses as dwellings for their preachers," the Eldership "recommended to all the churches of God in Illinois to buy or build, on each circuit and station, a suitable house as a parsonage." The need of more ministers was emphasized, as for lack of men "during the past year we were rather limited in our operations." And still there were "calls from every direction to 'come over and help us.'" In some sections German preaching was appreciated. Missionary funds only amounted to $74.70, with an "increase of only $3.00 on last year's subscription." The Eldership resolved itself into "a committee of the whole as a Licensing Committee," and granted licenses to Jeremiah F. Schoch and Jacob Bear. Touching "a body of Christians in the southern part of this State, known by the name of 'Separate Baptists,' holding religious sentiments similar to our own," the Eldership professed "the most friendly feelings," and proposed "co-operation with them." Sandoe was named as delegate for this end to their annual Association. Four circuits were formed, with four pastors and four assistants. Two missions are named, with no appointees. The title of the Eldership is, "The Eldership of the Churches of God in Illinois."

4th Illinois Eldership.—The affinity between the liberal Baptist element in the west and the Church of God is well exemplified in the proceedings of the sessions of the Illinois Eldership held at Rife's, four miles north of Decatur, Macon county, Illinois, beginning September 4, 1856. After the organization was effected by the election of J. Bear, Speaker, and George Sandoe, Clerk, a delegate was received from the Separate Baptist Association, who addressed the Eldership, and submitted "a letter of correspondence from the Association" sending "Christian love and salutation." Two delegates were appointed, but one "was not able to get here." Several "brethren spoke their sentiments on the subject of a scriptural union of the two bodies." And "a union is anticipated at no distant day." "A. J. Fenton and J. Bear were appointed to attend the next Association." "Hensen, formerly a minister of the Separate Baptist Association," became a member of the Eldership. Prohibition was strongly endorsed; the establishment of Sabbath-schools was made a special duty of ministers "wherever there is opportunity to do so;" the securing of parsonages is called to the attention of churches; the need of education, especially by the ministry is recognized, and "politicians" are charged with "having commenced a warfare upon Christianity" in their efforts "to extend Slavery over the Territory of Kansas." And while it is "not the duty of 'ministers of Christ to dabble in politics,' it certainly is their duty to defend Christianity from the incendiary acts of all aggressors, whether political, judicial or clerical." As a Committee of the Whole, the Eldership fixed the boundaries of the circuits and missions, eight in all, and appointed the ministers. Fenton and R. White were two accessions to the ministerial ranks, both from East Pennsylvania Eldership.

5th Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership in 1857 was constituted of seven ministers, three ruling elders and three delegates. It met at Dover, Bureau county, in the northern part of the State, on October 19th. Nine teaching elders were absent, partly occasioned by the organization of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, which the Illinois Eldership disapproved, "believing it to be detrimental to the cause" within its bounds. J. M. Klein was chosen Speaker, and E. Bear, Clerk. J. A. Shuler was elected Treasurer of the Eldership, instead of simply the Treasurer of the Board of Missions. The Eldership formed itself into a Missionary Society, and appointed a committee to draft a Constitution. The difficulty with the Iowa Eldership was considered by a committee, which reported that, "after due consideration and lengthy discussion, we consider this Eldership justifiable in the reception of Bro. Fenton, believing that he was not a member of the Iowa Eldership." Fenton had not handed in his transfer to the Iowa Eldership. Accordingly the Illinois Eldership declared that it "has been misrepresented to the public, and has been abused as a violator of the plan of co-operation." The "delegates to this Eldership through whom the Iowa Eldership evinced their intention to vindicate their course failed to meet us, and we consider ourselves misrepresented in the Journal of the Iowa Eldership, and by public letters published in The Advocate." The Eldership seemed vexed over the conduct of "some of our brethren who leave the fields of labor assigned them by the Eldership," and sharply disapproved, and expressed the "hope that in the future we may not be troubled with such conduct." While denouncing Slavery in general as "derogatory to the best interests of our country, to the great cause of Christianity, and in violation of human rights," also "disapprove of the course of the missionaries and churches in the State of Texas in receiving into the Church those who hold in bondage their fellow men," and so "disclaim all fellowship with pro-slavery churches." The charges were reduced to two circuits and two missions, leaving out the whole southern half to two-thirds of the State.

6th Illinois Eldership.—Apparently emphasizing the abandonment of the territory south of Bureau and LaSalle counties, the Illinois Eldership in 1858 met in the north-west corner of the State, at Pleasant Valley, Jo Daviess county, November 8th. Twelve members answered Roll call when the Eldership was organized, six teaching elders, four ruling elders and two delegates. There were twelve teaching elders absent. J. Bear was elected Speaker, and J. H. Hurley, Clerk. A committee, appointed for that purpose, "examined the contents of a certain pamphlet, published by a member of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, entitled, 'Letter on Slavery,'" reported, that "we do sincerely regret its appearance among us, inasmuch as it inculcates principles repugnant to the doctrine of the Church of God and the best interests of Zion, at variance with the Bible and antagonistic to every attribute of the Deity, and is calculated to sow the seeds of discord among us." When thus characterizing Winebrenner's letters published by him in pamphlet form, after Colder refused to admit them into the columns of The Advocate, it was believed that little did the Eldership think how much it behooves us to be quite conservative and cautious in the use of official language about those not amenable to us, lest we find ourselves in a moment of enthusiasm or irritation betrayed into assertions of propositions which will come back to plague us when they are turned the other way. Over against this arraignment of Winebrenner stands the Eldership's approval of "the noble stand of the Editor of The Advocate taken against all encroachments of the enemy." A Contingent Fund was established, "each minister to pay into it $1.00 annually and lift a collection at each of his appointments."

7th Illinois Eldership.—The territory of the Eldership having been re-adjusted, the Illinois Eldership of the Churches of God met in the Bethel in Decatur, Macon county, Ill., Saturday, October 1, 1859. Four circuits and five missions were represented; but three ministers being absent. J. M. Klein was made Speaker; Geo. W. Boyer, Clerk, and E. Bear, Treasurer. The Constitution ordered to be drafted for the Missionary Society was reported, and it was adopted. Action was taken to secure from the Legislature an Act incorporating the Eldership, in the names of the members of the Standing Committee, the Treasurer and J. H. Hurley. "The black curse of involuntary slavery" was anathematized. A resolution was first laid on the table, and then taken up, and lost "after a spirited debate," declaring that the charging of usury, or "exorbitant interest," is "in direct opposition to the whole tenor of the New Testament Scriptures." "The proper observance of the Sabbath" the Eldership regarded as "a subject immediately connected with the glory of God, the salvation of souls and the moral and political welfare of our country."

8th Illinois Eldership.—The Special Notice of the Clerk was that "the Eldership of the Churches of God will meet at Homer, LaSalle county, Ill., yet the heading of the Journal, and the Journal itself, give the title as "Church of God." It convened October 3, 1860 in its eight annual session. Five circuits and one mission were represented. Ten teaching elders were absent. All teaching and ruling elders, together with one delegate from each church in place of each elder absent, "were given the privilege of voting on any question that may come up before this body." J. H. Hurley was elected Speaker; J. P. Emmert, Clerk, and E. Bear, Treasurer. The Committee on Education, finding former resolutions largely a dead letter, "would recommend not only their re-adoption, but that we suggest the propriety of reducing the same to general, practical application." It also "urged upon the ministers and members of the Church in this State the propriety of putting forth still stronger efforts for the organization of Sabbath-schools." The Plum River circuit was divided, making East Plum River the dividing line, and naming the two circuits Plum River and Mt. Carroll, with six and five appointments respectively. The death of William Clay was lamented in resolutions which characterize him as "an able and useful member, a pious and efficient co-laborer, and an ornament to society." Provision was made at the instance of a layman, J. P. Emmert, for a fund "for superannuated ministers and for families of deceased ministers which may become destitute, or in needy circumstances" by assessing "each male member fifty cents, and each female member twenty-five cents, within the boundaries of the Eldership." This tax was to be "collected by the ministers in charge of the different congregations." The principal was to be "put at interest," and the interest be used "for the next ten years." Dissatisfaction was expressed with the southern boundary, by which Macon county was united with the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership. The form of a Charter for the Eldership was submitted and approved, and J. P. Emmert was made a committee to secure the passage by the Legislature of the Act of Incorporation. The taking of "unlawful interest" was forbidden. The churches were "requested and urged" to organize church missionary associations to aid the parent Missionary Society. J. M. Klein, A. J. Fenton and J. P. Emmert were appointed "to draft a Constitution for the government of this Eldership." Nine circuits were formed and three missions, but three were unsupplied. The Eldership was severely criticised for failing to make "even an allusion in the remotest degree to the late death of Elder John Winebrenner." After warmly resenting the reflections thus cast upon the Illinois Eldership by "Observer," J. P. Emmert, Clerk, explained, that it was not "for want of reverential regard for the memory of Winebrenner;" but that it was the intention of the Committee on Obituaries, of which he was Chairman, "to have added the testimony of the Eldership to the well-known virtues and high moral and religious worth, to which our lamented brother had attained in this life;" but that "in the hurry of business the matter escaped my memory."

9th Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership met as an incorporated body in its ninth annual session at Mt. Carroll, Carroll county, Ill., October 21, 1861. There were five circuits and six missions, with seven teaching elders, five ruling elders and six delegates enrolled when the Eldership was constituted. Five fields were not represented, and six ministers were absent. No copy of the Act of incorporation was secured, but the Constitution was submitted and adopted. The name of the body was declared to be "The Illinois Eldership of the Church of God." The membership was defined to consist of "all ministers of the gospel holding license from this body, together with all the ruling elders and one delegate that may be sent to represent the circuits and stations." After the organization, duties of officers and some parliamentary rules, it was further provided that the Eldership shall elect by ballot a Standing Committee of three and a Stationing Committee of five persons. The former was given "all the rights and powers of the Eldership during its recess." Churches are "required to give their pastors a competent support," and "pay the same quarterly." The amenability of the ministers to the Eldership is affirmed, and provision is made for the "rebuke, suspension and expulsion of ministers and churches which fail to comply with these Rules of Order." Under the Charter and Constitution, J. H. Hurley was the first Speaker; Rudolph White, Clerk, and John A. Shuler, Treasurer. In McDonough county, near the Mississippi river, were some Free-Will Baptist churches, which by letter expressed a "wish to be identified with" the Eldership. A committee of one was appointed "to visit them, examine into their condition and standing, and report to the Standing Committee." As the support of pastors was quite generally insufficient, from which "a great deal of evil is resulting," the Eldership expressed the belief that "the remedy is within reach." This was outlined to be the making "of the deacons of the churches sensible of their duties in this respect," and so they were "urged to adopt a more efficient plan in raising funds" . . . . . "and use every exertion in carrying their plans out." One minister while under charges "attached himself to another denomination," treated the citation to appear before the Standing Committee "with contempt," and was suspended by said Committee, and "declared no longer a member of this body on account of unchristian conduct." The "cause of our Redeemer," declared the Committee on the State of Religion, "has not prospered as much as we have desired." As the Eldership found some "men professing Christianity engaged in selling and using spirituous liquors as a beverage," it resolved that it "will not knowingly fellowship among us any person or persons who are engaged in said iniquitous traffic," nor will "we give our suffrage or influence to any person or persons who will aid or uphold such a wicked traffic." After strongly characterizing "the fraternal strife" from which the country was suffering in a lengthy preamble, the Eldership resolved to "denounce disunion and secession;" declared it will "discourage secessionists North and South, and will oppose secession sympathizers everywhere," and sanctioned "every measure and proclamation, which we are sure a military necessity demands, until this unhallowed rebellion is put down." There were thirteen fields of labor mapped out, seven of which are called "missions."

10th Illinois Eldership.—The Eldership in Illinois in 1862 came very near being a failure. When the time arrived, November 29, 1862, "but few brethren met" at the appointed place, Homer, LaSalle county, Ill. Those present waited from November 20th to December 2nd, but "no more came." There is nothing in the brief Journal whereby to determine who, or how many, were there. There was no Roll call. The Eldership was not constituted. No statement as to who reported. Those present went into "Committee of the Whole;" but there is no record of the officers. The Journal is signed J. M. Klein, Speaker; J. A. Shuler, Clerk, without showing their election. A Standing Committee and a Treasurer were appointed. All licenses were renewed and placed in the hands of the Standing Committee "until called for." Made five appointments; elected delegates to the General Eldership; dropped one name from the Minutes of the Eldership; appointed the time and place for the next Eldership, and adjourned. They even did not have "the books and papers belonging to the Eldership."

11th Illinois Eldership.—As the Eldership in 1863 "convened pursuant to appointment by the Standing Committee," and not pursuant to adjournment in 1862, said action does not seem to have been considered valid. In constituting the Eldership there are further evidences indicating the work of said Committee in the appointments. The session was held in the new bethel, near Buda, Bureau county, Ill., beginning October 12, 1863, and was well attended. There were three stations, four circuits and seven missions. J. M. Klein presided, and J. P. Emmert was Clerk, with J. A. Shuler, Treasurer. The certified copy of the Charter was received. A. X. Shoemaker, East Pennsylvania Eldership, was received as a full member during the session. Several items of business of the session of 1862 were re-enacted, among them a "committee to visit the certain Free-Will Baptist brethren in McDonough county, Ill." Action was taken "urging upon the churches of the Eldership the importance of procuring at the earliest possible period a suitable location for a High School which shall be under our own supervision." The Eldership expressed itself as "decidedly in favor of raising means for the erection of a monument over the remains of our venerated and much lamented Winebrenner." A precedent was established in the matter of appeals, when "the appeal of J. H. Hurley from the action of the Decatur church" was heard, and referred to a committee for investigation. The action of the Decatur church was reversed, and the case sent back. It was agreed to "appoint an evangelist to take the oversight of this body, whose whole duty it shall be to visit all the churches within the bounds of this Eldership, assist the preachers in holding meetings, and open up new appointments." His support was to come from "those among whom he labors." Going more into detail on the temperance question, the Eldership declared that "we will not entrust, by our votes, to offices of profit or trust any habitual drunkard;" that "we will not entrust our sons and daughters to the care and instruction of a practical drinker;" discountenancing "the fashionable practice of tipling;" denouncing "the elevating to important official positions in the military service of men given to intoxicating drinks," and that "the regular or occasional use of spirituous, malt, vinous or fermented liquors by any minister of the gospel is beneath the dignity of the sacred office." It also "discountenanced and utterly denounced the practice of visiting saloons and the drinking of lager beer by professors of religion," and declared that "we will oppose the practice by members of churches within the bounds of this Eldership." The Committee on the State of the Country reported, that the war has in it "the elements of God's judgments sent upon us as a chastisement for our national sins;" petitioning Congress "to break every yoke, and let all the oppressed go free;" expressing "unwavering confidence in the President," and promising "to labor by our votes, our words and our prayers to uphold his official hands." The Chicago Mission project was strongly endorsed, and agents were appointed on all the charges "to collect subscriptions." November 12th was designated "as a day of general fasting and prayer to Almighty God, that he will most graciously pour out his Holy Spirit on his work and revive it in our hands especially and with his people generally." A resolution was adopted in which the Eldership "opposed the practice heretofore indulged in of churches calling and contracting with preachers without co-operating with the Eldership." So there were five fields "to be supplied" when the Stationing Committee reported; the appointment of the Evangelist was referred to the Standing Committee.

12th Illinois Eldership.—Ten teaching elders and eight ruling elders and delegates constituted the Eldership when it convened at Troy Grove Bethel, LaSalle county, Ill., November 28, 1864. The choice for Speaker was J. H. Hurley; Clerk, R. White; Treasurer, J. A. Shuler. W. B. Allen, later an efficient member of the body, received license at this session. He was from Dauphin county, Pa. Each minister was taxed $1.00 annually for the fund for ministers' widows, and his license was "to be withheld until he pay said amount." They were also required to collect fifty cents from male members and twenty-five cents from female members annually for the same fund. The Committee on the State of the Country insisted on the prosecution of the war "for the preservation of the Union until the rightful authority of the United States be recognized in every State in the Union;" that "disloyalty to the Government is disloyalty to God;" that it "hailed with pleasure the Emancipation Proclamation as the severest blow to the Rebellion," and "demanded of Congress an amendment to the Constitution forever prohibiting slavery in this country." "The ministers and people of the Church of God are urged to use all commendable means to counteract the pernicious influence of this monster evil of intemperance." That the local ministers might be "more efficient" they were "requested to employ at least every third Sabbath, and as much more time as they can, in the great work to which they are called." In addition to favoring the "establishment of a college under the supervision of the churches of God," the Eldership also voted to establish a "National College where the children of deceased soldiers may receive a suitable education." Two stations, three circuits and three missions were designated, and ministers assigned to them, and J. H. Hurley was made General Missionary.

13th Illinois Eldership.—No special reason is assigned, but immediately after the organization of the thirteenth Illinois Eldership, at Decatur, Ill., November 15, 1865, the time till adjournment was "devoted to singing and prayer." J. H. Hurley was chosen Speaker; J. A. Shuler, Treasurer, and R. White, Clerk. The Eldership was becoming dissatisfied with the practice of publishing Journals in full, as they "occupy too much space in The Advocate," and instructed its "Clerk to transmit only a synopsis," specifying eight different items, besides "all important resolutions." It expressed some critical comments on the character of The Advocate, and instructed its "delegates to the General Eldership to labor, first, for an enlargement of the paper; second, for a board of editors chosen from the different Elderships; third, to bring it westward, and fourth, to have the form changed to folio." A custom began to prevail "of churches and ministers making contracts prior to the Eldership, and then presenting their cases to the Eldership for adjustment," so that the Eldership declared "that too frequent changes must be detrimental to the interest of the cause," and that "it is the privilege of churches wishing changes to state their preferences," but the Eldership "deems it best that they place their cases unreservedly in the hands of the Eldership." The practice of ministers seeking charges in Illinois without becoming members of the Eldership was disapproved, and it was characterized as "being contrary to the spirit of this body to assign appointments to men who will not become members of it." Rejoicing over "the glorious triumph in the suppression of the Rebellion," the Eldership gave a strong declaration of its sentiments touching the "leaders of the Rebellion, as guilty of the highest crime known to the law—treason and murder—causing the shedding of innocent blood wholesale." Also as being in favor of "supporting the needy families and educating the orphans of our fallen heroes." It protested "against the re-establishment of slavery in any part of this country," and declared in favor of "raising the negro to the rights of citizenship, and that the right of suffrage consists not in the color of the skin, but in intellectual qualifications." Those who "had given 'aid and comfort' to the Rebellion in any shape, way or manner should be excluded from the halls of Congress and State Legislatures." Theaters were pronounced to be "schools of immorality and debauchery," and circuses "as no less dangerous and corrupting in their tendency," and that "it is unbecoming a professor of religion to attend these places under any circumstances." A resolution in favor of "a stringent prohibitory law" was adopted. Apparently not satisfied with its deliverance earlier in the session on The Advocate, R. White offered another preamble and resolution, stating that "we need a Church paper which will subserve the interests of our western churches; that The Advocate from the smallness of its size and the manner in which it is controlled, fails to do this;" hence the "demand for the establishment of a paper somewhere in the West," and appointing "the delegates to the General Eldership a committee to propose a plan for the establishment of said paper, and urge the matter upon the delegates of the several western Elderships." The Editor in several editorials vigorously attacked these resolutions, and some of the Illinois brethren wrote apologetically about them, stating that they were "probably nothing more than the impulsive, momentary thought of the proposer himself," and "is not now endorsed or approved by one in twenty within the bounds of the Eldership;" that "the resolutions were passed at the 'heel' of the session, when there were few present, and that by only two or three votes in the affirmative." The Eldership had seven fields of labor, not including Chicago Mission, none of them noted as missions.

14th Illinois Eldership.—The Eldership of 1866 consisted of eleven teaching elders, ten ruling elders and four delegates, with three fields of labor not represented. Ten teaching elders were absent. It convened at Troy Grove, LaSalle county, Ill., November 21, 1866. J. M. Klein was chosen for Speaker; J. A. Shuler, Treasurer; J. P. Winebrenner, Journalizing Clerk, and W. B. Allen, Transcribing Clerk. The Committee on Rules of Order recommended the Rules of Order of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and the Report was agreed to. A missionary meeting was early arranged for, to be held the second day evening. Inspiring addresses were delivered; $277.00 were raised by subscription, and by resolution the Eldership acknowledged itself "quite deficient in missionary operations," and resolved to "seek out among us some worthy man, naturally adapted to this work, and set him apart solemnly to the work of a general missionary and collector of mission funds, to be resolved into a State Mission Fund." An attempt failed to fix the time to change preachers in the Fall, immediately after the Eldership. The proposed Sunday-school paper was strongly endorsed, and pastors were directed to lift collections to buy material. Highly approving the work of Shoemaker at Chicago, the Eldership deprecated the publication "of certain articles tending to embarrass the Chicago Mission interests." The work of the General Eldership in the securing of Centralia College and the plan for the building of a Central College was strongly endorsed. Decatur was named as the location for the latter, and the Committee stated that it was "able to report fair prospects for raising the amount necessary to procure the location of the College there." The resolutions of 1865 with reference to The Advocate received no consideration, but good resolutions were adopted, and the Eldership pledged itself to labor to increase the power of the press. Internal difficulties moved the Eldership to appoint J. Bear, R. White and I. E. Boyer "to draft resolutions denouncing the refractory and rebellious spirit manifested on the part of preachers and people toward our rules of mutual co-operation." This Committee stated that, "overlooking the teaching of the Savior....some have become refractory and rebellious, injuring themselves and in many instances the cause." It therefore "deplored such course of conduct," and "earnestly entreated all the brethren to avoid such a course, and preachers and people work together to advance the interests of God's cause." The fourth Sabbath of December was named as a day of fasting and prayer "for efficient laborers to be sent into the ministry among us." Neither Shoemaker at Chicago, nor Soule at Mt. Carroll having as yet united with the Illinois Eldership, the Rule was rescinded which "prohibited any one from taking an appointment in this Eldership without becoming a member thereof." The Eldership would not agree to "ordination by the imposition of hands." Two missions, Monmouth and Ogle, were included in the ten appointments made by the Stationing Committee.

15th Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership continued to meet on Monday morning, having the Opening Sermon preached on Sabbath evening. In 1867 it met at Mt. Carroll, Saturday, October 5th, and on Sabbath evening, R. White preached the Opening Sermon, from Eph. ii. 8-10. But before the Eldership adjourned it decided to meet on Wednesday. On Monday morning the Eldership was constituted, and organized by electing I. E. Boyer, Speaker; J. A. Shuler, Treasurer, and W. B. Allen, Clerk. The Eldership approved the action of the Standing Committee in granting T. H. Deshieri a letter of withdrawal, and by mutual consent dismissing H. W. Conley, and also the licensing of M. S. Newcomer. It reversed itself in the matter of the appointment of "I. E. Boyer as General Missionary and Collecting Agent, to receive twenty-five per cent. of all moneys collected," which the Standing Committee had changed "to a fixed amount of remuneration." For want of sufficient local interest, the effort to secure the location of the Central College at Decatur was abandoned. With apparently no opposition it was decided "that hereafter ministers of this Eldership take charge of their respective appointments on the first day of November after the Eldership." German preaching was demanded at Troy Grove, and G. S. Petry was appointed, a German preacher of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Extensive revivals were reported at some points, and a "disposition was manifested on the part of ministers and laymen to work more earnestly to advance the cause of Christ within the bounds of this Eldership." The Treasurer reported that the Illinois Eldership had paid in full Winebrenner's claims against it. The appointments consisted of two stations, five circuits and four missions.

16th Illinois Eldership.—After four years' labor at Chicago, Ill., without uniting with the Illinois Eldership, Shoemaker presented his transfer when the Eldership met at Buda, Bureau county, Ill., September 23, 1868. On Wednesday evening Soule preached the Opening Sermon, from II. Tim. iv. 1-4. On Thursday morning the body was organized by the election of Shoemaker for Speaker; J. A. Shuler, Treasurer; W. B. Allen, Clerk. The Eldership appointed two Pentecostal meetings for the coming Whitsuntide. It also established a Book Depository at Chicago for the sale of Church publications to the ministers and churches of the Eldership. Though without a formulated Creed, H. L. Soule was required to clear himself from the reported heretical views charged against him. As he was not a member of the Eldership, he was not amenable directly to it, but he "reported his labors at Mt. Carroll and Salem." It is not stated in what church building the Eldership held its sittings, but on Monday evening a sermon on the ordinances was delivered by H. L. Soule, in the Methodist Episcopal church, after which the ordinances were observed. James J. Greene, a minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, was licensed by the Eldership. The deliverance on the subject of Temperance was mild, declaring "cordial sympathy" and promising hearty co-operation in every way not inconsistent with our obligations as Christians and citizens." The working of the rule on appeals was illustrated in the case of J. H. Hurley. Though elected a delegate to the General Eldership, he was under discipline by the church at Decatur, and appealed to the Eldership. The appeal was not sustained, when he gave notice of appeal from this action to the General Eldership. The unusual thing of a minister of another Church sitting as an advisory member and offering a preamble and resolutions occurred, when a Mr. Emerson, of the Baptist Church, offered an endorsement of the translation of the Scriptures by the American Bible Union, which substitutes "immerse" and "immersion" for "baptize" and "baptism." The patronizing of circuses, theaters and other kindred amusements was decidedly opposed. In Illinois as in all other Elderships the matter of the support of ministers was always one of special concern. Resolutions were not only passed repeatedly, but sundry schemes were adopted to increase the salaries of pastors. Sometimes contrasts were drawn between the earnings of men in other callings to awaken a sentiment of the injustice done to ministers. Then the publication of the meager salaries was resorted to in order to hold up churches to public reprobation. Other Churches have sometimes fixed a minimum salary. The Illinois Eldership this year required the teaching elder on a charge, as soon after he enters upon his duties as may be practicable, to "call together the deacons, and if need be some of the leading brethren, who shall determine the amount of salary to be raised, and that on the determination of the amount, the deacons shall take immediate measures to obtain on subscriptions from amongst the membership and friends of the Church of God the full sum of such amount." The Standing Committee was authorized to act as the Board of Missions.

17th Illinois Eldership.—With all the other Elderships, the Illinois Eldership met in 1869 under a sense of great loss through the death but shortly before of E. H. Thomas, Editor of The Advocate. The body met at Decatur, October 8th, where in 1866 the General Eldership held its session, and Thomas was one of the most prominent members. Besides, more than half the ministers and delegates were former Pennsylvanians, and personally acquainted with Thomas. Accordingly arrangements were made the first day "to have a funeral sermon preached" in his "honor to-morrow [Sabbath], conducted by H. L. Soule, A. X. Shoemaker and J. H. Hurley, each originally licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Upon ballots being taken, J. H. Hurley was chosen Speaker, and W. B. Allen, Clerk. The Constitution being amended, J. B. Soule was elected Transcribing Clerk. After the "funeral services in honor of E. H. Thomas, the Eldership placed strong resolutions on its Minutes, declaring him "the servant of all the churches, and highly esteemed as an Editor, and an able minister of the New Testament." The Eldership placed itself on record as "entirely disapproving of the use of the prefix 'Rev.' by the ministry of the Church of God," quoting Matt. xxiii. 8-10 in confirmation of its position. While the Eldership felt "grateful for as much of the life and power of godliness as is still found among us," it however confessed "that there is a growing tendency to formality and worldliness on the part of many professors." On the "Itinerancy" the impression prevailed that it had been essentially modified, so that the Eldership declared that it "continued to maintain, as we always have, the 'mutual co-operation plans' as understood by us in the early organization and practice of the Church." Two delegates were appointed, J. H. Hurley and J. B. Soule, to attend the Shelby Association of Separate Baptists. Excluding Chicago Mission from the list of appointments, the Stationing Committee reported twelve charges, two of which were missions.

18th Illinois Eldership.—On October 12, 1870, at Troy Grove, LaSalle county, Ill., the eighteen Illinois Eldership began its session. There were twelve fields of labor, four of which were not represented by pastors. Ten teaching elders were absent. A. X. Shoemaker was elected Speaker; W. B. Allen, First Clerk, and M. S. Newcomer, Second Clerk. The delegates to the Separate Baptist Association reported the friendly reception given them, and stated that "a committee was appointed to consult with them on conditions of final union, and concluded upon a further meeting of committees appointed by each body." After strongly condemning the liquor traffic and intemperance, it was "resolved not to lend our influence in favor of, nor vote for, the election to office of any man whom we know to be guilty of intemperate habits." "A Sunday-school meeting" was a feature of the Saturday afternoon sitting, with D. Palmer, Conductor, when subjects pertaining to Sunday-schools were discussed, and a series of resolutions adopted urging ministers and churches to greater diligence in this line of work; that schools "conducted mainly by our brethren and in our church houses should be known as Church of God Sunday-schools," and "suggesting the propriety of holding an Eldership Sunday-school Convention." The Eldership decided in favor of holding such a Convention. It also favored holding "a general Sunday-school Convention of all the Elderships," and a Committee was appointed to confer with like committees from other Elderships on the matter. An enthusiastic missionary meeting was held, at which the "territory," the "men" and the "means" were discussed. A rule was adopted, that "hereafter the Opening Sermon be preached by the retiring Speaker," and that it be on the first Wednesday evening of October in each year. Including three missions, there were nine fields of labor. A sad scene was the disfellowshipping for "immoral conduct" of a minister who had represented the Eldership in the General Eldership on several occasions, and at one session was its presiding officer.

19th Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership had a number of more or less serious troubles. Sometimes they grew out of acts of insubordination, or want of co-operation. Again some of the ministers "erred from the truth," and had to be corrected, and occasionally one was disciplined for laxity in morals. A tendency to be lenient in discipline led the Eldership to bear with men holding wrong views, to the end that they might be restored. In 1870 C. C. Marston was found to be "unsettled in regard to some most vital truths revealed in God's word, and, therefore, not eligible to the office of the sacred ministry among us." But the Eldership was charitable, and retained him in fellowship. But at the Eldership in 1871 his name "was stricken from the Roll." The session was held in the Spring Grove Bethel, Warren county, and began October 5th, Shoemaker preaching the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 4th, from John xvii. 21-23. M. S. Newcomer was elected Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk, and G. W. Ashton, Financial Clerk. John A. Shuler "was the unanimous choice for Treasurer." In adopting the report of the Committee on Temperance the Eldership voted in favor of "co-operation with temperance organizations to secure national prohibition;" denouncing "the so-called medicinal bitters," and declaring that "all our offices in the land ought to be filled with men pledged to prohibition." The Eldership recommended that "the next General Eldership favorably consider any feasible plan for the establishment of an institution of learning." Having received G. S. Petry as a member, a former East Pennsylvania minister, he was appointed "German Missionary." There were twelve appointments, not including Chicago, and by appointing H. L. Soule, East Pennsylvania Eldership; F. F. Kiner, Iowa Eldership, and J. H. Besore, Michigan Eldership, all the appointments were supplied.

20th Illinois Eldership.—Journals, by direction of the General Eldership, were much abridged in 1872, and so lack in interest. But several important actions of the Illinois Eldership are published in full, and possess special interest. I. E. Boyer preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of October 2nd, from I. Tim. iv. 16. Jacob Bear was elected Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk; G. W. Thompson, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Shuler, Treasurer. The Home Mission Fund showed a credit of $279.08; the Contingent Fund, $5.00, and the Eldership Widows' Fund, $666.95. The Eldership reaffirmed its "former temperance sentiments;" but it also "hailed with pleasure and a fond hope the effects of the present State Liquor Law, and we fully and unhesitatingly agree to support the same." The Eldership had more or less trouble on account of the relation of H. L. Soule to the body. He was not a member, yet for some years served a charge. He was according to reports not "sound in faith," but up to this Eldership he was only the subject of general resolutions. F. F. Kiner brought the matter to an issue, when Soule declared, after examination, that he "does not believe in, nor teach, the unconscious state of the dead, nor the annihilation of the wicked; but that he understands man's immortality as not being inherent in himself as a self-existing, eternal being, but derives it only through Christ at the resurrection."

The wicked may not receive eternal self-existence." Kiner therefore offered a resolution, stating that "while this is not exactly the doctrine the Church teaches, yet the discrepancy is of such a character that the Eldership can continue to co-operate with him." On a ye and nay vote this was adopted, 15 to 6.

21st Illinois Eldership.—In constituting the Eldership at Lanark, Carroll county, October 1, 1873, "Chicago—A. X. Shoemaker, was on the list of appointments. G. S. Petry is still enrolled as German Missionary, and there are ten other fields of labor. A. J. Fenton was the choice of the Eldership for Speaker, and W. B. Allen for Clerk. Shuler declining to serve longer as Treasurer, E. Bear was elected. It was ordered that there be two Pentecostal meetings held and two Sunday-school Conventions. In each church it was required that a missionary collector be appointed, and their names were to be reported to the Clerk of the Eldership. The Eldership licensed its first woman to preach the gospel, in the person of Mrs. A. C. Newcomer, who, with her husband, was appointed to Lanark, Shannon and Spring Valley. Laymen coming to the Eldership as representatives were required to bring credentials. While H. L. Soule, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership; F. F. Kiner and O. V. Kennaston, of the Iowa Eldership, were given appointments, it was decided "that after the present Eldership year we make membership in this body requisite to an appointment." A committee was appointed to revise the Constitution, to report in 1874.

22nd Illinois Eldership.—The Eldership in 1874 carried out its action of 1873, to make membership in the body a condition of receiving an appointment. Kiner was appointed to Mt. Carroll on this condition. Kennaston was left without a charge, and Soule's name disappears. Mt. Carroll asked that the action of 1873 be rescinded; but the Eldership stood firm. The session was held at Troy Grove, LaSalle county, and began October 8th. A. J. Fenton having preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 7th from Mark xvi. 20 and Acts viii. 4. A. X. Shoemaker was elected Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk, and E. Bear, Treasurer. As the Eldership believed that "in the absence of a theological institution of learning Ministerial Associations are useful for a better understanding of God's word, and a more united sentiment can thereby be gained," it ordered "that this Eldership establish such an Association, and that a committee be appointed to draft Rules and By-Laws for the government of the same." "The Sunday-School Record" was endorsed as "meeting a felt want among parents, teachers and Sunday-school workers generally." "Theaters, horse-racing and circuses" were denounced as "demoralizing in their general tendency," as "sensual entertainments," and "dangerous exhibitions," and "we as an Eldership emphatically express our sentiment and pledge our future influence boldly, squarely, earnestly and practically against these immoral and dangerous amusements." Delegates to the General Eldership were instructed "to use their influence in preserving the territory of our Eldership intact," and "against more or less frequency than triennial meetings of the General Eldership."

23rd Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership convened at Fairview Chapel, Macon county, October 6, 1875. It elected M. S. Newcomer, Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk, and E. Bear, Treasurer. B. Ober, of the Texas Eldership, was received as an advisory member, joined the Eldership and was assigned to Carrollton Mission. The Eldership confined itself mainly to routine business; but its action on education and a school was of general interest and of an aggressive character. It found that "the only feasible plan looking to the establishment of an institution of learning is to be found in creating a fund, by bequests from the brethren who may desire school facilities which they have not enjoyed." Hence the Committee "recommended the appointment of three men to act as trustees for this fund, the fund to be used as the Eldership directs." Brethren are urged "to remember this fund in their wills," expressing the hope that thus in a short time "the General Eldership can establish a good college under the direct supervision and fostering care of the Church." Licenses were to be revoked in the case of preachers of the Eldership who failed to preach at least twelve sermons each year. Opposition expressed itself in a resolution against the action of the General Eldership in May, 1875, in "appointing Shoemaker a general worker throughout the bounds of the various Elderships." It was claimed that this is "not in harmony with the Article touching the relation of ministers of one Eldership to another, and establishes a precedent that ought not to be sustained." The Stationing Committee divided the territory into thirteen fields, three of which were missions. Three of the appointees came from other Elderships with transfers.

24th Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership had the same trouble to secure a large attendance of ministers and delegates as other western Elderships. In 1876 fifteen of the twenty-nine ministers were absent, and only fourteen delegates were in attendance. The Eldership convened at Buda, Bureau county, October 5, 1876. The Opening Sermon was delivered by F. F. Kiner the previous evening. He was then elected Speaker; W. B. Allen, Stated Clerk; Jehu Bailey, Financial Clerk, and E. Bear, Treasurer. The funds were in good condition. Widows' Fund, $1,088.31; Missionary Fund, $341.98, after paying out $560.98; Contingent Fund, $14.87. The Carrollton mission was not clearly within the bounds of the Eldership, and this, with other matters, gave trouble. Ober had failed to "enter upon the mission;" yet he had received part of the appropriation. The mission was discontinued, and he was required "to return the money advanced, to the Eldership." The Committee on Education ignored the plan of 1875 to secure funds to build a college, and confined itself to the question of education in general. In view of the failure of ministers to receive adequate supports by reason of members not bearing "their portion of the financial burdens of the different charges," the Eldership "recommended the several churches to adopt the assessment plan, so as to equalize the burdens, provided it can be made satisfactory to the churches." The Eldership pledged itself "to do every thing in our power to stop the manufacturing and importing into our country, and the selling of, intoxicating liquors as a beverage; and furthermore, we will use our influence at the ballot box against any person who may seek office in our country, who uses intoxicating liquors, or encourages the selling, manufacture or importation of the same." The Constitution was amended so as to give to the Standing Committee "all the powers of the Eldership, except to alter or infringe upon the Constitution; but all its actions shall be subject to the sanction, or disapproval, of the Eldership." Two Pentecostal meetings were provided for, and also a Ministerial Association. Churches are accused of "becoming more formal; games are being introduced which encourage idle life and feed idolatry." "We would condemn the use of games, and would recommend a more devoted and godly life."

25th Illinois Eldership.—Several new departures characterize the Illinois Eldership of 1877. It agreed to pay half the expenses of its delegates to the General Eldership. It renewed the agitation in favor of a more central location for our publishing interests, and even instructed its delegates to vote for such a change. It so far receded from the general position held earlier as to request the General Eldership to issue a doctrinal tract. It also expressed its readiness to "receive applications for, and to issue, exhorters' licenses to such brethren as in its judgment are deemed worthy." It hedged this privilege around by declaring later that such a license shall confer "no official authority to administer the ordinances, receive into church fellowship, solemnize marriages; or exercise controlling or disciplining power by virtue of a license to exhort." The Eldership held its session at Pleasant Valley, Jo Daviess county, so far North as to make a large attendance improbable, beginning October 3, 1877. Twelve preachers were present, and fourteen absent; ten ruling elders and three delegates were present. M. S. Newcomer was made Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk; J. Wilson, Financial Clerk, and D. Palmer, Treasurer. Newcomer had preached the Opening Sermon from Isa. xlv. 24-26. The evening of October 2nd and the whole day following were spent in Ministerial Association. This order was made a Rule. The Eldership had adopted a Rule at a former session that no minister of the body was to have pulpit fellowship with an expelled minister of this or any other Eldership. The West Ohio Eldership made complaint that Shoemaker had violated this Rule by assisting a man expelled from said Eldership in dedicating a house of worship. The Standing Committee expressed extreme sorrow "to hear of such a breach of our Rules," and "cherished the hope that Shoemaker will not again violate the letter or spirit of our Rules." Approved by the Eldership, this closed the incident. In addition to the Ministerial Association, the Eldership also arranged for Pentecostal meetings and a Sunday-school Convention. It adopted a resolution in favor of a Church Hymnal.

26th Illinois Eldership.—Eleven teaching elders, thirteen ruling elders, and four delegates constituted the Eldership which held its session at Troy Grove, LaSalle county, beginning October 1, 1878. W. B. Allen delivered the Opening Sermon, from Mal. ii. 7. A layman, Jehu Bailey, was elected Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk; J. Wilson, Financial Clerk, and D. Palmer, Treasurer. A committee was appointed to prepare a three years' course "for novitiates, with a view to encourage and direct young candidates for the ministry, and to secure their greater efficiency in the work." Among the works to be studied were Winebrenner's Sermons, Watson's Institutes, Horne's Introduction, Pearson on Infidelity, Macanlay's English History, Conybeare's and Hawson's Life of Paul, and a Harmony of the Gospels. The Eldership lamented the death of George Dir "who has labored in this body for a number of years, and by a consistent life and from adherence to the principles of the Church of God has won the esteem and respect of the people." On Saturday evening, after a sermon by I. E. Boyer, the Eldership observed the ordinances. The need of a Church Hymnal was strongly emphasized, asserting that "the necessities of the case are such that a failure to take immediate action in this matter will result disastrously to the cause of our beloved Zion." The Eldership affirmed "that total abstinence is the daughter of Christianity, and all who would traduce the parent are not to be trusted with the interests of the family." The Stationing Committee made twelve appointments, and one General Missionary, with a salary of $400.00 out of the Missionary Fund. The receipts for the year for this Fund were $468.46. The Widows' Fund had to its credit $1,425.19.

27th Illinois Eldership.—It has often been contended that but a small part of funds contributed for missionary purposes reaches the missionaries. Often this objection is not well founded. The Treasurer of the Illinois Eldership reported in 1879 that the receipts of the Missionary Fund were $420.30. This included a balance on hand of $18.46. The total paid out was $408.00, of which $400.00 was paid to the General Missionary. Other funds show a better condition. The Widows' Fund had a total of $1,558.09, and the Contingent Fund $48.11. The session of the Eldership was held at Boiling Springs, Macon county, and began October 1, 1879, when S. D. C. Jackson preached the Opening Sermon from 2 Cor. iv. 1, 2. Fifteen of the twenty-four teaching elders were present, with eleven ruling elders and two delegates. The officers chosen were I. E. Boyer, Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk; W. R. Covert, Financial Clerk, and John Stare, Treasurer. The Eldership required every resolution to be handed to the Clerk to be read by him. It also directed that on Saturday evening A. J. Fenton preach on the "Nature of Regeneration." The Church of God being "abundantly able to support its ministry," and yet it receives "but a small remuneration comparatively speaking," the churches were urged "to adopt the monthly system of paying their pastors." In connecting the use of tobacco with temperance, the Committee introduced a new feature, of "devoting fifteen minutes to hearing the experiences of those who have abandoned the use of intoxicating drinks and tobacco." The Eldership "disapproved of the practice of brethren reflecting upon one another when reporting." A committee was appointed to revise the Constitution and By-Laws. Pastoral visiting was insisted upon, and ministers were enjoined "to do it with impartiality." The Eldership assumed the right to pass a vote of "censure or condemnation of the Board of Publication of the General Eldership in not adhering to the resolution of that body touching a Church Hymnal." The report of the Stationing Committee was declared "to be final, and that no appeal can be taken by those dissatisfied with its action, except by a direct refusal to take the appointments assigned, or an appeal to the Standing Committee."

28th Illinois Eldership.—In the earlier history of organized societies their constitutions were a growth. The needs of small bodies to have organic laws is not so apparent. Their interests are less diversified. A supreme and common purpose actuates the membership. As the work enlarges and interests multiply, conditions and circumstances, as well as conflicting rights, suggest the need of elementary rules, which are at first only temporary. Additions are made, as from year to year the Rules are readopted. Permanent, organic laws follow, and these, in various ways are changed or amended, or entirely revised. This is the process of evolution by which all the Constitutions of the oldest Elderships were framed. Hence, they were rather frequently placed in the hands of committees to revise. This the Illinois Eldership again did in 1880, when W. B. Allen, S. D. C. Jackson and I. S. Richmond were the committee, to report in 1881. The Eldership convened in the Bethel in Spring township, Warren county, Tuesday evening, October 12th, and spent one day as the Ministerial Association. On the evening of the 13th S. D. C. Jackson preached the Opening Sermon, from 1 John iii. 2. Thirteen ministers were present, and fourteen, absent. There were also present six ruling elders and three delegates. The Speaker was M. S. Newcomer; Clerk, W. B. Allen; Financial Clerk, W. I. Berkstresser, and Treasurer, John

Stare. Christian, Shelby and Moultrie counties, adjoining Macon on the south, had "been occupied by the Illinois Eldership with much success," and the churches organized in those counties desiring to be supplied by the Illinois Eldership with preachers, the delegates to the General Eldership in 1881 were requested to petition said body that these counties be added to the Illinois Eldership territory. The Eldership lamented "the apparent lack of critical, biblical culture and general knowledge among the ministers," and "urged them to redouble their exertions that they may be qualified for the responsible duties of their high calling." The laity was "encouraged to independence in thought and to preparation for careful and critical examination of all the various questions of duty and right taught them in the word of God." Co-operation was promised "with others in all ways possible in the project of establishing a Church school." The stepping stone to the ministry frequently was the exhorter's license, and at this Eldership several were thus licensed who shortly after became ordained ministers. The name of R. H. Henson, one who "realized the divine injunction to earnestly contend for the faith," was added to the Roll of departed ones. Fraternal delegates were frequently sent from one Eldership to another, A. C. Garner, of Iowa, being present at this session of the Illinois Eldership in that capacity. The state of religion in the Eldership was reported by the Committee to be very gratifying, "as seen in the numerous accessions to the membership of the Church and the quickening and encouraging of the followers of Christ." But the Committee "urged the membership to secure a higher plane of religious preparation and a fuller consecration of themselves and their property to the service of God." Of the fourteen fields of labor to which sixteen ministers were appointed, three were missions.

29th Illinois Eldership.—The session of the Eldership held at Decatur, Macon county, began Thursday evening, October 5, 1881, with the Opening Sermon by George Sandoe, from 1 Cor. i. 21. The body was considerably enlarged by the enrollment of the ministers and delegates from the Illinois part of the territory of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, which "the General Eldership in 1881 merged into the Illinois Eldership." T. Koogle, of Ohio, and J. H. Besore, of Iowa, were present as fraternal delegates. The officers elected were George Sandoe, Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk, and John Stare, Treasurer. There were now thirty-nine licensed ministers in the Eldership, of which number twenty-three were present; thirteen ruling elders and seven delegates. Two exhorters were enrolled. It was decided to be inexpedient to hold a camp-meeting, but "several general meetings" were recommended to be held instead. Resolutions were adopted, "endorsing with joy and gladness the action of the General Eldership favoring the erection of an institution" of learning, and declaring that "we solemnly avow it as our conviction before God, that every member of the Church, both lay and ministerial, is morally bound to contribute to this work, largely, liberally and joyously." The Committee was M. S. Newcomer, S. D. C. Jackson and W. I. Berkstresser. The Mendota Mission enterprise was regarded as on a permanent basis, and had the sympathies of the Eldership, which cheerfully made the desired appropriations as "conditions upon which Sister A. C. Newcomer proposed to carry forward the work." Receipts for the various Funds were as follows: Widows', $74.94; Contingent, $26.34; General Eldership Contingent Fund, $58.03; Missionary Fund, $173.51. The Eldership pledged itself to use its "best endeavors to suppress the use and manufacture of malt, or spirituous liquors in our State; to "teach the young the principles of temperance, and not to vote for men to fill public offices while they are encouraging this great evil of intemperance." It "condemned the use of tobacco in all its forms, and that we consider it a nuisance." A committee, consisting of M. S. Newcomer, W. B. Allen and J. Bernard, was "appointed to recommend a course of studies for the young ministers." The Stationing Committee of three ministers and two laymen, divided the territory into twenty-two fields of labor, assigning Mary Berkstresser to Mt. Carroll and Lanark, Annie C. Newcomer to Mendota Mission.

30th Illinois Eldership.—Quite an aggressive spirit characterized the thirtieth session of the Illinois Eldership, which was held at Warrensburg, Macon county. It was presided over by J. Bernard; with W. B. Allen as Clerk; M. Anderson, Financial Clerk, and John Stare, Treasurer. Two committees of three each were named "to draft programs for the two Pentecostal meetings." Prohibition had become an issue before the people of Illinois, and the Eldership resolved to "give our undivided and uncompromising efforts in the pulpit and at the ballot-box to secure the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of the accursed evil." To encourage fixed ministerial salaries, each local church was directed "to ascertain by church meetings, or otherwise, the amount of support which can be given, and report the same to the Eldership." On the ordinances the body expressed its judgment that "baptism should be attended to as early as practicable after conversion," and that "the ordinances of God's house should uniformly be observed as frequently in each church as once a quarter." An unusual action was taken relative to G. S. Petry, who had "in writing declared his withdrawal from the Eldership." The Eldership not only "cheerfully ratify his declaration" and "dropped his name from the Ministerial Roll;" but directed the Clerk "to send or take, the resolution touching Elder Petry to the County Clerk of Kankakee county and have it recorded by the side of the record of his license." To secure the means to pay "the rent for the Mendota house of worship," it was resolved "that a Sisters' Missionary Society be, and hereby is, organized, consisting of the following officers: Mrs. A. C. Newcomer, President; Miss Mary Berkstresser, Secretary, and Mrs. Malinda McClure, Treasurer." There were eighteen fields of labor, of which two were missions—Troy Grove and Mendota, and Streator. Diona circuit was "to be supplied." Streator had asked for $50.00 missionary money for its pastor, and a loan for the church. The Board of Missions appropriated $20.00, but declined to make a loan.

81st Illinois Eldership.—Experience had made it evident that though the Constitution was revised in 1881, it was not in all respects adapted to existing conditions. This developed when the Eldership was constituted on October 11, 1883, at Bunker Hill Bethel, Bureau county. The lay representation was not proving satisfactory. There were present twenty of the thirty-six ministers, one exhorter out of the four, eleven ruling elders and four delegates. Four fields were not represented. Immediately after completing the enrollment an amendment was adopted to Art. II. of the Constitution, "that in the matter of lay representation in the Eldership the ruling elders come first, and that the right to elect delegates apart from the elders be exercised only where the elders do not attend the Eldership." I. S. Richmond was elected Speaker; W. B. Allen, Stated Clerk; W. I. Berkstresser, Financial Clerk, and John Stare, Treasurer. C. Manchester and D. Blakeley were in attendance as fraternal delegates from the Missouri Eldership. One of the alternate delegates to the General Eldership in 1884 was Mary Berkstresser. The Committee on Education "hailed with extreme satisfaction the establishment of Findlay College." It recommended "that prayer be offered specially for the President-elect, that in the organization of said school and the preparation of the course of studies he may be guided by that wisdom which is from above." The Committee on Resolutions was the most active one of the session. It was composed of Mary Berkstresser, H. Will and R. Perry, and it reported eight preambles and seventeen resolutions, all but one of which were adopted. It condemned "fairs, festivals and other social gatherings used as a means of raising money for religious purposes;" urged the patronizing of our Church literature; declared "the use of tobacco one of the ways of dishonoring God and corrupting the temple of the Holy Ghost;" urged the patronage of "The Little Star," published by the Free Baptist Church, along with the "Sunday-School Gem;" recommended "the appointment of an Evangelist to do general work, and be supported out of the Missionary Fund;" constituting the Board of Missions a missionary society; denouncing "all attempts to control the General Eldership in its choice of Editor or other officials as wholly gratuitous and impertinent," and "providing for an Eldership Sunday-School Convention." Newcomer, Sandoe and Allen were elected "to prepare a course of studies, and to act as an Examining Board for the young ministers." The delegates to the General Eldership were instructed (1) "to use their influence to have the 'Sunday-School Gem' published semi-monthly," (2) to work "to bring about a better harmony in our general missionary work in the several States;" (3) "to endeavor to have a cheap primary paper published weekly or semi-monthly," and (4) "to make an effort to secure from the Board of Education tracts for free distribution at our annual Elderships and general meetings."

82nd Illinois Eldership.—The Eldership held at Decatur, Macon county, beginning October 1, 1884, was unusually well attended. Of the thirty-eight teaching elders nine were absent, and five of the six exhorters were present and eighteen ruling elders and delegates. One day was devoted to the Ministerial Association, when on the evening of October 1st W. I. Berkstresser preached the Opening Sermon, from 1 Chron. xxix. 5. Balloting resulted in the election for Speaker of

G. Sandoe; W. B. Allen, Clerk; W. I. Berkstresser, Financial Clerk, and John Stare, Treasurer. The action of the General Eldership providing for the inauguration of foreign mission work was "heartily and fully endorsed." An attempt was made by the Committee on Resolutions, consisting of J. C. Forncrook, M. S. Newcomer and R. Perry, to have action taken not "to ordain any person to the sacred and important office of the ministry who indulges in the use of tobacco." The Eldership was not prepared to sustain the Committee. The Eldership now had $2,266.79 in its Fund for Superannuated Ministers and Widows. Its receipts during the year for the Missionary Fund were $629.77. The sentiment in favor of Prohibition was strongly expressed by the Committee on Temperance, as being "unhesitatingly and emphatically, without any mental reservation or equivocation," opposed to "the legalized sale of all intoxicating drinks," and "in favor of a constitutional amendment prohibiting the legalized sale of intoxicants." During the year one minister had gone "to 'see the King in his beauty,' in a land of purer light," and the Eldership placed sorrowfully on record a minute of its appreciation of his worth. T. H. Deshri was "a man long and favorably known as a faithful student of God's word, a strong defender of the principles of the Church, a mighty man in prayer, and one well qualified for pulpit work." Two Sabbath-School Conventions were appointed "to be held in connection with the Pentecostal meetings," one at Mendota, and one at Charleston. "Every minister who has no regular work" was "requested to pledge this body that he will go out as an independent missionary, and keep up at least two regular appointments during the coming year." "A State Sisters' Foreign Missionary Society" was created, "with full power to collect money in the local churches" for foreign missions. "The sisters shall have full control of this department of work." Three sisters were appointed "to prepare a Constitution" for this Society. It was to do its work "in the local churches so as not to conflict with the work and societies organized by the General Eldership."

33rd Illinois Eldership.—Largely on account of long distances the ministers and delegates had to travel to the Elderships, Ministerial Associations were not unfrequently held in connection with the Eldership sessions. A larger attendance was thus secured for both meetings. But in 1885 the Sunday-School Convention of the Illinois Eldership was held immediately preceding the Eldership session, on Tuesday evening and Wednesday, and at the place where the Eldership convened in the evening of Wednesday, October 14th, to listen to the Opening Sermon by Jay C. Forncrook, from Ps. cxvi. 6. The session was held at Martinsville, Clarke county. Twenty-three ministers were present, four exhorters and eighteen ruling elders and delegates, while fourteen ministers were absent. The officers elected were, M. S. Newcomer, Speaker; W. B. Allen, Clerk; W. I. Berkstresser, Financial Clerk, and John Stare, Treasurer. A special feature of the session was "a season of song and prayer" "each day at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and at 3 o'clock in the afternoon." Two Pentecostal meetings were appointed, one in the northern and one in the southern section of the territory. Arrangements were made for series of lectures on prescribed subjects and subsequent Ministerial Associations, beginning with one on the Ministry at the next meeting, by M. S. Newcomer. The system of liquor licenses, "whether high or low," was declared to be "sinful, and promotive of profligacy and vice, and that all political parties favoring the licensing of this crime against God and man ought to be ignored by Christian men." "Absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic in the State and nation" was favored "as the only proper solution of this intricate problem." As J. R. H. Latchaw, President-elect of Findlay College and Secretary-Treasurer of Foreign Missions, was present, these interests were made a special order for Saturday morning from 10 to 11.30 o'clock. It was an enthusiastic sitting, and $1,500 were pledged for Findlay College, and $80.00 for Foreign Mission work. Considerable satisfaction was manifested over the state of religion in the Eldership, as "considerable and important accessions to the churches have been made, good foundations have been laid for successful work in the near future, two church houses have been built, three new organizations formed, and all the fields seem more or less to have prospered." A Woman's Missionary Society was formed and approved by the Eldership. While the Eldership enjoyed the distinction of having its present Speaker Assistant Editor of The Advocate, a note of half-defined querulousness is found in a resolution stating the "conviction of this body, that while it would be no detriment to the East, it would be to the interest and profit of the Church at large, .....if the West were to have accorded to it some share of editorial right in the columns of The Advocate." It was expressed as the "sense of this body that the salaries of ministers ought to be paid monthly." The Eldership also placed itself on record in favor of the tithing system, recommending that "one-tenth of our income be devotedly set apart for the service of the Master." The number of fields of labor was twenty-two, all supplied with pastors.

84th Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership has had at several epochs in its history ministers who for some occult reason were disposed to antagonize interests and actions of the General Eldership. This developed in 1865, when a virulent attack was made on The Advocate and its venerable Editor, with insinuations to start an opposition paper. So the veiled dissatisfaction voiced in a resolution on the same subject in 1885 was evidenced in an action taken in 1886, declaring that "The Church Advocate is a non-partisan journal, in which political preferences and bias ought not to appear." Possibly the small attendance, as in 1865, rendered the passage of such a resolution possible by the few whose consciousness was dominated by some evil passion. Twenty-two of the forty-one teaching elders were absent when the body convened in the Troy Grove Bethel, LaSalle county, Wednesday evening, October 6, 1886, to listen to the Opening Sermon by George Sandoe, from Acts xx. 24. Ten ruling elders and five delegates were also present, and one of the three exhorters. W. B. Long was chosen Speaker; W. I. Berkstresser, Clerk, and W. B. Allen, Financial Clerk. At three successive sittings M. S. Newcomer delivered lectures on "The Christian Ministry," subdividing the subject into "Who Shall Preach?" "What to Preach?" "How to Preach?" The lectures "were delivered to the entire satisfaction of the Eldership," and the Board of Publication was requested "to publish them in pamphlet form." The sentiment of the Eldership was "not to give our support to any political party which does not favor State and National prohibition in its platform." Pentecostal meetings were less popular, and they were referred to the Standing Committee. Finding some "teaching" in the "Workman and Quarterly" which the Eldership disapproved, and "especially on the new birth in John iii., feet-washing being entirely left out of John xiii., and erroneous doctrine on John xv.," it "called upon the General Eldership to examine into this matter in order to adjust the same satisfactorily." The Eldership rebuked "many ministers who failed to keep accounts with the several churches." It also recommended "the establishment of a better financial system in each church; that the ministers impress upon the deacons the importance of soliciting subscriptions for the ministers at the beginning of the year of labor, and that the deacons enter into account with the ministers and churches, to the end that the ministers of this body as a whole may have a much larger financial showing in their salaries to report at each yearly meeting of the Eldership." The use of "unfermented wine only for Communion purposes" was "strongly recommended." "Receipts by the Financial Clerk were limited: Mission Fund, $82.26; Widows' Fund, $49.75; Contingent Fund, $141.14. There were twenty-one fields of labor, six of which received appropriations from the Missionary Fund, aggregating $375.00. Three of the charges were served by two of the ordained sisters of the Eldership—Mary Berkstresser and Mrs. A. C. Newcomer.

85th Illinois Eldership.—The effect of distance on the attendance at the Eldership was very perceptibly seen in 1887, when it convened in the Summit Bethel, Lanark, Carroll county, in the north-western corner of the State. Twenty-two ministers were absent, fourteen present, with six ruling elders and three delegates. W. B. Long preached the Opening Sermon, from 1 Kings viii. 27. The Ministerial Association was held during the day preceding the Eldership. W. B. Allen was the choice of the Eldership for Speaker; W. I. Berkstresser, Clerk, and C. Manchester, Financial Clerk. The latter delivered the lectures before the Eldership on Friday, Saturday and Monday afternoons. Allen had been elected Professor of Theology at Findlay College, but after filling that position for a short time resigned, and the Eldership was not satisfied with the current reasons for his action, and appointed a committee of three to inquire into them; but nothing new developed. The case of Mrs. M. B. Woodworth created greater interest. She had crossed the line into the territory of the Illinois Eldership, and her "evangelistic and faith-healing meetings" had awakened much concern. A committee was named "to investigate" the results of her work. This committee gave her credit "as an earnest, enthusiastic worker;" "that souls have been truly converted under her labors, and thus far she has been doing good work;" but condemned "her manner of practicing the healing art as unscriptural and deceptive," and on the whole "regarded her work, as at present conducted, as being more detrimental than beneficial to the cause of Christianity; that we view the work with alarm, and that the Church of God in Illinois can not endorse the work." To give wider publicity to this action it was ordered published in a Chicago daily paper. The W. M. S. was in active co-operation with the Eldership, and asked its "aid and sympathy in the work which it had under contemplation—publishing a missionary quarterly in the interest of the W. M. S. of Illinois." In co-operation with the General Eldership in its mission work, the Eldership apportioned the $200.00 asked of it among its fields of labor, and directed the circuits and stations to collect the same. The general religious condition of the Eldership was somewhat encouraging. Finances were still low, as only $24.42 were collected for the Contingent Fund during the year; Widows' Fund, $210.91; Missionary Fund, $182.61. "D. H. Rupp was appointed to deliver a lecture before the Ministerial Association of our next Eldership upon the subject, 'The Financial Obligation of Members of the Church of God.'" A distinctively new departure is indicated by a resolution adopted, appointing a committee "to select speakers and assign topics for next Eldership." The preamble states as a reason for this action, that "brethren speaking before the annual sessions of our body are expected to speak clearly, and upon topics of interest to the Church, especially the cardinal doctrines of the Church;" and that to do this "requires much study, forethought and arrangement." The organization of Christian Endeavor Societies is noted with approval, and the churches were urged to organize societies. Seventeen appointments were made by the Stationing Committee, including Brown county mission. Three other fields received appropriations of missionary money. The Eldership closed on Monday evening with two memorable incidents. The first was the ordinance meeting, when "some seventy brethren and sisters, with much heartiness and evident joy, engaged in the service." The second was the presentation of a set of Parker's People's Bible to M. S. Newcomer and wife in behalf of the Illinois Eldership. They had received transfers to the Iowa Eldership.

36th Illinois Eldership.—Absenteeism seems to have become chronic in the Illinois Eldership. The session of 1888 was held at Round Grove Bethel, Shelby county, more to the southward of the territory; but the attendance was but little better than at Lanark, in the extreme north, in 1887. Eighteen "ministers in charge of work" were present, with three others; while fourteen were absent. Two exhorters were also present, eleven ruling elders and one delegate. The preceding day was occupied by the Ministerial Association in profitable discussions. On the evening of September 19th W. B. Allen delivered the Opening Sermon, from Job xxvii. 6. D. H. Rupp was elected Speaker; W. I. Berkstresser, Clerk, and C. Manchester, Financial Clerk. Pentecostal meetings were still held, and the Eldership appointed two, one north and one south, and the Eldership expressed its judgment, "that it is the positive duty of the brethren to attend these meetings." There were no licenses granted, except to W. J. Schaner upon receipt of his transfer from the Ohio Eldership. Action was taken, requiring applicants for license to appear in person at the Eldership or before the Standing Committee. During the year the "pale monarch of the unending past" claimed two of the ministers among his "countless trophies"—S. White and D. Kyle—whose virtues were recorded in suitable terms on the Journal of the Eldership. Again the support of the ministry was the subject of action, "the churches within the bounds of the Eldership" being "requested to put forth their best efforts in securing their pastors' salaries as soon as possible after they enter on their fields of labor." And further, the Clerk was "instructed to issue a circular letter to the officary of the various churches, urging upon them their obligation for a much more liberal and prompt support of the ministry." The Treasurer's Report showed that during the year the receipts were $212.96 for Missionary Fund; $264.26, Superannuated and Widows' Fund; $37.98, Contingent Fund; $76.78, Frontier Mission Fund. John Stare was re-elected Treasurer. An Examining Committee was appointed to examine a class of the younger ministers named in Winebrenner on Regeneration, Paley's Natural Theology, Butler's Analogy and Finney on Revivals. Each one was also required "to prepare and present Bible readings on Revivals, Growth in Grace, The Second Coming of Christ and Church Discipline." The reports of ministers showed that there were during the year 492 conversions, 383 accessions, 239 baptized, and two new churches organized. There were fifty-four organizations in the Eldership. Churches and pastors were instructed not to give letters of dismissal to members who intend to remain out of fellowship with any church of God. Twenty-three fields of labor were arranged by the Stationing Committee, but two of them could not be supplied with regular pastors.

37th Illinois Eldership.—The advisability of having more religious services during sessions of Elderships has been frequently suggested. There are always members of these bodies who do not enjoy business sessions, and who object that there is too much of the secular, the legal and financial, and too little gospel and grace. No one denies the wholesome effect of song and prayer on these assemblies; but that is not their purpose. Yet in some measure different Elderships have yielded to this pietistic demand, and have had periods of devotion during sittings, or a sermon, or evangelistic services. Thus, the Illinois Eldership in 1889 directed that "we have devotional exercises at 10 a. m. and 3 p. m. each day during the session of this Eldership." The plan of having several lectures at different sittings was also continued. I. S. Richmond was the lecturer, and his theme was, "The Bible a Miracle." The session was held at Warrensburg, Macon county, beginning with the Opening Sermon on Wednesday evening, October 2nd, by D. H. Rupp. There were twenty-two teaching elders present; twelve, absent. Three exhorters were present; five, absent, with eleven ruling elders present. R. Perry was chosen Speaker; C. T. McKee, Clerk, and W. B. Allen, Financial Clerk. The various Funds were replenished as follows: Missionary, $185.70; Frontier Mission, $69.84; Contingent, $27.55; Superannuated and Widows', $50.00. This Fund had a balance in the treasury of $2,994.25. The Standing Committee was authorized to make sale of Cabery Bethel. A change was made in the Eldership year, so "that it shall end hereafter with the close of the Eldership session." An action was taken to purchase a tent for the use of the Eldership. To increase the receipts for home missions it was decided that an "assessment be made of three hundred dollars as the lowest limit, to be apportioned among the local churches." A step toward congregationalism is indicated in the action expressing "the sense of this body, that members should be received into fellowship . . . by the consent of both pastor and church." The Board of Publication having authorized C. Manchester to publish a Missionary Magazine, it was heartily endorsed, along with the publications of the General Eldership. Want of proper care and system in "making appropriations from the Superannuated and Widows' Fund" was deprecated, and needed correctives were directed to be applied. The body placed itself directly on record as "opposed to the building of any house of worship to be deeded to more than one denomination, as such so-called union houses almost invariably lead to disunion, strife and contention." A rigid rule was adopted, prohibiting any minister of the Eldership from "inviting to his assistance in protracted meetings any one not holding license from this body, without securing the consent of the Standing Committee." The accessions to the churches during the year were 209. Six new churches were organized. The total membership was 1,295. There were twenty-two fields of labor, only one of which received an appropriation.

38th Illinois Eldership.—On May 22, 1890, the Illinois Eldership was deprived by death of one of its most worthy ministers. On the afternoon of that beautiful May day George Sandoe ended his useful life. He was born at Hinkletown, Lancaster county, Pa., December 31, 1826. He was ordained by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in the Fall of 1850, and by said Eldership was sent as a missionary to the southern part of Illinois in 1851. The deep shadows of his death hung over the Illinois Eldership when it convened at Martinsville, Clarke county, the place where Sandoe had his permanent home during his ministry, Thursday morning, September 25, 1890. The Eldership realized that "no one who has thus departed will be missed more than George Sandoe." And in its resolutions reference was made to his "association with the Eldership from its beginning." He was an able expounder of the doctrines of the Church of God.

"Firm to the last he bravely stood,
Strong to the last he bore his part;
Deserting his post he never could,
For true as steel was his noble heart."

The Eldership made choice of I. S. Richmond for Speaker; J. Bernard, Clerk; W. I. Berkstresser, Financial Clerk. Jas. M. Clark, a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, was granted license, and E. H. Baker was received from the West Pennsylvania Eldership. The Eldership year was fixed "to end with the close of the Eldership session." The Bethel near Cabery, Ford county, was sold by direction of the Eldership. There were $3,299.03 in the Superannuated Ministers' and Widows' Fund. "The position our government occupies in upholding the monster of intemperance" was characterized as "an outrage," and the Eldership declared that "we will not vote for any party that is in sympathy with the traffic, but will cast our votes with the party that stands for the entire prohibition of the curse which blights our nation." The Eldership was "in hearty sympathy with efforts being made to close the Columbia Exposition on the Sabbath day." The statistics showed conversions, 204; accessions, 222; baptized, 162; total number of members, 1,500; organized churches, 40; bethels, 34. It was agreed upon to open all houses of worship in the Eldership to W. C. T. U. workers. Pastors were forbidden to "employ helpers that are objected to by the Standing Committee." There were twenty-five appointments, besides Springfield, which was "placed under the watch-care" of the pastor of the Decatur church, W. B. Allen. Mary Berkstresser, who had been "released during the year by the Standing Committee as General Missionary, and was assigned to Martinsville and Hazel Dell, was again appointed General Missionary. There was such a deficiency in the number of ministers willing to serve appointments that five remained unsupplied.

39th Illinois Eldership.—When in 1890, after considerable rivalry, the Eldership voted to hold its session in 1891 at Union, Jo Daviess county, it was advised that "the place is somewhat isolated; but if the weather will be favorable, it will be an interesting place to visit, and the brotherhood may prepare for a regular picnic at that time." The "brethren proposed to secure a large tent, to be used for eating purposes and for holding overflow meetings." Accordingly the Eldership met at the place selected, and held its sessions during September 17-19, 1891. On Tuesday evening, September 15th, the Ministerial Association began its session at the same place, when the Opening Lecture was delivered by C. F. Rogers. On the evening of the 16th C. T. McKee preached the Opening Sermon of the Eldership. The officers of the Eldership were W. I. Berkstresser, Speaker; J. Bernard, Clerk; W. B. Allen, Financial Clerk, and Monroe White, Treasurer. President Latchaw being present, spoke eloquently for Findlay College, after which $200.00 were raised to apply on College indebtedness." There were several new accessions to the ministerial ranks of the Eldership, so that all but one of the twenty-three fields of labor were supplied. Two sisters, Mary Berkstresser and M. E. Markie, were appointed to charges. The attempt to so amend the Constitution as "to strike out all references to the Stationing Committee," and place "the securing of pastors into the hands of the churches and ministers," said change to go "into effect immediately after the close of the Eldership session," was not successful, though endorsed by the Committee on Resolutions. The resolution was postponed, "that nothing like electioneering should be found among us as an Eldership." Three new churches were organized, and there were 330 conversions and 305 accessions to the churches. Assessments were made for Home Missions to the amount of $300.00, and for General Missions, $225.00.

40th Illinois Eldership.—With a membership present of twenty-one teaching elders, five exhorters and thirteen ruling elders and delegates, the fortieth session of the Illinois Eldership began its session in the U. B. house of worship at Findlay, Shelby county, September 29, 1892. Fourteen ministers were absent, and four fields were not represented. O. B. Huston was elected Speaker, and J. Bernard, Clerk. The Opening Sermon had been preached the previous evening by W. I. Berkstresser, from II. Tim. II. 15. The church at Springfield had not yet been received "formally into the Illinois Eldership." "Legal difficulties concerning the house of worship" had not been "fully settled." When settled, the Eldership was ready to "negotiate with the church, looking to their becoming a constituent part of the Eldership." The church "offered to turn over its property into the hands of the Eldership on condition that the Eldership pay off the indebtedness, amounting to $1,600.00." The Eldership declined to do this. No appointment was made to Springfield church. The government was severely arraigned for its complicity in the liquor business, and "for lending its aid at the behest of the brewers and malsters of the country to collect information and to use the machinery of government to promote the sale of American liquors in South American countries." It also declared that "no political party has the right to expect the support of Christian men so long as that party stands committed to the license policy, or refuses to put itself on record against the saloon." The churches were "requested to pay half of the moving expenses of the incoming pastors." The General Eldership was requested to "publish a book setting forth the rules and practices generally observed by the Church of God." The duty of every member and minister of the Church of God to "devote to the cause of Christ one-tenth of their income" was affirmed, and the pastors were instructed "to preach one sermon to each congregation on this subject." There were three deaths of ministers during the year, A. J. Fenton, Jacob Bear and A. X. Shoemaker. They were natives of Pennsylvania. Fenton was ordained by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1848, and Shoemaker in 1851. Fenton, "after a long and useful life in the ministry, died with the armor on." Shoemaker's pastoral labors were limited to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, except while missionary in Chicago, Ill., and in "his earlier years he was noted for his efficient and successful work in building up the Church of God." Bear, while "an example of diligence and faithfulness," labored in a local capacity. Of the twenty-two fields of labor three were left unsupplied.

41st Illinois Eldership.—The strong denunciations of the government for strengthening the hands of the liquor interests in the western Elderships, was not alone because of the promotion of the sale of American liquors in South America. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1892, declaring that a State law which in effect made it impossible for a brewer or distiller in another State to send any liquor for sale into a prohibition State was unconstitutional, was still more violently assailed. For this decision wiped out apparently beyond repair the year-long labors of the Prohibitionist, and turned back the wave of prohibition sentiment which had swept over the country in the late eighties. This accounts for the motto of national prohibition which the Illinois Eldership raised at this time, in unison with the slogan of the Prohibition party. The Eldership held its session at Lodge, Platt county, beginning September 21, 1903. I. S. Richmond preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 20th. Twenty-three ministers were present, thirteen absent, eleven ruling elders, and one exhorter. E. A. Fritter was chosen for Speaker; J. Bernard, Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Financial Clerk, and Monroe White, Treasurer. To revise the Constitution a committee of three was appointed. It at once reported an item, changing the Article making the Standing Committee a part of the Board of Missions. Into the hands of this Board was placed the matter of Eldership camp-meetings. On the questions submitted by the General Eldership to the Annual Elderships this Eldership voted as follows: 1. Against the change of "name, style and title of the Annual Elderships." 2. In favor of "Life Certificates of Ordination." 3. Against a "common Fund out of which to pay expenses of delegates to the General Eldership." A committee was created to propose a Course of Studies. Months were fixed during which were to be lifted the collections for Contingent, Church Extension, a newly established Fund, and Superannuated and Widows' Funds, all of which were very low. The amounts asked for to replenish the Home and Frontier Mission Funds were apportioned to the churches. A General Missionary and Collecting Agent was also put on the field. The number of fields of labor was reduced from twenty-five to twenty-one. The Ministerial Association held its meeting immediately preceding the Eldership, at which the temperance question was thoroughly discussed. So was the matter of "rotation in office in church and Eldership."

42nd Illinois Eldership.—This Eldership renewed its attack on the government and nation for "complicity in the liquor traffic," and pledged its "influence and prayers, backed by our votes, to rid our land of the blighting curse of intemperance." As the Revision Committee had failed to do its work, a new one was designated. The Eldership held its session at Mt. Pleasant, Coles county, beginning September 20, 1894. On the evening of the 19th C. F. Rogers preached the Opening Sermon. The Speaker was J. Bernard; Clerk, W. I. Berkstresser; Financial Clerk, C. A. Schaaf. The Eldership assumed $3,000.00 of the debt on Findlay College, and through the efforts of President Yates raised $381.00 on the floor. The death during the year of E. A. Longenecker was noted with "sincere regret." His memory was sacredly treasured and his example declared worthy of emulation. He had been licensed originally by the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership in 1858. The assessments and collections for the various Funds resulted as follows: Home Mission, $243.28; Frontier Mission, $133.13; Superannuated and Widows', $32.31; Contingent, $15.90; Church Extension, $8.04. The assessments were continued for Home Missions, $305.10; Frontier Missions, $273. Instructions were given the members of the Board of Trustees of Findlay College for whom to vote for Librarian, and the amount of salary. Not only was the Eldership deeply interested in Findlay College; but it also expressed "appreciation of Barkeyville Academy as an educational institution highly worthy the patronage of the Church." There were eighteen fields of labor, one of which was unsupplied. One minister, Mary Berkstresser, was appointed General Missionary and College Agent.

43rd Illinois Eldership.—The Illinois Eldership diligently sought to protect the reputation of its ministers; but if any member was found derelict, or under reasonable suspicion of deviation from rectitude, it was not disposed to cover it up. It desired, however, a just popular verdict, one in which the premises for the conclusion would be based on facts, and not on hearsay and inuendo. Such instances occurred at intervals, and were always wisely handled, and the good name of the body preserved. It also considered with deliberation the questions of polity with which it had to deal. In 1893 it had voted on change of Eldership titles; but it did not treat the question as finally settled. In 1895, when the session was held at Decatur, Macon county, beginning September 14th, the subject was taken up again, and it became evident that there was in progress a change of views. It was decided that "the delegates to the General Eldership shall favor deferring any such change for at least three years longer." On ordination the Eldership "favored the position that the laying on of hands is unnecessary." It also voted to continue the annual licenses, as against Life Ordination and Life Certificates. The creation of a Fund by the General Eldership out of which to pay the expenses of all delegates was disapproved. It voted strongly in favor of the Itinerancy. The Opening Sermon was delivered by J. Bernard, on Sunday morning, from Acts xxi. 17. In the evening the ordinances were observed, after a sermon on "Washing the Saints' Feet" by M. S. Newcomer. The names of "thirty-three ministers were on the Roll." D. H. Rupp was elected President; W. I. Berkstresser, Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Financial Clerk. The time for the meeting of the Eldership was changed to Thursday evening instead of Sunday. The sale or leasing of the Mendota church property was placed in the hands of an agent. Plans were to be matured by a committee to do more aggressive Christian Endeavor work. The sum of $516.74 was received for the various Funds of the Eldership, and assessments were made to the amount of $729.50, which did not include the Widows' and Contingent Funds. The body declared in favor of Prohibition. The pledge of $3,000.00 toward the debt of Findlay College was but partially paid, and a note was directed to be given for balance due, bearing six per centum interest. Realizing that in an itinerant system, with its limited term and frequent changes of ministers, the relation of out-going and in-coming pastors is peculiarly delicate and intimate, the Eldership endeavored to have these changes made with the least possible friction. There were twenty fields of labor, one unsupplied, and four received appropriations.

44th Illinois Eldership.—Sale of church buildings is often a slow process, such property not being marketable. So a committee was again appointed "to sell the Mendota church property as soon as it can be done without unreasonably or utterly sacrificing the same." The "ground on which stood Union Bethel, Clark county, was authorized to be sold, and proceeds applied to the payment of the new church there." The Eldership in 1896 was much inspired by the discussions during the Ministerial Association which preceded the session, with its annual lecture by J. Bernard, and the presence and address of Clara Landes. While Thursday evening had been fixed the year before for the meeting of the Eldership, this evidently meant as a Ministerial Association, which occupied that evening and Friday. Saturday was spent in class examinations, with preaching in the evening." Sunday morning D. H. Rupp delivered the Opening Sermon, and in the evening W. B. Allen preached and "conducted a most interesting and impressive ordinance meeting." The attendance was not so large when the session was called to order on Monday morning, September 20th, as eighteen of the thirty-three ministers were absent, and only seven lay representatives were present. It was held at Mt. Carroll, Carroll county. C. F. Rogers was chosen President; W. I. Berkstresser, Clerk, and J. S. Walls, Financial Clerk. Monroe White was re-elected Treasurer. Neglect of the Course of Studies influenced the Eldership to "insist that the ministers of the Eldership make a careful study of the prescribed books." The critical condition of the College was a question commanding most serious consideration, and a resolution was adopted "to still support our Church College with an earnest and Christian devotion." The Eldership declared that "we will not give our votes to any party that is not outspoken in its principles in opposition to the liquor traffic." The religious interests of the Eldership were in good condition, "with general harmony and reasonable advancement." A disposition to patronize other than Church literature was characterized as "disloyal to our best interests as a Church." There were twenty-three fields of labor.

45th Illinois Eldership.—During the year the question of changing the Articles of Incorporation so as to conform to the altered title of Elderships was considered, but was deferred. Church work in East St. Louis was in contemplation by the church and pastor at St. Louis. Being in the territory of the Illinois Eldership, its consent was secured through the Standing Committee. "The Golden Age; or, The Reign of Augustus Caesar," was I. S. Richmond's subject for the annual lecture before the Ministerial Association. On Saturday evening W. I. Berkstresser gave an address on "Christian Citizenship." On Sunday morning W. B. Allen preached the Opening Sermon from Heb. i. 8. In the evening before the observance of the ordinances, C. B. Kepford preached. On Monday at 9 a. m., September 6, 1897, the session of the Eldership began, at Milmine, Platt county, with nineteen ministers, three exhorters and eleven lay delegates present, four of them women. The officers elected were C. B. Kepford, President; W. I. Berkstresser, Clerk; J. S. Walls, Financial Clerk, and Monroe White, Treasurer. Heartly sympathy with the Woman's General Missionary Society was expressed, and co-operation promised. Appropriate memorial services were held in honor of James Werner and M. G. Bare. Werner was a member of the Eldership "for many years, and was an earnest Christian, and most devoted to the interests of the Church, and an able defender of the truth." Bare was "less active, but was a worthy member of the Eldership for a long time." Careful supervision of Y. P. S. C. E. work was maintained, and a State President and District Presidents were elected. I. S. Richmond was chosen to represent the Eldership at the State C. E. Convention at Chicago. Work in the Eldership was "in a prosperous condition." Two new churches were organized, two new Bethels and three parsonages were built. However the number of charges was reduced to twenty-one, with one un-supplied. Four fields received an aggregate of $200.00 missionary money.

46th Illinois Eldership.—There has always been something incongruous to the consciousness of many ministers, something like "a fish out of water," in the practice of preaching "trial sermons," or candidating. Preaching is too sacred a thing to be put up in competition. Is it much better to have candidates for ordination preach sermons before a committee? However, such a course was in vogue in the Illinois Eldership, so that at the session in 1898, when "devotional services were conducted by H. W. Kruzan and ——— Feers, licentiates, each in obedience to the Licensing Committee preached a short sermon." This was at Troy Grove, LaSalle county, where the Eldership convened September 26th. The 23rd and 24th were occupied by the Ministerial Association, and the Opening Sermon was preached on the morning of the 25th, by W. I. Berkstresser, from Jude 3. Theme:—"The Contending for the Faith." Sixteen ministers, six exhorters and seventeen delegates were enrolled as present. The officers were: President, J. S. Walls; Clerk, C. F. Rogers; Financial Clerk, L. F. Alexander; Treasurer, Monroe White. The revision of the Constitution was completed. Books for the Course of Studies were in possession of Prof. E. A. Fritter, and when the brief Course of five studies was approved, "the books returned by Prof. Fritter were sold at public auction before the close of the Eldership." There were $62.88 in the Contingent Fund; $4,746.08 in the Superannuated Fund in Notes and cash; $229.73 in the Home Mission Fund; $233.75 in the General Mission Fund; $301.79 in the Church Extension Fund. On temperance the Eldership expressed itself in somewhat extravagant terms, declaring that "ninety per cent. of the professed Christian voters of the country are perfectly content to uphold this infamous liquor traffic;" that "they could destroy the hydra if they would, and are therefore responsible for its continued life, for no other reason than that their love for party is greater than their love for humanity or the gospel." The President was "held responsible for the continuance of the canteen system." A State Union of Christian Endeavor had been organized, with I. S. Richmond as President; C. T. Ishler, Vice President; Mollie East, Secretary; Lottie Stare Fritz, Treasurer. June 23, 1898, the death occurred of the oldest minister of the body, H. Rupp. He had also been in the ministry longer than any previous minister, having been licensed by the Ohio Eldership in 1836, and had preached about sixty-two years. He helped to organize the Illinois Eldership. He was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born at Ono, Lebanon county, May 26, 1805. He was "one of the most noble workers of the Illinois Eldership, and to his memory the Eldership owes a debt that it can never pay." "The property at Streator was placed in the hands of a real estate agent for sale." The statistics showed 34 churches; professions of faith during the year, 224; baptized, 140; accessions, 221; members, 1,038; aggregate amount of salaries $4,569.50.

47th Illinois Eldership.—The ecclesiastical year 1898-9 was dark and portentous for the Illinois Eldership. "Two of the most able and active ministers died—W. I. Berkstresser and W. B. Allen." Also G. W. Lear. The latter was licensed in 1889, and the testimonies indicated his helpfulness in the spiritual life realized by the churches which he served. The former two were men who "knew no foes save only such as warred against the peace of God." They were both natives of Pennsylvania, Allen having been born in West Hanover township, Dauphin county, September 23, 1841, and Berkstresser at Saxton, Bedford county, December 29, 1852. Both received their first licenses from the Illinois Eldership, the former in 1864, the latter in 1879. Allen stood high in his Eldership as a man of Arcadian habits and unblemished character. He was always a laborious student, and finally graduated at Monmouth College, Ill., in 1884. He was delegate to ten General Elderships. He died July 18, 1899, having "life's battle well won," and "life's race well run." Berkstresser was a more aggressive force, and also of special culture. He graduated from the Illinois State Normal School in 1877. He held official positions in his Eldership almost continuously from 1886 to his death, January 27, 1899. He belonged to that higher type of men whose animating and ruling purpose lies remote from any present or immediate gratification. He was eminently philanthropic in the governing purpose of his heart. He was not dismayed by competition, nor disheartened by antagonism. With unflinching fortitude he trod the "open, but unfrequented, path to honor and immortality." The Eldership which honored these ministers with most impressive memorial services convened at Good Farm Chapel, Grundy county, September 18, 1899. The officers were: President, W. R. Johnson; Clerk, C. F. Rogers; Financial Clerk, J. S. Walls; Treasurer, Monroe White. To include the Ministerial Association more definitely in the Eldership it was considered advisable to begin on Friday evening with the annual Opening Sermon. The new Life Certificates of Ordination were this year given to the ministers. Good reports were made by nearly all the pastors, while much interest centered in the written reports from the various churches. They were "generally in good spiritual condition." The report on temperance "raised quite a breeze in the Eldership," because of some of its extreme positions, and its appeal to "Christian voters." It also had in it denunciations against "the imperialistic" tendencies of the Government, which provoked "quite a lengthy and warm discussion." The Opening Sermon was delivered by J. S. Walls. Mrs. C. M. Ritchie conducted a missionary meeting in the interests of the "Children's Work," as funds were being raised for "Indian Mission Buildings."

48th Illinois Eldership.—Greetings from other Elderships, more common in former years, always added interest to the session. More so if delivered by personal representatives. In 1900 the Illinois Eldership received greetings from four Elderships—Ohio, Indiana, Iowa and Kansas. These were conveyed by C. Manchester, Ohio; J. C. Forncrook, Iowa; W. H. Cross, Kansas. The session was held at Hildreth, Edgar county, the Opening Sermon being preached on Sunday morning, September 30, 1900; by W. R. Johnson, from Eph. ii. 21. The circuits and stations were nearly all represented by the pastors and delegates, who elected R. S. Mackey, President; C. F. Rogers, Clerk; H. W. Krusan, Financial Clerk. There were 35 churches; 202 converts during the year; 134 baptized; 241 fellowshiped; total membership, 1,087. An aggregate of $4,616.39 was paid ministers as salaries. Two General Evangelists were appointed—I. S. Richmond in the North, and W. R. Johnson in the South. Strict enforcement of constitutional provisions and rules can be observed in the notice served on the Standing Committee of the Southern Indiana Eldership "that one of its members was holding meetings in our territory without our consent." Also in the refusal to grant the request of one of the pastors who "asked for the services of Mrs. M. B. Woodworth." Definite action was taken to have the Course of Studies for ministers taken up by all the members of the classes. Text-books were named, and a list of the ministers in the Course was made out. It was also recommended "that M. S. Newcomer prepare a brief history of the Church of God" for use by "the Theological Class of the Eldership." The Christian Endeavor Society was "recognized as one of the essential auxiliaries in this Eldership," and the Eldership C. E. Union was encouraged in its work. On account of "so much confusion in the preparation for, and so much difference in the order of the observance of, the ordinances of God's house, it was decided to "choose some one of our number, and authorize him to write a book of instructions concerning these affairs, and also a form or forms for marriage ceremonies and burial services." After strong endorsements of Findlay College and Barkeyville Academy, the suggestion was approved, that "the Eldership at as early a date possible establish an academy in Illinois." A petition to the General Eldership was adopted, asking said body "to so change the form of Life Certificates of Ordination that an annual license be issued to each holder of a Certificate to save the Eldership from imposition from unworthy men." The "Canteen system" was denounced as being "heathenish in inception, barbarous in practice.... and belongs to the work of the devil." The finances were in good condition. There were twenty-one stations and circuits, all supplied with pastors.

49th Illinois Eldership.—The Woman's Missionary Society of Illinois held its annual meeting on Saturday before the convening of the Eldership at the same place. The Ministerial Association met at the same place on Thursday evening preceding the Eldership. These meetings had their influence on the attendance at, and the spirit of, the Eldership. The Ministerial Association discussed questions which otherwise might have consumed much time at the Eldership. These often affected underlying conditions in the Eldership, and had a direct and powerful influence on the trend of public sentiment. Among these this year were: "Has the New Testament abrogated the law of tithes?" "Are political questions ever moral questions, and when?" "What are the causes of spiritual declension in churches?" The Eldership convened at Mt. Pleasant, Shelby county, on Monday morning, September 23, 1901. The Opening Sermon was preached on Sunday morning, by R. S. Mackey, from Matt. xxv. 45, and in the evening an ordinance meeting was held. The officers of the Eldership were J. W. Kingston, President; C. F. Rogers, Clerk; H. W. Cruzan, Financial Clerk. Earnest work and harmony characterized all the sittings. Important changes were made in the Constitution, one of which provided that no officer of the Eldership could be elected on the Stationing Committee. Another provided for two delegates to be elected on the Stationing Committee. During the year two new churches had been organized. There were twenty charges, all supplied with pastors. The provision was inserted in the Constitution, that the Standing Committee shall consist of three ministers and two laymen, to which two more were to be added to constitute the Board of Missions. The officers of the Eldership were made ineligible on any board or committee acting during the session. While a committee, consisting of Newcomer, Mackey and Beltz, was appointed on the proposed Book of Forms, it accepted one prepared by J. W. Kingston, with a caution relative to the direction that in observing the washing of the saints' feet it must be a "literal washing of one another's feet." Increasing circumspection was exercised in granting licenses, and a higher standard of qualifications was insisted upon. No one was to be ordained unless he had "a good common school education, and was of studious habits." Much interest was manifested in Christian Endeavor work, and an hour was given to the Report of I. S. Richmond, State Superintendent. But the Eldership lamented spiritual conditions throughout its territory. There was a decrease in the number of conversions, accessions and baptisms. It regarded with apprehension the fact "that there were so few ordinance meetings held; in some churches none." The $4,000.00 in the Superannuated and Widows' Fund were set aside as a Permanent Fund. The assassination of McKinley was strongly deplored. Solomon Bowser, "one of the early preachers of the Illinois Eldership," ended his earthly labors during the year. He was a native of Pennsylvania, where he labored as a local minister. His "chief characteristics were sincerity, honesty and positiveness of convictions. His reputation was without blemish."

50th Illinois Eldership.—The rigorous provisions of some Articles of the Constitution of the Eldership became evident when the pastor at Lanark, R. S. Mackey, was required to have the consent of the Standing Committee to secure a minister of another Eldership "to assist him in revival meetings." Also, when a pastor could not be removed from a field at the request of the charge without his consent. The Committee exhorted to forbearance and an effort to "adjust all seeming difficulties," suggesting that "each person concerned" ask the question: "What would Jesus do?" These actions were approved at the Eldership which held its session at Hazel Dell, Cumberland county, beginning September 15, 1902. On the previous Lord's day morning the Opening Sermon was delivered by J. W. Kingston, from II. Tim ii. 15. D. H. Rupp was chosen President; C. F. Rogers, Clerk; H. W. Cruzan, Financial Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Treasurer. The financial system embraced seven distinct Funds—Contingent, balance, $12.92; Superannuated, balance $4,829.89; Home Mission, overdrawn, $38.44; Frontier, balance, $17.25; Church Extension, balance, $496.17; Findlay College Trustees, balance, $13.85; General Eldership Delegate, no balance. The receipts during the session materially changed these figures, as a total of $487.91 was reported. On temperance the Eldership insisted that "our people shall and must abstain from the use of intoxicating drinks in every sense as a beverage." "Every honorable and legitimate means" was to be used "to suppress this great evil, with voice, example and ballot." The sum of $100.00 from the Church Extension Fund was set apart "as a nucleus of a Special Fund, to be used in the purchase of a tent to be used for evangelistic purposes." When the Fund reached a minimum of $300.00 a tent was to be purchased by the Board of Incorporation. A minister was to be appointed "to go with the tent," and act as evangelist. He was to raise the necessary amount of money to make the purchase. I. S. Richmond was selected. The Board of Publication had sent a letter to the Eldership "touching the publication of The Missionary Appeal," without authority, "and charging two of its members with insubordination." "The whole matter was laid on the table." "The Appeal" was published by members of the W. G. M. S. of 1890, as against the action of the General Eldership of 1902. The Eldership also expressed it as its judgment that "the Board of Missions of the General Eldership should pay back into the treasury of the W. G. M. S. the Home Fund of said Society, which was voted into the treasury of the General Eldership at its last session." "The spirit of progress and advancement seemed to abound in the Eldership." "Several new church organizations were effected during the year, and one or more new houses of worship built." The Eldership manifested quite an interest in Christian Endeavor work. There were twenty-one appointments, four of which received aid out of the Mission Fund.

51st Illinois Eldership.—As the new Woman's General Missionary Society had been organized in June, 1903, as per action of the General Eldership of 1902, and as several of the dominant members of the old Society were members of the Illinois Eldership, the lines were sharply drawn. The Eldership was almost equally divided in sentiment, and whenever the question came up for action of any kind the springs of deep emotion were touched, and great tact was necessary to keep the body together on the essentials for which it stood. There was a large attendance, partly because of pending questions, as the ministers were generally present, and "nearly every church was represented by a delegate." The session was held at Warrensburg, Macon county, beginning October 5, 1903. Officers elected were: President, J. Bernard; Clerk, C. F. Rogers; Financial Clerk, H. W. Kruzan; Treasurer, L. F. Alexander. The interests of Findlay College were represented by President Manchester, and the Eldership reiterated its sentiments of loyalty to said institution. An "appropriation toward the support of young men who might need help, thus securing their services in Illinois after their school work is done," was recommended. "Annual licenses" were issued to ministers "in connection with their Life Certificates." Further provision was made "to purchase a tent, to be the property of the Illinois Eldership." It was to be "not less than 70x50 feet," and "the maximum price shall not exceed $175.00," the balance above "collections to be taken to be paid out of the Church Extension Fund." When in use, "one-tenth of all collections taken under the tent to be paid into" said fund. The Committee on State of Religion reported "the cause of religion in a fair condition, but lacking real, healthy spiritual aggression." It also found "from reports both in public and private, that some moral features are to be deplored, such as horse racing, card playing, dancing, saloon visiting, tippling and Sunday visiting." The Committee on Temperance was yet more specific, and condemned "the habit of some professed members of the Church of God entering saloons," which it pronounced "disgraceful and wicked." Assessments were made for Home Missions, Frontier Missions and Illinois Contingent Fund. Members of local churches were advised to "submit to the majority of the church," but the right to call in the Standing Committee to adjust difficulties was conceded. The spirit of the Eldership was evidenced on the Missionary Question when by a vote of seven to twenty-three it refused to permit "unlimited discussion" of said question. But it also affirmed "that all attempts to suppress free discussion is contrary to the very spirit and genius of the gospel," having reference to "the votaries of Rome."

52nd Illinois Eldership.—The question of sustaining the Illinois W. M. S. in its affiliation with the new W. G. M. S. was warmly discussed at the Eldership in 1904. It had been agitated throughout the year, and it required vitality and fortitude to stand up staunchly under the stress and buffetings to which parties were being subjected. When the question of upholding the Illinois W. M. S., "which proved itself loyal to the General Eldership," came to a yea and nay vote the result was—yeas, 13; nays, 7; not voting, 4. The session of the Eldership was held at Lanark, Carroll county, and was organized on Monday morning, September 19, 1904, the Opening Sermon having been preached the preceding Sunday morning, by J. Bernard. J. S. Walls was chosen President; C. F. Rogers, Clerk; C. T. Ishler, Financial Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Treasurer. Fifteen fields of labor were represented by sixteen pastors, nine elders and three delegates. Four fields were not represented. There was considerable friction and trouble in several local churches which the Eldership found it necessary to lay under restraint by official action. A large amount of business was transacted by the Standing Committee and the Board of Missions, the consideration of which required several sittings. Among these items was the creation of "a Fund to be known as the Young Men's Educational Fund," for which contributions were to be asked. Also the adoption of a "Reading Course for all the ministers and exhorters," and on which "the instructors in the Course of Studies" were "to lecture on Saturday previous to the Eldership." When money was voted out of Eldership Funds for repairs, church buildings or parsonages, it was generally with the condition that "the property be deeded to the Illinois Eldership." For "Tent Work" the territory of the Eldership was "divided into three districts, North, South and Central, and J. S. Walls, I. S. Richmond and W. H. Cross were assigned to the respective districts. The Government was charged with being in "partnership with the nefarious liquor traffic by legalizing the saloon," and "in taking revenue therefrom." The Eldership expressed its belief "that Christian voters ought not, and can not, support political parties at the ballot box which refuse to place themselves in open hostility to the liquor traffic." A series of eight lectures on topics in the Course of Studies was arranged for, to be delivered before the Ministerial Association in 1905. The Funds of the Eldership in the best condition were the Superannuated and Widows', with a balance of $4,790.00; and the Church Extension, with $492.00 to its credit. In view of the death during the year of W. A. Smith the condition of the former Fund was a source of gratification. "Smith was a man strong in the faith of the Church, and a lover of its doctrine; a brother loved and esteemed, and a strong defender of the doctrine of the Church." Limited success attended the labors of the pastors, as the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion gave the conversions as 86; accessions, 65; baptized, 44. The disparity between the number of conversions and baptized was regretted. The church property at Frederick, Ill., was sold by the Board of Incorporation for $400.00. The work of the Y. P. S. C. E. was reported by the President of the Union, C. T. Ishler. Each pastor was required to state whether the churches on his field have societies, and the number of members. Findlay College was credited with having "exercised a great influence over our young people," and it was "heartily commended." It was "advised that its management be left wholly in the hands of the Board of Trustees, which shall act according to its best judgment, without interference or dictation from outside parties." In addition to the nineteen fields of labor in Illinois, W. T. Turpin was appointed missionary in Colorado, and M. S. Newcomer and M. B. Newcomer, General Evangelists. C. A. Schaaf was "actively engaged in preaching the word of life in North Dakota."

were spoken of in high terms." The liquor traffic was regarded as "the most gigantic foe confronting the church of Christ at the present day;" but prohibition sentiment in Illinois was believed "to be steadily advancing." Pastors and people were urged "to take an active part in municipal elections where license or no license is the issue." Church work was regarded to be in a prosperous condition; but the reported professions were 140; baptized, 39; accessions, 70. The Y. P. S. C. was viewed as an important factor in the upbuilding of the churches in the Eldership. Persons called to the ministry were advised to take a college course. The Eldership rejoiced over "the spirit of unanimity which prevailed concerning the foreign missionary controversy," and "pledged its Christian honor to co-operate, and to discourage any further attempts at division." The Eldership tent had been used at Hildreth and at Findlay. Subjects for lectures on the Course of Studies were assigned as follows: "Importance of Systematic Pastoral Work," O. B. Huston. "Origin and History of the Church of God," I. S. Richmond. "The Cultured Ministry Against the Cultured Pew," J. D. Magill. "Theology in the Pulpit," T. M. Funk. "Annual and General Eldership Interests—the Minister's Place in Promoting Them," C. T. Ishler. There were twenty fields of labor, four of which received appropriations. W. R. Johnson was the General Worker.

54th Illinois Eldership.—In 1906 the Illinois Eldership "from a social, business and spiritual standpoint was a grand success." The year preceding had been encouraging, as the number of professions had increased from 140 to 261; baptized, from 39 to 332; accessions, from 70 to 239. Memories of earliest days in the history of the Eldership centered round the place where the session was held, Boiling Springs, Macon county, as near there "the first Eldership was organized fifty-three years ago." The fact was recalled, that "none of the preachers who helped to organize the Illinois Eldership are now living." Unlike Charles Lamb, they, ready to depart and be with Christ, could not say, "I would set up my tabernacle here. . . . A new state of being staggers me." The Eldership was in session from September 24th to 26th. The Opening Sermon was delivered on Lord's day, September 23rd, by J. A. Beltz, from II. Cor. iv. 17, 18. Beltz was elected President; C. F. Rogers, Clerk; H. W. Kruzan, Financial Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Treasurer. The Constitution was changed so as to provide for a Vice President and an Assistant Clerk. I. S. Richmond was elected Vice President, and C. T. Ishler, Assistant Clerk. "Clara Landes, returned missionary from India, occupied an evening of the Eldership." An agreeable compromise on the missionary controversy was adopted, declaring "that in order to insure success there should be general co-operation in all departments of Church work, from the local churches to the General Eldership," and "all ministers and workers within the bounds of the Illinois Eldership" were "urged to exert every influence to bring about harmony and union within the borders of the General Eldership." A Constitution and Rules of Order were drawn up by the Standing Committee and adopted by the Eldership for the "Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor Union of the Churches of God in Illinois." The Treasurer's Report showed that there was an aggregate balance in the nine Eldership Funds of $5,660.60. The "Prohibition Chautauqua Movement" was emphatically endorsed as "a means of helping to bring about final prohibition of the liquor traffic." A proposition was favorably considered, as submitted by an old friend of camp-meetings, I. S. Richmond, that "a committee be appointed to arrange for an old-fashioned camp-meeting sometime next Summer, in central Illinois." I. S. Richmond, R. S. Mackey and J. Bernard were appointed. Assessments were made on circuits and stations for Home Missions, $205.00; Frontier Missions, $205.00; Contingent Fund, $61.00. O. B. Huston was the minister in "charge of the tent during the year." The fields of labor numbered twenty-one, of which one was unsupplied. L. T. Frederick was the General Worker.

55th Illinois Eldership.—The growth of the sentiment of loyalty to the interests of the General Eldership was strong and healthy in the Illinois Eldership. It was, hence, ready gratefully to recognize this spirit elsewhere, and so in 1907 it endorsed The Advocate as "always standing in defense of loyalty, peace and order among the brethren, and throughout the Church in general." The session was held near Buda, in Bunker Hill Bethel, September 18-20, J. A. Beltz preaching the Opening Sermon the preceding evening, from the text in Heb. x. 19, 20. An organization was effected by the election of J. A. Beltz, President; C. F. Rogers, Clerk; J. S. Walls, Financial Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Treasurer. There were thirty-one names on the Ministerial Roll; but W. T. Turpin and W. T. Cross were in Colorado; C. A. Schaaf, in North Dakota; B. F. Kelly, in Texas; L. T. Frederick, in Nebraska. In connection with the reports of pastors the delegates reported the condition of their churches. Mission Work in India was the subject of an address by Clara Landes, and Findlay College interests were presented by S. G. Yahn, West Pennsylvania Eldership, and Secretary of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. The Eldership, "knowing the high character of Findlay College and Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute, both from a moral and religious, as well as an educational, standpoint," did "the more earnestly and cheerfully recommend them." The sale of the Morseville church-house was authorized. Reports from twenty-four organized churches showed a marked decrease in conversions, accessions and baptisms. The total membership was 1,196. The average salary of pastors was $263.16, and the total, $4,836.85. One parsonage was purchased during the year, and repairs made on many church properties. A "Committee on Arbitration on the Foreign Mission Work," consisting of R. S. Mackey, J. Bernard, J. S. Walls, J. A. Beltz, C. F. Rogers and O. B. Huston, recognized the efficient labors of Clara Landes in Ulubaria, India, and submitted a petition to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, which was "unanimously adopted," asking said Board "to appoint Clara Landes and A. B. Chamberlin to said field, provided she will co-operate with said Board of Missions."

56th Illinois Eldership.—During the year 1907-8 the experience of the Illinois Eldership had a tendency to make it less conciliatory in relation to the W. G. M. S. of 1890. Hence at the session of 1908 it stated "that in the event of the approval of the action of the Executive Board by the coming General Eldership, our pledge shall become all the more binding, and any failure to co-operate with the General Eldership and its Boards and Committees shall be regarded as an act of insubordination to the Illinois Eldership." The session was held at Martinsville, Clark county, September 21 to 23, 1908. On the preceding Sunday morning J. A. Beltz delivered the Opening Sermon, from Ps. xvii. 15. J. Bernard was chosen President; W. W. Richmond, Vice President; C. F. Rogers, Clerk; C. T. Ishler, Assistant Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Treasurer. A practical and encouraging address on Findlay College was made before the Eldership by the President, C. I. Brown. The excellent work done at the College was recognized, and the Eldership pledged itself to work to secure an average of one student from each field of labor, and to raise $4,000.00 toward the Carnegie proposition. The outlook was encouraging, in view of the increased number of conversions, baptisms and accessions, and the consequent addition to the total membership, making it 1,273. Owing to a divergence of views in the churches, the Eldership defined a Church Council to be constituted of the elders, deacons, treasurer, clerk and pastor, the latter as chairman. At Casey, Ill., W. D. Orr was pastor of a church of twenty-seven members, known as "the Free Church of God," and he and his church proposed to unite with the Eldership. The matter of home mission work engaged the serious attention of the Eldership, and it was decided to organize a "Home Mission League, to work in conjunction with the Board of Missions, said organization to raise funds to open new fields and to find suitable men to place on the fields." An Eldership camp-meeting was authorized to be held under the management of the Board of Missions, with the privilege of "borrowing from the Mission Fund $50.00 to pay ministers' traveling expenses." On temperance the Eldership expressed its gratitude to God and its thanks to "our Legislature for the township and precinct local option law." It also made a plea "for a county local option law," and repeated its purpose only "to vote for men of clean morals and of Christian temperance sentiment regardless of party." The Committee also directed that "the Clerk place a copy of the resolutions in a Springfield paper during the time the Legislature is in session, and that each member of the Eldership send a copy to the Senator or Representative from his or her district, accompanying it with a personal letter urging a County Local Option Law." The Committee consisted of three delegates—Clara M. Ritchie, Anna Seaton and F. S. Stover. The average salary of pastors had increased over twenty per cent. There were nineteen fields of labor, well supplied with pastors. "Everything was in harmony."

57th Illinois Eldership.—The Home Mission League organized in 1908 was active during the year. It reported "the cities of Bloomington, Stockton and Marshall, Ill., as auspicious places for mission work." But the year was not as fruitful in conversions, baptisms and accessions as the previous year. The total membership of the churches represented in the Eldership had increased to 1,500, and the salaries of ministers from $3,807.33 in 1907, to $5,355.99, besides $3,546.36 spent for sundry purposes. Such were the general conditions when the Eldership convened in Annual Session at Troy Grove, LaSalle county, on September 27, 1909. The preceding Sunday J. Bernard preached the Opening Sermon, from II. Cor. xiii. 11. Younger men were elected to fill the offices of the Eldership, except that of Treasurer. President, W. W. Richmond; Vice President, J. W. Smith; Clerk, C. T. Ishler; Assistant Clerk, J. W. Primrose; Financial Clerk, F. M. Newlin; Treasurer, L. F. Alexander. The action of the General Eldership of 1909, relative to the W. G. M. S. question, was fully endorsed, and "all our sisters in Illinois who are not now members of the W. G. M. S. of 1903 are urged to affiliate with said Society as soon as possible." As the camp-meeting held at Boiling Springs in 1908 "was well attended and much good was accomplished," a committee of five was elected, "who shall constitute and be known as the Illinois Camp-meeting Association of the Churches of God, to arrange for a mid-Summer camp-meeting." This committee consisted of J. W. Primrose, J. Bernard, O. B. Huston, C. F. Rogers, I. S. Richmond. O. A. Newlin, Field Secretary of Findlay College, presented the matter of the Carnegie endowment before the Eldership. The sale of the bethel at Buda, Ill., for $900.00 was authorized by the Incorporate Board. At Decatur, a new bethel having been built, the old church house was sold by the trustees of the church, and the sale approved by the Board of Incorporation and a deed made for the same. Though no names were erased from the Ministerial Roll during the year by the hand of Death, yet the "ordination papers" of three prominent members were demanded, and their "names were dropped from the Roll of the Eldership. These were J. A. Beltz, J. S. Walls and H. W. Kruzan. But as two new names were added to the Roll, the number of ministers was thirty, instead of thirty-one in 1908..

58th Illinois Eldership.—Fluctuations in the number of conversions, baptisms and accessions are noticeable, a decrease during the year 1909-'10 being deprecated. The total membership also was reduced from 1,500 in 1909, to 1,382 in 1910. And while the total of ministers' salaries was increased by $200.00, the average fell from $334.72 in 1909, to $314.29 in 1910. The Eldership Tent had not been used, but was rented part of the year, and was "in keeping at Decatur" at the time of the Eldership session. This was held at Warrensburg, Macon county, September 19-21, 1910. On Sunday evening, the 18th, W. W. Richmond preached the Opening Sermon, from Jer. xx. 9. The Committee on Credentials reported eighteen pastors, fifteen delegates, four preachers and the Treasurer "entitled to seats in the Eldership." Two delegates were women. An organization was effected by the election of G. E. Clark, President; J. W. Smith, Vice President; Chas. T. Ishler, Journalizing Clerk; J. W. Primrose, Assistant Clerk; L. F. Alexander, Treasurer. The Treasurer's Report was welcome because the Funds were in good condition, there being $5,644.89 in the Superannuated and Widows' Fund, $250 of a balance in the Home Mission Fund, $963.03 in the Church Extension Fund. An additional $1,000.00 of the Superannuated and Widows' Fund was ordered to be "invested with the present $4,000.00 Permanent Fund." The Report was "subscribed and sworn to before" a Notary Public. A surprising implication was found in the Report on Temperance, in the recommendation "that no application for license to preach shall receive recognition" from one "who uses either intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or tobacco in any form." The Anti-Saloon advocate was granted an hour to address the Eldership, and he "received a pledge of co-operation from the Eldership." After A. O. Newlin had presented the interests of Findlay College the sum of $275.00 was secured. To increase the receipts for Home Missions, as "the present plan of assessments is not sufficient to meet present needs," it was arranged to "give an evening for a Home Mission service at the Eldership in 1911 and a sermon, and also to raise a public offering, in which each church, individually, C. E. society and Sunday-school be urged to be represented in the offering." With one exception the twenty fields of labor were supplied with pastors.

59th Illinois Eldership.—Early on Tuesday morning of the fifty-ninth session of the Illinois Eldership a tragic event without precedent in any Eldership occurred, when "O. B. Huston fell on the floor of the Eldership mortally stricken of heart trouble, expiring seemingly at once, and a pall fell on the session to the close." Huston was ordained in 1881 by the Illinois Eldership, and devoted the greater part of the following thirty years to the active ministry. He held many official positions, and was diligent and efficient in all the work of the Eldership. He was a man of fine social qualities and of a genial disposition. He was a good preacher, and was rewarded in seeing many souls saved by the power of the gospel. There is a ministry of sorrow, for

" 'Tis sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities
Whereon our firm feet planting nearer to God
The spirit climbs and has its eyes unsealed."

The Eldership also lamented the death of M. S. Newcomer, at the time of his departure, however, a member of the Iowa Eldership. The session was held at the Goodfarm Chapel, near Mazon, Grundy county, beginning October 2, 1911. On the previous Sunday G. E. Clark delivered the Opening Sermon, from Matt. v. 16. Officers chosen were: President, I. S. Richmond; Vice President, John Bernard; Journalizing Clerk, Chas. T. Ishler; Assistant Clerk, J. W. Primrose; Financial Clerk, F. M. Newlin; Treasurer, L. F. Alexander. The aggressive campaign for missions was crowned with the organization of a church "known as the First Church of God, Springfield, Ill.," which became identified with the Eldership. The Eldership favored "the graded Sabbath-school lessons." It also asked "the Board of Trustees of Findlay College to consider the matter of a department devoted to the study of problems relative to the country church." And while "the desirability of a college education" was recognized, the Eldership "also heartily endorsed every other effort for self-improvement and general advancement along educational lines by the ministry and the laity." The State C. E. Convention was of "intense interest," under the presidency of F. M. Newlin, as Viola G. Hershey, returned missionary to India, "was present and gave a splendid missionary address." The "Union pledged itself to endeavor to raise $500.00 for the India Building Fund." When the Stationing Committee reported it left eleven of the twenty-three fields of labor unsupplied. These, with the "preachers not having fields of labor," were to apply to the Standing Committee for pastors and for fields.

60th Illinois Eldership.—Some of the unsupplied charges of 1911 entered into agreements with ministers to serve them as pastors, which were "ratified by the Standing Committee." Hence, when the Eldership convened in the fine, new Bethel at Decatur, Macon county, Monday morning, September 23, 1912, the Committee on Credentials found the twenty enrolled fields well represented by pastors and delegates. I. S. Richmond had preached the Opening Sermon the preceding Sunday, from Ezek. iii. 15. The organization was effected by electing for President C. F. Rogers; Vice President, D. H. Rupp; Clerk, W. W. Richmond; Assistant Clerk, John Bernard; Financial Clerk, Chas. T. Ishler; Treasurer, L. F. Alexander. The Standing Committee consisted of J. Bernard, C. F. Rogers, W. W. Richmond. To these were added C. T. Ishler and G. E. Clark to complete the Board of Missions. The President of Findlay College, C. I. Brown, was in attendance, and addressed the Eldership, which responded with a collection of $60.00 for the "Fund to help students at the College this year," and good resolutions, "recommending that our people work for the promotion of our schools by donating money to them and sending their children to them to be educated." Howard W. Cover, appointed missionary to India from East Pennsylvania Eldership, was a welcome visitor, and addressed the Eldership in behalf of the interests of the W. G. M. S., and also preached one evening. An address by Dr. Horace Reed on "Personal Purity," in the interest of the American Vigilance Association, was "most sincerely endorsed," and the support of the Eldership pledged to the Association. The W. M. S. of Illinois was granted one evening for its public exercises. The State of Religion, as represented by the Committee, was less reassuring in some particulars than in some former years. The conversions were 84; baptized, 40; accessions, 80; membership, 1,140; total salaries of pastors, $5,016.60. The receipts during the year were more gratifying, as these were as follows: Contingent Fund, $102.82; Home Mission, including a balance in 1911, $478.13; Superannuated and Widows', $296.62, making a total in this Fund of $6,014.85; Church Extension Fund, $49.54; and a total of $984.69. It was finally concluded that a committee be "appointed to take charge of the Eldership tent, advertise it for sale, and sell it to the highest bidder." Assessments were made on the fields of labor for General Eldership, Contingent Fund, Home Missions, Frontier Missions and Illinois Contingent Fund, a total of $467.00. A feature of the session was addresses by five licentiates during a special hour, among them being Clara G. Richmond, who received "an annual preacher's license," and was appointed pastor of the

Mt. Carroll church. To place young men under obligations to serve as ministers in Illinois after leaving Findlay College, the Eldership "agreed to furnish any worthy student for the ministry the sum of $50.00 a year, if needed, on condition that for every $50.00 received he shall agree to serve as minister in Illinois at least one year." It was "the consensus of opinion that this was one of the most harmonious and pleasant meetings in the history of the Illinois Eldership."

VIII. THE GERMAN ELDERSHIP.

The German Eldership was peculiar. It was sui generis, one of its kind. It was to have no boundaries, no territory of its own, and with the consent of other Elderships was to operate anywhere in the United States. These were fundamental provisions in its organic law, provisions which had in them the seeds of contention, internal strife and disintegration. In the Presbyterian Digest is this question, pp. 177, 179: "Can two Presbyteries occupy the same ground?" The answer is: "No. It would be contrary both to the letter and spirit of our Constitution and the teaching of the word of God." In 1873 the General Assembly decided that even no distinction can be made "of race, or color, or language to interfere with the unity and simplicity of that oversight which the Constitution of this Church requires." And the Presbytery corresponds to the Eldership. But already at an earlier date the East Pennsylvania Eldership had decided that a "distinction of color" could be reasonable grounds for permitting two Elderships "to occupy the same ground." And later the General Eldership authorized an Eldership of colored people to be organized on the same ground with an Eldership of white people. So it seemed wise to the General Eldership that a "distinction of language" could be reasonable ground for permitting two Elderships "to occupy the same ground."

The German Eldership had its inception in the fertile and inventive brain of J. F. Weishampel. That he knew that there was an "East German Conference of the Methodist Church" within the "Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Church" may be doubted. Nor was he probably familiar with the proposition of John Dreisbach to Bishop Asbury, much earlier: "If you will give us German circuits, districts and Conferences, we are willing to make your Church ours." The Bishop answered: "This cannot be; it would be inexpedient." The spark which apparently started this project was the remark of Jacob M. Hepler to Weishampel at the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1853: "I am going home to-morrow. I am tired sitting here the whole day, and understanding almost nothing." And added: "I wish we German brethren had the German work in our own hands, so that we could ourselves manage it, in our own language." George Kimmel endorsed these sentiments. Weishampel answered: "Well, if you desire to have it so, I will bring it before the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and will try to have it pass a resolution authorizing you to take the necessary steps to form a German Eldership." Weishampel brought the matter before the Eldership, and a brief discussion was had on his resolution. "But," Weishampel states in "Der Christliche Kundschafter," September, 1869, "a certain man, whom we will not name here, placed his foot upon it. And while other brethren seemed favorably disposed, they thought perhaps he knew best what would be for the best interests of the work, and so the resolution was rejected by a small majority." But this did not discourage the promoters of the enterprise. In order to ascertain how the German preachers and churches felt on the subject of organizing a German Eldership, a circular was printed and mailed to the German preachers, exhorters and churches in the bounds of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, inviting churches "to appoint delegates to attend a general assembly or convention to be held at Orwigsburg, commencing on Monday, the 20th of February, 1854." The circular also invited "German preachers who hold a preacher's license from any other Eldership;" "brethren who hold no license," and "other brethren who feel concerned in spreading the gospel among the German population in America." The signatories of this document were J. F. Weishampel, Jacob M. Hepler, Felix Hartman, Stephen Bright and William Klinger, and it was dated at "Orwigsburg, January the 30th, 1854." Winebrenner did not favor this movement, and in The Church Advocate of February 11, 1854, gave his "opinion touching this movement." He felt "slighted for not having received a circular." "In the next place, I think this movement is premature and uncalled for. The last Eldership had the matter before it, and decided by a large majority against it." He gave his "advice to the German brethren to hold up for the present; to do nothing rashly and disorderly, but simply to get up a petition expressive of their views and opinions respecting this matter, and send it up to the General Eldership." He also proposed to attend the convention if a circular were sent him, and he were "guaranteed an uncontested seat in the convention, and the right to make two speeches—one on the constitutionality, and the other on the expediency, of constituting a German Eldership." He received both a circular and a written invitation "to attend their German Eldership at Orwigsburg." But they "came too late for our acceptance, on account of our engagement to preach" a "funeral sermon next Sabbath morning." The convention was held on the date announced—"Monday afternoon, February 20, 1854." The delegates and ministers present were J. K. Moyer, Auburn; near Orwigsburg, George Kimmel; near McKeanburg, George Kimmel, Jr.; Orwigsburg, Stephen Bright; Schuylkill Haven, William Neimoyer; Mahantango, Isaac Haas; Fredericksburg, John Rupp; and ministers, Jacob M. Hepler, Felix Hartman, George S. Petry and J. F. Weishampel, and eighteen "advisory members." Upon an election, "Jacob M. Hepler was chosen President, and J. F. Weishampel, Secretary." "After the object of the convention was stated, a few remarks were made upon it pro and con," when it adjourned to meet the next morning at 9 o'clock. In the evening "the Opening Sermon was delivered by J. F. Weishampel." In the morning the convention adopted a resolution, "That we feel ourselves justified in organizing a German Eldership. Resolved, That we do now form ourselves into such an Eldership." "After a lengthy discussion of the above resolutions, in which both sides of the question were fairly defended, the vote was taken by ayes and nays, as follows: J. K. Moyer, George Kimmel, Sr., Stephen Bright, Isaac Haas, John Rupp, delegates, in the affirmative. George Kimmel, Jr., and William Neimoyer, delegates, in the negative. Jacob M. Hepler, J. F. Weishampel, Felix Hartman and George S. Petry, preachers, in the affirmative. Eleven votes; nine ayes, and two nays." A resolution prevailed to appoint a "delegate to the General Eldership of the Church of God, at their next meeting, with a petition from this body for membership in that body as a German Eldership." Winebrenner was "requested to serve as that delegate, and that twelve dollars be made up and sent him as a part of his traveling expenses." No action was taken, by agreement "upon any form of government." A Missionary Committee of five persons was appointed. An invitation was given to any who "feel themselves called to preach," to make application. Michael Bolish and Fidele Hutzman applied, "and were received as members." Nearly one hundred dollars were subscribed for missionary purposes. A letter was received from J. S. Hoerger, West Newton, Pa., "in which $40.00 were subscribed toward the support of a German preacher in that region, if one were sent them from this body." Without fixing time or place for a future meeting, the convention adjourned.

Jacob M. Hepler was born November 19, 1809, in Schuylkill county, Pa. He was brought to a saving knowledge of the truth in his native county under the preaching of the ministers of the Evangelical Association, which had extensive revivals in different parts of the county as early as 1825. He became a member of said Church, like quite a number of others who became members of the first churches of God organized in said county. He received his first license from the Conference of the Evangelical Association. But when he heard the doctrines of the Church of God preached he became dissatisfied with the tenets he had been taught, and united with the local church of God in the Mahantango Valley, where he lived and held his membership until the troubles originated between the German and the East Pennsylvania Elderships. He received license to preach from the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1852. He was active in the formation of the German Eldership, and remained a member of it to the close of his useful life. A number of his fellow-laborers in the ministry gave strong testimony to his worth as a man and his piety and zeal as a Christian at the session of the German Eldership in 1883. His first charge he received in 1852 from the Standing Committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, it consisting of Auburn, in Schuylkill county, and the churches in Lebanon and Lehigh counties. In the Fall of 1853 he was reappointed to this field. He continued in the active ministry, with the exception of six years at different times, until the end of his life, having been appointed to Mahantango Valley in 1882. During these thirty years he traveled the whole territory of the German Eldership, and was also sent as a missionary to Montour county. He had the respect and confidence of his brethren and the churches, as is indicated by his election as Speaker of the Eldership at seven different sessions. He "preached with great energy and meaning." He ended his earthly career July 30, 1883, aged 73 years, 8 months and 11 days.

1st German Eldership.—The petition to the General Eldership "for membership in that body as a German Eldership" having been granted, Winebrenner and Keller were "appointed delegates to assist and advise in the organization of their German Eldership." The Missionary Committee appointed by the convention held at Orwigsburg fixed "Auburn, Schuylkill county, Pa., on October 19, 1854" as the place and time for the organization of the Eldership. Winebrenner preached the Opening Sermon on that evening. On constituting the Eldership on Thursday morning there were found present teaching elders Jacob M. Hepler, George S. Petry, Felix Hartman, J. F. Weishampel and John Hepler. Delegates, J. K. Moyer, Auburn; George Kimmel, Sr., New Brunswick; George Kimmel, Jr., McKeansburg; Issaac Haas, Mahantango Valley; John Geist, Deep Creek Valley; Jacob Kreiser, Fredericksburg; and J. Winebrenner and Jacob Keller, East Pennsylvania Eldership. After reading the proceedings of the convention held at Orwigsburg, and the actions of the General Eldership, which were adopted, the organization was effected by the election of Jacob Keller for Speaker, and J. F. Weishampel, Clerk. A Committee on Overtures, one on Boundaries, a Stationing and a Standing Committee were elected. Later in the session, a Committee on Missions was created, the former Committee having reported that it paid Felix Hartman twenty dollars "as a missionary to West Pennsylvania," and had secured by way of subscriptions $228.75. West Newton applied for Hartman as their preacher, but as his labors in that Eldership had already created some dissatisfaction, he was advised to attend the West Pennsylvania Eldership and effect a settlement. The Eldership also asked pardon of the West Pennsylvania Eldership for the action of its Missionary Committee in "sending Hartman into their bounds without first obtaining their sanction." It then recommended Hartman "to the kind consideration of the West Pennsylvania Eldership." The Eldership adopted a "form of Certificate in place of the usual license." It certified that the bearer "is a regularly ordained preacher of the gospel, standing in connection with the German Eldership of the Church of God in the United States; therefore we recommend him as a Proclaimer of God's Word, and the Performer of all the duties pertaining to the sacred office of the Gospel Ministry." These were to be renewed annually. Keller was invited to preach the next Opening Sermon. The circuits and pastors were as follows: Mahantango, George S. Petry; Schuylkill, Jacob M. Hepler; Lebanon, John Hepler. The next day after the Eldership adjourned the Standing Committee "separated the city of Reading and the appointments in Berks and Lehigh counties, and constituted them a mission, and authorized the Committee on Missions to appoint J. F. Weishampel missionary." This was done, and an appropriation of $100,000 made. The Standing Committee also "authorized Bro. Weishampel to publish at his own risk and on his own account a German religious paper." William Klinger, Eli Riegel, J. K. Moyer, John Rupp and Louis Kraft appeared as candidates for the ministry, and received "Certificates of Recommendation" except Kraft who was required first to secure "a certificate of honorable dismissal from the West Pennsylvania Eldership of which he was a member."

2nd German Eldership.—The Opening Sermon of the second session of the German Eldership was preached on Sabbath morning, October 21, 1855, at Auburn, Schuylkill county, Pa., by Jacob Keller, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. He was elected Speaker, and J. F. Weishampel, Clerk. The Eldership convened on Saturday, October 20th. Eight ministers were present and four delegates, representing the four fields. Two ministers were absent. The Missionary Committee's receipts amounted to $84.75, and its expenditures to $75. Measures were adopted to adjust the controversy with the West Pennsylvania Eldership growing out of trespass on their territory by Felix Hartman, a member of the German Eldership. The Eldership arranged to raise the funds to pay off a balance of a debt on Mt. Nebo bethel, Lebanon county. It also "assumed the debt on the Mission Hall at Reading," and "released Weishampel from further labors in that city." Lehigh Mission was created, and G. S. Petry was assigned to it, with an appropriation of $100.

3rd German Eldership.—There was no lack of ministers of the German Eldership at this time. For when the members met in annual session "in the new bethel in Upper Mahantango township, Schuylkill county, Pa., Monday morning, November 10, 1856," ten names were enrolled, three of which were absent. Keller was chosen Speaker, and John M. Busch, Clerk. Two of the ministers were preaching outside the Pennsylvania territory of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, within which the German Eldership existed. Busch in Baltimore, Md., and Louis Kraft in Pittsburg. The mission in Reading was continued as a part of the West Penn and Lehigh mission. The Eldership confined itself exclusively to the routine business. It insisted on Hartman becoming "reconciled with the West Pennsylvania Eldership in the difficulty existing between him and that body;" canceled the "Certificate" of one minister, and licensed one new applicant. Its three circuits were supplied by J. K. Moyer, G. S. Petry and J. M. Hepler.

4th German Eldership.—In the bethel near Orwigsburg, the home of George Kimmel, the financial strength of the body, the "German Eldership of the Church of God in the United States" began its fourth annual session October 26, 1857. G. S. Petry was chosen to preside, and George Kimmel to act as Scribe. "A degree of prosperity was reported on the various fields of labor." The three circuits remained unchanged as to boundaries, but two of the pastors exchanged places. Four men were licensed.

5th German Eldership.—With the organization of the fifth session of the Eldership, in the bethel near McKeanburg, Schuylkill county, Pa., October 8, 1858, Jacob Keller is again found in the Speaker's chair, and J. F. Weishampel at the Clerk's table. Lebanon circuit is added to the fields of labor. Only a few conversions were reported. Busch reported accepting a "call to preach for a Lutheran congregation near Baltimore," and the Eldership resolved to "commend him and the church for which he preaches to the grace of God; and recommend to him the necessity to preach to them the faithful word of God." George Kimmel was made Treasurer of the Eldership.

6th German Eldership.—In 1859 the session of the German Eldership was held at Fredericksburg, Lebanon county, Pa., beginning Monday morning, October 24th. J. Myers preached the Opening Sermon on Sabbath. Jacob M. Hepler was elected Speaker, and J. F. Weishampel, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, Clerk. Myers was "in the service of this body," but held his license from the East Ohio Eldership. Busch's report of his labors with a German Lutheran church were commended, and "a resolution of encouragement touching him and the congregation for which he preaches was adopted." The authority of ruling elders was affirmed; that "the ruling elders in the churches do form the scriptural authority before which disorderly members should be tried and dealt with according to their deserts, and that it is the duty of the elders, as well as the preachers, to publish the expulsion of such members." The death of Felix Hartman was reported, and resolutions of condolence adopted. The right was affirmed of the Eldership "to exclude any person from this body for becoming and holding membership in any Secret Society." Expelled members of churches were granted the right of appeal to the Standing Committee. Hazleton was added to the West Penn circuit, and the Lehigh county appointments were cut off, to be supplied by local preachers. Tamaqua was attached to the Schuylkill circuit. The use of tobacco was condemned as among the "species of vice and filthiness" from which "all the children of God are bound to live free." Dr. George Ross, East Pennsylvania Eldership, was appointed to secure an Act of Incorporation. A Brother "Nave, of Pottsville, made a bequest for the erection of a house of worship." The system of human slavery was "highly disapproved," and the Eldership "will do all we reasonably can to encourage the abolition of the evil." The "merging" of the German with the East Pennsylvania Eldership, "suggested by several brethren," was "deemed inexpedient at this time." The need of a "greater variety of preachers" is given by the Clerk as the reason for this desire to return to the parent Eldership.

7th German Eldership.—As the German preachers of the East Pennsylvania Eldership were indisposed to go into the German Eldership, and thus the churches were obliged to rely on home talent, a feeling of dissatisfaction arose, and a disposition developed to return to the parent Eldership. This again came to the surface at the session of the German Eldership held at Holderman's meeting-house, near Osmansville, Schuylkill county, Pa., beginning October 10, 1860. There were in attendance seven preachers and six delegates. They voted unanimously against "becoming united again with the East Pennsylvania (English) Eldership." The officers were J. M. Hepler, Speaker, and J. Myers, Clerk. What became later a source of trouble and division was the adoption of a resolution, that "we warmly urge upon our preachers and ruling elders unremittingly to preach and enforce the church discipline as taught in Matt. xviii. to the churches under their charge." J. M. Hepler, on the first evening of the session, preached the Opening Sermon. The first official steps were taken to publish a German paper by the passage of a resolution that brethren in general adopt measures to publish a periodical in German, and that we spare no efforts to accomplish this object." The churches in West Penn township were not wholly submissive to the authority of the Eldership, and they were notified that they will be supplied with preaching "if they submit to the order of this Eldership; if not, they must look out for themselves." The strong anti-tobacco resolution, called "the Tobacco Code," was "modified, so as to make it advisory." The Stationing Committee made appointments to Schuylkill, Mahantango and Lebanon circuits, leaving West Penn "to be supplied by the Standing Committee, if requested." Jacob Keller, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was appointed to the Schuylkill circuit without becoming a member of the German Eldership. The prospects were pronounced "in many respects very flattering; Sunday-schools are regularly kept, wherein German and English are taught; but "there is too great a laxity in morals among the youth in these regions."

8th German Eldership.—On October 10, 1861, the German Eldership convened at Auburn, Schuylkill county, Pa., George M. Hepler preached the Opening Sermon. Of the ministers of the Eldership ten were in attendance, and three absent; with five delegates. George M. Hepler was elected Speaker, and J. M. Kulp, Clerk. The latter was licensed at this session. The territory consisted of the Schuylkill, Mahantango, Lebanon and West Penn circuits and Lehigh mission. But though there were now fourteen licensed ministers, Jesse Haifeigh, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was secured to serve the Schuylkill circuit, and West Penn and Lehigh mission were left to be supplied.

9th German Eldership.—The strongest friend in those early days of the German Eldership, Dr. George Ross, was present and an advisory member of the session which began October 9, 1862, in the meeting-house in Barry township, Schuylkill county, Pa. John M. Hepler delivered the Opening discourse. Only the Mahantango and Lebanon circuits were represented by teaching elders. Six teaching elders were present, and six absent; with four delegates. The organization was effected by the choice of Jacob M. Hepler for Speaker, and J. M. Culp, Clerk. Two delegates to the East Pennsylvania Eldership were elected. Also two to the "Eldership of the Union Brethren." John F. Deivert applied for, and received, license, he being from Danville, Montour county. The Montour Mission was created, and Jacob M. Hepler was appointed the missionary till Spring. But the Eldership resolved to "continue to sustain Montour mission." The Lebanon circuit was given to the East Pennsylvania Eldership to supply with a minister, Fredericksburg, the principal church, having asked for this transfer. Lehigh mission was to be supplied.

10th German Eldership.—The Eldership in 1862 adjourned to meet "the third Tuesday in October, 1863, in the meeting-house at Elder George M. Hepler's, in Eldred township, Schuylkill county, Pa.; but the Standing Committee changed the time to October 4th, Sunday evening, when the Opening Sermon was preached by Henry Borgner. Joseph K. Moyer was elected Speaker, and Henry Borgner, Clerk. The putative father of the German Eldership, John F. Weishampel, was present, and was voted a seat as advisory member. Being also by resolution "invited to attach himself to this body," he consented, when a license was voted him. The Eldership "rejected that part of the Report of the Standing Committee" relative to a meeting with a committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership held at Orwigsburg, Schuylkill county, "to discuss the question of merging this body into the English body." Weishampel was "again authorized to undertake the publishing of a small German paper." He was instructed "to procure a book and transcribe all the Journals into it." The proceedings being held in German, Weishampel was appointed to translate the minutes into English for publication in The Advocate.

11th German Eldership.—While the proof does not appear on the Journal, the German Eldership, which held its session in 1864, at the Kimmel Bethel, Schuylkill county, Pa., beginning on Monday morning, October 3rd, yet it adjourned feeling that it "has taken a fresh start, and by the blessings of God and the faithful labors of preachers and people much good is looked for the coming year." "Breeches" were acknowledged to exist, and "difficulties," which were in the main attributed to "outside pressure and influence." The members gathered on Saturday, the day it was called to meet, and the Opening Sermon was preached on Sunday evening, by J. K. Moyer. Jacob M. Hepler was chosen Speaker, and J. F. Weishampel, who presented his Transfer from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was elected Clerk. The fact of "breeches" and "difficulties" was emphasized by the official request of "one of the congregations, that they should have the privilege granted them to invite other preachers occasionally to visit and preach for them." This was refused. Tremont called for a preacher, and Mahanoy City asked for "a missionary to be sent there." Accordingly Mahanoy Mission was created, and J. M. Hepler appointed, and $80.00 at once subscribed toward his support. Three brethren were licensed to preach, one the son of Jacob M. Hepler, making the fourth preacher of that name. Circuits were consolidated, so that there were but two, with three preachers.

12th German Eldership.—The German Eldership of 1865 convened on Saturday evening, October 21st, at Auburn, Schuylkill county, Pa. Weishampel, having been transferred from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, preached the Opening Sermon on Sabbath morning, from I. Cor. iii. 9. There was preaching on Saturday evening, and two additional sermons on Sabbath. There were two circuits and two missions. Eight teaching elders and ten delegates were enrolled. J. K. Moyer was chosen Speaker; J. F. Weishampel, Sr., Clerk, and Isaac Hoffmeister, Treasurer. These officers, with the three members of the Board of Missions and three of the Standing Committee, constituted the Board of Incorporation. On the Schuylkill circuit there were "about one hundred conversions, and baptized fourteen persons." "Christian salutations," to be borne to the East Pennsylvania Eldership by delegates Borgner and Weishampel, were adopted, expressing the hope "that wherein we may be able to co-work together as two Elderships in the work of the Lord, we will do it with a mutual good will and cheerfulness." Without attempting to justify it, except that "several local churches have lost sums of money bequeathed to them by good brethren, who died before their wills, or testaments, were one month old (as provided by law)," the Eldership declared that "this can be obviated by the testator having his will dated back." Hence, "all brethren and sisters who may bequeath anything to this Eldership, or to any local church—are advised to date their wills back a month from the times of writing them." It was agreed to appoint a General Missionary, who was also to serve a local mission. There was one additional mission and two circuits, but no preacher for the Schuylkill circuit. On the last evening the ordinances were observed.

13th German Eldership.—After several years of internal dissensions, and also controversies between the German Eldership, existing within the territory of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and the latter, the General Eldership having more clearly defined the rights of the German Eldership, there was a brief period of tranquillity. Hence, the Eldership which met at Donaldson, Schuylkill county, Pa., October 28, 1866, was quiet, harmonious and uneventful. J. K. Moyer preached the Opening Sermon on Sunday morning, from 2 Cor. iv. 1-6. The business was all transacted on Monday, three sittings being held. Abraham Snyder, East Pennsylvania Eldership, had been secured to serve the Schuylkill circuit. Mahantango and Lebanon were the other circuits, with one mission. Eleven teaching elders were enrolled, and nine delegates. J. K. Moyer was chosen Speaker; J. F. Weishampel, Sr., Clerk, and Isaac Hoffmeister, Treasurer. Weishampel was authorized to establish a German paper, the General Eldership the preceding May having granted this privilege to the German Eldership. The sum of $200.00 was to be raised to purchase German type for the Church paper," and $73.00 were subscribed on the spot." A church in Indiana asked for a preacher. It was advised to apply through the Indiana Standing Committee. Arrangements were made to have "a Widows' Fund for deceased preachers' indigent widows," by requiring each preacher annually to pay $1.00, and soliciting contributions and lifting collections. The missionary spirit was much revived, and pastors were required "to preach missionary sermons and take up collections at each appointment, as well as to take annual contributions from every member." I. Hay, local preacher, entered the active work, and was assigned to Mahantango circuit.

14th German Eldership.—A staunch friend and steadfast adherent of the German Eldership, Elder George Kimmel, died fifteen days after that body adjourned in 1866. The Eldership felt greatly afflicted at the loss of one whose "piety and zeal for God and his cause during many years of his life" were so generally conceded. The Committee on Obituaries reported that he had made "the munificent bequest of all his earthly possessions to this body, to be used for missionary and charity purposes." This generous bequest further stimulated the missionary spirit, so that the Eldership which met at Auburn, within a short distance of the Kimmel home, October 14, 1867, "required each preacher to preach a missionary sermon at each of his appointments once a year and take collections." The Susquehanna Mission was created, and A. Snyder, missionary, was "guaranteed $400.00 in quarterly payments." The Eldership was organized by the election of John Boyer for Speaker; James E. Snyder, Clerk, and Isaac Hoffmeister, Treasurer. Eighteen preachers were reported. The request from Indiana for a German preacher was renewed. Difficulties between "a part of the church at Kimmel's and their preacher" were becoming somewhat serious, and were aggravated by a movement to have the Kimmel Will contested. Another equally serious trouble arose at Auburn, which was brought before the Eldership in a resolution submitted by J. K. Moyer, a man of courage and conviction, which affirmed "that those who get themselves divorced for any other cause than that of adultery or fornication, and marry again, commit adultery." And the "churches are advised that where such cases may occur, or exist, they are to treat and judge them according to this resolution." A "lengthy discussion ensued, but the resolutions prevailed, only to be "afterwards reconsidered and rescinded without a negative vote." The ground of this last act was "that the body did not deem it necessary to have an action upon God's laws." Thereupon "Moyer asked for a card of dismissal from the Eldership, which was granted." H. Boyer, at his own request was also granted a letter of dismissal.

15th German Eldership.—For several years the German Eldership had a nominal mission in Philadelphia, and two missionary appointees in Baltimore, Md.; but in 1868, it became conscious of its violation of the Constitution of the General Eldership, and declared that these acts, "without asking permission of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, were contrary to the Constitution of the General Eldership;" but it entered the plea "that they were unintentional acts of oversight." Besides, it was laying claim to certain territory in the East Pennsylvania Eldership, which said Eldership disputed, and hence relations between the two bodies became more strained as local churches expressed a desire to have preachers from the English Eldership. Schuylkill circuit at this Eldership was thus left open "to be supplied" by said Eldership. There were ten ministers at the Eldership which began its session at Germanville Bethel, Schuylkill county, Pa., Saturday evening, October 17, 1868. A sermon on "Brotherly Love" was preached on said evening, by A. Snyder. On Sunday morning J. Boyer preached the Opening Sermon on "The Ministry of the Word;" A. Grimm preached in the afternoon, and J. E. Snyder in the evening. A. Snyder was elected Speaker; J. F. Welshampel, Clerk, and B. Koch, Treasurer. The retaining of counsel to defend the Kimmel Will was approved, and under his instructions the Board of Incorporation took possession of the Kimmel estate, to administer it according to the provisions of the Will. A committee to frame a Constitution was appointed, whose report was adopted. This instrument provided: That the name of the body shall be "The German Eldership of the Church of God." It is to meet annually, or oftener. Licensed ministers, with an equal number of ruling elders elected as delegates by the different stations and circuits, were to constitute the membership. The officers shall be a Chairman, a Scribe and a Treasurer. The duties of these officers are defined. The Eldership is to elect a Missionary Committee, a Standing Committee and a Stationing Committee. The number of each of these committees is fixed. The Standing Committee was given all the powers of the Eldership, except to exclude members, or to change preachers without cause. It can give trial to a minister, and can suspend him, and may alter fields of labor and exchange preachers if circumstances require it. The Stationing Committee is to appoint the preachers to the different charges, and its report shall always stand and be binding, unless rejected by a majority, in which case the Committee shall bring in a new report. The churches are required to give their preachers a sufficient support, to be paid quarterly. Local preachers are required to preach as much as possible. All the ministers are to have a two-fold membership, except the itinerants and missionaries, and shall be under double responsibility, to the local church and to the Eldership. The Constitution was adopted October 20, 1868. Samuel Smith, an East Pennsylvania minister, was appointed to the Mahantango circuit. Said Eldership was also to supply the Schuylkill circuit. The Susquehanna Mission was to be supplied by the Standing Committee.

The serious condition of affairs in the German Eldership induced six members to join the Standing Committee in requesting the Chairman "to call the body together in extra session." It accordingly met, as per call, at Center Bethel, Schuylkill county, Pa., Monday, February 22, 1869, when it was found that thirteen ministers, delegates and members of Boards and Committees were present. I. Hay had been transferred to the East Pennsylvania Eldership. It was realized that the Eldership had "arrived at a crisis in her history when her future usefulness, and perhaps her existence itself, may depend on speedy, energetic and determined action on her part," and so it was resolved to "defend her by every lawful means against every encroachment on her rights from without." Action was further taken, recalling the privilege granted the East Pennsylvania Eldership to supply the Schuylkill circuit; insisting it is to the best interest of the cause of God that the German Eldership should be kept in existence; virtually excluding from church membership the leaders in the revolt at Kimmel's and at Auburn, and that "any preacher who may preach for one or the other of said parties shall be regarded and dealt with as a violator of the Rules of Co-operation of the General Eldership." The Eldership further asked the Standing Committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership to "relieve Bro. Jacob Keller of the Schuylkill circuit" and thus "prevent difficulties which may otherwise arise between the two Elderships." It then distinctly claimed as its exclusive possession "the ground we have occupied since the organization of this Eldership;" that said ground was granted to "its jurisdiction by Winebrenner and Keller" at its organization, "and that no Eldership had the right to trespass upon it, or to encourage seceders from German Eldership churches by supplying them with preachers." It also declared those parties which were in opposition to the German Eldership "no longer members of the Church of God denomination." Provision was made for the licensing of exhorters. And while the resolutions adopted at this extra session indicate a deep sense of grievance, the Minutes record that "sweet harmony prevailed during all the time of the session, and it closed after having transacted much business with great unanimity."

16th German Eldership.—Between the extra session of the German Eldership in February, 1869, and the annual session which began October 16, 1869, at Steigerwalt Bethel, near McKeanburg, Schuylkill county, Pa., the General Eldership had held its triennial session at Lancaster, Pa., and taken very important action bearing on the situation in the German Eldership. Accordingly the main business of this session related to said action. The Eldership was well attended by the lay members, there being thirteen present, while seven of the twelve teaching elders were present. A. Snyder was chosen Speaker; J. F. Weishampel, Clerk, and S. Steigerwalt, Treasurer. Two ministers surrendered their licenses, and were dismissed from the body at their request. Suitable resolutions were reported on the death of Elder E. H. Thomas. The German paper had been started, called "Christlicher Kundschafter," and Weishampel, Editor and Publisher, was highly commended. Still complaining of the action of the East Pennsylvania Eldership in appointing a preacher to Auburn and Kimmel's, and regretting that for years, to satisfy disaffected parties it had permitted such action, the Eldership again "delegated its appointing power as to said circuit to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, upon advice of E. H. Thomas, as a means of settling the troubles in this body." The delegates to the General Eldership, having attended the session of said body, reported its action in relation to the German Eldership. Whereupon resolutions were adopted, to wit: Reconsidering "the action expelling certain parties at Kimmel's and Auburn from the Church of God denomination, but still declaring that they have dissolved their connection with those local churches;" accepting "the decision of the General Eldership which lifted the boundary lines, and ordered that the German Eldership shall have no special territory;" that "wishing to act in strict accordance with the letter of our Charter from the General Eldership, which requires us to labor upon other Eldership fields with their sanction," it informed "the East Pennsylvania Eldership of the arrangements to supply its circuits for the ensuing year," and asked said Eldership to respect said arrangements. The East Pennsylvania Eldership was also requested to permit the German Eldership part of the Kimmel church to use the house of worship at said place one-half of the time. The territory was divided into Schuylkill, Mahantango, Donaldson and Fredericksburg circuits, with five preachers.

17th German Eldership.—The German Eldership far less than any other Eldership concerned itself about matters not immediately connected with its internal affairs. With slavery, the state of the country, or even with the question of temperance except as regarded its own members it manifested little, if any, interest. After the spirit of alienation developed in the churches and the relations with the East Pennsylvania Eldership became strained, matters relating thereto came up at each session. Then the Kimmel estate gave it a great deal of concern. At the Eldership held at Hepler's Bethel, Mahantango Valley, Schuylkill county, Pa., beginning Saturday, October 15, 1870, these two subjects claimed much attention. J. F. Welshampel preached the Opening Sermon on Sunday morning, from 2 Cor. iv. 1, 2, and on Monday morning the Eldership was constituted, with four circuits, eight preachers, five delegates and three members of the Missionary Committee and the Treasurer. J. F. Welshampel was elected Speaker; A. Snyder, Clerk, and S. Steigerwalt, Treasurer. The Committee on Resolutions at once reported, and referred to the lack of results at camp-meetings, and urged "falling back on the old plan of holding" them, and also advised holding "a union camp-meeting." It strongly endorsed the itinerancy, and in view of the small support pastors were receiving recommended the establishment of a "Preachers' Widows' Fund." Litigation over the Kimmel Will had not yet been ended. The question of divorce and remarriage was making some trouble, and the Eldership advised "for the sake of brethren who have conscientious scruples, and for the sake of peace in the future, not to join divorced persons in matrimony. The income of the Kimmel farm was reported to have been $472.94 for the year. A Corresponding Secretary was provided for, who was instructed each year to "draw up a circular letter of friendly and Christian greeting to all the Elderships of the Church of God." Good Friday was named as an annual day of fasting and prayer. The public reception of church members was insisted upon. Mission work and the collection of missionary money were strongly emphasized, the latter being made a special duty of each pastor. A Pentecostal meeting was appointed for 1871. The translation of the Bible by the American Bible Union was endorsed. "Standing Rules" for the Eldership were adopted at this Eldership.

18th German Eldership.—Fredericksburg, Lebanon county, was among the first churches which expressed officially an unwillingness to be further served by a minister of the German Eldership. A delegation was sent by said church to the annual session which convened at Center Bethel, Schuylkill county, October 21, 1871, instructed to "procure the use of the Bethel at that place for our portion of the congregation, through the East Pennsylvania Eldership." The Kimmel church preferred the same request. But the German Eldership made regular appointments to both points. A. Snyder was the Speaker; J. F. Welshampel, Clerk, and W. F. Motz, Treasurer. The Committee on Education reported "in favor of parents giving their children a liberal education, and of young ministers storing their minds with the useful knowledge of the day." The income for the year from the Kimmel Mission Farm was $536.71. A meeting-house had been rented at Mt. Carmel, Northumberland county. $15.00 were appropriated to pay the rent. The German paper, "Christlicher Kundschafter," was reported as steadily increasing in patronage, though it "did not yet pay the editor for his labor." There were three circuits, on which there were fourteen regular appointments. A bond was required of the Treasurer "after this year for his faithful performance of duty."

19th German Eldership.—As the time approached for the holding of the nineteenth session of the German Eldership, the Clerk published that it "is comprised of about a dozen preachers and eight churches." It convened at Auburn, Schuylkill county, on Monday, October 21, 1872, when eight preachers were present and six delegates. The officers of 1871 were re-elected. The net income of the Kimmel Mission farm received by the Eldership was $149.90. The names of two ministers "were ordered stricken from the Roll," and the names of three others were "placed in the hands of the Standing Committee." The Kimmel Will case was decided in favor of the Eldership in the court of Schuylkill county, and was appealed to the State Supreme Court. A minister of the Eldership was appointed to the Schuylkill circuit; but no pastor was assigned to Lebanon county. In Mahantango Valley, Deep Creek and Lykens Valleys there was so much dissatisfaction that H. Hackenberger, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was appointed to Mahantango circuit, "with the request that the East Pennsylvania Eldership appoint him to the Lykens Valley circuit, so that he can preach for both parties." Delegates were sent to the East Pennsylvania Eldership to work for harmonious co-operation; but the latter body proceeded upon the principle that the only thing to do was for the German Eldership churches to return to its care and fellowship.

20th German Eldership.—"Great harmony and good feeling characterized the three sittings of the Eldership" which convened at Steigerwalt's Bethel, near McKeanburg, Schuylkill county, October 25, 1873. The Opening Sermon was preached on Sunday morning, by Wm. Klinger. There were two delegates present from the Evangelical Mennonite Church, who addressed the Eldership, in response to which the body adopted "a resolution of cordial welcome, and a hope of closer acquaintance and union." Two delegates to their Annual Conference were appointed, at Coopersburg, Lehigh county, Pa. While one applicant for license was received, one was dropped because he had "embraced the New Light doctrine;" another because he had been conditionally licensed two years before, and had not since reported, and another because he had discovered that "Elderships are not of God." A "great decline in spirituality among the brethren" was reported, chiefly produced by the distracted state of things upon our fields of labor." Complaint was made that "through the favoring of the spirit of secession amongst our congregations, we have been greatly reduced in numerical strength; and that if this course be continued, and we should be compelled to dissolve, then the Kimmel legacy of $16,000.00 will be lost to the Church of God." An appeal was to be made by appointed delegates to the East Pennsylvania Eldership "not to pursue any longer a course that will encourage disaffection and secession in our German congregations." The death of John M. Hepler, a faithful minister, was much lamented. Two much reduced circuits received preachers, with three nominal missions.

21st German Eldership.—Efforts to cultivate closer fellowship between the German Eldership and the Evangelical Mennonite Church continued. Three delegates from the latter body were present when the Eldership convened at Auburn, Schuylkill county, October 24, 1874. One of these, S. Musselman, preached on Saturday evening. The Opening Sermon was delivered on Sunday morning, by Jacob M. Hepler, from 1 Tim. iii. 15, while in the afternoon, A. Strawn, Evangelical Mennonite, filled the pulpit. However, no action followed, looking to official union between the two bodies. The Eldership realized that it was "passing through dark and trying seasons," but it was "hopeful of better things in the future." J. M. Hepler was chosen Speaker; J. F. Weishampel, Clerk, and S. Steigerwalt, Treasurer. The Board of Missions reported having "received official notice of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Kimmel Will case, which was rendered in favor of the German Eldership." In addition to the Kimmel farm, the Treasurer reported that he had secured in cash $2,645.91, as part of "the Kimmel legacy, the balance of which will soon be placed into the hands of the Treasurer." But one circuit appointment was made—Schuylkill circuit—with three nominal missions.

22nd German Eldership.—There was considerable feeling manifested on the part of members of the German Eldership in 1875, over the action of the General Eldership in May of said year. The report which the delegate to the General Eldership made left the impression that said body was, or leading members thereof were, determined to "give the German Eldership its death-stroke" (todeschlog). This feeling was mollified by another action—that of electing the Editor of the German paper, "Der Christlicher Kundschafter," for a term of three years. The Eldership convened near McKeanburg, in the Steigerwalt Bethel, Schuylkill county, October 17, 1875. No one had been appointed to preach the Opening Sermon, but Elias Sowers preached on Sunday morning of said date what the Journal calls the "Eröffnungspredigt." There were enrolled nine preachers and seven delegates. J. M. Hepler was elected Speaker, and T. E. Snyder, Clerk. The Treasurer was S. Steigerwalt. This Eldership, as was the custom, concerned itself wholly with its own religious and financial interests, without taking any actions on temperance, education, etc. The Kimmel bequest had all been adjusted, and after all costs are paid there would be left in the treasury the sum of $3,231.40. The farm was rented, and yielded a fair income. While the German paper, "through the enmity which sprang from the unchristian schism, had lost many subscribers, which loss was partly made up by members of the Evangelical Mennonites, who had made it their organ. Nominally there were seven appointments, six of them missions, which were practically only such on the Journal.

23rd German Eldership.—The holding of Elderships in private houses was a rare occurrence; but the record of the German Eldership of 1876 states that the "session was held in West Penn township, Schuylkill county, Pa., and began on Saturday evening, September 30, 1876. The assembly will be held in a dwelling-house of Bro. Andrew Klechner, five miles from New Ringgold." There was preaching on Saturday evening, and on Sabbath morning the Opening Sermon was preached by J. M. Hepler. Six of the twelve ministers were present, and three delegates. The Speaker was Elias Sowers; the Clerk, J. F. Weishampel, and the Treasurer, Samuel Steigerwalt. The making of the appointments was left to the Standing Committee. Except Hepler, on the Schuylkill circuit, very little preaching was done on the six missions. Sowers reported preaching about every four weeks in Deep Creek Valley. Weishampel preached "where there was an open door for him." Wagner "did not preach often." Kinzey "had preached more or less on the Reading Mission." Menges, "Mt. Carmel mission, had preached but little." Busch, Baltimore mission, did "what was in his power." Klinger, Shamokin mission, "had no house in which to preach," but did some preaching at other points. The Missionary Committee reported having gathered $27.84. There was a surplus from the Mission farm of $61.25, while the total cash in hand from the Kimmel bequest was $3,343.00.

24th German Eldership.—A somewhat aggressive spirit characterized the Eldership which convened in the Steigerwalt Bethel, near McKeanburg, Schuylkill county, September 29, 1877. J. F. Weishampel preached the Opening Sermon, from 1 Cor. ix. 12. Samuel Steigerwalt, who had been Treasurer for some time, had died during the year, and there was charged against him on account of the Kimmel bequest, $3,308.59, for which Wm. F. Steigerwalt, administrator, made settlement. Eli Sowers was chosen Speaker; J. F. Weishampel, Clerk, and F. Wagner, Treasurer. Eight ministers were present, and five, absent, with one exhorter and five delegates. Weishampel announced that the "Christlicher Kundschafter" would cease to be published on April 1, 1878; but he "was ordered to continue the paper by authority of this body." A small organization in Reading made application for membership, "as they expressed agreement with us in faith and practice," and desired a mission to be established in that city. E. Sowers was accordingly "appointed to the new mission church in Reading." The income from the Kimmel farm was $285.31; "outlay for repairs and widow's dower, $240.60, leaving a balance of $44.71." The churches were "urged to establish Sunday-schools, as a very great necessity in the spread of the gospel." A camp-meeting was directed to be held "on the old camp-ground on the Kimmel farm."

25th German Eldership.—The Eldership in 1877 adjourned to meet with "the new mission church in Reading, Berks county;" but the Standing Committee changed the place to Stagerwalt's, where the members convened on October 12, 1878, the business sittings beginning on the 14th. The Opening Sermon was preached on Sabbath morning, by Amos Lehman. Seven ministers were present, and five, absent; also three delegates were present. The officers of 1877 were re-elected. The fields of labor were the Schuylkill circuit, Berks and Lebanon mission and the Lancaster mission, which was purely nominal. The Board of Incorporation had contracted for a chapel in Reading, "and paid a small sum upon it." The income from the Mission Farm was $383.81; the expenditures, $386.16. The matter of continuing the publication of the German paper consumed a good deal of time. Said paper, like all periodical publications for the Church, was under the control and supervision of the General Eldership, and could be published only by its authority. But said body had ordered its discontinuance at the session in 1878. Hence the "German Eldership could not consistently authorize its publication as under its jurisdiction." To avoid responsibility, Weishampel expressed his intention "to continue the publication on his own responsibility;" but the Eldership approved his course, and "advised and urged the German reading brethren to support the publisher by patronizing the paper." It made the relations of the German Eldership to the General Eldership more acute, and because of factional difficulties in the East Pennsylvania Eldership aggravated the unpleasant conditions there. While the Stationing Committee made three appointments, but one, the Schuylkill circuit, had a constituency.

26th German Eldership.—The action of the German Eldership in 1878 on the matter of the "Kundschafter" was such a manifest evasion, and an act of insubordination, that during the year the Executive Board of the General Eldership took action, again "calling the attention of the German Eldership to the action of the General Eldership, which ordered the discontinuance of the paper," but that "the paper is still published by a member of the German Eldership." The subject was brought before the session which convened in West Penn township, Schuylkill county, on Monday, October 20, 1879. The Opening Sermon was preached the Sabbath morning previous, by J. M. Hepler. The officers of the preceding year were re-elected. On the matter of publishing the "Christlicher Kundschafter," the Eldership disclaimed responsibility, declaring also "that we have no right to condemn J. F. Weishampel for pursuing the lawful calling of printing a religious newspaper, nor to interfere in, or order him to discontinue the "Christlicher Kundschafter." The appointment of preachers was left to the Standing Committee, but the Eldership added the Mahantango and Deep Creek Valley to the Schuylkill circuit. The total receipts during the year reported by the Treasurer were $223.50; expenditures, $164.57. The amount of the Kimmel fund on interest was $3,000.00. "The wood off a certain portion of ground owned by the Eldership" the Board of Incorporation" was authorized to sell," "so as to get the use of the land for tillage."

27th German Eldership.—In the Opening Sermon delivered on the evening of October 17, 1880, the preacher, J. F. Weishampel, "reviewed the history of the Church of God, going back about sixty years. He found the state of religion in the central part of Pennsylvania, where this body of Christians took its rise, mostly in a formal condition in many thousands of church members, who had a form of ceremonial religion, but were without the enjoyments which true spiritual religion affords." On Monday morning the Eldership was constituted with one pastor, five "missionaries" and two delegates. Eli Sowers was chosen Speaker; J. F. Weishampel, Clerk, and F. Wagner, Treasurer. In response to a letter from the Secretary of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, asking for a contribution of, at least, twenty-five cents a year for each member, action was taken to that effect. The amount asked by said Secretary for Contingent Fund was collected on the floor of the Eldership. Improvements on the Mission Farm used up all the income in the way of rent. One field of labor was all the Eldership had, and this was left in the care of the Standing Committee. But there were assignments of eleven "missionaries," who preached as they found opportunity. No resolutions were adopted, except the ordinary ones on the officers, and for entertainment. "The Half Century Jubilee Song of the Church of God in North America," which was written by the Clerk of the Eldership, was circulated. The session was held at Weishampeltown, Schuylkill county, and lasted but one day.

28th German Eldership.—The General Eldership in 1881 having made a demand on the German Eldership to carry out its action relative to J. F. Weishampel, the session of 1881, held at Steigerwalt's Bethel, beginning on October 31, devoted considerable time to the matter. After reciting the facts, as viewed by the Eldership, in a long preamble, it adopted resolutions "disapproving all the wrong which Bro. Weishampel may have done, and censured him for the same, and enjoined him to abide by the Rules of the General Eldership." It also declared "that the German Eldership feels greatly grieved at being treated in so unfriendly a manner by the General Eldership." Weishampel having expressed his intention to discontinue the "Kundschafter" in the Spring of 1882, A. Snyder was requested "to take measures to continue" the same. The one circuit which the Eldership had was supplied by one of the teaching elders. "All the other preachers as local ministers," was the Report of the Stationing Committee. Elias Sowers presided as Speaker, and J. F. Weishampel was the Clerk. The Board of Incorporation, through its Treasurer, reported receipts of $338.90, and expenditures, $295.58. F. Wagner was re-elected Treasurer.

29th German Eldership.—The German Eldership in 1882 was again held at Steigerwalt's Bethel, and convened on Saturday, October 18th. The Opening Sermon was delivered by Eli Sowers on Sabbath morning, from 1 Tim. i. 16. After the Eldership was constituted on Monday morning, J. K. Moyer, Isaac Hoffmeister and Dr. Chas. E. Quail, "delegates from the Independent church of God at Auburn, Schuylkill county," presented an action of said church, agreeing "to unite with the German Eldership again on condition that our house of worship shall remain our own church property." It also agreed "to receive a preacher from the German Eldership, if it can supply them with one that they can receive;" stipulated that they shall have the right to regulate their "own domestic affairs" as they may think best, and that "Moyer shall not be compelled to take a license to preach in order to be entitled to a preacher's rights" in the German Eldership. The resolutions of the Independent church were adopted, and "the three delegates were considered a part of the present session." This action, or "reunion," added two preachers to the Eldership—J. K. Moyer, and F. W. Berkheiser, pastor of the Independent church. J. K. Moyer was then elected Speaker, and J. F. Weishampel, Clerk. After the report of the Treasurer was made, F. Wagner was re-elected Treasurer. Moyer was also elected President of the Board of Incorporation, and Quail, Secretary. Berkheiser was appointed pastor of the Schuylkill circuit, to begin his labors January 1, 1883. This field was quite extensive, as it "embraced Steigerwalt's, Auburn, Center Bethel and Weishampeltown churches, and Mahantango, Rocktown, Cressona and West Penn missions." "It was a very pleasant and happy session."

30th German Eldership.—The ministers and delegates of the German Eldership gathered at Auburn, Schuylkill county, on Saturday, November 10, 1883, to hold the annual session. Elias Sowers preached in the evening. On "Sabbath morning Elder J. K. Moyer delivered the Opening Sermon, and in the evening Franklin Berkheiser preached." When the Eldership convened on Monday at 9 a. m., "an election resulted in the choice of J. K. Moyer, Speaker; Franklin Wagner, Treasurer, and Charles E. Quail, Clerk." Five ministers were present, and seven delegates. During the year Jacob M. Hepler died, and his death was lamented as that of an efficient and useful member of the Eldership. At the close of the afternoon sitting the Eldership adjourned, having "appointed a committee to select a preacher for the circuit." It reconvened on December 5, 1883, "to finish the business, when Franklin Berkheiser was elected to supply the churches for the ensuing year."

31st German Eldership.—It does not appear that Berkheiser was at any time licensed by the German Eldership. Like J. K. Moyer, after the Independent church at Auburn again united with the German Eldership, his relation seems to have been that of honorary member; but he possessed all the rights of an ordained minister of the body. Like Moyer, he was eligible to office, and so when the Eldership convened at Auburn, Schuylkill county, November 1, 1884, he presided as Speaker. The doings of this session were not published. Dr. Charles E. Quail, Clerk, simply announced through The Advocate the time and place of the meeting. Because of the increasing infirmities of Weishampel, his "Kundschafter" was discontinued, and so there is, like in the remarkable copy of "Ingoldsby Legends," owned by an admirer of the work, "a page in the body of the book which had been left blank."

32nd German Eldership.—During the year past the German Eldership sustained a serious loss in the death of J. F. Weishampel, chiefly instrumental in its organization, and its faithful advocate and defender. He received his first license from the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1843. He served only a few fields as pastor. He traveled a great deal, and was as widely known personally to the brotherhood as almost any minister of the Church. He had an unusual faculty for applying himself to new and varied occupations. He was a printer, editor and a facile writer; but he lacked the quality of leadership, and was frequently involved in controversies. A man of good character and honest purpose, but his accomplishments were on a limited scale. He had some poetic talent, and would have attained more distinction as a correspondent, or in literature, than he did in the pulpit. His last years were embittered with personal contentions which cost him the good will of many of his earlier friends in all the churches. The Committee on Obituaries of the Eldership made suitable mention of his many good traits and recognized his valuable services to the German cause. The Eldership held its session at Steigerwalt's Bethel, Schuylkill county, beginning November 1, 1885, when F. W. Berkheiser delivered the Opening Sermon, from Ezek. xliii. 10, 11. Four teaching elders were present, and four absent; with four delegates. Berkheiser was chosen Speaker, and C. E. Quail, Clerk. Isaac Hoffmeister was Treasurer. There was but one field of labor, to which Berkheiser was appointed, toward whose support the Eldership voted $300.00. No report was published of the income from the Mission Farm, or interest from investments. A complete organization, in the way of boards and committees, was kept up, so as to care for the large Kimmel estate bequeathed to the Eldership.

33rd German Eldership.—Conditions were not improving in the German Eldership, and probably in the absence of the cohesive power of the Kimmel bequest.

its existence could not have been perpetuated. But it became a source of irritation to the surrounding churches of God, which began to agitate the question of seeking the abrogation of its Charter by the General Eldership. It was not an easy matter to get an acceptable preacher for the few churches which still remained in fellowship with it. Berkheiser was only with it temporarily. When it convened at Auburn, Schuylkill county, November 6, 1886, W. B. Musselman preached on Saturday evening, and ——— Hershey on Sunday morning and evening. Neither was a minister of the Church of God, yet Hershey's Sunday morning sermon was recognized as the Opening Sermon. Both were enrolled as "elders present." The membership consisted of four German Eldership ministers and two delegates. Berkheiser and Quail were re-elected Speaker and Clerk, and Hoffmeister, Treasurer. J. Rupp had died during the year. A collection was ordered in each church for missionary purposes. Bush received "license to preach at Baltimore, Md." In addition to the appointment of "Berkheiser circuit preacher," with an appropriation of $300.00, Edward Mengel was named "as missionary," he "to receive $25.00 from the general fund." The meeting was considered "one of the most encouraging the body had held for some years."

36th German Eldership.—No reports of the sessions of 1887 and 1888 were published, but conditions remained unchanged. In 1889 R. H. Bolton, College Agent, visited the German Eldership territory at the time of the meeting of the body at Auburn, Schuylkill county. He preached what was virtually the Opening Sermon, on Sunday evening, November 3rd. On Monday morning the Eldership was organized by the election of Frederick Wagner, Speaker, and Dr. C. E. Quail, Clerk. Joseph Fahl received license, and he succeeded Berkheiser as pastor of the churches of the Eldership. Bolton reports the value of the Kimmel estate in the hands of the Eldership at $6,000.00 for the farm, and $3,000.00 cash. He supposes this "would all be lost to the body if the German Eldership became extinct. Hence, these German brethren are holding on, and hope to maintain their existence as an Eldership. They have but five ministers now, and three churches under their direct supervision." To the general body much has been lost in Schuylkill county as a result of the policy of organizing the German Eldership within the East Pennsylvania Eldership. The seeds of strife, contention and disintegration thus sown have yielded a harvest sad to contemplate.

37th German Eldership.—The German Eldership in 1890 and 1891 did not publish any part of its proceedings. This may be attributed to the fact that in 1890 the first attempt of an official character was made to end its existence. At the General Eldership of 1890 the East Pennsylvania churches at Auburn and Kimmel's sent a representative, S. C. Stonessifer, to the General Eldership to petition said body to revoke the Charter of the German Eldership. This was opposed by C. E. Quail, the delegate of the German Eldership, and the subject was finally referred to the East Pennsylvania Eldership for official action. This action was duly taken, and the question came before the General Eldership in proper official form in 1893, when the Charter of the German Eldership was revoked, and all its privileges as an organized body were canceled. Since then said Eldership has not been recognized as in existence, and its territory, churches and property were adjudged to belong to the East Pennsylvania Eldership.

In 1892 the German Eldership published in The Church Advocate a list of its officers, members of the Standing Committee, Mission Committee; two delegates to the General Eldership in 1893, Geo. A. Stein and Joseph M. Fahl, and its one pastor. But these delegates were not present at the General Eldership in 1893, and so there was no opposition to the action taken by said body. The German Eldership, however, determined to resist all efforts to merge it into the East Pennsylvania Eldership and to give the latter body possession of its churches and property. The Attorney-in-fact of the General Eldership and of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, C. H. Forney, was present at the session of the German Eldership in 1893, and proposed an amicable adjustment of all matters in controversy. These overtures were rejected. Steps were immediately taken to secure legal advice and begin proceedings in the courts of Schuylkill county with a view of giving legal effect to the action of the General Eldership, and to have appointed by the court the Board of Incorporation of the East Pennsylvania Eldership "as the trustee of the estate of George Kimmel, deceased, to carry out and effectuate the trusts and the religious and benevolent purposes created and provided for by the said last Will and Testament of the said George Kimmel." This the said German Eldership resisted, and a protracted law suit resulted, conducted by successive reappointments by the General and East Pennsylvania Elderships of C. H. Forney as Attorney-in-fact, and the members of the Board of Incorporation of the German Eldership, George A. Stein, Thomas Hartung, William Gangloff, Lewis Osenbach, Thomas Paul, Reuben Mengel, Frank Poland, Abraham Zimmerman and Howard Mengel. Two vital questions were involved upon which the result of the litigation seemed to hinge, to wit: The power of the General Eldership to dissolve an Annual Eldership; and, the effect of an Act of the Legislature, incorporating a religious body. The contention of the prosecution was, that while there is no specific provision to that effect in the Constitution of the General Eldership, it is clearly implied in powers granted. Also, that this is Presbyterian law, and that the government of the Church of God is presbyterial. Hence the Bill in Equity stated, "that the German Eldership has ceased to exist ever since 1893." On the second point it was claimed, that the decision in the Harrisburg Church Case settled the question as to the effect of an Act of Incorporation, since, though the Fourth Street church was incorporated, that fact did not entitle the independent church to hold its property against the expressed will of the Eldership. From November, 1893, to November, 1895, no progress was made in the case. As at the latter date the Attorney-in-fact was advised that the German Eldership, which kept up its regular organization, and still does, had taken action proposing a re-opening of the case before the General Eldership in 1896, he ordered a suspension of the suit. But though the General Eldership convened in Harrisburg, Pa., the delegates from the German Eldership did not appear, and no communication was received. The Attorney-in-fact having been reappointed, he employed A. W. Schalck as "Solicitor for Complaints," and began active work to push the case to an early conclusion. But "the law's delays" operated so effectually that the Bill in Equity was not filed until May 2, 1898, and the taking of oral testimony was still further delayed until October, 1899. The preparation of the documentary evidence required time and tedious labor. But there were other, and possibly unavoidable, delays, so that it was not until October, 1908, that the Attorney-in-fact could report to the Eldership, that the Solicitor had promised "that the case will be argued before the close of the year." This followed the labors of the Attorney-in-fact, assisted by C. H. Grove, in August, 1908, when the final systemizing and classifying of the voluminous evidence was completed. In this anticipation disappointment had to be reported at the Eldership in 1909. During all these delays efforts were not wanting to effect a settlement out of court. On two occasions overtures to this end were made to the Respondents, "with a view of seeking an amicable adjustment of matters in litigation." Also in 1905, "the German Eldership (so-called) was officially requested to send representatives to the General Eldership" for the same purpose. They were appointed, and were present at Mt. Pleasant General Eldership in that year. Conferences were held between them and a committee appointed for that purpose. Said committee finally reported, that the representatives of the German Eldership declared that they had "no authority to accept any propositions' looking toward a settlement," and hence the committee, "unable to offer any plan by which the case at issue can now be adjusted," "recommended the continuance of the Attorney-in-fact to prosecute the case to a final judicial conclusion." In 1909 the Attorney-in-fact reported to the East Pennsylvania Eldership at Auburn, that he had "since May last permitted the case to lie quite, in order to allow efforts to be made anew for an amicable settlement out of Court." He also asked "that such action be taken by the Eldership so that any overtures to this end may receive proper recognition and consideration." A committee, consisting of C. H. Forney, C. H. Grove and C. F. Reitzel, was named "to confer with representatives of the German Eldership." And while said representatives again "disclaimed any authority to act for their Eldership," a basis of settlement was "mutually agreed" upon, to be submitted to each of the Elderships for approval, or rejection, or modification. It was adopted, without an amendment, by the East Pennsylvania Eldership. It also authorized "the Standing Committee to meet a committee of the German Eldership sometime prior to the meeting of the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1910 to make arrangements to carry the recommendations into effect." The German Eldership, while it appointed a committee, did not act on the basis agreed upon and gave its committee no power to enter into any binding agreement. Hence, when the two committees finally met at the Kimmel Church, nothing could be done, as in addition to having no power, the members of the German Eldership committee individually refused to accept the basis submitted by the East Pennsylvania Eldership. This fruitless effort to effect peace, harmony and union was reported to the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1910. And as it was ordered in 1909, "that the legal proceedings in the courts of Schuylkill county shall be suspended until otherwise ordered," in the absence of such an order by the Eldership, there has since been no resumption of proceedings. The German Eldership has, however, received no legal or official recognition by either the General Eldership, nor any of the annual Elderships; but it has been treated, as stated in the Bill in Equity, as having ceased to exist ever since 1893, and as no longer competent to execute any of the trusts created by, or provided for, in the said last Will and Testament of the said George Kimmel."

IX. THE WEST OHIO ELDERSHIP.

The West Ohio Eldership was formed to meet a natural demand growing out of the preponderating strength of the Ohio Eldership in the north-western section of the State; the distance to, and inconvenience in attending, Annual Eldership sessions, and patriotic sentiment, or State pride. Indiana Eldership embraced a number of counties in Ohio, whose natural affiliation would be with an Ohio Eldership, and ministers and Church families were largely from older sections of the State. And as the ministers and churches West of the proposed line of division between the contemplated East and West Ohio Elderships were in the majority, they could control the matter of forming the new Eldership. But every step taken was with deliberation and in order, and with unanimity. With no recorded opposition, no objections and no protests, the Ohio Eldership in October, 1855, adopted a resolution "recommending to the General Eldership [of 1857] the propriety of organizing an Eldership in western Ohio, with the consent of the Indiana Eldership." This action having been published, and no protests having been received, in 1856 the Eldership readopted its recommendation to the General Eldership. It also authorized the Standing Committee to agree upon, and suggest, the boundary line between the East and the West Ohio Elderships. It was to ask for a conference with the Standing Committee of the Indiana Eldership to pre-arrange matters for the meeting of the General Eldership in 1857. The joint meeting of the two Standing Committees was called to be held at Upper Sandusky, Wyandot county, Ohio, February 7, 1857. In the absence of the Standing Committee of the Indiana Eldership, the Ohio Standing Committee requested said Committee to agree "to make the State line between Ohio and Indiana the boundary line between the two Elderships." It also suggested "the propriety of arranging the boundary line between the Eastern and Western Ohio Elderships as follows: Commencing at Portsmouth on the Ohio River, thence north up the Scioto River to the south line of Franklin county, thence to the south-east corner of said county, thence north on the said county lines of Franklin, Delaware, Marion, Crawford, Seneca, Sandusky and Ottawa." The proposed line made nearly an equal division of the State. The General Eldership, sitting at Harrisburg, Pa., on Wednesday afternoon, June 3, 1857, adopted the report of its Committee on Boundaries, which approved the proposed division of the Ohio Eldership, and fixed the boundaries between the East and West Ohio Elderships and between the West Ohio Eldership and the Indiana Eldership as petitioned by the Ohio Eldership in the action of its Standing Committee.

1st West Ohio Eldership.—Everything officially being thus perfected, J. M. West, "one of the Standing Committee" announced that "the Western Ohio Eldership is requested to meet on Wednesday, the 14th of October, ready to organize on the 15th, at Upper Sandusky, Wyandot county, Ohio." This was in 1857. "All the members in the bounds of the Eldership, and all who wish to become members" were "requested to attend without fail." West "called the house to order," and T. Hickernell "opened the Eldership with the usual acts of worship." T. H. Deshiri and T. Hickernell constituted the Eldership, enrolling fifteen ministers, seven ruling elders and three delegates. Thomas Hickernell was elected Speaker; J. M. West, First Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Second Clerk. Eight committees were appointed by the Speaker, and the Eldership "appointed a Board of Missions and a Stationing Committee." Hickernell was appointed "to preach the Opening Sermon this evening." The Committee on Rules reported twelve Rules. The Opening Sermon was based on 1 John ii. 6. The Constitution of the original Ohio Eldership Board of Missions was adopted. White, of Michigan, was present, and asked for a minister, but the Eldership found it "impossible at present." Nine ministers volunteered to travel. One was licensed—A. Rush. The Eldership insisted on Transfers, declaring that it "will receive no minister from any other body without a transfer or recommendation." A resolution was passed in favor of "the daily reading of the Scriptures in our common schools, as a school-book," and one "heartily advising all brethren to abstain from using tobacco in the house of God during divine service." "The propriety of erecting an institution of education, on the donation system, in West Ohio, to teach pupils free of tuition" was considered. The work of the American Bible Union was strongly commended. "Slavery, the sum of all evils" was pronounced "contrary to the spirit and letter of the gospel," and the Eldership pledged itself "to labor and render all the aid and sympathy possible for those in bonds." Believing the subject of temperance "to be overlooked and neglected to a great degree," the Eldership advised that "it be revived in the pulpit and in the churches." The ministers were directed "to solicit one dime from each member... for missionary purposes, to be forwarded to Elder James Colder," Harrisburg, Pa. The circuits to which eight ministers were appointed were Attica, Carey, Findlay, Clintonville, Celina, Defiance.

2nd West Ohio Eldership.—The first Eldership has no official title on its Minutes. The second, which "convened in Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, September 16, 1858," is called "The West Ohio Eldership of the Churches of God." John Winebrenner was present, and preached the Opening Sermon from Ezra v. 11. He was made "a member of this body during its sittings," and was chairman of the Committee on License. Wm. McFadden, of Harrisburg, Pa., was also made a member of this Eldership. The Speaker elected was T. Hickernell, with J. M. West, Journalizing Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Transcribing Clerk. Some extensive revivals were reported. At the nine special meetings on the Blanchard circuit, Bolton and Wm. McCormick, pastors, there were one hundred and twenty conversions. Coates reported eighty-three on the Carey circuit. The conduct of the Editor of The Advocate was disapproved, "in publishing articles and communications which are derogatory to the character of some of our ministerial brethren, and then refuses them the right and privilege of defending themselves." And then it specifically branded a letter of A. B. Slyter "in which he has misrepresented Elder John Winebrenner, as one of these unbecoming and injurious communications, entirely unjustifiable." A committee was named "to have the West Ohio Eldership incorporated."

3rd West Ohio Eldership.—The work of the Standing Committee during the year appeared in constituting the Eldership which assembled "in the Bethel near West Liberty, Crawford county, Ohio, October 5, 1859." One charge was added to the list; two points are stations, and several names are changed. Eleven of the twenty-six ministers were absent. Twelve ruling elders and six delegates were present. The resolution of 1858 the Eldership corrected so as to read, "That our preachers proceed to their appointed fields of labor forthwith after the Eldership." The spirit of independency manifested by some "churches within our bounds" was rebuked in trenchant terms, as "resulting invariably in divisions, alienations and tumults, detrimental to our union, harmony and co-operation." Christmas day was recommended to be set apart by ministers and churches as a day of fasting and prayer.

4th West Ohio Eldership.—The West Ohio Eldership was steadily growing both as to ministers and membership. It was becoming one of the strongest Elderships in the moral and intellectual strength of its teaching elders. There were new accessions of men of promise from the ranks, and the strong men of eastern Ohio were attracted to it. At the Eldership which met in the Bethel near Mendon, Mercer county, Ohio, October 15, 1860, W. P. Small and C. S. Bolton received license. G. W. Wilson was chosen Speaker; R. H. Bolton, First Clerk, and James George, Second Clerk. Advisory ministers were accorded the privileges of full members during the session. Tiffin was a station, and there were four circuits and one mission—Maumee. The Eldership offered to the Indiana Eldership to have the churches east of St. Mary's River added to the West Ohio Eldership if the Indiana Eldership "cannot conveniently supply them." Among the difficulties to be adjusted this year was one involving "the General Agent of the General Eldership, J. F. Weishampel." The Standing Committee at its meeting in August had accused him of committing "grievous offenses: 1. By disseminating pro-slavery principles. 2. By disseminating sectarian principles. 3. By circulating slanderous reports against Elder John Winebrenner." The Eldership simply adopted the Report of the Committee, although it pronounced, without a hearing, Weishampel's "actions censurable and his guilt intolerable." Instead of seeking redress according to the Constitution, Weishampel, after waiting four months, in a letter dated December 1st, and published January 3, 1861, resented this treatment in pungent and impassioned terms. To this letter G. W. Wilson, member pro tem of the Standing Committee, replied in a communication dated February 9, 1861, defending the action of the Committee. Charges had also been preferred against Elder Moses Coates. The Committee heard them in the absence of the accused, and reported their actions to the Eldership, and the report was considered consecutively and adopted. But as Coates "confessed" to some of the charges that "he had done wrong," "pardon was granted him" on those charges. Yet the Eldership finally resolved "that he be no longer a member of this body." When various publications had been approved, a resolution prevailed "commending all who conveniently can, to prepare and publish as many books as possible on suitable subjects." After strong resolutions were adopted on the life and character of Winebrenner, it was ordered that "a funeral sermon be preached to-night on the death of Elder Winebrenner by Bro. T. Hickernell." "A solemn and impressive sermon from 2 Tim. iv. 7, was preached." It favored the erection of a monument over Winebrenner's grave, and urged ministers and brethren to solicit and forward contributions for that purpose. The sin of slavery "was declared to be "increasing most alarmingly" and "making fearful inroads upon the interests of humanity," and the Eldership resolved to "do everything within the province of Christians, and especially ministers of the gospel, to arrest the progress of this evil, and ultimately to erase it from our land."

5th West Ohio Eldership.—Only a synopsis, by direction of the Eldership, "of the leading items of the doings" of the Eldership of 1861 was published. "The West Ohio Eldership of the Churches of God convened in Union Bethel, Hopewell township, Seneca county, Ohio, on Monday morning, October 14, 1861." Fourteen teaching elders were present, and eleven absent; with nine ruling elders and four delegates. G. W. Wilson was elected "Chairman;" R. H. Bolton, First Clerk, and James George, Second Clerk. The Eldership "forwarded $5.00 for the publication of the Journal in full, to Bro. Thomas, in pamphlet form, in connection with other Minutes of Elderships of the Churches of God in North America." "The intestine and treasonal strife, with thousands of armed rebels threatening our national Capitol, and even our national existence," was deplored and anathematized. The Eldership resolved "to pray for our rulers;" "to pray unceasingly that God will defend the right and give success in this struggle of our nation to perpetuate its existence;" "to pray for our soldiers that have gone at their country's call to defend the liberties we enjoy;" "to pray that God will so overrule this national calamity that the blighting curse of slavery, which is the originating cause of all this loss of blood and treasure, may be swept from the land." The strongest sentiments of patriotism were voiced in resolutions following this Report, in resolutions on Elder C. S. Bolton, who "had laid aside the pleasures of a quiet home, and marched forth at his country's call to the defense of freedom and the Constitution." St. Mary's circuit was added to the West Ohio Eldership appointments, in addition to which there were five circuits and one station. Tiffin became part of Findlay circuit.

6th West Ohio Eldership.—The plan of publishing the Journals of all the Annual Elderships in one pamphlet having proved impracticable, the Journal of the West Ohio Eldership again appeared in full in The Advocate in 1862. The session was held in the Bethel in Jefferson township, Williams county, Ohio, commencing on Monday morning, October 20, 1862. The attendance was small, as twenty out of twenty-nine teaching elders were absent, and but seven delegates and five ruling elders were in attendance. An election for officers resulted in the choice of T. Hickernell for Speaker; R. H. Bolton, First Clerk, and James George, Second Clerk. As a result of "the present unhappy state of our country," the Eldership affirmed that "immorality and recklessness are fearfully on the rise, and the vice of intemperance . . . seeks to spread its evil influence wider, and make drunkenness more general;" "opening the floodgates of every vice; filling the air with the shrieks and cries of the distressed and broken hearted." It therefore resolved that "it is the duty of all Christians to use all their energies against this blighting and soul-withering curse;" that it "will try to discourage any countenance that may be given to the unholy traffic by the patronage of professing Christians," and "heartily approving of the course of the War and Navy Department in prohibiting the use of ardent spirits in the Army." Ringing resolutions were reported by the Committee on the State of the Country, approving the course of the Government; disclaiming "all sympathy with rebellion or secession in either Church or State;" attributing "the devastation and confiscation of property, the loss of life, the mangling and ruining of bodies, the blood that has already drenched our once happy land" to "slavery as one of the main causes." A committee was reappointed "to draft a new Constitution for the Board of Missions." M. Coates, coming "with sufficient contrition and penitence, and asking pardon of all he had offended," was restored to fellowship and a license granted him. The President's Proclamation of Emancipation was "hailed with joy" by the Eldership, "as the harbinger of a new era in the affairs of our country," and the hope expressed "that the time will speedily arrive when universal emancipation shall be proclaimed throughout the land." The work of the American Bible Society was strongly commended. The "revival of the Sunday-school cause" was strongly urged upon the ministers "as calculated to further the spiritual interests of the Church." The conversion during the year of one hundred and fifty souls, the immersion of fifty-one, and the organization of six new churches were reported.

7th West Ohio Eldership.—On Sabbath morning, October 18, 1863, A. X. Shoemaker, Harrisburg, Pa., preached to the West Ohio Eldership a sermon on "The Ministry." The Eldership convened on Monday morning, the 19th, in the Rock Run Bethel, Wyandot county, Ohio, the Opening Sermon having been preached the previous evening, by J. W. Aukerman. G. W. Wilson was elected Speaker; R. H. Bolton, First Clerk, and H. W. Conley, Second Clerk. After the Committee on Resolutions had called attention to "two very important questions now agitating the Christian public:—1st. The relation of a Christian citizen to the Government of the United States; and 2nd, His duty to that Government in the present contest between it and the States in open rebellion against its authority"—it proposed that "we invite Bro. G. W. Wilson to preach on said subject this evening." Books written and published by ministers of the Church were recommended to "the ministers, brethren and people within the bounds of this Eldership," and the brethren were urged "to write out and publish more useful books for the Church and people." An Eldership Protocol, to contain all the Minutes of the body and of its Standing Committee was ordered to be secured. As a body of Christians was found to exist in northern Ohio and southern Michigan, known as "the Church of God in Christ;" and as said body "holds to similar views to those we hold to be taught in the Bible;" and as "those of like precious faith should co-operate in one body to promote the cause of God our Savior," the Committee on Resolutions asked the Eldership "that two delegates be appointed to attend their next Eldership in order to bring about a union of the two bodies, if practicable." R. H. Bolton and James Wilson were appointed. Ministers and deacons were averred to be negligent in the discharge of their duties in the matter of the support of pastors, and were "urged to lay the support of the ministers clearly before their congregations, and urge them to be faithful in the performance of their duties." The Committee on the State of the Country was sustained in declaring it to be "the responsible mission of the American people to maintain unimpaired the unity and integrity of this Government;" "that all its subjects owe loyalty to the rightful authority of the Government;" that "there can be no right of revolution under a democratic form of government," and demanding "the complete abolition of slavery, which is a sinful, unnatural and cruel system." "No intelligent Christian, or friend of humanity can sympathize with the authors of the self-styled Southern Confederacy" because "they are rebels," "they are traitors," "they are murderers," "they are the destroyers of the peace, commerce, institutions and happiness of their country." The Constitution of "the Missionary Aid Society" was considered and adopted. The Chicago Mission project was strongly endorsed, and "solicitors and collectors were appointed" to "take subscriptions for three years." One hundred and eighty-seven were received into fellowship during the year, out of two hundred and sixty-six reported conversions, and the total membership was given as eight hundred and fifty. Seven ministers volunteered to travel fields the following year. These were assigned to five circuits and two missions, with one other mission to be supplied by an eighth minister. Genessee Mission, Mich., was one of the mission fields.

8th West Ohio Eldership.—The proposition to seek to effect a union with the Church of God in Christ bore fruit to the extent that when the West Ohio Eldership met in the United Brethren meeting-house in Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, October 17, 1864. J. Huff and J. Hardee were present as representatives of said Church, and were made advisory members. The committee to visit the annual Conference of said Church reported; the Eldership "approved of the efforts that are making for a union," and appointed "two delegates to their next annual meeting." The Eldership elected D. Shriner, Speaker; C. S. Bolton, First Clerk, and G. E. Ewing, Second Clerk. Contrary to the teachings of many in those days, the Eldership declared that "the Bible stands opposed to oppression in humanity and injustice as is embodied in the slave traffic; therefore we, taking the Bible for our criterion, can not conscientiously and religiously unite in church or Christian fellowship with any man who justifies, or has fellowship, or persists in the sinful practice of buying, or selling, or holding any human being in bondage." The President's confiscation and Emancipation Proclamation "has our hearty approval." There was one negative vote on the resolution on slavery. Declaring further its "unwavering confidence in, and loyalty to, the Government," the Eldership resolved that it "can not hold fellowship with any brother who will knowingly and in any way aid the rebellion, or conspiracy against this Government of the United States in the North or South." The "fervent prayers" of the Eldership are "tendered to the President and all others with him in authority for the final overthrow and triumphant success in suppressing the rebellion, perpetuating and sustaining the union of all the States, and restoring an honorable and permanent peace, founded in justice, liberty and union." Hence, on the first breath of suspicion as to the loyalty of J. Dobson he was put on trial upon charges preferred against him, "authorized by the Eldership;" but he "having answered satisfactorily all the interrogations of the Eldership, was exonerated." The Eldership resolved "in no way to give aid or countenance to any man who will engage in the bitter curse of the rum traffic, either in furnishing material for distilling, selling or otherwise distributing as a beverage intoxicating liquors." It pronounced in favor of an educated, energetic and efficient ministry, "and so insisted that the ministers pursue a regular course of studies." The Sabbath-school was voted to be the most highly important of the enterprises of the present age, and each preacher was required to preach a sermon on this subject. Every itinerant minister was required at the next Eldership to report "all money and other articles received from each church on his circuit," "the same to be entered on the records of the Eldership." Six circuits were formed, two of which were left unsupplied.

9th West Ohio Eldership.—The West Ohio Eldership in 1865 had not less than thirty preaching places, divided among eight fields of labor. One of these was Michigan Mission, and another Degraff Mission. There were appointments in Lucas county, of which Toledo is the county seat, which belonged to the Church of God in Christ, but which the Eldership was requested to supply. They were attached to Findlay circuit. Findlay station had the three points of Findlay, Blanchard and Hickory Grove. The Eldership met in the Rock Run Bethel, Wyandot county, Ohio, on Monday morning, October 16, 1865. In addition to the teaching elders and ruling elders, the members of the Board of Missions composed of laymen not members of the Eldership, were made full members, as well as Long and Selby, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and Adams and Landes, of the East Ohio Eldership. The session on Monday afternoon was enlivened with "a warm discussion" of the question of "preaching doctrine contrary to the known views of this body without previous consultation." The majority favored the resolution, but as it seemed to resemble an unwritten Creed, it was reconsidered at once after another "lengthy debate," and changed so as to express the opinion "that it is outside of the calling of a gospel minister to preach a doctrine which he can not prove directly by the Bible." But before this was adopted there was "a warm and lengthy debate." Subscribing toward the support of a minister, and refusing to pay when there is ability, was made an offense subject to discipline. "Hostilities between the Government of the United States and the rebel forces" having ceased, the Eldership rejoiced in "the overthrow of the Rebellion," "the stability of our form of Government," "the abandonment of the vile and damnable system of slavery," "the elevation of the colored race to the enjoyment of their natural and inalienable rights," and pledged itself to "united efforts of all true patriots to restore harmony and Christian friendship between the lately divided portions of our country." A sermon on the ordinances was delivered by G. W. Wilson, appointed by the Eldership, and their observances followed the sittings of Wednesday. The membership of the Stationing Committee consisted of three teaching and three ruling elders; that of the Standing Committee of three teaching and two ruling elders. The Eldership disclaimed all belief in, and sympathy with, the doctrines of election and the final perseverance of the saints, nor their propagators, and declared that the sooner the churches rid themselves of this withering evil the better, so as to retain our confidence and to reflect favorably on the cause generally." A vote on the reunion of the two Ohio Elderships "stood nine for and eight against." Four delegates were appointed to deliberate with the delegates of the East Ohio Eldership on the subject. But they were given binding instructions not to agree to a union "if any erroneous doctrines or practices exist, except upon the ground that these be immediately corrected, and prohibited the privilege of coming into the consolidation." G. E. Ewing, of Williams county, Ohio, who had gone to Nemaha county, Kas., was "authorized to act as a missionary on behalf of the Church in Kansas." The officers of the Eldership were W. Shafer, Speaker; J. W. Sensenney, First Clerk, and G. W. Wilson, Second Clerk. The Speaker preached the Opening Sermon from 2 Cor. iv. 1, 2, on Sunday evening previous to the organization.

10th West Ohio Eldership.—Several peculiar facts are connected with the session of the West Ohio Eldership at Blanchard Bethel, Liberty township, Hancock county, Ohio, which convened on Monday morning, November 19, 1866. It is specially noted that the Opening Sermon by G. W. Wilson, "was written and read before a large and attentive congregation." After electing T. Hickernell Speaker; J. H. Besore, First Clerk, and G. W. Wilson, Second Clerk, an unusual committee was named "On Translations and the Bible Laws generally." This committee commended the labors of the American Bible Union, and "sincerely advised the adoption of the new translation as a text book in the pulpit, a companion in the family and a guide to inspired truth in our Sabbath-schools." It seems a surprise that "a very lengthy and feeling debate" should take place on the affirmative statement that "the Scriptures authorize the laying on of hands and prayer in setting apart men to the holy office of the gospel ministry." But the resolution was postponed "for more mature reflection." Then G. W. Wilson again introduced resolutions declaring that the Eldership will "in future set apart our ministers for the work assigned them by the laying on of hands and prayer." But it was not proposed to make it obligatory; but on the same evening those who so desired were thus ordained, by L. Ensminger, who himself had been thus set apart. It was, however, not until "after a lengthy, solemn and interesting discussion" that the resolutions were adopted. It was recommended to the churches to hold two camp-meetings the following season. Dissatisfaction with "the liquor license laws of Ohio" was expressed, and the Legislature was "earnestly appealed to to pass prohibitory laws immediately." To have "traveling preachers" on the Stationing Committee was affirmed to be "a great evil," and so action was taken that "no preacher having a charge shall serve on that Committee." Wednesday evening was uniquely memorable. Wilson preached a sermon; ten ministers, nearly all having held licenses for longer or shorter periods, were "ordained by the laying on of hands and prayer;" the washing of the saints' feet; the Lord's Supper; "embracing and greeting of the sympathizing brethren after the ordination services," all combined produced a scene "which was hardly ever equalled among us." Under such conditions it was easy to adopt a resolution to raise $1,000.00 missionary money. There was also need for funds, as the Eldership had on its list of charges De Graff Mission, Genesee Mission, Mich., and the Kansas Mission. Wilson, Ensminger and Small were appointed "a committee to draft a Constitution, or system of co-operation, for the use of the Eldership." The only limitation on the powers of the Standing Committee was "the approval or disapproval of the Eldership."

11th West Ohio Eldership.—The day of the meeting of the Eldership having been changed, it met in its eleventh annual session in the Findlay Bethel, Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, Wednesday, October 16, 1867, at 2 o'clock p. m. The officers chosen were D. Shriner, Speaker; J. H. Besore, Clerk, and J. W. Sensenney, Reporter. In the evening the Opening Sermon was delivered by T. Hickernell, from 1 Cor. ii. 1, 2. J. Richards, one of the ex-ministers who constituted the first Eldership organized in 1830, at Harrisburg, Pa., received license, with three others, one of them D. S. Warner, later the leader in Ohio and westward of a body of people who gave the brotherhood considerable trouble. The Eldership planned to have three camp-meetings held in 1868. The project of creating a fund for superannuated ministers and widows of deceased ministers, and for contingent purposes, was more fully matured, so as to be put in active form. It was required of the churches to pay their ministers quarterly, both for their convenience, and to insure a regular and full compensation. The Mission Fund was quite below the needs, as well as the expectations, of the Eldership, as the Board reported "cash received, $167.78; subscriptions, $145.00; balance in treasury, $82.78." There was sufficient demand for German preaching to move the Eldership to "invite Elder Busch, of Baltimore, Md.," who was an advisory member, "to travel among the Germans of this Eldership." The Genessee Mission, Mich., as per request of the Michigan Eldership, was transferred to said body. But the Stationing Committee arranged for the following missions: Degraff, Osceola, Maumee and Putnam. The Standing Committee the following May "appointed G. W. Wilson, J. W. Sensenney and J. H. Besore to draft a Constitution for the West Ohio Eldership, to be presented to that body at its next meeting for adoption."

12th West Ohio Eldership.—But nine of the twenty-four teaching elders, with thirteen ruling elders and delegates, constituted the Eldership, which convened at Beery Bethel, Mercer county, Ohio, October 19, 1868. Not less than three hundred and sixty conversions were reported, nearly two hundred of which were baptized, with seven new church organizations. These were all reported as "immersions," under the influence of the American Bible Union Version. Feeling the need of "a much better system of missionary financiering," it was resolved to put the "missionary system on an independent basis," so as "to exclude all other claims," and that "the missionary money can be applied only in the employment of missionaries to labor in the ministry exclusively on ground occupied by ministers of the Church of God." Hence, after this year, "missionary funds shall not be appropriated to any other purpose;" that "greater effort shall be put forth to collect missionary money," and that "at least one preacher shall be employed as a missionary upon new ground every year." The Eldership pledged each minister to "discontinence forever the use of tobacco." Local ministers were required "to act as auxiliaries to the itinerant ministry, and to co-operate with them." Failure to do so was to work forfeiture of their licenses. So highly was Elder James George esteemed that a committee was appointed to erect a suitable monument over his grave and that of his wife. The committee appointed to draft a Constitution for the Eldership having failed to do the work, Wilson was appointed for that purpose.

13th West Ohio Eldership.—By what process of thought the West Ohio Eldership reversed itself on the matter of the sacredness of the mission funds may never be known. A year ago it virtually recognized the fact that it held these funds in trust for the specific purpose for which they were solicited and contributed. It implicitly acknowledged that to do otherwise was a betrayal of a trust, which must work a forfeiture of confidence. It substantially admitted that there are always objections to the use of funds entrusted to measurably irresponsible parties or bodies, and that the veto power resorted to is the withholding of contributions. Yet at its second sitting in 1869 it "rescinded the resolution passed at our last annual session, that all missionary funds hereafter raised be applied exclusively for the support of missions." It did not spread on its Minutes to what other purposes it applied some of these funds. It held its session in the Bethel at Kirby, Wyandot county, Ohio, meeting on October 15, 1869. J. W. Aukerman presided, with D. S. Warner and W. P. Small First and Second Clerks respectively. It opened its doors for ministers of other Elderships to "take appointments in this Eldership without transfers," although the Constitution of the General Eldership forbids it. Deeshiri was an example of a wandering sheep returning. A licensed minister of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, he removed to Ohio, where he joined the Free Will Baptist Church, and in 1869 came and knocked for admission into the West Ohio Eldership, and was granted a license. The death of Thomas was appropriately memorialized by resolutions which spoke of his "gentlemanly and truly Christian deportment, which won for him a deep place in the affections of his co-laborers in the ministry; his truly pious example." With the "increase of active, zealous, efficient ministers" in the Eldership, the Stationing Committee experienced less trouble in satisfactorily supplying its different charges. To give a more permanent character to provisions from time to time made for certain benevolent features of its work, the Eldership ordered the appointment of a committee "to draft a Constitution for a preachers' widows' and orphans' Fund." Not being ready to reunite with the East Ohio Eldership, it was decided that "it is inexpedient to consolidate at present."

14th West Ohio Eldership.—Sixteen teaching elders and twenty ruling elders, with seven delegates responded to their names when the fourteenth West Ohio Eldership was constituted in the country betHEL known as Hopewell, Seneca county, October 14, 1870. Nine teaching elders were absent. T. H. Deahiri was chosen Speaker; D. S. Warner, First Clerk, and W. P. Small, Second Clerk. The Rule was adopted requiring ten days' notice when charges are to be preferred. Because "the people of God are to be a separate people;" therefore, the Eldership "considered that the modern mite societies are not becoming for Christians to engage in," and so "we can not approve of those societies in the Church of God." An Eldership camp-meeting was directed to be held, and each pastor was instructed to present the matter to his churches. State fairs were denounced only in so far as they countenanced "racing, trotting, betting, drinking, blasphemy and other crying sins." But "popular amusements, such as theaters, festivals, circuses and baseball are deleterious to a Christian life, and are of such a character as not to be engaged in in the name of the Lord." "All honorable and lawful means to suppress the traffic and unnecessary use of intoxicating beverages" are to be used. The number of conversions during the year is given as from 200 to 250, and "an almost unprecedented number of young men have come into the ministry." An effort was to be made to purchase a house of worship in Tiffin. Filled with an aggressive spirit, the Eldership further resolved to "make every effort to occupy all the ground we possibly can within the bounds of this Eldership." Findlay station and McComb circuit were "thrown into one," with two preachers. In addition six circuits, and two General Missionaries. A committee was named "to draft a Constitution and By-Laws for the Home Missionary Society of the West Ohio Eldership." The Eldership was regarded as "the best we have ever had."

15th West Ohio Eldership.—While "Chairman" is the title given to the presiding officer of the fifteenth West Ohio Eldership in the Minutes, it is probably correct to assume that the proper title is Speaker. Except for a few years, this has been the invariable title in all the Elderships up to this time. The Eldership convened in the betHEL at Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, on Friday morning, October 13, 1871. There were two stations and six circuits, which were represented by twenty-two teaching elders; eighteen ruling elders, and seven delegates. Eight teaching elders were absent. W. P. Small was elected Chairman; D. S. Warner, First Clerk, and S. M. Gaskill, Second Clerk. Two delegates were present from the North West Ohio Christian Union. Being made advisory members, Joseph Neill prepared the way for addresses by them by "remarks relative to the subject of consolidation of the Church of God and the Christian Union, and then called upon Bros. S. Wilson and D. Lepley, the delegates who were present upon that business, to speak." They made "many warm and earnest appeals for the union of all God's people, and especially all such who agree so well and have such strong affinities as seem to exist between them and the Church of God." Whereupon the Eldership declared its readiness "to do our utmost to bring about this union." The Standing Committee was appointed to meet the Standing Committee of the North-western Ohio Christian Conference at Lafayette, Allen county, Ohio, November 21, 1871, to confer on the matter. While the Eldership convened on Friday morning, the Opening Sermon was preached on Saturday evening. Ministers in charge of fields of labor and churches were strongly urged "to put forth efforts to have well-organized Sabbath-schools wherever" possible. It was agreed to hold a Sabbath-school Convention the coming year. Increased care was to be taken in granting licenses, and so recommendations from the elders of local churches where applicants are members were to be required. The Legislature of the State was commended for the passage of a law "making the vendors of ardent spirits, and the owners of property wherein the same is sold, responsible for all damage done by said traffic." The Agent for the Board of Missions collected $2,491.00 during the year. A stringent provision was added to the Constitution of the Board of Missions, prohibiting "any officer or officers of the Board, or the Eldership, or any member thereof" from "expending any part of the principal of the Missionary Fund." The Missionary Agent was continued, he to receive "three per cent. on all notes he takes, and ten per cent. on all moneys he collects, for his services." There were seven circuits and one station reported by the Stationing Committee. Four of the circuits had two pastors.

16th West Ohio Eldership.—The Opening Sermon of the sixteenth session of the West Ohio Eldership was delivered by D. L. Warner on the evening of the first day's session. The body convened October 11, 1872, in the Sugar Grove Bethel, South Bridgewater, Williams county. Findlay had become a station. A. X. Shoemaker, of Chicago, Ill., was chosen Speaker, and J. L. Jenner, Clerk. The question of union with the Christian Union Church was not brought before the Eldership; but a sermon on "Christian Union" was delivered by Shoemaker. More clearly and permanently to define the organization, powers, rights and duties of the Eldership, it was ordered "that a committee of three be appointed to draft a Constitution for this Eldership." All licensed ministers were required to preach not less than twenty-five sermons each year. The Eldership placed the sale of the Clintonville church property in the hands of the Standing Committee, the proceeds to be "applied to liquidate the debt still resting on the Findlay bethel." Charges were preferred against L. Ensminger, who had been a successful general missionary agent, which were referred to the Standing Committee, to be investigated at its first meeting. This was done November 28, 1872. The charges "implicated his moral and Christian character," and "in the judgment of the Committee were in the main sustained." Whereupon the Committee "considered him unworthy of a license from this body, or fellowship in the Church of God." The work of the year was reasonably successful, as the statistics show 337 conversions, 199 baptized, 226 fellowshipped. The territory was divided into two stations and six circuits. Some were dissatisfied "that the circuits were not divided and more fields of labor constituted and more men employed." "The meeting was a glorious one," is the estimate of one young and enthusiastic minister.

17th West Ohio Eldership.—When the West Ohio Eldership met in the bethel at New Washington, Crawford county, Ohio, October 17, 1873, the draft of the Constitution was ready to be submitted for approval. It was adopted item by item, consisting of eighteen Articles. Its main provisions are as follows: "The name—West Ohio Eldership of the Church of God." Members—"All the preachers holding a license of this body, together with the ruling elders of the local churches." Delegates are not entitled to membership except when sent to fill the places of ruling elders, and then the number of delegates shall not exceed the number of ruling elders. "A majority of the members present constitute a quorum." "The Speaker, with the assistance of two other members of the Eldership, which he shall choose, shall appoint all the committees except the Stationing and Standing Committees." "The Standing Committee shall act in behalf of the Eldership during the year." The pastors are required to make statistical reports, including the amount of their support. "Two-thirds majority" is required to amend the Constitution. "Each member shall constantly endeavor to promote the peace, prosperity and unanimity of the Eldership." An organization was effected by the choice of J. W. Aukerman for Speaker; W. P. Small, First Clerk, and G. T. Kimmel, Second Clerk. It became necessary to enforce the lifting of appointed collections, and to this end some of the pastors were sent back to attend to this duty. The Eldership mourned the death of one of its promising and worthy young ministers, S. M. Gaskill, who "was called away in the midst of life." Feeling "the necessity of a Ministerial Association" in the Eldership, Wednesday evening before the Pentecostal meeting was fixed for that purpose. The list of appointments consisted of one station, eight circuits and three missions, with W. H. Oliver as "traveling missionary." The missions are Kansas Mission—Hopewell, Phillips, Kansas, Bettsville, Freeport and Mill Grove; Paulding Mission—Sugar Ridge, Miller's, East and Blue Creek, and Toledo Mission—Robinson, Washington Station, Providence Center, Union School-house, East Toledo, Martin, Benton and Crane Creek.

18th West Ohio Eldership.—The West Ohio Eldership evinced quite a degree of interest in what was called the "Sisters' Mission Movement," as good work in Nebraska was being accomplished through it. Accordingly in 1874 the Eldership devoted some time to its consideration, and requested A. X. Shoemaker to make a statement concerning it. The result was the adoption of a resolution suggesting "the propriety of organizing a sisters' mission society in each local church, to be auxiliary to the General Society." The Eldership met in the bethel at West Unity, Williams county, September 30, 1874, and elected J. W. Aukerman, Speaker; T. Koogle, First Clerk, and J. F. Fox, Second Clerk. The Chicago Mission occupied considerable time, and Shoemaker was asked to make a statement concerning it, which was "appreciated," but without further action. The delegates to the General Eldership in 1875 were directed to "do all they can for the establishment of a Church school." The Eldership having sometimes consumed much time in settling "difficulties of long standing and of a serious character arising between brethren," insisted that "the good of the cause demands that such cases should be settled privately," and hence declared "that no such cases will be admitted into this Eldership for adjustment." The Eldership received "a bequest" made by Sister Anna Myers. Authority was given "the trustees of Hickory Grove Bethel to sell said property, and appropriate the proceeds to liquidate the debt on Findlay Bethel." The beginning of trouble between D. S. Warner and the Eldership is foreshadowed in an action on the adoption of his Report, which stated that he had "organized a church in Upper Sandusky contrary to the Rules of Co-operation," and regarding this as "a schismatic movement," "highly disapproved of his course in organizing said church." Imbued with the missionary spirit, the Eldership directed W. P. Small "to visit Toledo and see what can be done there to build up the good cause." Reports show an aggregate of eight hundred conversions and seven hundred accessions to the churches during the year, so that the Eldership felt "greatly encouraged to renewed effort." "Her ministerial ranks are filling up with vigorous, strong young men; her houses are multiplying; her borders are enlarging, and her ministry is zealous, active and efficient." One station, ten circuits and four missions were reported.

19th West Ohio Eldership.—It was with the close of the West Ohio Eldership of 1875 that the consolidation of the two Ohio Elderships was consummated. The East Ohio Eldership was ready six years earlier to become merged in the West Ohio Eldership, and appropriate action was asked for, and secured, in 1869 from the General Eldership. And on July 16, 1869, the Standing Committee of the East Ohio Eldership took the required steps to form a union. The delay was occasioned by the West Ohio Eldership; but in 1875 it took favorable action, resolving "that we, as the West Ohio Eldership, agree that the East Ohio Eldership, with her interests, be merged into the West Ohio Eldership, and that the Standing Committee of the West Ohio Eldership confer with the Standing Committee of the East Ohio Eldership relative to this matter." The Eldership held its session at the Union Bethel, Mercer county, with twenty-eight teaching elders present, eighteen ruling elders and eight delegates. These represented one station, twelve circuits and four missions. The Synopsis of the Minutes names only the Transcribing Clerk, G. T. Kimmel. The property at Clintonville was to be sold, and the proceeds used in "the building of a new bethel at such a place as may suit the church best." A bequest of $394.34 was received from Anna Myers. While the Eldership expressed itself in strong terms in favor of "abstaining from, and in every way discountenancing, the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors," it also recommended "temperance in the use of food among ministers, especially that of pork and other food that seems to stupify the mind and stimulate the propensities." There were at this time in the Eldership 82 preaching places; a membership of 1,622, and during the year there were 724 conversions, 396 immersions, and 687 fellowshiped. There was considerable excitement on the free school system, and the Eldership declared that it believed this system "a blessing to our country," and denounced the effort being "made on the part of the Roman Catholic Church to divide the school fund and make it subservient to sectarian interests." The Eldership appointed the time and place to hold the Ministerial Association and the Pentecostal meeting. W. P. Turk was expelled because he "has failed to maintain his Christian integrity" in his relation to the Church and the Eldership. The name of L. Leonard "was also dropped from the Minutes," while the license of ——— Shepherd was not renewed. Two new names were added to the Roll, those of A. P. McNutt and John Wilder. Eighteen fields of labor were formed, of which nine were in the territory of the East Ohio Eldership. One of the first duties of the Standing Committee of the consolidated Eldership was to adjust the difficulties which had existed for some time at "the Brick Bethel." This was done by a mutual agreement on November 24, 1875, and a reorganization of the church.

20th West Ohio Eldership.—The consolidated Eldership for some time retained the name of the West Ohio Eldership, as the merger was really the absorption of the East Ohio Eldership by the West Ohio Eldership. It also retained its ordinal number, the Eldership of 1876 being the twentieth West Ohio Eldership, but the forty-first Eldership in Ohio. It convened at Findlay, Hancock county, September 28th. S. Kline had the distinction of preaching the Opening Sermon the previous evening. Thirty-nine ministers were present, and thirteen, absent; and there were present thirty-two ruling elders and nineteen delegates. The officers elected were J. W. Aukerman, Speaker; T. Koogle, First Clerk; G. T.

Kimmel, Second Clerk. These represented twenty-four fields of labor, of which one was a station and five were missions. There being no permanent Rules of Order, a committee reported seven parliamentary Rules. On the subject of education the Eldership expressed its belief "that in no other way can we so effectually build up the Church and retain the children of our brotherhood than by establishing an institution of learning to be owned and controlled by the Church." It therefore agreed to "appoint a committee to adopt some measures to attain the desired end." This committee consisted of G. W. Wilson, G. T. Kimmel and D. S. Warner. The Standing Committee reported "the transferring of the East Ohio Eldership, with its interests, into the West Ohio Eldership," and its report was adopted. One general agent was "appointed to canvass the territory of the Eldership, to collect interest due, gather cash and take notes." The inconvenience of adopting temporary Rules of Order was remedied by appointing a committee "to draft Permanent Rules of Order to be printed in connection with the System of Co-operation." Lower Sugar Creek church had "refused the ministerial labors of H. M. Lynn, the regular appointee," a course severely condemned as "utter contempt of the proper authority of the Church of God, and ignored all her law and order." To aggravate the wrong, the church had secured the services of an expelled minister. The church was admonished "in the future to desist" from such a course, and the offenders were promised pardon "for past offenses" if they will follow this advice. The Eldership lamented the death of two members "who were among the first fruits of the ministry of God's word in Ohio, and who for many years have stood in connection with the East Ohio Eldership as ministers of the gospel," John Beidler and Peter Hartman. A Ministerial Association and a Pentecostal meeting were appointed, and a committee on program named. On the diacunate the Eldership affirmed its divine appointment, "being authorized by God's word," and "solemnly admonished the deacons diligently to perform their duty," as "God will hold them accountable for much of the suffering and embarrassment of his ministers." It declared that "ordination by the laying on of hands is scriptural." It was stated that "$2,000 are wanted immediately to meet the demands of the Mansfield mission house." Twenty-eight appointments were reported by the Stationing Committee, of which one was a station and six were missions.

21st West Ohio Eldership.—On February 15, 1877, the chairman of the committee to revise the Constitution and prepare permanent Rules of Order made his Report public. It retained the old name, "West Ohio Eldership of the Church of God." And the announcement of the meeting in 1877, and the Journal, number it the twenty-first Annual Eldership of the Church of God in West Ohio." It convened in the territory of the former East Ohio Eldership, at Smithville, Wayne county, Wednesday evening, September 26th, when J. M. Cassel preached the Opening Sermon. There were thirty-five teaching elders present, and eighteen absent; and thirty ruling elders and twenty-one delegates were present. The officers were J. W. Aukerman, Speaker; J. V. Updike, First Clerk, and T. Koogle, Second Clerk. It witnessed the reaffirmation of its sentiments in favor of "the establishing of an educational institution to be owned and controlled by the Church," and a repetition of its action "to appoint a committee to adopt measures to attain the desired end." The Standing Committee was authorized to appoint the camp-meetings, and "churches desiring a camp-meeting must inform the Committee of place and time they desire to hold the same." The Stationing Committee was composed of "one member from each station, circuit and mission." And so the Committee consisted of twenty-five members, of which number only eight were ministers. "A sacred link that unites us with the first fathers" was removed by the death of J. Myers, first ordained by the church at Linglestown, Dauphin county, Pa., in 1829, and by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1831. "His life, like golden threads of truth and devotion, is interwoven with the history of the Church of God from its first organization in the United States." Strong, but indefinite, resolutions were adopted on temperance, expressing the hope that "the evil and crime of drunkenness will soon be unknown in our land." An earnest plea was made "with our dear brethren in Christ to abstain from the unnecessary and filthy use of tobacco." As a precaution against loss, notes for money borrowed out of the Permanent Missionary Fund were required to be renewed each year, and interest paid. Stating that "the practice of delaying the baptizing of the young converts is becoming very prevalent among us," and affirming "such a practice to be contrary to the New Testament precedent and the plain command of Christ," the Eldership urged "ministers and churches to see to it that the membership are all obedient, especially to this and every other rule relative to the monumental ordinances of the Church." Because of insubordination and resistance to the proper authorities of the church on the part of certain members at Greensburg, "the officers of the church were advised to expel them from the church" if upon being "called upon to co-operate with the church and be submissive to the authorities," they refuse to do so. Churches and circuits which fail or refuse to pay amounts assessed by the Eldership, if they are able to do so, "shall not have the services of a minister until they manifest a willingness to pay the same." Report was made of 695 conversions, 589 accessions, 383 baptized, with a total membership of 2,340. D. S. Warner's case was acted on charitably. His "license was renewed with certain restrictions—that he cease to spring this so-called 'Holiness Alliance Band,' or any other outside party he may stand connected with, upon the churches of God." For prudential reasons the Stationing Committee was required "to transact its business with closed doors, and keep strictly secret their actions until they report to the Eldership." The committee on the Mansfield Bethel declared, that "under existing circumstances it can see no way by which sufficient means can be raised to liquidate the claim held against the Bethel at Mansfield." There were twenty-eight appointments, one of them a station, and six missions. Mansfield Mission remained "to be supplied."

22nd West Ohio Eldership.—Several items of business came over from the Eldership session of 1877. The first of these was the revised Constitution, which had been placed in the hands of a committee, and was placed in the hands of the Standing Committee. The Greensburg church case was revived, as the insubordination continued. It was found that "the calling upon the disaffected members to be subordinate to the church was not properly carried out," and so the resolution of 1877 was sent back to the church with this statement attached. But the Eldership granted permission to the insubordinate party "to organize at McDonaldsville, and to be in full co-operation with the circuit and ministers appointed by the Eldership." The Warner case was indirectly revived when the Committee on Resolutions submitted the following: "That any minister of this body that may presume to preach the dogma of a second work for sanctification shall be deemed unsound in the theology of the Church of God, and should not hold an ecclesiastical relation as a minister in this Eldership." Of the fifty-three teaching elders thirty-one were present, with twenty-six ruling elders and twenty-one delegates, when the Roll was called at Rock Run Bethel, Wyandot county, September 25, 1878. T. Hickernell delivered the Opening Sermon, from Acts xx. 28. T. Koogle was chosen Speaker; J. V. Updike, First Clerk; J. M. Cassel, Second Clerk, and I. Steiner, Financial Clerk. For "unbecoming conduct," after trial, the "license of M. C. Skates was suspended." The Committee on Education advised "the Eldership to take immediate steps to get a house for the education of our youths." The question of ordination by the laying on of hands was discussed and a compromise was reached, "giving the privilege to all that desire to be ordained by the laying on of hands." Thereupon fourteen of the ministers were thus ordained. Four ministers and three lay elders constituted, by resolution, the Stationing Committee. Quite a controversy arose out of the action of the East Pennsylvania Eldership which had received O. H. Betts, who came as a minister of the Baptist Church, but had been disfellowshipped by the Ohio Eldership. The Ohio Eldership demanded apologies, which having been duly made, the case was closed. The Eldership decided "that none be permitted to go before the Stationing Committee in person, but to communicate by letter." An assessment was made of "$300.00 for Superannuated and Contingent Fund," and "stations, circuits and missions which were delinquent be required to pay up within six months from date." There were five missions on the Stationing Committee's report, but Wooster and Mansfield were "unsupplied," Wooster being classed with the "Missions."

23rd West Ohio Eldership.—The ministerial losses recorded on the Journal in 1879 were important as to numbers and talents. J. P. Miller was adjudged "unworthy of membership in this body." The name of E. H. Yeisley was "dropped from the Roll for actions contrary to the Rules of Co-operation, and for causing schisms in the body by urging churches not to co-operate with the Eldership." At his own request the name of J. B. Willaman was "dropped from the Journal." J. V. Updike "informs us that he has about hired himself to preach for the Disciples," and his "request was granted, asking that his name be dropped from the Journal." The membership had been fifty-nine when the body convened at Anderson Bethel, Mercer county, September 24, 1879, of which thirty-three were present, with thirty-three ruling elders and thirteen delegates. One member had died during the year, William Adams, converted in Perry county, Pa., and was ordained by the Ohio Eldership in 1836. Two new names were added to the Roll. T. Koogle was elected Speaker; E. T. Vaas, First Clerk, and W. P. Small, Second Clerk. A new feature in the reports of ministers was the asking of certain questions as each pastor reported. The Treasurer was required to give bond. A law suit having grown out of difficulties at New Washington touching property rights, the Eldership deemed it advisable to secure an Act of Incorporation, and arrangements to that end were at once made. Strongly opposed to Creeds, the Eldership nevertheless adopted a resolution not only against a certain theory of sanctification; but it also declared that "the doctrine of baptismal regeneration is unscriptural and dangerous in its effects," and that "any minister of this body who shall hold and publicly preach the doctrine shall not be considered worthy of a license." The numerical strength of the Church in Ohio is given as 2,155, of which number 330 were received during the year. To make more certain the support of pastors, it was directed that each pastor at the beginning of the year "call a financial meeting, to make an apportionment of the total amount of salary agreed upon to the several churches on the field." All church property was advised to be "so deeded as to secure the same to the body in any emergency." The Standing Committee was "empowered to consult with other Standing Committees, looking toward the establishment of a general Church school.

24th West Ohio Eldership.—Frequently there is an unexplained, and now unaccountable, change in the ministerial Roll of an Eldership between two sessions. When the West Ohio Eldership was constituted at Blooming Grove, Richland county, September 30, 1880, there were present thirty-three teaching elders, and nineteen were absent, or a total enrollment of fifty-two. At the session of 1879 the enrollment reached fifty-nine. There were also present in 1880 thirty-two ruling elders and delegates. By ballot, J. W. Ankerman was elected Speaker; E. T. Vaas, First Clerk, and W. P. Small, Second Clerk. After the Report of the Treasurer was audited and approved, Henry Clay was elected to that office. The Committee on Finance had "found due to the Eldership in the hands of the ex-treasurer the sum of $428.27," and the new Treasurer was "instructed to collect said amount." Both the Treasurer and the Second Clerk were required to give bond, the former in the sum of $5,000.00, and the latter, $500.00. During the year, "in the inscrutable providence of God our highly esteemed and worthy brother, Elder A. Resh, was removed from our midst by the hand of death," reported the Committee on Obituaries. A "private sitting" to consider a case acted on by the Standing Committee, was ordered for Friday morning, and consumed nearly the whole day, when the report of the Committee was adopted by a vote of 48 yeas and 5 nays. The importance of the case is indicated in the order that "the entire Eldership remain in the house; that no committee be allowed to do business, and that counsels on both sides may employ as much time as the case may require." Otherwise nothing of the case was entered on the Journal. The Committee on Temperance in its report severely reflected on the church members when it resolved to "discountenance the practice of members of the Church visiting those dens of vice and immorality, and the using of intoxicating drinks." The unusual thing of a suit at law against the Eldership was reported. The trustees of the church at New Washington, Ohio, had brought suit, which was adjusted by the payment on the part of the Eldership of the sum of $163.80, and the return of a note of $300.00 held against certain parties. Because it believed that "the business now done by the Board of Missions can be more conveniently conducted by the Eldership and Standing Committee," said Board was discontinued after the adjournment of the Eldership. The number of trustees of the Eldership was also reduced from seven to three. A tabulated account of the salaries paid "the twenty-four traveling and active preachers" showed a total of $5,084.06, or an average of $217.83. The Report on the State of Religion showed conversions, 378; accessions, 360; immersions, 205; total membership, 2,024; preaching places, 112, and number of sermons, 3,943. The Eldership decided to "form a class of study, to be examined at our yearly Eldership meetings." A committee of two was sent "to Mansfield to sell, rent or close the mission property." At the same time "the attention of all the local preachers" was directed "to the clause in the Constitution requiring them to open new appointments."

25th West Ohio Eldership.—Defections from the Church on the part of ministers was a very rare occurrence prior to 1860; after that date nearly every Eldership lost some of its members in that way. The name of one was thus "stricken from the Roll when the West Ohio Eldership was constituted at Smithville, Wayne county, September 29, 1881. The body consisted of fifty members, twenty-seven ministers and twenty-three ruling elders and delegates. Twenty-five ministers were absent. J. W. Aukerman was chosen Speaker; S. Kline, First Clerk, and W. P. Small, Second Clerk. In addition to the Opening Sermon the evening of the 28th, which was called "the Eldership sermon," was preached on the evening of the 29th. S. Kline preached the first, and G. W. Wilson, the second. The College enterprise was strongly endorsed, and it was "considered the duty of the Church generally to respond liberally to the solicitations of the collecting agents in the State of Ohio." On temperance the Eldership was firmly "opposed to men professing godliness patronizing in the least degree these places of vice and immorality," and pledged itself to "labor for the suppression of the liquor traffic both by moral suasion and constitutional prohibition." The body mourned the death of S. Chamberlin, "an excellent and worthy" minister. It also joined the West Pennsylvania Eldership in expressions of grief at the death of P. Loucks, and the East Pennsylvania Eldership "in the great loss sustained by the Church at large" in the death of its two conspicuous laymen, Dr. George Ross and J. S. Gable. With other Elderships it "deeply mourned the sad national bereavement in the death of James A. Garfield, President of the United States." The action of the General Eldership in May, 1881, employing a Permanent General Missionary Secretary was endorsed. The sum of $300.00 Superannuated and Contingent Fund for the year was agreed upon, and was apportioned to the different circuits. The receipts for the various Funds during the preceding year were:—Missionary, $309.29; Superannuated and Contingent, $190.69; Permanent Fund, total on hand, $1,684.90. The Sabbath-school cause was strongly commended to ministers and churches, schools to be "organized where there are none, and those strengthened which are already organized by gathering in the non-Sabbath-school attending children." Every minister was required "to preach a missionary sermon and take up a missionary collection at each of his points during the year." As penalty on "a certain appointment on the Mercer county circuit" which "failed to pay its pro rata of Eldership funds," the "Finance Board on said circuit" was given "discretionary power with regard to supplying the same with preaching." The vacant lot in Mansfield having been sold, a deed was authorized to be made by the trustees of the Eldership. Several ministers were disciplined for violating Articles of the Constitution. Claiming that the "several fields of labor within the bounds of the Eldership are much deranged," "making the work too unequal both for work and support," the Committee on Boundaries was required "to so equalize them that the labor and support may be more nearly equal, and consequently more satisfactory to the preachers generally." The territory was divided into three stations, seventeen circuits and two missions. G. W. Wilson was appointed General Missionary.

26th West Ohio Eldership.—An innovation characterized the session of this Eldership. It convened at Rising Sun, Wood county, September 27, 1882, when the Opening Sermon was preached by T. Koogle. On Thursday morning, after devotional exercises a Committee on Credentials was appointed, which made the enrollment. This showed the presence of thirty-three of the forty-nine ministers, sixteen ruling elders and eight delegates. Nine fields of labor were without representation. The officers of the Eldership were J. M. Cassel, Speaker; C. N. Belman, First Clerk; W. P. Small, Second Clerk, and Henry Clay, Treasurer. Important action was taken relative to the Permanent Missionary Notes, which were directed "to be paid by the session of the next Eldership." In place of this Fund there was to be what "shall be hereafter known as the Irreducible Missionary Fund." A Church Extension Committee was created "to take the oversight, and to recommend the expenditure, of missionary money." The Standing Committee was made this Committee, which was also "to look after places where preaching by the Church of God is requested, and to open houses which have been closed." Two teaching elders "in the order of divine providence" were removed from "their earthly spheres of activity" both "highly esteemed and beloved"—H. M. Linn and D. Delcamp. The Eldership "hailed with pleasure the prospect of the establishment of an institution of learning as a first-class college." On Temperance the body strongly endorsed "the principle to touch not, taste not, handle not, except for medicinal purposes" any intoxicants, and rejoiced in "the drift toward prohibition in public sentiment." With this was connected a resolution directed especally to candidates for the ministry "to abstain from the use of tobacco, as an evil which is the first step to intemperance." "A committee was appointed to draft a course of studies for licentiates, and all others who desire to take the course." The name of one minister was "stricken from the Roll, as he had not reported for two consecutive years." One was restored, who after "some remarks touching himself, asked pardon." On the Communion it was agreed as "the sense of this body that domestic wine, or the pure juice of the grape, should be used." Preachers were directed "to see that no intoxicating wine be used at Communion." A Sunday-school Convention was directed to be held, and "the brotherhood recommended to attend and aid in the promotion of union, township, county and State conventions." The Board of Missions of the General Eldership was commended for organizing, through its agent, missionary societies in the local churches. The number of fields of labor was twenty-six, Findlay and Wooster being stations.

27th West Ohio Eldership.—The Committee on Revision of the Constitution, created in 1882, had no report to make when the Eldership convened at Beery's Bethel, Mercer county, September 27, 1883, because "the Standing Committee failed to perfect the incorporation of the Eldership... and to change the name." The Committee was continued. R. H. Bolton preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 26th, from Mark xvi. 15. A Committee on Credentials assisted in constituting the Eldership. There were enrolled fifty-three ministers, and twenty-four ruling elders and delegates, while eighteen ministers were absent. Balloting resulted in the choice of T. Koogle for Speaker; R. H. Bolton, First Clerk; W. P. Small, Second Clerk, and Henry Clay, Treasurer. Education was made a special order for Saturday morning's sitting, at which time the Report of the Committee, made on Friday morning, was considered, which was clear and strong in its approval of the work of building Findlay College as "an institution under our own control, equal in educational advantages with any other similar schools." The Eldership placed itself on record in favor of "the entire prohibition of any and all traffic in intoxicants." It was by a "unanimous rising vote of the Eldership and congregation" that the Report was adopted, after enthusiastic speeches by Wilson, Cassel, Graham and Winbiger. The number of conversions reported during the year was 458; accessions, 393; baptized, 201; church houses, 55; Sabbath-schools, 54. The Eldership had a "Permanent Contingent Fund" of $1,762.39. The name "Irreducible Fund" was changed again to "Permanent Missionary Fund." The Pentecostal meeting was discontinued. G. C. Graham, of the Baptist Church, received license. "The expediency of a division of the Eldership" was considered under propositions to instruct the delegates to the General Eldership, but it "was decided that it is not advisable to divide at present." The movement to "have one or more depositories of the literature of the Church of God established" was favorably recognized, and "B. F. Bolton, Findlay, Ohio," was designated as the Agent "to procure a supply of Church books." The Eldership lamented the death of "Father William Adams, one of the first pioneer preachers of the Church of God in the State of Ohio; a brother minister of deep-toned piety, of great zeal and earnestness in the work of the gospel ministry, and an honored instrument in leading hosts of sinners to God, and forming many churches of God." It was agreed "to aid in procuring a suitable monument," and an appeal was authorized to be made for free-will offerings. The amount of $20.65 was at once raised. An agent was appointed "to dispose of the Whartonsburg church property and material." J. M. Cassel was designated "to assist the trustees in the adjustment of the Mansfield Mission property."

28th West Ohio Eldership.—The revision of the Constitution and the incorporation of the Eldership were not completed during the year, and when the Committee so reported it received specific instructions in 1884 to proceed with the work. It was "empowered and instructed to define the object, powers and privileges of the body under incorporators." The title of the body was to be changed to "Ohio Eldership of the Church of God." The work was to be completed so as "to be submitted to the Eldership in September, 1885, for approval." The Eldership session in 1884 was held in the Union Bethel, New Berlin, Stark county, beginning September 24th, on the evening of which date the Opening Sermon was preached by J. M. Cassel, from Rev. xxi. 9. The officers chosen were S. Kline, Speaker; E. T. Vaas, First Clerk; W. P. Small, Second Clerk, and Henry Clay, Treasurer. The holding of "Children's College Day services in the Eldership" was "heartily approved," and it was "suggested that said day be the third Sabbath in June of each year." An Association existed in Ohio whose object was to secure legislation granting "divorce only on scriptural grounds," the Eldership "recommended said Association to the consideration of every minister of the body," and that "they become members of said Society." Apprehending that Sunday-school Helps might work to the exclusion of the Bible, it was recommended "that strenuous efforts be made in every Sunday-school in the State to secure by the first Sunday in October next the possession on the part of every scholar of a Bible of his own," so that these Helps, valuable as they may be, shall not supersede in the regards of the children and youth of the land the divine word." The "act of generosity on the part of Father John Briggie in making a bequest to the mission cause of this Eldership," was "highly commended," and his "example in this respect" was noted as "worthy of emulation, and commended to our brethren with means to pattern after." His death was memorialized as that of one "who adhered to, and sustained, the cause faithfully; a pattern of true piety and an example of liberality worthy of our imitation." Foreign mission interests came up as a result of the action of the General Eldership in May, 1884, and action was taken, "recommending the brotherhood to aid in raising funds to send forth and sustain a missionary in foreign lands." Regular accounts were kept with the different fields of labor, and delinquencies charged against them. The ministers sent to these delinquent fields were "instructed to proceed at once to collect the several amounts" those fields were in arrears. The sum of "$400.00 was assessed for the Contingent and Superannuated Fund" for the year, and "apportioned to the different circuits, stations and missions." A State missionary collector and solicitor was appointed, compensation fixed at "$30.00 per month for actual expenses and time employed." W. P. Small was appointed. Notes were to be taken and "the notes given to be recorded in a ledger." John Bolton was continued as Treasurer of the Monument Fund of William Adams. The appointments were two stations, twenty-one circuits and one mission.

29th Ohio Eldership.—The revision of the Constitution and drafting of Articles of Incorporation during 1884-5 had so far proceeded that the committee felt prepared to submit the result of its labors for the consideration of the Eldership which convened at Union Bethel, Huron county, October 1, 1885. After being amended in a few sections, the report was adopted. Thus the Eldership "by the direction, consent and authority of all said Church, and the members thereof in the State of Ohio, made here for the purpose of incorporating in full all the divisions and branches of said Church in said State, fully accept of all the provisions of Title Ten of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, under the head of 'Corporations,' pages 654-655." The two Ohio Elderships thus became one under the law, to be known as "The Ohio Eldership of the Church of God." The "object and purpose" set forth for the "forming said Incorporation is, and shall be, to promote the interests and cause of Christianity, good morals, society and such religious and benevolent work as may be proper and tend to build up religious sentiment and improve the moral, social and religious condition of mankind." The "control of all the churches of said Church of God in the State of Ohio as the rules of said Church and the usages thereof, and the laws of the State of Ohio, permit and allow," was given to this Corporation. Five trustees, to be elected annually, were provided for, to "hold their office," however, "until their successors are elected and qualified." There was good attendance, fifty-one ministers being present, and twenty-seven ruling elders and delegates. E. T. Vaas preached the Opening Sermon, from Ps. lxxxiv. 11. Delegates and ruling elders were required to have certificates, and so there was a Committee on Credentials to enroll the members. R. H. Bolton was chosen Speaker; E. T. Vaas, First Clerk; B. F. Bolton, Second Clerk, and H. Clay, Treasurer. The Second Clerk, who acted as Financial Clerk, was required to give bond in the sum of $1,000.00. The Eldership declined "to grant control of the church in Findlay to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership," as had been requested by the Incorporate Board of said body. It was resolved to hold a Pentecostal meeting. On temperance there was a measure of indistinctness in the resolutions adopted, the strongest one expressing "our conviction that our civil authorities should take a more decided stand against intemperance, and, irrespective of party lines, should unite harmoniously in the suppression of it." But it would require a miracle of popular faith to inspire confidence in such a movement. The sum of $430.00 was assessed on the churches for the Superannuated and Contingent Fund. Realizing "the great necessity of pushing missionary work," the Eldership "hailed with pleasure the growing interest in foreign mission work, and expressed the hope that in the near future the Church of God may have a representative in India." It also "recognized the generous and magnanimous offers coming to us from the Free Baptist Foreign Mission Board in the overtures made by them to the Church of God in foreign mission interests." The reports of ministers showed 788 conversions during the year; accessions, 684; baptized, 319. The ministers were "made personally responsible for the delinquencies in Contingent funds assessed on their circuits." On Monday evening the Eldership held an ordinance service, after a sermon by G. W. Wilson. There were two stations and nineteen circuits, with three missions, but four of them were unsupplied with pastors.

30th Ohio Eldership.—There was apparently a growing tendency on the part of the fields of labor not to send representatives to the Eldership. Thus in 1886 eleven of them were unrepresented. Yet there were twenty-one ruling elders and delegates present, and thirty-four of the forty-nine ministers. The Eldership convened at Enterprise, Van Wert county, Thursday morning, September 30th. The preceding evening R. H. Bolton delivered the Opening Sermon, from Rev. i. 12. J. W. Aukerman was elected Speaker; E. T. Vaas, Clerk, and B. F. Bolton, Financial Secretary. On Foreign Missions an apparent change of sentiment had occurred, and the Eldership declared that "we do not think the time has come to enter the work as a body, and that we so instruct our delegates to the General Eldership." The "Book Store established in Harrisburg, Pa.," by the General Eldership was a gratifying fact to the Eldership, and was heartily approved. The Eldership ordered the official seal to be "placed on all official documents of the Eldership, Standing Committee and trustees, on preachers' licenses, transfers, orders on the Treasurer and all credentials of appointees of the Eldership." The opening of Findlay College was "hailed with delight and gratitude, an institution which has for its end and aim the imparting of a true, scientific and religious education," and "the prayers, sympathy and financial support" of the body was "pledged to this great enterprise." Deeper conviction characterized the Report on Temperance, and the Eldership placed itself on record as against all "compromise," planting "our banner on the solid platform of absolute Prohibition." With it was coupled a resolution "to discountenance the use of tobacco by ministers and Christian people everywhere." The Statistical Report gave the number of churches as 84; preaching places, 90; church houses, 66; conversions, 603; accessions, 557; membership, 3,000. Finding that "sometimes churches do not pay their preachers as they agreed to do, or should do," the Eldership resolved that "such church or churches be censured by this body as in its wisdom it may see proper, and that such censure be published in the Journal of the Eldership." The territory was divided into two stations and twenty circuits. Two of the ministers were in the field as Findlay College Collectors, T. Koogle and J. M. Cassel, the former in Pennsylvania and Maryland, and the latter in Ohio and Indiana. The "spirit and tone of the Eldership, with a few slight exceptions, were excellent."

31st Ohio Eldership.—An undertone of sadness pervaded the deliberations of the thirty-first session of the Ohio Eldership. For while it could sing,

"Hail, heavenly voice, once heard in Patmos, 'Write, Henceforth the dead who die in Christ are blest,"

Yet it could not but mourn the departure of the most picturesque figure in the body, the venerable soldier of many battles and glorious victories, Thomas Hickernell. The "Speaker's chair" was ordered to be "draped in mourning during the session," and Saturday evening was "set apart for memorial services." He was first licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1833, and was sent as a missionary to Ohio. For "nearly three score years he was one of our faithful standard bearers," the Committee on Obituaries reported, "who so honorably carried the banner of truth in our aggressive warfare against the King's enemies." It may truthfully be said of him that "his heart was pure, no anger remained in it, only peace and good will dwelt in it; no guile ever tainted it." He was supremely devoted to the truth, which Dante terms "the highest thing a man may keep." The session of the Eldership was held at Evergreen Bethel, Wood county, beginning Thursday morning, September 29, 1887. On the previous evening C. F. Winbigler preached the Opening Sermon, from Acts xx. 24 and 1 Cor. xii. 20. The officers of the previous Eldership were re-elected. A Sisters' Missionary Society had been organized at Findlay, which was reported, whereupon R. H. Bolton, T. Koogle and E. F. Lilley were appointed a committee to consider the same, and also the general missionary interests. This committee "heartily approved of the step taken by the sisters of the church of God at Findlay," and recommended that they "confer with the sisters of the Church of God over the State, looking toward the complete organization of said Society." "The sale of the property owned by the Eldership at what is known as the Wabash appointment" was authorized. On Temperance, the "pledge" was made "not to support any man, political party or class of men who defend in any way the rum traffic;" "denounced the action, and condemned the men, who made it possible for any city authorities to grant the right to saloon-keepers to run their saloons on the Lord's day," and promised to "work for State and national prohibition of intoxicating drinks as a beverage." Many of the Missionary Notes secured under the Eldership's system of raising missionary money it was found "either outlawed, or for other reasons uncollectable." It was decided "not to hold a Pentecostal meeting this year;" but a "Ministerial Association" was ordered "to be held at Mendon, Mercer county, Ohio." The Committee on the State of Religion found "the state of the Church good; the number of conversions good; the number of accessions good; the number of baptisms medium." To enforce assessments, the Eldership resolved "that such circuits, or any part thereof, which refuse to pay these assessments shall be left without preaching until such assessments are raised." Delegates were appointed to the Ohio State Centennial Sunday-school Celebration. The delegates to the General Eldership in May, 1887, made a written report, signed by the entire delegation. An action was taken to reduce to a minimum the circulation of defamatory reports, by making it "the duty of all the ministerial brethren especially to strictly abstain from personal insinuations, and in any way assisting in the circulation of any rumor or report which is, or may be, detrimental to the character of a brother minister of this Eldership." Koogle and Cassel were appointed "visitors to Findlay College." The appointments numbered twenty-five, two stations and twenty-three circuits.

32nd Ohio Eldership.—Even at so late a date as 1888 there were witnessed occasional vestiges in some of the Elderships of the original opposition to Constitutions, or any restrictive or regulative actions which would interfere with the personal liberty of members. One of these came to the surface at the Ohio Eldership which convened at West Unity, Williams county, on Thursday morning, September 27, 1888. The license of one of the ministers was "placed into the hands of the Standing Committee until he expresses a willingness to comply with the requirements contained in Art. xxii. of the Constitution." Non-representation marked this Eldership, as twenty ministers were absent, and fifteen circuits were not represented. Thirty-three ministers were in attendance, and eighteen ruling elders and delegates. J. M. Cassel was Speaker; R. H. Bolton, Clerk, and T. Koogle, Financial Secretary. The finances were in good condition. Permanent Funds, $3,500.00; Missionary Interest Fund, $711.06; Superannuated and Contingent Fund, $416.62. The Financial Secretary received for all the Funds $732.17. There were two additions to the ministry, one of which has made a notably good record—William Nelson Yates—formerly of West Pennsylvania; and S. M. Young, a member of the Christian Church. Koogle led in the opposition to "the private observance of the ordinances of God's house," by the introduction of a preamble and resolution, which declared that "the Church of God is a co-operative body, and believes in the essential unity and oneness of the Church;" that "it is of the highest importance that we labor to maintain unanimity of sentiment and oneness of faith and practice;" but that "there has recently been much discussion concerning the private observance of the ordinances of God's house, a practice at variance with the usual custom of the Church of God, and its interpretation of the word; therefore, it is the sense of this body that under our present system of co-operation no minister of the gospel should take it upon him to change the established order of the Church, thus introducing innovations, and removing the 'old landmarks,' until so authorized by the general body." No opposition to this resolution is indicated. It was deemed advisable to "employ a minister to travel during the year and collect mission funds, interest on notes, and procure notes." To this work T. Koogle was appointed, at a salary at the rate of $50.00 per month. The pastors were held "equally responsible for raising General Mission Funds assessed as they are for raising other Eldership assessments." Of twelve fields which were delinquent, five were exonerated. The delinquencies of the other seven "were added to the assessments of the coming year;" but "the punishment of non-supplying of a preacher to delinquent churches or circuits be suspended for the coming year." The statistical report gave the number of conversions at 562; accessions, 567; baptized, 238; membership, 2,380. But some reports were incomplete, making it "impossible to get the exact numerical strength of the Church of God in Ohio." This "carelessness is inexcusable," declared the Eldership, adding these stinging words of rebuke: "The remarks made by some ministers in their reports are inappropriate, and have a disreputable influence upon the body and the cause of God in general, and can not be tolerated, and the dignity of the body maintained." Pastors and churches were required to "organize financial boards" to look after the financial interests. An instance of liberality was commended in the case of "William Grindle and wife, who so liberally contributed of their means in canceling the indebtedness resting on the church at West Unity." There was one station and twenty-two other charges.

33rd Ohio Eldership.—As the thirty-third session of the Ohio Eldership preceded the session of the General Eldership, not only were delegates to that body elected; but instructions were given them on three points, viz.: to "use their influence with that body to change the plan of raising missionary moneys from the assessment policy, to that of employing an agent or agents;" to have "the General Eldership relinquish the control it has of church work in Findlay, and put the whole control of church work in the Ohio Eldership," and "to increase the basis of representation in the General Eldership." The session was held at Mendon, Mercer county, and began on Thursday morning, September 26, 1889, with thirty-four of the fifty-four ministers present, and twenty-nine ruling elders. Prof. W. H. Wagner, Findlay College, was elected Speaker; R. H. Bolton, Clerk, and T. Koogle, Financial Secretary. There being a division of sentiment among ministers and churches on the question of annual or life elders, some insisting that the rotary eldership is unscriptural, the Eldership declared "that each church govern itself as touching the election of officers." One of the strong men of the Eldership during the year had departed to "'see the King in his beauty,' in a land of pure delight," J. W. Aukerman, "an efficient worker in the vineyard of the Lord." He was licensed by the West Ohio Eldership in 1858, and proved himself a strong defender of the doctrines of the Church, a good pastor, a missionary preacher, and an able New Testament minister. It was made the duty of "each pastor to encourage all Sabbath-schools on his charge in their work by his presence and influence, and at places where there are none, to urge their organization as soon as practicable." The use of our own literature was strongly insisted upon. The somewhat unusual thing occurred when the Eldership reversed the action of the Standing Committee, on the ground that it had "transcended its authority in dropping the name of a minister from the Ministerial Roll." A State Woman's Missionary Society was organized September 27, 1889, "by adopting a Constitution and electing officers." These were—Mrs. Ollie Vanswearingen, President; Miss Jennie McDowell, First Vice President; Mrs. Tillie Welker, Second Vice President; Mrs. Cella Blessing, Recording Secretary; Mrs. Simon P. Gross, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. R. H. Bolton, Treasurer. This Society was to have representation in the Eldership. The great disparity between the number of reported accessions to the churches and the number baptized induced the Eldership to direct that at the next annual session the elders of the different churches should "report the number of unbaptized members in their respective congregations." Also to insist "that earnest teaching should be done on this Christian duty by every pastor." A "committee of five was appointed to prepare a theological reading course for the ministers of the Eldership." The Eldership made twenty-four appointments, to two of which missionary money was appropriated.

34th Ohio Eldership.—At the opening of the session of the Ohio Eldership in 1890 a warning voice was heard from the retiring Speaker, "urging that some means be taken to stem the backward tide in Ohio." "There seemed to be a falling off in many ways." However, this is not evident from the Minutes which were published in full in pamphlet form. The session was held at Rising Sun, Wood county, and began September 25th. The Opening Sermon was delivered on the evening of September 24th, by C. N. Belman, from I. Tim. iv. 16. There were thirty-three ministers present, and twenty-seven delegates. Seventeen ministers were absent, and eight fields were unrepresented. J. R. H. Latchaw was Speaker; M. K. Smith, Clerk, and T. Koogle, Financial Secretary. The reports of the pastors "showed the following state of the Church: Churches, 78; houses of worship, 65; converts, 442; accessions, 374; members, 2,511. A somewhat elaborate course of studies was approved, covering three years, with four and five studies each year. The Funds were in comparatively good condition, to wit: Permanent, $3,610.55; Mission, $513.54; Superannuated, $518.24; General Mission, $364.07. Henry Clay was the Treasurer. Regarding "the liquor traffic as the deadly enemy of the Church and State," the Eldership "pledged itself to support every effort that is made to banish this curse from our midst, and that we will positively refuse to cast our vote to license the saloon." The "disuse" of tobacco was "made a condition on which the young ministers may receive and retain their licenses," while "its use is discouraged among the older brethren." After careful consideration of a Petition from the Woman's State Missionary Association the Eldership voted: 1. To receive two delegates for each fifty members. 2. These delegates to be entitled to seats as full members of the Eldership. 3. Granting them "equal rights and privileges" and subject to the same limitations, as other members of the Eldership. 4. All net funds to be paid into the treasury of the Ohio Eldership, to be used for the support of any existing or proposed missionary enterprises. 5. That the Eldership shall have a corresponding number of delegates in the W. S. M. A. Two of "the most worthy members and efficient workers in the gospel ministry" ended their labors during the year—J. M. Cassel and J. A. Dobson. They were "a serious loss" to the Eldership, especially the former, who was a young man of rare promise. He was licensed by the West Ohio Eldership in 1868, and became one of its most efficient ministers. Dobson was originally licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1836. He was naturally endowed with talents which made him a strong man in the pulpit. "The earnest words spoken in their praise told how great was the esteem in which these fallen ministers of Christ were held." The keeping open of the Columbian Exposition on the Sabbath was denounced as an "encroachment on the Christian Sabbath, detrimental to the growth of the religion of Jesus Christ," and so the body "enters its most serious protest against this proposed desecration of the Christian Sabbath." The reading of Sunday newspapers was also strongly discountenanced. The Eldership "favored the movement on foot to effect 'a federal union' of the various ecclesiastical bodies of this country," and proposed to be represented in a meeting to be called for that purpose. It disapproved the use of Widows' Fund money in the settlement of estates of deceased ministers, as such money "shall be held sacred for the living necessities of their widows." The Eldership voted against the employment of a general missionary. There were three stations, all in Findlay, and twenty-four circuits.

35th Ohio Eldership.—"Decorum in the House of God" was the theme of J. R. H. Latchaw's Opening Sermon of the thirty-fifth session of the Ohio Eldership. Text—I. Tim. iii. 15. The session was held at Wooster, Wayne county, beginning September 24, 1891. T. Koogle was chosen for Speaker; M. K. Smith, Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Financial Secretary. Assessments were made for the Ohio and the General Eldership Missionary Funds, and each church delinquent on either Fund was charged with the same. Dr. Latchaw offered a resolution, expressing "the sense of the body, that the principle of tithing, or giving the tenth of one's gross income to God, is in accordance with the word of God, and that it should be so taught and practiced within the bounds of the Eldership." It called out "an animated discussion," but "was unanimously adopted by the Eldership." The sum of $227.00 was pledged on the floor of the Eldership "to aid young men attending Findlay College," and every interest of the College was emphatically endorsed. An intelligent and comprehensive report on Sabbath-schools, insisting on a school being organized in every church, that the best teachers should be secured, that good literature be furnished the children, and that teachers' meetings should be held. A revision of the Constitution was ordered. The disposition on the part of churches not to accept appointees of the Eldership was rebuked, and they were requested to receive and support the appointed ministers, and fully co-operate with them." To secure more missionary money each minister in charge of a field of labor was required to preach a sermon, or hold a missionary service at each appointment, and take a collection for the Mission Fund. "The practice of standing while praying during religious worship" was "not to be encouraged among the churches," was the opinion of the Committee on Resolutions. The Eldership "indefinitely postponed" the item. And it tabled a resolution disapproving of "the raising of money for the cause of God by holding socials, festivals, oyster suppers, etc." By a unanimous vote the Eldership approved of a resolution offered by G. W. Wilson, expressing "the sense of the Eldership that it is our duty to encourage the work of Mrs. Woodworth, and to invite and welcome her to Ohio to labor in her calling for the extension of the Church of God and the general good of all citizens." The attempt by President Latchaw and Prof. Wagner to reconsider and defeat the resolution was lost; but it revealed, as did other actions, the division of sentiment growing up in Ohio on important questions of Church polity and practices. "A levy on the churches" was made "for $340.00 for Missionary funds," and "$450.00 for Superannuated and Contingent funds." An "Orphans' Home," at Findlay, under the direction of C. J. Chase, a member of the Eldership, was recognized and "commended to the brethren as in every way worthy of their charitable consideration." The Stationing Committee divided the territory into five stations and twenty-seven circuits, leaving, however, two unsupplied, and appointing Dr. J. M. Carvell, of East Pennsylvania, to the College Chapel. There were also two mission appointments. An aggressive spirit breathes in the deliberations and actions of the Eldership.

36th Ohio Eldership.—Changing conditions in an Eldership, or shifting of sentiments and opinions, make revisions of Constitutions of corporate bodies a necessity. This was realized in Ohio, as well as in other Elderships. It was natural that with the growing influences of the College, which now had on the Roll eight or ten ministers and delegates in closest touch with that institution. At the session of the Eldership held at Ohio City, Van Wert county, beginning September 29, 1892, the sentiment in favor of revision manifested itself in the appointment of a "Committee on Revision of the Constitution and By-Laws of the Eldership." As this Committee was instructed to "report during the session of the present Eldership," it did so on Friday afternoon. The important amendments were these: 1. The presiding officer to be called "President." 2. Subjecting to discipline any member of the Eldership preferring charges against a minister "in open Eldership." 3. Requiring every ordained minister to preach twenty-five sermons every year, or forfeit his license. 4. Giving churches "the privilege of supplying their own pulpits by mutual arrangements between pastor and congregation." 5. Making it obligatory on all newly licensed ministers to pursue a regularly prescribed course of study; failure to do so to work forfeiture of license. All were adopted. E. Poling was elected Speaker; M. K. Smith, Clerk; R. H. Bolton, Financial Secretary. The membership of the Eldership was increased by the addition of six new names to the Roll, one of them being that of Prof. Charles T. Fox. But the Committee on Obituaries reported the deaths of three—James Neil, A. J. Warren, Thomas Metzler. Neil had received his first license in 1839; Warren, in 1858, and Metzler, in 1877. Memorial services of an impressive character "were held on Sabbath evening in commemoration of their worth and services." The Eldership Treasurer, Henry Clay, reported $4,457.53 in the Permanent Fund; in the Missionary Fund, $833.76; in the Superannuated and Contingent Fund, $290.57, and in the Widows' Fund, $97.43. The delegates to the General Eldership were instructed to vote: (1) For a change in our method of ordaining ministers "which will be more in conformity with apostolic usage." (2) To have three columns in The Advocate devoted to educational interests. (3) For a Church of God Year Book. The Eldership adopted a pledge to vote only for such candidates for the Legislature as will "pledge themselves to aid in securing an amendment to our State Constitution prohibiting forever the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes." The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was heartily endorsed, and churches were encouraged to organize local societies. The sum of $4,300 of the College debt was assumed by the Eldership. It was found that only fifty-five per cent. of the churches have Sabbath-schools, and the Eldership voted that "all the churches, as far as practicable, should organize and support Sabbath-schools throughout the year." The number of conversions during the year was 286; accessions, 270; baptized, 130; total members, 2,371; amount of pastors' support, $6,721.38. Only one-third of the membership of the churches was baptized. There were five stations, twenty-three circuits and four missions. To the latter $390.00 were appropriated.

37th Ohio Eldership.—There is apparent in the actions of the Ohio Eldership in 1893 a decided change in the spirit and temper of the body. The chastening effect of the events of the year left a decided impression on the body. The disappearance from the Roll of ministers of the names of J. R. H. Latchaw and R. H. Bolton is significant. The former not only left the Eldership and the Church, but severed his connection with the College. Bolton had been under discipline by the Standing Committee, whose report was adopted; but he was "given the privilege of a hearing, if he requests it." The Eldership held its meeting at Deweyville, Hancock county, beginning September 28th. E. Poling preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 27th, from John vi. 67. Thirty-six ministers were in attendance, and twenty ruling elders and delegates. W. P. Burchard was chosen President; J. W. Bolton, Clerk, and T. Koogle, Financial Secretary. Before the revised Constitution went into effect, the Eldership rescinded the Article granting "the various churches the privilege to supply their own pulpits by mutual arrangements between pastor and congregation," and restored the former Article. The Board of Missions, consisting of five members, was to take the place of the Stationing Committee and the Board of Boundaries. The Standing Committee, consisting of three members, was "given the privilege to appoint two members to assist" it in its work. The Permanent Fund was increased to $4,500.44; the Mission Fund was $832.01, and the other Funds were in good condition. As a tendency developed to "ignore the practice of feet-washing by some members of various churches," the Eldership not only expressed its faith in "the apostolic practice;" but declared that "as ministers and elders of this Eldership during the coming year will do all we can to support this ordinance by teaching and practice." One minister, Isaac Steiner, was during the year "called home to God, who giveth and taketh away." He was ordained in 1870, and though he labored principally in a local capacity, he was a useful and efficient member of the body. Lyman Ensminger, of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, was granted a license. Five ministers received transfers to other Elderships, while one was newly licensed and three were reinstated whose names had been dropped. The territory was divided into three stations, twenty-three circuits and three missions, all supplied with pastors except the Colton Mission. During the year the ministers had preached 3,706 sermons, and they received $6,337.46 in the way of support. The number of conversions, as a result of "many glorious revivals," was 993, and the accessions 704. "A strong tendency to more harmonious and concerted action" prevailed in the Eldership.

38th Ohio Eldership.—The Eldership now had on its Roll the names of forty ministers. Of this number twenty-eight were present at the thirty-eighth annual session, with eight ruling elders and nine delegates. The session was held at Canton, Stark county, beginning September 27, 1894. On the evening of the 26th, W. P. Burchard preached the Opening Sermon, from Acts xi. 24. The election for officers resulted in the choice of Prof. C. T. Fox, President; T. W. Bellingham, Clerk; T. Koogle, Financial Secretary, and H. Clay, Treasurer. The Woman's State Missionary Society was given one evening during the session. It also made a regular report to the Eldership, in which it "disapproved of the holding of church sociables for the purpose of raising money to support the gospel." The balance of funds in its treasury was $117.91. The Eldership deplored the "indifference in some Sabbath-Schools" to observe Children's College Day, and "to help to raise the necessary amount for the endowment of a professorship in theology, and urged a more general observance of the day." It also disapproved of the appropriation of money thus raised to other purposes than those intended by the action of the General Eldership. A new feature was special addresses "on the Y. M. C. A. work, the Y. P. S. C. E. movement, and the missionary cause." A strong expression of sentiment on pastoral visitations was given, by declaring it to be "the imperative duty of each minister to visit and pray with the families of his charge, and that he who fails in this respect, without cause, is criminally guilty of violating his divine commission." "Ministers deficient in their Eldership assessments," were "requested to go back and raise the deficiencies." The death of Jacob Pressler, licensed in 1863 by the West Ohio Eldership, was recorded, with an order to "drape the pulpit over the Lord's day, when memorial services were directed to be held." Several church properties were sold, the proceeds from which were directed to be "placed in the Permanent Fund for the time being, but were released from said Fund and applied to the payment of the debt on the Howard street church property, Findlay." The number of accessions to the churches was 750, and the total membership 2,634.

39th Ohio Eldership.—The abandonment of places of worship by a body of people is in many instances no reflection. Deaths and removals may be the unavoidable causes. Whatever may have been the reasons in the case of the church "five or six miles west of Findlay," the use of the church property at this place had been abandoned prior to the Eldership in 1895. The matter was placed in the hands of the Eldership trustees. So also the Lick Creek Bethel, giving the trustees discretionary power. And "the removal of the house at West Unity," and "the church property at Evergreen." A church lot at Auburn was sold. The Eldership held its session at Kirby, Wyandot county, beginning September 26, 1895, with a large attendance. There were forty ministers, eleven lay elders and six delegates enrolled. Eight ministers were absent. They chose W. N. Yates for President; T. W. Bellingham, Clerk; T. Koogle, Financial Clerk, and H. Clay, Treasurer. There was a Permanent Fund of $4,261.32; Missionary Interest Fund, $461.83; Superannuated and Contingent Fund, $687.30; General Mission Fund, $270.18; Building Fund, $206.12. The Eldership kept a careful supervision over its Funds, and exacted strict accountability on the part of ministers. If they failed in their collections the reason was demanded. Loyalty was in part measured by fidelity in these matters, as "much of the power and strength of a people associated to work to accomplish certain desired ends consists in the loyalty of its members to the laws or requirements of that body." There seemed to be some disloyalty in this respect, for it was declared that "the Eldership can not approve of such manifest disloyalty to its request; and it must say that if such indifference on the part of its members is allowed to continue it will not be long until there will be no Eldership." While the report was adopted, affirming the belief "that he is guilty of blood who gives his vote to perpetuate the liquor license system;" that "the saloon finds its existence in the still-house, and its immortality in the still-church," it gave rise to "a lively discussion." A three-year course of studies was provided for, and it was "obligatory upon every licentiate to pursue" said course, and "pass a satisfactory examination from year to year until said course is finished." I. H. Green, a minister of the Eldership, was congratulated on his missionary work in Colorado, and was recommended for appointment by the General Board of Missions. W. N. Yates received a transfer to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and was recommended as an efficient, earnest and devoted servant of God. The Eldership instructed its delegates to the General Eldership in 1896 to favor a change of Eldership titles, to vote for Life Certificates, and a change of form of The Advocate. The state of the Church was indicated in the report of statistics: Preaching places, 83; church organizations, 75; church houses, 86; conversions, 838; accessions, 640; baptized, 398; members, 2,781; ministerial support, $8,149. There were 7 stations, and 21 circuits. The deaths of two of "the beloved and much honored brethren" were recorded. They were "faithful and efficient ministers." Only J. C. Hoover's name is given, and he was first licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1878.

40th Ohio Eldership.—The Ohio Eldership of the churches of God in 1896 had the distinction of entertaining Clara Landes, missionary appointee to India. The Woman's Missionary Society was granted Friday evening to hold a public meeting, which was addressed by Miss Landes. The meeting of the Eldership was announced to be held at Shawnee, but was changed to Fostoria, Seneca county, to begin Thursday, at 9 a. m., October 1st. S. Kline was elected President; T. W. Bellingham, Clerk; T. Koogle, Financial Clerk; H. Clay, Treasurer. The Superannuated Fund was made a separate Fund, and the amount to be raised was fixed at $400.00, and the same amount for the Trustee and Contingent Fund. On account of some indifference in Sabbath-school work ministers were required to "organize as many Sabbath-schools as possible where none exist, and see that Church of God literature is used." Chas. Manchester, as Acting President of Findlay College, became a member of the Eldership, and presented the interests of the College. The College was strongly endorsed. Among the licentiates was W. B. Dowe, of Colorado, who was doing missionary work in that State. The provision of the Constitution requiring that delegates be provided with credentials was much neglected, and the Eldership censured it as "inadmissible carelessness," and "official boards, churches and ministers" were "urged to greater faithfulness and accuracy." There being a deficiency of $300.00 in the Superannuated Fund, the Standing Committee was authorized to apportion the amount to the churches. The President of the Eldership of 1895 having removed to East Pennsylvania, T. Koogle preached the Opening Sermon, from Col. iv. 17. There were twenty-eight fields of labor, six stations and twenty-two circuits. There were three churches in Findlay, and two in Canton. Fostoria was a mission station, with $100.00 appropriation. Mrs. Witham was appointed with her husband, J. A. Witham, to serve Van Wert circuit.

41st Ohio Eldership.—The difference in the spirit of a body of people at successive gatherings will be read in its minutes by the careful observer. It will percolate unconsciously through forms of words which are not meant to express it. And when the more elastic and animated phraseology of the Minutes of the Eldership of the churches of God in Ohio in 1897 is contrasted with that of the Minutes of 1895, or 1896, the testimony of a visitor is appreciated, when he says it was his "pleasure to be in attendance;" or, "perfect unanimity, harmony and brotherly love prevailed." "The attendance was much larger than for a number of years." The session was held in the Howard Street Mission, Findlay, Hancock county, beginning September 30, 1897, when W. P. Small delivered the Opening Sermon, from Isa. lx. 1. Forty-two ministers, twenty ruling elders and five delegates responded at the calling of the Roll. C. Manchester "wielded the gavel with marked precision and dexterity;" T. W. Bellingham, "a smiling little Scotchman," was Clerk, and the strong featured T. Koogle was Financial Secretary. Items which inspired hopefulness were the 758 conversions, 612 accessions, and an increase in pastors' salaries. Prospects were brighter for mission work in Mansfield. The church property in that city had been sold. The purchaser, Brother John Willaman, offered it as a gift to the Eldership, which was accepted, and it was "voted that mission work be reopened in Mansfield at once." An emphatic "protest" was registered "against the countenance of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants;" also "deploring the existence of what is known as the 'Dow Tax' law," believing that "any tax or license system for the sale of liquors tends to perpetuate a traffic dishonoring to God and destructive to human happiness, homes and hopes." In addition to the Course of Studies, a "reading course to comprise two years" was adopted, and a more stringent enforcement of examinations was insisted upon. An unusual resolution was agreed to, "that ministers and delegates be careful to leave a holy influence among those whose hospitality they enjoy." A total of $938.00 was apportioned among the stations and circuits to replenish the four different Funds of the Eldership.

42nd Ohio Eldership.—Ohio Eldership delayed changes in its Constitution and Articles of Incorporation to harmonize them with the actions of the General Eldership. But in 1898 the necessary instructions were given to the officers of the Eldership to have "the Articles of Incorporation changed in all places where the title occurs," and to secure a new seal. The Constitution was amended accordingly. The annual session was held at Ney, Defiance county, and the Opening Sermon was delivered September 28, 1898, by Charles Manchester, from I. Tim. iv. 16. Thirty-five ministers were present, and eleven absent, with twelve ruling elders and delegates. Delegate M. K. Smith was elected President; Charles Manchester, Clerk; T. Koogle, Financial Secretary, and P. J. Grose, Treasurer. With the Treasurer, the trustees of the Eldership were to act in making loans and approving securities. The First National Bank of Findlay was named as the bank of deposit. "Fifteen minutes in the midst of each sitting" was to "be devoted to religious devotions." Mrs. Hill, of Loudonville, had made a bequest of $800.00 to the Eldership. The Treasurer held mortgage securities to the amount of $2,430.00; notes otherwise secured, $1,305.00, and cash, $1,449.50. The Financial Secretary received during the year and at the Eldership $1,096.24. At the request of the Ohio W. M. S., the Eldership "set apart for its use the afternoon and evening of Friday of each annual session, that the brotherhood may be more fully informed of the work and methods of the W. M. S." The inactivity of local preachers was not all imputed to them. "The traveling preachers should encourage them, and speak a good word in their behalf before the churches." While "forty-one of our members were removed by the angel of death," the ranks of the ministry were not invaded. All ministers licensed since the Course of Studies was adopted were "required to pursue the Course adopted" in 1897. The Eldership realized the importance of more systematic work in the collections for its various funds, and ordered assessments for four, the lifting of some collections earlier in the year, and named the month of January for special collections to replenish the General Mission Fund. The Treasurer's bond "drawn for $6,000.00" was approved. The church membership had increased to 3,074, the accessions during the year having been 591. The ministers received $7,442.49. "Not one-half of the converts are baptized." Hence the Eldership "insisted on all converts being obedient to the commands of God." Among the licentiates was Mary H. Babcock.

43rd Ohio Eldership.—The status of young ministers at the College, and of young men contemplating the ministry had been from the first a question which involved some embarrassment. The definite solution reached in 1899 much relieved the situation. It was decided that the Ohio Eldership would ordain only such men as proposed entering its ministry, or to receive only such into its fellowship. Hence, licensed ministers attending College were held "amenable to their own Elderships," and "each Annual Eldership should have the privilege of licensing its own young men." This action was the result of the action of the General Eldership in 1899, which "allowed licensed ministerial students of Findlay College to labor in the ministry in Ohio." The session of 1899 was well attended. When the Roll was called at Rising Sun, Wood county, September 28th, there were thirty-seven ministers present, and twenty-four lay delegates. The previous evening Z. H. Yoder preached the Opening Sermon, from I. Cor. xv. 40. The President was T. W. Bellingham; Clerk, M. K. Smith; Financial Secretary, T. Koogle; Treasurer, P. J. Grose. With the change from annual licenses to Life Certificates of Ordination, there came other important changes. The Committee on License became the Committee on Ordination. Three forms of licenses were agreed upon, to wit: Life Certificates, Certificates limited to one year, and Limited Annual licenses. To determine to which class previously licensed ministers were to belong the Committee on License was, at its discretion, authorized to require "any or all the teaching elders to pass a satisfactory examination in reference to faith and practice." "The doctrine of 'Divine Healing,' as taught and practiced by one Dr. John A. Dowie" was declared "unscriptural, illogical and contrary to the laws of our land, and tends to cause division in Churches where it is advocated." Consequently "no one advocating said theory shall be eligible to a license or an official position in the Church or Sunday-school." The ministers and churches were inhibited from changing the order of administering the ordinances. Included with the deaths of the wives of three ministers was that of "Father Ensminger," who had been a licensed minister since 1893, but had been preaching years before. "Licensing the saloon" the Eldership denounced as "a sinful practice," it being "inconsistent to legalize that which we know to be wrong." The two church organizations in Canton having been "merged into one," this action was approved. There was a debt of $1,529.94 on the Fostoria Mission property. The creditors proposed to throw off $537.49, and the Eldership authorized a draft on the Available Mission Fund not to exceed $700.00, and make settlement. This was to be reimbursed from "the sale of the Mansfield Mission property." To canvass for funds for a local church required favorable action by the Eldership. There were "encouraging openings for mission work at Lima and Delphos." While the "spiritual condition of the various churches" was given as "ten reported good, nineteen fair and five favorable," the total membership was reduced to 2,598. There were 76 church houses, 75 churches, 507 conversions, 360 accessions, 183 baptized. The number of charges was twenty-seven.

44th Ohio Eldership.—The Ohio Eldership was discreet in dealing with a proposition submitted by correspondence, proposing to send one M. G. Alexanian as a missionary to "Armenia, the cradle of Christianity, the Garden of Eden land." It referred the matter to the Ohio W. M. S., which was aiding the work in India. It however recommended Rev. M. G. Alexanian to the churches of God in Ohio, "an instance of benevolent altruism only too common. The churches put the right construction on the action. This occurred at the session of the Eldership held at Mendon, Mercer county, beginning Thursday morning, September 27, 1900. The previous evening Charles H. Gatchell delivered the Opening Sermon, from Gal. i. 15, 16. The officers elected were President, S. Kline; Clerk, M. K. Smith; Financial Secretary, T. Koogle; Treasurer, P. J. Grose. Thirty-four ministers and twenty-six ruling elders and delegates were present. To secure a more prompt payment of assessments for the different Funds the Eldership "resolved that each circuit and station which fails to raise its assessment of funds shall be left without a pastor until the said funds are raised and turned over to the Eldership." Another proposition prevailed, intended to overcome "the difficulty in securing places to hold the Eldership." It provided that "each minister, elder, delegate and all visitors coming to be entertained, shall pay $1.00 into the treasury of the church where the Eldership is held." "Legislators" were "denounced who voted against the Local Option bill" in the last Legislature. The Report on the State of Religion contained these items: Preaching places and church organizations, 75; church houses, 74; conversions, 580; accessions, 467; baptized, 313; membership, 2,608. The Ferguson Bethel was sold, and the net proceeds placed in the Permanent Mission Fund. Said Fund already had $4,594.32. Two of "the regularly ordained ministers of the Eldership" were "called from labor to reward" during the year—Sisters L. Allaman and N. Carr. They were "devoted, earnest Christian workers, whose lives as ministers were commendable." Two of the ministers severed their connection with the Eldership—I. H. Greene and Thos. W. Bellingham. The Eldership granted "limited Annual Licenses" to those applicants who had not made the required progress in the Course of Studies, and later, the "Certificate of Life Ordination." The former did not have "full rights as members of the Eldership" until this session, when action was taken granting them such rights. The W. M. S. was in active co-operation with the Eldership, and was granted Saturday afternoon to hold a session. A bequest was received from William Snodgrass, "not a member of the Church of God," whose "wisdom and liberality in the disposition of money" were "recommended to others." Greater activity was insisted upon on the part of ministers "in encouraging and pushing forward the work of the Sabbath-school." The aggregate support of the pastors was $5,121.00. There were twenty-six on the twenty-five stations and circuits, with E. Poling "General Worker in the Eldership." There were thirty-seven names on the "Roll of Ministers," and seven "licensed."

45th Ohio Eldership.—The finances of the Ohio Eldership were systematically adjusted and methodically worked. The Financial Secretary during the year looked after the various Funds. Through his efforts the income for the year 1900—01 of the various Funds was $1,361.42; balance in the Permanent Fund, $5,738.37; Available Fund, $1,093.22. The session of 1901 was held at Ohio City, Van Wert county, September 26-30. Solomon Kline preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 25th, from Matt. xvi. 18. On the Roll of ministers were forty-four names, of which number eight were not in attendance. Only fifteen Elders and delegates, representing eleven of the thirty-two fields, were present. The body elected Geo. A. Bartlebaugh, President; Milton K. Smith, Clerk; Tobias Koogle, Financial Secretary; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. The subjects of Sunday-schools and Temperance were given special prominence, an hour being assigned to each, and a number of ministers participating in the discussions. Christians were admonished that it is "their duty to put forth all legal efforts with voice and practice to get rid of the great monster, the liquor traffic." As the use of tobacco was always connected with the subject of temperance, the Eldership resolved "that no license be granted to any man who uses tobacco." Systematic and organized effort was directed to be put forth by all the churches and pastors to promote Sunday-school interests. On account of the inevitable confusion "resulting from breaking up the Eldership on Saturday evening, the present was to be protracted until Monday, with an ordinance meeting on Sunday evening. The time of the meeting of the Eldership was then changed to Monday morning, and the Opening Sermon to be preached on Sunday morning, thus "giving opportunity for an ordinance meeting on Sabbath evening." On Friday afternoon a joint session with the W. M. S. was ordered in the interest of missions. Chas. T. Fox was designated Ohio Eldership Sabbath-school Superintendent, part of his duties being to hold Sabbath-school conventions on the different fields of labor. The new Course of Studies extended through three years, including six and seven studies in each year. The Eldership insisted that "the ministers give special attention to the distinctive doctrines which we hold, so that faith in the whole word of God may be inspired." It also declared, that "ministers shall emphasize the fact that the authority and government of the church is the authority and government of heaven, and that ruling and teaching elders shall wisely, but sternly, exercise discipline, as the Scriptures direct." The trouble arising through the theory that an elder of a church is an elder in any church was precluded by applying to ruling elders the provision of the Eldership Constitution against a minister's laboring on another pastor's field without proper authority. Ministers were urged to give attention to the organizing of Societies of Christian Endeavor in all the churches, as they are "a mighty factor in the spiritual development and effectual working power in the Church." The spiritual condition of twenty-one charges was reported fair; five were reported good.

46th Ohio Eldership.—Ohio, having been one of the Elderships in active co-operation with the W. G. M. S. of 1890, was deeply interested in the movement to organize a W. G. M. S. with which the Woman's Missionary Societies of all the Elderships could be identified. Efforts were made during the Summer of 1902 to increase the number of local societies, preparatory to the Convention to be held at Findlay, Ohio, in June, 1903, to organize said W. G. M. S. As the Eldership was expected to take action relative to this movement much interest centered on its session to be held at Deweyville, Hancock county, beginning September 21, 1902. The subject came up when the Committee on Resolutions reported, as it submitted a preamble and two resolutions expressing the sense of the Eldership. "An interesting discussion took place, especially on the resolution touching the subject of the W. G. M. S." "The President of the Society, Mrs. Mary B. Newcomer, of Illinois Eldership, was present, and was granted privilege to speak on the resolution." The Committee's Report was agreed to, speaking in strong terms of the work accomplished "by Clara Landes in India, under the auspices of the W. G. M. S. and other Eldership Missionary Societies;" declaring that she "earnestly asked for a united brotherhood to support her work," and then resolved that "we as an Eldership express our hearty approval of the action of the General Eldership, and pledge our loyalty and support." The pledge of the Eldership toward the payment of the debt of $24,000.00 resting on Findlay College in 1894 had not yet been fully paid, and C. T. Fox and C. Manchester were appointed "collectors to secure funds to cover the deficit." During the year it "had pleased our heavenly Father to take from our ranks and Eldership," stated the Committee on Obituaries, "our dear brother and co-worker, W. H. Oliver. For over forty years he had labored in word and doctrine, and maintained an untarnished reputation as a consecrated, self-sacrificing man of God. The spiritual condition of the churches was reported to be "fair" and "good." The ministers had preached 3,172 sermons, and received an aggregate of salaries to the amount of $7,689.54. Church organizations, 70; conversions, 337; accessions, 205; total membership, 2,095. In addition to very positive resolutions against the liquor traffic and "the tobacco habit" the Committee on Temperance asked that the members be continued in office during the year, to "co-operate with the brethren to bring to active life the measures resolved on in this body, and secure the enforcement of the laws for the suppression of the liquor traffic." Also, that it "shall work in harmony with similar committees of other bodies for the suppression of the social vice." The Eldership was presided over by Z. H. Yoder, with W. E. Turner, Clerk; T. Koogle, Financial Secretary; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. The number of appointments was twenty-nine—six stations and twenty-three circuits, one of the latter unsupplied. E. Poling was appointed General Missionary Worker, and C. T. Fox, Eldership Sabbath-school Superintendent.

47th Ohio Eldership.—A new feature of the forty-seventh Ohio Eldership, provided for in 1901, was a "Sunday-school rally" on the Sunday afternoon following the Opening Sermon, conducted by W. E. Turner. The Opening Sermon was delivered on Sunday morning, August 23, 1903, by Z. H. Yoder, from Rom. v. 19. In the evening the ordinances of God's house were observed. The session was held at Canton, Stark county, and began August 24th, with twenty-four of the forty ministers present, and seventeen ruling elders and delegates, representing the twenty-eight fields of labor. T. Koogle was elected President; C. H. Gatchell, Clerk; Chas. F. Raach, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Clerk; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. Impressive memorial services were held in memory of W. P. Small, who died May 18, 1903, aged 66 years. A native of Shelby county, Ohio, he was converted at the age of seventeen years, and united with the Methodist Protestant Church; but he united with the church of God at Anderson Bethel in 1858. He received his first license October 17, 1860, and remained a member of the Ohio Eldership forty-three years. He was an earnest minister, unwavering in fidelity to the Church; unassuming and affable; exemplary, devoted and spiritual. An important change was made in the ordinal number of the Eldership. It was the forty-seventh from the organization of the West Ohio Eldership, but the sixty-seventh from the organization of the first Ohio Eldership. Its number was changed on motion of Chas. Manchester. Subsequent Elderships are numbered accordingly. The Eldership strongly favored an educated ministry, and meanwhile insisted on all licentiates taking in full the Course of Studies prescribed by the body. So interested was the Eldership in the Christian Endeavor work that each pastor became a member of the Society, and ordered that "two hours of the next Ministerial Association be given to the consideration of C. E. work and methods." By implication the Eldership approved of the organization of the W. G. M. S. in June, 1903, by printing in full the Minutes of the W. M. S. of Ohio with its Journal. It declared its "hearty approval of the General Eldership's action and the work of the Convention," and affirmed its "loyalty and fidelity to the General Eldership's new W. G. M. S." There was one addition to the number of appointments.

68th Ohio Eldership.—Two amendments to the Constitution marked the progress of the Ohio Eldership in 1904. One provided for an additional Clerk, which had been elected in 1903. The other, for one more regular committee of the Eldership—the Y. P. S. C. E. Committee. Conditions relating to the W. G. M. S. were quite unsatisfactory during the year, and there was such a degree of friction and contention as to prove very "detrimental to local interests, making it difficult for pastors to labor on some fields successfully." The Eldership expressed it as its conviction that such a state of affairs is to be "deplored," and "that every possible effort should be made to unify and harmonize our mission work." The session of the Eldership was held at Wooster, Wayne county, August 28 to September 1, 1904. On Sunday morning T. Koogle preached the Opening Sermon, from Jonah iii. 1, 2. The Sunday-school rally was held in the afternoon. In the evening, preparatory to the observance of the ordinances, Chas. T. Fox delivered a sermon based on I. Peter v. 5-7. The Eldership was organized by the election of C. N. Belman, President; C. H. Gatchell, Secretary; F. F. Manchester, Financial Secretary; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. The original pledge of $5,000.00 toward the College debt had been reduced to $2,588.89. Two ministers during the year had "passed from labor to reward"—S. Dickerhoof and Wm. P. Burchard. They were commended for their staunch and unwavering fidelity to the cause in whose interest they spent their lives, and their helpfulness toward every appeal and need. Five new C. E. Societies were organized during the year, and ministers were urged to organize societies in all the churches. Provision was made by constitutional amendment for two ruling elders as delegates from every church having fifty or more members. Five of the ministers of the Eldership were officially connected with Findlay College—C. I. Brown, President, successor of C. Manchester; F. F. Manchester, Financial Secretary; C. T. Fox, Dean of the Faculty; F. K. Baker, Professor of Theology; G. G. Bruer, Professor of Greek and English Literature. The number of church organizations was 69; conversions during the year, 367; accessions, 266; baptized, 104; total membership, 2,251.

69th Ohio Eldership.—Though there was dissent from actions of the General Eldership in some things in the Ohio Eldership, the spirit of loyalty at all times predominated. Hence, after the session of the General Eldership in 1905, this spirit found expression in strong sentiments of approval of the actions of said body. Its "action on the 'harmony and union of all our Woman's Missionary Societies' was commended," and the Eldership pledged itself to work to that end. The annual session was held at Belmore, Putnam county, August 27-31, 1905. On the Sunday morning previous, the Opening Sermon was preached by C. N. Belman, from II. Tim. iv. 1-4. The Ordinance Sermon was delivered by C. I. Brown, from John xiii. 13-15. The "Ministerial Register" contained forty-seven names. There were thirty-eight ministers and eighteen delegates in attendance. Two of the former and three of the latter were women. The officers elected were President, C. H. Gatchell; Clerk, W. E. Turner; Transcribing Clerk, Chas. Manchester; Financial Secretary, F. F. Manchester; Treasurer, P. J. Grose. During the year the Liberty church property had been sold for $234.00, which was placed to the credit of the Building Fund. The assets in the Permanent Mission Fund amounted to $5,850.03; in the Available Mission Fund, $1,167.32, and the receipts for all "Available Funds," $2,900.33, while the expenditures were $1,569.53. A "Union Convention of the Sunday-schools and C. E. Societies of the Eldership" was arranged for, to meet at the time and place of the Ministerial Association. On education the Eldership naturally took advanced ground, though it was still in arrears on its pledge toward the College debt of 1894. It made the Report of the Committee on Education a Special order of business, and pledged its "united and individual support to Findlay College," and "approved the financial plan adopted by the Board of Trustees." The Course of Studies extended over a period of three years. There remained unpaid on the principal of its pledge toward the College debt $1,248.18, and interest to the amount of $1,290.74; but action was taken to extinguish principal and interest at an early date. On temperance the Eldership was specific in its denunciation of Governor Herrick for the use of "the threatened veto power" to modify the Act pending in the Legislature, and resolved to "agree to use our voice, vote and influence to defeat this high-handed exhibition of machine politics and corrupt subservency to the liquor traffic." In addition to tobacco, the Committee on Temperance also included the use of the tongue as a proper subject upon which to pass temperance resolutions. It declared that "we are taught to be 'temperate in all things,' and since the 'tongue is an unruly member,' causing dissension and strife between brethren, and destroying the influence of the Christian minister by the immoderate use of language," the admonition of Peter should be heeded, "What manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness." Ministers were urged to see that C. E. Societies are organized in all the churches, since these societies are "schools for preparation and training in all Christian work," and "the future of the church depends upon the young people." Organized Sunday-school work was approved, as was also the Home Department, the Cradle Roll and Normal Bible work. There were twenty-nine fields of labor, all supplied with pastors. One of these was the President of the College, and several were College students, while three other professors in the College were on the "Ohio Eldership Ministerial Roll." An equitable division was made of the proceeds of the sale of a parsonage located on the Mendon circuit. It had been built by the churches of a larger field, and in case of sale the amount realized was to be "equally divided among the churches of the former Mendon circuit." Assessments were made for the Ohio Eldership and the General Eldership Mission Funds, the former 55 per cent. of the total, and the latter 45 per cent., the aggregate being $937.00. Other collections were regulated by the Constitution.

70th Ohio Eldership.—The returned missionary to India, Clara Landes, of Iowa, was visiting in Ohio in the Fall of 1906, and was present at the Ohio Eldership. An hour of the sitting on the second day morning was allotted to her. But at the previous sitting action was taken in which the Eldership pledged itself "most heartily to support the 'Commission' and the propositions adopted by the 'Commission' and the Board of Incorporation at Findlay, in 1906, for a basis by which it is hoped to bring about harmony and union of all our missionary societies and workers, the same being in accordance with the action of the General Eldership in 1905." It commended the Ohio W. M. S. in co-operation with the Eldership; but for various reasons it suggested that "the Missionary Society meet at the same time and place as the Ministerial Association," instead of the Eldership. Seventy-five ministers and delegates attended the session in 1906, which was held at Findlay, Hancock county, with the College church, beginning Monday morning, August 27th, and continuing until Wednesday evening. On Sabbath morning C. H. Gatchell preached the Opening Sermon, from John xv. 16. The Ordinance Sermon was delivered on Sabbath evening by T. Koogle, from I. Cor. xi. 2. Elections for officers resulted in the choice of C. T. Fox for President; W. E. Turner, Clerk; Chas. F. Raach, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Clerk; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. The Eldership had comparatively large interests in Church properties, and to safeguard these it gave "authority to the Clerk to investigate Church property; to look after the property not deeded to the Ohio Eldership; to secure proper deeds; to look after vacant houses of worship, and the sale of the same." The Treasurer, however, "was made the custodian of the deeds and legal papers of the Eldership." The Eldership trustees this year were T. Koogle, C. T. Fox, C. N. Belman, P. J. Grose, M. K. Smith. A committee to be known as the Board of Education was named, "whose duty it shall be to examine candidates for the ministry in their literary qualifications, and recommend the same to the Committee on License." It was required that "all persons entering the ministry of the Eldership take the prescribed Course of Studies, or its equivalent. T. Koogle, C. I. Brown, T. H. McAfee, C. T. Fox, F. K. Baker constituted the Board. It was arranged to get complete statistics of the Sunday-schools, and a Sunday-school Rally was ordered held each year on the afternoon of the Sunday on which the Opening Sermon is delivered in the morning. Assessments were ordered for the General and the Ohio Eldership Funds to the amount of $860.00. The two ministers on the Superannuated list—G. W. Wilson and Levi Rothrock—received $175.00 and $125.00 respectively. Y. P. S. C. E. work was making progress, as four new societies were organized during the year. The Eldership proceeded on the principle that "if we expect the Church to live, we must hold and train our young people." An attack was made on "patent medicines" in connection with actions on the temperance question, as they "are doing much to create an appetite for strong drink and ruining the health of persons using them. There were 72 preaching places in the Eldership territory, 68 church organizations, 727 conversions during the year, 267 baptized, 264 accessions, 32 fields of labor, $9,625.11 amount of support of pastors, 2,770 names on church Records.

Adam Kline, "an honored father in Israel," was removed by death during the year. He was ordained by the West Ohio Eldership in 1859, but labored mainly in a local capacity. He was a native of Pennsylvania, born June 3, 1817. As a minister he was a firm believer and able defender of the principles and doctrines of the Church of God. "He took the world for his field, and 'went everywhere preaching the word.'"

71st Ohio Eldership.—A very positive stand was taken by the Ohio Eldership against the course pursued in 1906-7 by the W. G. M. S. of 1890. It had re-appointed Clara Landes and appointed A. B. Chamberlin and wife missionaries to India. This action was disapproved by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. But as they desired to visit and canvass churches in Ohio, the Standing Committee withheld its consent, because it believed such a course "would not only be unwise, but out of harmony with the Ohio Eldership and the General Eldership." A spirited discussion of this action followed its report at the Eldership, which adopted it by a vote of 36 to 7. This was done at the session held at Vermillion, Ashland county, August 25-28, 1907. On Sabbath morning, August 25th, C. T. Fox preached the Opening Sermon, from John xii. 32. In the afternoon the Sunday-school Rally was conducted by W. E. Turner. In the evening H. D. Boughter preached the Ordinance Sermon, from John xiv. 15. When on Monday morning the Eldership was constituted, balloting resulted in the election of M. K. Smith, President; W. E. Turner, Clerk; Chas. F. Raach, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Clerk; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. The "worldly tendency of the times" was recognized as a reason making it "imperative that churches and all Christian people should give more attention to Christian education." Hence the hearty endorsement of Findlay College, where young men contemplating the ministry can "take special training for their life's work." The amount of the Ohio Eldership's pledge toward the College debt remaining unpaid was $196.86, with interest of $720.83 due August 24, 1907. The observance of Children's College Day, and the taking of an offering for the College, were emphasized. There were 47 schools reported, with 2,385 scholars. They raised $2,179.29 for all purposes. The oldest minister in the Eldership, G. W. Wilson, had died during the year. He was born at Georgetown, D. C.; died at Findlay, Ohio, February 6, 1907, aged 92 years, 9 months and 16 days. His parents were Presbyterians; but being left an orphan at the age of two and a half years, he was cared for by an uncle and aunt, who were members of the Catholic Church. They early began to prepare him for the priesthood, but at the age of fourteen he "decided to free himself from the tyranny to which he was subjected by braving the battle of life for himself." He was converted at the age of seventeen, and began Christian work at once, laboring first among the Evangelical people, and then among the Methodists. Subsequent to 1840 he met Winebrenner and was baptized by him. He was ordained by the Ohio Eldership October 19, 1853. "He was highly esteemed because of the purity of his life, his rectitude of character and his ability as a master builder." He held many official positions in his Eldership, and at different times was a delegate to the General Eldership, in 1896 preaching the Opening Sermon. Those who knew him personally enjoyed his friendship and confidence with increasing gratification as he was approaching the border land of Death.

The good work done by the Christian Endeavor movement, which was regarded as "marvelous," incited the Eldership to organize an "Eldership Endeavor Convention," to which the local societies were urged to send delegates. The Anti-Saloon League of Ohio received commendation for its work, and support was promised it by the Eldership. The W. C. T. U. was endorsed as "a channel through which our temperance convictions may be voiced and carried successfully into our respective communities, praying and working that our Legislature at its earliest possible date may give us county local option." The success already gained "in freeing so many towns and counties of this great evil" was gratefully recognized as an act of divine providence.

72nd Ohio Eldership.—The usual preliminary services to the Eldership session in 1908 were held Saturday evening and throughout the Sabbath. G. W. Rowlinson preached on Saturday evening. G. A. Bartlebaugh delivered the Opening Sermon Sabbath morning, from Isa. xxviii. 16. Theme—"The Sure Foundation." At the Sunday-school Rally, conducted by W. E. Turner, the Adult Bible Class and Teachers' Training Classes were the subjects emphasized. In the evening T. H. McAfee preached the Ordinance Sermon, after which the twin ordinances were observed. As the Ohio W. M. S. in co-operation with the W. G. M. S. of 1890 continued to maintain its organization and work, the Eldership "most heartily endorsed and approved" the actions of the Executive Board of the General Eldership and of the Ohio Standing Committee against those societies, and pledged itself as an Eldership and its individual members "to do all in our power to carry said actions into effect." And the course of the W. M. S. in co-operation with the Eldership was approved and commended. The officers of the Eldership were S. D. Harlan, President; W. E. Turner, Clerk; Chas. F. Raach, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Secretary; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. The session was held at Union Bethel, Huron county, August 24 and 25, 1908. Recognition was given to Sabbath-school and Y. P. S. C. E. work by the appointment of separate committees for each. The Committee on Sunday-schools reported 50 schools, with 273 teachers and 3,273 scholars. The organization of Teachers' Training Classes, of which there were only two, was insisted upon as the "solution of many future problems touching the progress of Sunday-schools." The Christian Endeavor work was "commended to the churches as one of the many schools in our Christian work for training to do active and consecrated service." The Carnegie endowment proposition, "that he will contribute $12,500 toward $50,000 new endowment" was accepted, with the expressed belief "that Ohio should raise $5,000.00." Because of some neglect among the churches in the observance of Feet-washing and the Communion the Eldership declared that it "recognized the divine command to observe these ordinances," and that they are "a means of deepening the spiritual life of the churches." This "command we recognize as one of the central principles of the Church of God," and "we urge upon all pastors and churches to regularly and systematically observe the ordinances at least once a year." The practice of having formal "ordination services" for those who were granted Life Certificates of Ordination had become a fixed order.

73rd Ohio Eldership.—A Committee on Revision of the Constitution did its work during the year 1908-9, and matured and reported "a uniform plan for the financial support of the churches," which was adopted. Also a regular "system of holding annual congregational and business meetings," providing for "the calling of meetings for the purpose of electing church officers, to plan for the coming year, to elect delegates to the Eldership, to hear reports of church officers," and to transact other business. The action of the General Eldership of 1909 concerning the W. G. M. S. troubles also required consideration. "The Eldership by a yea and nay vote, one or two not voting, but no nay vote," "pledged itself to loyally co-operate with the General Eldership in the adjustment of our foreign missionary difficulties." The Eldership convened at Ohio City, Van Wert county, August 30, 1909, the Opening Sermon having been preached the Sabbath morning previous, by S. D. Harlan, from Acts xvi. 26. Theme:—"Called of God to be a Minister and Witness for Christ Jesus." The Ordinance Sermon by Leroy De Hayes was based on Isa. v. 1-6. Theme:—"Our Privileges; Not Our Duties." Twenty-nine of the forty-five ministers of the Eldership were present, and twenty-six delegates. Two ministers and one of the delegates were women—Grace Netro and Anna Witham, and Clara Wetz. The officers of the Eldership were C. I. Brown, President; W. E. Turner, Clerk; Chas. F. Raach, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Secretary; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. Leah K. Becker, missionary to India, was present and addressed the Eldership. The Treasurer's Report showed balances as follows: Permanent Mission Fund, $6,088.53; Available Mission Fund, $694.19; Ohio Eldership Fund, $217.83; Building Fund, $225.07. Scott Bethel had been sold, and a deed executed by the Trustees of the Eldership. During the Eldership session the Financial Secretary received $854.06. "The Temperance Pledge Signing Movement" was "heartily endorsed," and "the Sunday-schools within the bounds of the Ohio Eldership" were asked "to faithfully observe Temperance Sunday, and to prayerfully press home the temperance lessons found in our Sunday-school literature." Death had claimed Thomas James during the year, as he died July 5, 1909, aged 79 years and 3 months. He was born in Adams county, Pa.; but spent nearly his whole life in Crawford county, Ohio. He was ordained by the West Ohio Eldership in 1871, and spent thirty years in the active ministry. The Eldership would change the polity of the General Eldership in so far as to "prevent a minister from serving as a lay delegate to the General Eldership." It also advised "that in a church having men eligible to the offices of elder and deacon, women should not be elected to these offices, and that the same policy should prevail as to the delegates to the Eldership." The Eldership expressed its pleasure in having "one of its members on the Executive Committee of the Ohio Sunday-school Association in the person of M. K. Smith." Commendable interest was manifested in the work of the various Sunday-school organizations, as the Eldership "feels that the work of organization is not yet overdone," and it continued to urge schools to organize Adult Bible Classes, Teachers' Training Classes, Teachers' Meetings, and to have Home Departments and Cradle Rolls. There were 30 fields of labor, 54 church organizations, 55 church houses, 478 conversions, 326 accessions, 160 baptized, 2,231 names enrolled as members, and total amount of support, $9,998.78.

74th Ohio Eldership.—Services of an "evangelistic" character were a feature of the Ohio Eldership in 1910. "The spirit of the Eldership was one of unanimity, brotherly love and sweet Christian fellowship." The session was held at Wooster, Wayne county, September 9-13, and organized on Saturday morning, while the Opening Sermon was deferred until Sabbath morning, when it was preached by C. I. Brown, from II. Tim. iii. 15-17. W. E. Turner was elected President; Chas. F. Raach, Clerk; E. A. Fritter, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Clerk; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. The "old church property located at Canton" was authorized to be sold, to be vacated after "the new house of worship is completed and occupied." The Moreland Bethel was placed in the hands of W. E. Turner, attorney-in-fact, to be sold. The Primrose church property was placed in the hands of J. F. Slough, who was instructed "to ask for bids on" the same. The Permanent Mission Fund was increased by $7,000.00 "realized from the Lucy Kryder estate." Final arrangements were made for the payment of the balance of $525.90 of the "Eldership Pledge" toward Findlay College debt of 1894. To enforce collection of apportionments for this purpose the Eldership voted, that "if any pastor shall fail to make an honest effort to do so, he shall be publicly reprimanded by the President of the Eldership." It was a source of gratification that the Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor societies were engaged in securing funds "to establish a scholarship in Findlay College for the help of students from the Ohio Eldership preparing for the ministry." The interests of missions were considered of first importance, and it was made "the duty of each pastor to plan for, and deliver at appropriate times, at least two sermons on Missions" at each of his churches during the year. Also "to interest each Sunday-school on his charge in missions, and get an offering for foreign missions." "Pledge-signing and thorough temperance instruction in the Sunday-schools" was recommended. No "liquor man, nor any other man whose character is questionable" was to receive the support of the Eldership for any public office; but it promised to "rally around the man whose business and patronage the liquor interests are trying to destroy." "Amusements and all organizations which are proving detrimental to the churches" were to be discouraged. Pastors were required "to make a consecrated effort to organize a C. E. society in each church." There were twenty-nine charges in the Eldership territory, all but one supplied with pastors; with sixty preaching places, sixty-two church organizations and sixty-two church houses, and a total membership of 2,237. Salaries of pastors aggregated $10,577.64.

75th Ohio Eldership.—On its fields of labor the Ohio Eldership in 1911 had twenty-seven pastors; there were two superannuated ministers, fourteen local ministers, one "interdenominational evangelist" and one "student in Seminary." Five of its ministers were professors in Findlay College. The annual session was held in the M. E. house of worship at Mendon, Mercer county, beginning on Friday evening, August 25, 1911, when "a forceful sermon" was delivered by O. A. Newlin. An organization was effected on Saturday morning, by electing G. G. Bruer, President; Chas. F. Raach, Clerk; R. F. Mitchell, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Secretary; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. "Ten o'clock was made a special hour for prayer that harmony, unity and peace may prevail in the General Eldership." A solemn and impressive ordinance service was enjoyed on Saturday evening, preceded by a sermon "on the doctrines of the churches of God," by E. A. Fritter. The Annual Sermon was delivered on Sunday morning, by W. E. Turner, from Isa. li. 6 and II. Cor. vi. 3; 4. Where there were changes of pastors, the churches were required to pay the moving expenses of their new pastors. Churches, if possible, were directed to put baptisteries in their houses of worship, and "no new bethel should be built without a baptistery." Regular evangelistic services for each evening of the session were to be arranged for by the Standing Committee. Also "special addresses on Missions, Education, Christian Endeavor interests and the Woman's Missionary Society work." Provision was made "looking toward a Church of God Rally at the Winona Bible Conference in 1912," invitations to be extended to the Indiana, Illinois and other Elderships to participate. The sum of $100.00 was secured on the floor of the Eldership "to be given to worthy students at Findlay College preparing for the ministry of this Eldership." The completion of the Carnegie Endowment Fund of $50,000.00 was the subject of special congratulation, and Dr. Brown was specially commended "for his untiring efforts and his vigorous faith, which made possible the victory." Every other interest connected with the institutions of learning of the General Eldership was enthusiastically sanctioned and commended. With broadening views of civic problems, the Eldership "went on record for arbitration and universal peace, and also took high ground on temperance legislation and the enforcement of temperance laws, with the ultimate aim of State-wide and national victories." It also sought to impress upon all the members the duty of "taking an active part in the matter of selecting suitable men in their respective districts as delegates to the coming Ohio Constitutional Convention." The Standing Committee was sustained by the Eldership in its action forbidding "the W. G. M. S. of 1890" to canvass for funds on fields of labor of the Ohio Eldership, as being "contrary to the decrees of the General Eldership and the resolutions of the Ohio Eldership," and as tending to "further disturbance of our peace and harmony." The Eldership recognized the fact that increasing numbers of families of the churches of God are moving into the cities of the State, and decided to make an effort to begin "missionary work in some of the large cities, and organize churches of God." It resolved to "appoint a home missionary" to start this work, who was to begin by "gathering offerings wherever practicable," which were to be added to the $990.00 in the Missionary Fund, and to pay his expenses and salary. The "spiritual condition of the churches" was represented to be "good" and "fair," with a total membership of 2,605.

76th Ohio Eldership.—It was particularly noted, "that one of the most inspiring and helpful features of the Eldership of 1912 was the soul-stirring evangelistic sermons preached each evening by O. A. Newlin." There were a few conversions. The session was held at Colton, from September 6th to 10th, and was presided over by O. O. Tracy; with Chas. F. Raach, Clerk; A. O. Musgrave, Transcribing Clerk; F. F. Manchester, Financial Secretary; P. J. Grose, Treasurer. Friday evening Chas. F. Raach preached from John xv. 13. The Opening Sermon on Sabbath morning was omitted because of the illness of the appointee, but O. A. Newlin delivered a sermon from Acts ii. 47. The Standing Committee was composed of C. I. Brown, C. T. Fox, T. Koogle, W. E. Turner, Chas. F. Raach. Stationing Committee—C. I. Brown, T. Koogle, C. T. Fox, W. E. Turner, M. K. Smith, Chas. F. Raach, P. J. Grose, two being laymen. The Eldership greatly rejoiced over "the deepened interest awakened in the Church by Viola G. Hershey, our returned missionary from India, and the fact that Howard W. Cover and Aaron Myers will go with her to India when she sails in October," and "pledged honest and earnest support to these missionaries in this great work." The W. M. S. in harmony with the Eldership was working with encouraging success, having received during the year $448.00. A strong address on Missions was made by W. E. Turner. The Eldership reaffirmed its conviction "that every young man entering the ministry, and every one engaged in this high calling, should make thorough preparation for the sacred work." It also pledged its "sympathetic support in carrying out the plans for larger endowment, larger equipment and greater departmental efficiency" for Findlay College. The sum of $80.00 was secured on the floor of the Eldership "for the support of students" studying for the ministry. The "passing of the proposed amendment" to the Constitution of the State, "granting sanction to a license law" was regretted. The work of the Anti-Saloon League was endorsed, and State-wide prohibition was to be made the aim of ministers and churches. Men who favored such a movement were to be supported for office. In the interest of temperance the Eldership declared that "every effort should be put forth to give woman the right to the ballot." Death during the year had "entered the ranks of the ministry" and removed our beloved brother, L. Rothrock. He was ordained in 1886, but was engaged but about fifteen years in the active ministry. The various movements for federation and co-operation in church work, the "Men and Religion Forward Movement," and the Laymen's Missionary Movement were bidden "Godspeed," and the ministers and laymen were encouraged to support them. Being firm in the conviction of "the oneness of the church," the Eldership "rejoiced in the rapidly increasing co-operation of God's people throughout the world." An elaborate plan for the office of "State Evangelist" was submitted by

W. E. Turner, received and referred to the Eldership in 1913. Thirty-four appointments were made, one being in Payette, Idaho, "under direction of the Board of Missions" of the General Eldership. Apportionments for Eldership Funds were made to the individual churches on each field, in addition to which each pastor was "required to lift an offering for each of these Funds." The statistical reports give evidence of progress throughout the Eldership.

X. THE TEXAS ELDERSHIP.

1st Texas Eldership.—Elder E. Marple, one of the missionaries to Texas sent out in 1856, intimates that not only the distance to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, but conditions which developed within a year after reaching Texas, precipitated the organization of an Eldership. He and Ober saw "indications that our support would be discontinued" by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and that "our names would be dropped from the Journal of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, and we would be left here in a flood of persecution without either support or licenses." Nor could "the people be made to understand our system of co-operation and government." "Hence arose the idea of the formation of the Texas Eldership," which Marple says "was hasty, and contrary to the Rules of the General Eldership." The first news of the event came North in a private letter to Editor Colder, and was reported in print November 5, 1857, with some badinage by the Editor as to "the usual resolutions endorsing the action of the last General Eldership on the subject of Slavery," etc., "but which the Texas Eldership omitted, as is highly probable, through press of business or other causes." As part of the editorial, an article is copied from "The Lamar (Texas) Enquirer," defending Ober and Marple, and representing their course as resulting justifiably in a "split" between Elder Ober and the Church of God. It declares that articles in The Advocate were proof that Ober and Marple were members in the North of an abolition Church, and were sent South "to propagate abolition religion." But finding "anti-abolition sentiment of this latitude too strong for the safe advocacy of their doctrines," these missionaries were constrained to denounce the views set forth in The Advocate, and to change their attitude toward Slavery. And so, "if one could have believed a tenth part of the vociferous and wrathful declarations of Elder O. since his sojourn amongst us, the 'Church of God' was as conservative on the subject of Slavery as the most ultra Southerner could desire." So after due public announcement the brethren in Texas met with the church at Liberty, Lamar county, Texas, July 31, 1857, to organize an independent Eldership, according to the views of this pro-slavery paper. But its Minutes were forwarded to the Editor of The Advocate and were published December 3, 1857. There were present the two missionaries, B. Ober and E. Marple, and ruling elders J. M. Brackeen, J. E. Cunningham and A. J. Canady, and J. Jackson, delegate. Brackeen, before a member of the M. E. Church, "was a slave-holder, and a man of noted piety, respectability and influence. One of the advisory members, A. Hamblin, was also a slave-holder. Both became members of the first church of God organized in Texas. B. Ober was elected Speaker; E. Marple, Journalizing Clerk, and A. Hamblin, Transcribing Clerk. Ober then preached the Opening Sermon from Acts v. 38, 39. The whole Eldership was resolved into a committee to draft a Constitution. In the Preamble the only reason assigned for organizing an Eldership is "the too great distance from our brethren in the North to meet with them in an Eldership capacity in order to transact business." The resolution following says: "We, the teaching and ruling elders of the churches of God in Texas do organize ourselves into an Eldership upon the system of co-operation that exists among the different Annual Elderships. . . ., and that it shall be known by the name Eldership of the Church of God in Texas." The twelve sections following are merely Rules of Order, except the last two. The eleventh provides for the annual renewal of licenses. The twelfth is declarative of the meaning of "this Constitution;" that it is "not to interfere with the doctrine of the Church, or to enforce the passing of any resolutions, or advisory law, upon matters of faith and practice; but only to assist in the regulation of such business as belongs to the system of itinerancy, which partakes of a secular nature." After interesting and gratifying reports of Ober and Marple covering their work and success since their arrival in Texas, John E. Cunningham was licensed. The resolutions adopted declared, that "the General Eldership has no authority to enforce any law (upon matters of faith and practice) upon any Annual Eldership;" that "the Eldership of the Church of God in Texas coincides with the brethren of the General Eldership in all their proceedings, except the resolutions on the subjects of Slavery and Spirituous Liquors;" "heartily inviting some of our Northern brethren, who are sound in the doctrine of the New Testament, to come to the Sunny South and aid us in the spread of the gospel upon the old apostolic plan of redemption." On Slavery they decided that "it is a political question, and much excited at the present period of time by both political and religious men North and South, we think it inexpedient for the Church of God to interfere with it, either directly or indirectly, believing that ecclesiastical authority has no right to interfere with political questions which are matters of law." The action by the General Eldership on the liquor question was objectionable to the Texas Eldership because it "appears to us in the form of legislation of law;" that "the Bible is sufficiently definite on the subject to exclude from the Church of God such as would make use of spirituous liquors as a common beverage without our placing it on our Eldership Journals in the form of ecclesiastical legislation upon the Bible." The territory was divided into the North Sulphur Mission and the South Sulphur Mission, with Marple as pastor of the former, and Ober, of the latter.

2nd Texas Eldership.—The apparently steady progress of the work on the Texas mission field is indicated in the increased membership of the second session of the Eldership. It met at Brush Creek school-house, Hopkins county, August 30, 1858, with four ministers, two ruling elders and three delegates. It was also honored by the presence of one minister "of the Disciple Church," and one "of the Missionary Baptist Church." Ober was elected Speaker, and Marple, Clerk. The latter then preached the Opening Sermon. The Eldership recommended to each church the advisability of creating a fund for the support of the poor. It also devised plans to establish an Eldership fund. Marple was directed to "travel regularly and serve the churches now organized," while Ober was to open new appointments, and the other three ministers "to labor as the Lord directs." Most of the time was occupied in framing and deliberating upon resolutions relative to actions by Northern Elderships on the course pursued by the Texas brethren. These actions were quite offensive to them. They advised that those "harsh resolutions" be "reconsidered at their next annual meetings;" charged them with "misrepresentations;" also with making statements "without a shadow of proof," and which are "of an impertinent and inimical character." Then as for themselves they disclaim having deviated from the early practice of the Church, averring that "the Church did in her early practice receive those into her fellowship who sustained the relation of master to servant;" that they have "not seceded, and set up new things for ourselves;" that they were not compelled to subscribe to the resolutions on Slavery adopted by the General Eldership in 1845, as they "are not as a Creed, binding the consciences of men;" reaffirm that slavery is a political question, and that to deny this is to ascribe its "origin to be in the infinite mind of God," and the "advice to us, to return from our wanderings," they fling back as "equally applicable to their own condition." They consider it an affront to be told that they are "under obligations to ask them—the West Pennsylvania Eldership—whether we should or should not organize an Eldership in Texas." It seemed that however deep may have been the self-respect of the members of the Eldership, it could have been more delicate and refined.

3rd Texas Eldership.—As read between the lines of the Minutes of the Eldership which held its session at the Union Bethel, Lamar county, Texas, September 27, 1859, this session was tame, and free from storms of debate and denunciations. There were present five teaching elders, two ruling elders and two delegates. Marple was chosen Speaker; J. T. Lyday, Journalizing Clerk, and G. H. Vanell, Transcribing Clerk. H. L. Dixon preached the Opening Sermon. By resolution it agreed to the Rule that expelled ministers of one Eldership should not be licensed by any other Eldership. On account of trouble in getting the Church paper into slave territory, Ober and Marple decided to publish "The Bible Advocate." Two additional members were added to the ministerial force, making the usual disproportion between ministers and churches or lay members. This year Ober was appointed to serve the churches, and Marple to "missionate whithersoever the Lord may direct," and "the others to preach all that circumstances will permit."

4th Texas Eldership.—The actions of the Texas Eldership now bear not only a striking contrast, but an absolute contradiction, to certain like actions of other Eldershops. This appears in the deliverances of the Texas Eldership at the session which was held with the church at North Sulphur Academy, Fannin county, Texas, beginning August 16, 1860. The Eldership was constituted with five teaching elders, two ruling elders and two deacons, while two teaching elders were absent. The deacons were "received as full members of this Eldership." H. J. Dixon was elected Speaker; A. J. Cannedy and A. Hamblin, Clerks. After the appointment of committees and the reports of ministers, nearly the whole of the two-day session was taken up with the Reports of Committees on Journals, on Resolutions, on Slavery, and on the State of the Country. The first, did not have in hand "the Journals of the different Eldershops," and so passed them by. But it had "examined the Journal of the last General Eldership. . . , and think it very objectionable in many particulars. In fact there are some things which come up in the form of human legislation, which is emphatically contrary to the doctrine of the Church of God." This was adopted. A. Hamblin, E. Marple and J. E. Cunningham constituted the Committee. The Committee on Resolutions, Ober, Cunningham, Lyday and Marple, affirmed that "the members of the Church of God in the North have become ultra upon the present political issues, and have declared the system of servitude, as laid down in the Bible, an evil, and incompatible with the interest of the American people;" that "by so doing they have violated our book of discipline, the New Testament;" that this "course has subjected us to an unnecessary persecution, and greatly militated against the work of reformation in the South," and then resolved, "that the Eldership in Texas stands upon the Bible;" that "we call upon all to be subject to, and assist in, carrying out and enforcing the laws of our country;" disclaiming "fellowship in the Church with abolition members North, South, East or West, or wherever they may be found, and have neither voice nor part, either directly or indirectly, in making, forming, or even winking at abolition resolutions, and declare them unscriptural, unbrotherly and unconstitutional, and destructive to the interest of Church and State." The Eldership sustained this Report. Then came the Report of the Committee on Slavery, composed of the same members, with the addition of A. Hamblin. They declared that they "have frequently examined the question of servitude spoken of in the Bible, and the system as it now exists," and are satisfied that the difficulties "threatening the dissolution of our once happy Republic have originated from a mistaken notion of the system," and they "believe that involuntary servitude is plainly taught in the Bible." The churches were authorized to hold meetings and determine what preacher or preachers they desire to serve them, and report to the Standing Committee, that it may confirm the actions of said meetings. There being quite a similarity in faith and practice between the Church of God and the Christian Church, delegates were to be "appointed to attend their co-operative meeting the 1st of September next."

5th Texas Eldership.—Though the missionaries to Texas were antagonistic to Northern sentiment on the Slavery question, they "were deeply interested in the Union of the States." And not having access to The Advocate, they established a paper, in the Spring of 1860, called "The Union," published at Mount Pleasant, Titus county, Texas. But after the State had seceded and the Confederate Government had been organized, they were notified that "the Union was dead, and that we were not to print another paper." Marple "had as many as three close calls for life." Ober was threatened with lynching. They saw "five men of families, and good citizens in the neighborhood of the church in Hopkins county, hung at the same time and on the same pole." To allay suspicion, Marple enlisted in the Confederate Army, though he was never out in field service. That the "beginning of missionary work in Texas by the Church of God when the question of slavery was shaking the United States from center to circumference was a premature work," is Marple's opinion. Yet "the work was a fair success in that from it grew the Texas and Arkansas Eldership." A membership of about five hundred is claimed for Texas when it was the strongest in numbers; but there is now practically nothing left. It was amidst the conditions of terror and tyranny incident to the opening scenes of the War that the fifth Texas Eldership met in 1861. No reports of any session were published from 1860 to 1866, and but partial records are accessible. Three or four persons were licensed during those years, and one new church was organized. The session was held with the church at Brush Creek, Hopkins county, Texas, beginning November 11th. B. Ober was Speaker, and A. J. Cannedy, Clerk. The Opening Sermon was delivered by E. Marple. They had arranged to publish "The Bible Advocate," but after several numbers had been issued it was suspended for want of patronage. A heroic effort was made to revive it at this time, and upward of $400.00 had been pledged for the purpose; but there was not enough patronage in sight to warrant resumption.

6th Texas Eldership.—There was practically nothing for the Eldership to do. The work virtually stood still, which is equivalent to retrograding. Ober and Marple were otherwise engaged, so that when the Eldership met in 1862, with the church at the Union Bethel, Lamar county, Texas, neither was present. J. M. Brackeen was chosen Speaker, and A. J. Cannedy, Clerk. Brackeen was a member of the first organization in Texas, formed in August, 1856, and was a slave-holder. Only routine business was done, except that Alfred Hamblin was licensed to preach.

7th Texas Eldership.—In 1863 Marple and Ober both attended the session of the Texas Eldership, which convened with the church at Brush Creek, Hopkins county, Texas, on September 7th. Ober preached the Opening Sermon. Marple was chosen Speaker, and A. Hamblin, Clerk. Ober was now ready for work, and the Eldership appointed him a general worker, his principal mission being to open new points anywhere in the territory of the Eldership, which had no prescribed boundaries. Renewed interest in the work was manifested. Being cut off from the North, the old question of Slavery, and kindred and involved subjects, did not require attention. The Eldership turned its attention to missionary work, and actions were taken looking toward the extension of the work beyond the limits of the few organized churches. It was during this period that the church in Fannin county was organized, which at one time was one of the strongest churches in the Eldership.

8th Texas Eldership.—Along with other misfortunes and the hardships incident to the war, when the Eldership met in 1864, with the church at North Sulphur Academy, Fannin county, Texas, August 15th, there was a vacant chair, by reason of the death of A. Hamblin, who had been ordained but two years before. It was a sorrowful little company of ministers and elders which adopted "resolutions of condolence and sung a song composed by E. Marple on the moral integrity of the deceased minister." The Opening Sermon, preached by Ober, was adapted to the more aggressive attitude the Eldership had assumed, the theme being "The Doctrines and Government of the Church." But his health had been impaired, and he was released from evangelistic work, and appointed to serve the churches. J. M. Brackeen was the presiding officer, and A. J. Cannedy, Clerk.

9th Texas Eldership.—The ministerial strength during the year was again reduced by death, as during the year J. C. Nobler was summoned to a higher ministry. Besides, at the Eldership in 1865 one name was "dropped from the Roll." The session was held with the church at Liberty, Fannin county, Texas, beginning August 27, 1865. No apparent progress having been made in the aggressive work contemplated, and the body sustaining no external ecclesiastical relations, slavery, temperance and other questions not demanding action, the Eldership had but little to do. The Opening Sermon by E. Marple was timely, and made a good impression. Though weak, the body had the respect of the public generally. Ober was continued as pastor of the churches, and no arrangements were made for Church extension work.

10th Texas Eldership.—Though the promise for enlargement and increased success held out in 1865 was not radiant, the record of 1866 was not disappointing. The Eldership met at Brush Creek, Hopkins county, Texas, on August 6th. It again sat under the shadow of death, as H. J. Dixon, a "father in Israel," whose "walk and conversation exemplified the character of a Christian in deed and in truth." J. M. Brackeen was chosen Speaker, and J. T. Lyday, Clerk. J. E. Cunningham had removed to Missouri, but his membership in the Texas Eldership was continued. The same disposition was made of the case of A. J. Cannedy, who had removed to Illinois. The war being over, a disposition was evident to resume, and even cultivate better, relations with the Church and Elderships North, and especially the General Eldership. This was manifested in the resolution adopted, which declared it to be "indispensably necessary to the good of the cause that a change of preacher be secured, which can only be made through the assistance of brethren North." Hence an effort was made to secure the services of W. L. Jones, East Pennsylvania Eldership. Two other actions give evidence of the same spirit. One was a commendatory resolution of The Church Advocate. The other was a resolution to appoint "one or more delegates to represent the Texas Eldership at the next General Eldership." The time for ministers to enter upon their fields of labor was after this Eldership "to take place at the commencement of the year."

11th Texas Eldership.—Personal efforts through Ober, who spent part of the Winter of 1866-7 in Eastern Pennsylvania, failed to secure the ministerial help Texas so badly needed. So at the Eldership held at the Union Bethel, Lamar county, Texas, beginning October 7, 1867, a resolution was adopted, asking "the East Pennsylvania Eldership to send a suitable man to preach for the present organization of the Church in Texas," offering to pay him "$300.00 in wheat, corn, stock, family supplies, etc., at a cash price of $200.00, and twenty acres of land." T. A. Perkins had made a larger offer. There were three teaching elders in attendance at the Eldership, four being absent, and four ruling elders and one delegate. Ober was Speaker, and T. A. Perkins and E. Marple, Clerks. It was acknowledged that slavery was dead, and could no longer interfere with Church work even by a Northern minister. Cannedy's license was renewed, and he was advised to join the Illinois Eldership. Cunningham's license was also renewed, and he "was requested to organize an Eldership in Missouri." There were four charges—Union Bethel, Lane's Academy, Walker Prairie and Brush Creek—to which five ministers were appointed. The Texas Mission was also earnestly "recommended to the consideration of the General Eldership."

12th Texas Eldership.—The Reconstruction period was one of intense excitement in the South as well as in the North. Indeed much greater in the South. Feeling was worked up to an alarming degree. Conventions exhibited intense hatred toward the Union. Power was often usurped by them, and their work proved futile. The people shared the feelings of these conventions, and nearly everything was at a standstill. Hence, as E. Marple states, "Owing to extensive political excitement during the reconstruction of the State, there was no Eldership held in 1868." The Eldership of 1869 has hence been numbered the 12th. It met at Liberty, Fannin county, Texas, December 2nd. The officers chosen were J. M. Brackeen, Speaker, and E. Marple, Clerk. While no progress in the way of enlarging the work was making, additions were made to the Ministerial Roll. James Pile and Richard Pattan were licensed at this Eldership. But no work was given them, and Marple was "appointed to serve the churches." He had preached so much for them during the ten years that he felt it to be impossible for him to do much, and so earnestly joined in the call for a preacher from the North. As the East Pennsylvania Eldership had inaugurated the mission, he made a special appeal to said body to come to their rescue.

13th Texas Eldership.—While the Texas Eldership still maintained its formal existence and organization, it seemed as if only one of two things could secure it perpetuity. It must get new life infused into it by accessions of ministers from other parts of the country, or it must go out beyond its old boundaries and work up new territory. For the latter the labors in Arkansas were preparing the way, and it was hoped that the former would also be realized at an early date. Hence there was a somewhat sanguine spirit among the few who assembled in annual session at the Union Bethel, Lamar county, Texas, October 17, 1870. B. Ober was elected Speaker, and J. V. Griffis, Clerk. Among the fruits of Ober's labors in Arkansas was a young man of considerable natural talent, who felt moved to enter the ministry. T. A. Perkins was licensed at this Eldership, but J. E. Cunningham was transferred to the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, while the name of A. J. Cannedy was dropped, he having gone North and failed to report. Only routine business was transacted. And about the best they could say was, "We are trying to advance."

14th Texas Eldership.—In 1871 the Texas Eldership again met at the Union Bethel, Lamar county, and B. Ober preached the Opening Sermon November 4th. T. A. Perkins was elected Speaker, and J. V. Griffis, Clerk. The young man from Arkansas, G. T. Bell, was an applicant for license, and he was received and a license granted him. The body suffered the loss by death of one of its number, Richard Pattan, which was deeply lamented. J. R. Pile was assigned as pastor of the churches in Lamar and Delta counties, and J. Abernathy to those in Fannin county. Without means to support missionaries, the Eldership nevertheless appointed Ober and Marple "to open up new work." They could choose their own territory, and had to look out for their own support.

15th Texas Eldership.—Somewhat favorable reports of the state of the churches and of the work generally were made to the Eldership in 1872, which met with the church at Wood's Prairie, Fannin county, November 28th. J. R.

Pile was Speaker, and E. Marple, Clerk. There were eight ministers connected with the Eldership, but the half were inactive for various reasons. Churches existed in Delta, Lamar and Fannin counties, Texas, and in Franklin county, Ark. J. J. Abernathy, licensed at this session, was appointed to serve these churches, which pledged $350.00 toward his support. Ober was appointed to serve the church in Franklin county, Ark. The Eldership in 1871 had elected delegates to the General Eldership, largely with a view of enlisting said body in the interest of the work in the Southwest; but they failed to attend.

16th Texas Eldership.—The Opening Sermon of the sixteenth annual session of the Texas Eldership was preached by B. Ober, at the Union Bethel, Lamar county, November 4, 1873. A majority of the members was present. Without any contentions, the Eldership transacted its business in peace, with unanimity of sentiment. T. A. Perkins was Speaker, and J. V. Griffin, Clerk. There were about fifty additions to the churches reported, "which, though small, was encouraging, considering the embarrassed circumstances of those preaching." The Constitution was amended, "making it more binding upon those taking charge to comply with their agreement." While the missionary cause was discussed with much interest, owing to inability not much could be accomplished, yet nearly $100.00 was subscribed on the floor. A Board of Missions was appointed, and the churches in Delta county, Texas, and Franklin county, Ark., with the intermediate points, were constituted a missionary field, to which Ober was appointed, with an appropriation by the Board of $125.00.

17th Texas Eldership.—Not discouraged by its failures to receive recognition by the General Eldership, the Texas Eldership at its session which began at Wood's school-house, Fannin county, November 2, 1874, resolved to send two delegates to said body at its session in 1875. M. Brackeen and T. A. Perkins were elected. They, however, did not attend the session of the General Eldership, nor was the Texas Eldership recognized in constituting the Eldership. Perhaps to anticipate such a contingency, Ober and Marple were appointed "to furnish the General Eldership with a statement of their missionary labors and the principles and doctrines upon which the Church of God is organized in" Texas. Six teaching elders were present at the session, two ruling elders and two delegates; while two teaching elders were absent. The Speaker was T. A. Perkins, with William Hamblin as Clerk. The Eldership commended all the periodicals published by the General Eldership, and the Bookstore of Dr. Ross, at Harrisburg, Pa. Marple was appointed "to take charge of the churches in Texas the ensuing year, with a salary of $300.00 from the churches in Lamar and Fannin counties." Ober was "appointed to the Jefferson and Marshall mission." G. T. Bell was appointed to the church at Sub Rosa, Franklin county, Ark., the Board of Missions to pay him $50.00.

18th Texas Eldership.—Prospects in the Texas Eldership seem to have been less bright in 1875, when the body met with the church in Fannin county, on December 13th. The attendance was small, but "the session was a very feeling and harmonious one." Two of the ministers requested the discontinuance of their licenses; but "Prof. Paul Graham, a very eminent gentleman of Arkansas, was received into the fellowship of the Eldership and licensed." The Speaker was J. M. Brackeen, with E. Marple as Clerk. Ober was transferred to the Illinois Eldership. As E. Marple was appointed Corresponding Secretary, to correspond with any preachers of the Church who may "think of coming to Texas," it was deemed well to see what Texas could do to support a missionary. Accordingly a "Financial Committee of six was appointed to ascertain the amount of support that can be raised here to support some one of our preachers from the North. The Texas Eldership felt that it had claims on the general body for assistance in its work, and that they had not been met. It adopted a resolution stating, "that we insist on the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, at its next annual meeting, to consider the wants and claims of the Texas Mission, and send, if possible, a missionary to this field of labor." The brethren "were much grieved on account of not receiving assistance" earlier. They could not realize the feeling in the North growing out of the Slavery agitation, the War and the Reconstruction period, nor take into account the many calls for help from other sections.

19th Texas Eldership.—Another year passed, and no missionary from the North had been sent. Yet conditions were improving in that part of the territory lying in Arkansas. The attendance at the Eldership was better, when the annual session began in the Oxford school-house, Lamar county, Texas., October 4, 1876.

Three teaching elders were present, and three, absent, with two ruling elders and two delegates. The Speaker was E. Marple; Clerks, T. A. Perkins and J. T. Lyday. The first action taken was to change the title of the Eldership so as to read, "Texas and Arkansas Eldership of the Church of God." Bell was laboring in Arkansas, and he "was appointed minister of the work" in that State, "to be assisted by D. S. Summit, G. W. Watson, A. D. Douglas and Joshua Alcorn," all of Arkansas, who had been recommended by Bell for, and received, licenses. Lamar and Fannin county churches, in Texas, could not be supplied with regular pastors. To emphasize its change of title, the next session of the Eldership was appointed to be held in Arkansas.

20th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—As voted in 1876, the Eldership met with the church at Natural Dam, Crawford county, Ark., on Tuesday, October 16, 1877. The name of the missionary from the North was not enrolled when the Eldership was constituted with five teaching elders, five ruling elders and one delegate present. But his name is on the first committee appointed, and a little later he "presented his transfer and recommendation from the Ohio Eldership"—J. A. Smith. After the election of Marple for Speaker, and A. M. Keen, Clerk, "the Speaker was requested to deliver an Opening Address," which he did from II. Tim. iv. 2. "Prof. Graham's name was called, and dropped from the Journal." So was that of G. W. Watson. The two parts of the Eldership were so far apart that a Standing Committee of three was appointed for each. The Eldership also at once voted in favor of "organizing an Eldership in Arkansas, separate from the Texas Eldership." A delegate to the General Eldership in 1878 was elected, who was to use his influence in favor of an Arkansas Eldership. Four new men were licensed. Four circuits were named by the Stationing Committee, all in Arkansas, with one field in Texas. The Eldership represented "the South as an inviting field for Church work," and reflected seriously upon the Board of Missions of the General Eldership for "using all the available means and men for the upbuilding of Church interests in the western States, to the utter neglect of the States South." A Ministerial meeting was appointed to be held at Van Buren, Crawford county, Ark. J. A. Smith was made "general worker in Arkansas until January 1, 1878, and then to take charge of the churches in Texas."

21st Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The impracticability of working the two sections of the Eldership together as one body was again made evident when the body convened at Elm Grove, Lamar county, Texas, with no teaching or ruling elders present from Arkansas. The session began October 3, 1878, and four ministers and two ruling elders responded to their names. At least nine teaching elders were absent, and the Journal of the year before not being on hand, the Eldership was not sure but there were more absent. J. A. Smith was chosen Speaker, and E. Marple, Clerk. There were two more applicants for license from Arkansas, and they were ordained. A Board of Missions was appointed, consisting of three from Arkansas and three from Texas. A similar arrangement was made as to the Standing Committee, and the Standing Committee of the Arkansas part of the Eldership was empowered "to change the Report of the Stationing Committee so far as it relates to the brethren in that State." The two counties of Lamar and Fannin, Texas, were made one circuit, with J. A. Smith as minister, assisted by J. M. Brackeen, and E. Marple as General Missionary. The work had been extended into the Indiana Territory, so that there were three missionaries appointed to the Cherokee and Chickasaw Nations, and six pastors to churches in Arkansas. J. C. Keys and J. M. McCarty received licenses, both of Arkansas.

22nd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—A new element entered into the work in the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, as the Journal of 1879 indicates. Some churches composed of colored people had been organized during the year in Arkansas, and several brethren appeared for license to preach. J. K. Wilson, J. Williamson and G. Hornback were licensed, and were also appointed a Standing Committee for the colored churches, under the instructions of J. R. Pile and D. S. Summit. The session of the Eldership was held at Grand Prairie school-house, Franklin county, Ark., beginning September 3, 1879. There were present six teaching elders and seven ruling elders. They organized by electing J. A. Smith, Speaker; D. S. Summit, Assistant Speaker; W. D. Abernathy, Clerk, and A. C. Northum, Assistant Clerk. In addition to the three colored brethren licensed, six white brethren were granted licenses. The Eldership raised its "warning voice against intoxicating liquor as a beverage on all occasions, standing on the rock of total abstinence of its use amongst us." It also affirmed that "ordination by the imposition of hands is a Bible doctrine, clearly taught in the New Testament Scriptures, and we have no right to violate it." Co-operation with the General Eldership in all laudable efforts to extend the cause of God was cheerfully endorsed. Increased efforts were decided on "in the future in raising mission funds." Again an earnest prayer was recorded to the General Eldership "to divide the Texas and Arkansas Eldership into two Elderships." Two treasurers were elected, A. C. Northum for Arkansas, and James Brackeen for Texas. Conditions were reported "very flattering, and the interest good all over the work, and increasing." Beginning of work in the Choctaw Nation was planned, and a letter of recommendation to the Nation was given to John Bennett. The appointments made were three in Texas, seven in Arkansas and two in the Indian Territory. The missionary for the State of Arkansas was restrained from "organizing churches within less than six miles from other organized bodies."

23rd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Certain abnormal conditions are noticeable in this most southern member in the family of Elderships of the Church of God. There were twenty-nine ministerial members in 1880, of which but eight were present when the organization was effected on September 2, 1880, with five ruling elders and delegates. Three of the teaching elders were colored men. The various committees were appointed "on motion" of some member. There were three Standing Committees, one for Texas, one for Arkansas and one for the colored portion of the Eldership. The officers were: Speaker, J. W. Riddle; Assistant Speaker, G. T. Bell; Clerk, H. B. Hale, and Assistant Clerk, B. V. Hocket. The Report of the Committee on Order contained the three items of hours of opening and adjourning the sittings; that each sitting be opened and closed with prayer, and limiting speeches to two, not to exceed fifteen minutes. Hocket was also, on motion, made "the Treasurer of the Eldership in the State of Arkansas." Three sittings were had each day, and seven constituted a quorum to do business. A radical rule was agreed to, that all ministers "who do not report in person, or by proxy or letter, their licenses shall be discontinued." As a result there were names dropped and re-enrolled at every session. The Eldership was largely a triple body, "the Texas part," "the Arkansas part," and the "colored portion." From the first and second each a delegate and alternate was elected to the General Eldership. A motion readily prevailed to "petition the General Eldership to divide the Texas and Arkansas Eldership into two Elderships, the first to go by the name of the Texas Eldership, and the second by the name of Arkansas and Indian Territory Eldership." The ministers were required "to collect from each church member twenty-five cents for a free-will offering to the Board of Missions for the General Eldership Mission Fund." "The cause of the Master," states the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion, "is prospering throughout the entire work." The date for the Eldership to meet was changed to the first of November, and pastors were to "close all their labors" at that date, so as to go to their new fields at adjournment of the Eldership. There were fifteen appointments in Arkansas, and two fields in the Indian Territory. Two Ministerial Associations were provided for, one in Texas and one in Arkansas. The session "closed by farewell address of G. T. Bell, in which the preachers all embraced each other and gave each the kiss of charity."

24th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Though the General Eldership did not grant the petition to divide the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, yet an effort was made when the body convened in 1881 to carry this project into effect. Editorially the Eldership was advised that such action would be beyond its "legal right and power." But it persisted to carry its purpose into effect. A resolution was adopted declaring it to be "the sense of this body that there should be a division of this Eldership." And on the ground that "for the last four years we have made known our desire for this division, and have petitioned the General Eldership," and because also "it is agreeable to the Texas brethren to have a division," the Eldership voted, "that after this Annual Eldership meeting, in the year of our Lord 1881, we will consider ourselves a separate body from the Texas part of this Eldership, to do business in the future for ourselves, and to be known as the Arkansas Eldership of the Church of God in the United States of America." The session was held with the church in Mill Creek, Franklin county, Ark., and opened November 31, 1881. Nine ministers, three ruling elders and two delegates were present, while twenty ministers were absent. J. A. Smith was chosen Speaker, and J. W. Parker, Clerk. The meeting and transactions of the Standing Committee which tried "B. F. Reese, and expelled him from the Church," was declared "illegal, null and void;" yet Reese made "acknowledgement to the Eldership of his wrong and asked pardon," and the Eldership "freely forgave him and renewed his license." A Board of Missions was created. To "raise a Contingent Fund, each member" was "requested to pay into the treasury twenty-five cents." "Religion is at a low ebb in our country," was the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion. Instead of the Eldership transacting the business for the colored churches, "a committee" was "appointed to attend to business among the colored brethren to suit themselves, and report to the next meeting of this Eldership." It was decided that "no church shall be organized by any one that is not ordained by a regular ordained presbytery." A license was refused to an applicant because "upon examination it was found that the brother believes in the unconscious state of the dead and the annihilation of the wicked." Having had no Constitution, the Eldership appointed a committee "to prepare one for the government of this Eldership, and present the same at the next annual meeting." The holding of an Eldership camp-meeting was agreed upon. Nine appointments were made, one of them "a missionary for the State of Arkansas," and three "to preach among the colored people."

An important extra session of the Eldership was held at Cold Springs, Crawford county, Ark., which began January 12, 1882. The call was signed by members which were absent at the annual session. It was called "owing to irregularities on the part of some of the members of the Eldership, and some acts taken by said Eldership not in harmony with the letter and spirit of the Rules of Co-operation of the General Eldership." Only six ministers, four ruling elders and three delegates responded to the call. Many of the actions of the annual session "were approved." But the pardon of Reese and renewal of his license were reversed, and he was "dismissed from the body." Three others were dealt with in the same manner. Reese was expelled for "frequent drunkenness;" one other for "marrying again while his wife yet lives;" and two for "very wrong," and "flagrantly wrong" acts. The Eldership also repudiated "resolutions touching the subject of laying on of hands," which had been adopted by the annual session. And while hoping "that the day is not far distant when we shall pray the General Eldership to divide our territory so as to form a Texas Eldership and an Arkansas Eldership," yet the action taken by the annual session was rescinded, because "it is alone the prerogative of the General Eldership to divide the territory of Annual Elderships and fix the boundary lines of the same." Provision was made again for three Standing Committees. As no permanent records had been kept of the doings of the Eldership and its Standing Committees, "a Protocol" was to be secured by "E. Marple, and to record all Journals of the Eldership and acts of the Standing Committees." It was stated that "prayer is too much neglected among us," and ministers were "urged to preach upon this subject of prayer in secret, in the family and in public." On Temperance, the Committee was constrained to express "the sense of this body that the ministry and brotherhood should not be given to the use of ardent spirits as a beverage." Not only did this extra session restate the fact that "the cause of God among us is at a low ebb;" but that "there has been a great falling away," and that "great corruption has existed among some of the ministers among us." A camp-meeting among the Cherokee Indians was recommended. The Permanent General Missionary Secretary, R. H. Bolton, was present during this extra session, and guided the body in most of the actions taken.

25th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The total ministerial enrollment of the Eldership which was held with the church at Grand Prairie school-house, Ark., beginning October 25, 1882, is not given; but there were only six teaching elders present, and nine ruling elders. G. T. Bell was elected "Chairman," and J. A. Whittington, Clerk. The state of religion was reported "at a low ebb," and "we urge the people everywhere to read their Bibles, and reform." The Report on Temperance states "that we find it necessary to command all the members of the Church of God to be temperate in all things; and more especially in the drinking of spirits of any kind that would cause intoxication or drunkenness." Edmund Burke, of England, once said, "You can not indict a whole people." That, however, seems to have been done in this instance. Parents were urged to educate their children, and it was "found necessary to urge it upon our preachers to give themselves a good education so as not to become stumbling-blocks in the way of sinners." It was "recommended that the Texas part of this Eldership hold a session of their own in Texas, and transact their business, and divide their territory to suit themselves." The entire Eldership was made the Stationing Committee, which outlined seven circuits, to which seven pastors were assigned, with ten "assistants."

26th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Virtually two Elderships were held in 1883. Records show that "the Texas and Arkansas Eldership met with the church of God at the Wood's Prairie Bethel, Fannin county, Texas, September 12, 1883." B. Ober preached the Opening Sermon on said evening. The following morning the Eldership was constituted and organized. There were three "licensed ministers" present, being "the Texas part of the Eldership." Also three elders and delegates. The two absentees belonged also to the Texas part of the Eldership. J. M. Brackeen was chosen for Chairman, and B. Ober, Secretary. All committees were dispensed with, save the Standing Committee. Two of the ministers of the Arkansas part of the Eldership reported by letter, and one applicant by letter received license. Nineteen names were called of ministers of the Arkansas part of the Eldership, but there were no reports. "Their licenses were renewed and placed in the hands of the Arkansas Standing Committee." A Standing Committee for Arkansas was appointed. Delegates were elected to the General Eldership from Arkansas, and for the Texas part of the Eldership. All the brethren of the entire Eldership were urged to do all they can to assist in the building of Findlay College. Ober was the only preacher appointed to a charge, and he was to supply the Texas Mission until other arrangements are made by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership.

On the same date (October 12, 1883) "the Arkansas part of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership met with the church of God at Pleasant Ridge, Franklin county, Ark. Six ministers were present, and six ruling elders. D. S. Summit was elected Chairman, and J. A. Whittington, Clerk. Eighteen ministers either reported, or their names were called for reports. The licenses of three were discontinued. The "brethren in Texas and J. W. Riddle were reprimanded for violating a resolution at the last Eldership, for licensing preachers contrary to said resolution." Based on the distance and consequent expense of going from one State to another to hold Eldership sessions, the Eldership "humbly prayed the General Eldership to consider the petition and grant the request to organize an Arkansas and Indian Territory Eldership." One or more sermons by each minister was ordered to be preached during the year "on the duty of the support of the gospel according to the word of God." There were eleven appointments to circuits and one "evangelist, to preach where the Church is not organized." A Ministerial Association was directed to be held on Thursday before the first Sunday in September, 1884, at Shady Grove, Crawford county, Ark.

27th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The Journal of 1884 purports to be that of the "Eldership of the Church of God in Texas, Arkansas and the Indian Territory." And a resolution was adopted stating "that we find it expedient to have an Arkansas and Indian Territory and South Missouri Eldership." It declares that the Arkansas brethren "never go to Texas to meet them, neither do they ever come to Arkansas to meet us." Hence the resolution "petitions for a division of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, the former to be the Texas Eldership, and the latter the Arkansas, Indian Territory and South Missouri Eldership," as there were a few ministers living in southern Missouri, and one circuit was partly in Missouri. The petition was addressed to the "Standing Committee of the General Eldership." There were six teaching elders present, and twenty-two ruling elders and delegates, when the session opened at Camp Creek, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter. G. T. Bell presided, with G. Bond, Assistant Chairman; E. M. Kirkpatrick, Secretary, and Thomas Rutledge, Assistant. Though no ministers from Texas were present, they reported. Four ministers were "dismissed," "dropped," or "fellowship withdrawn from" for "disorderly" or "bad conduct." A Standing Committee was appointed for "the Texas part of the Eldership," which exercised the powers of the Eldership in Texas. The Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., was a "mission field," with J. W. Riddle, pastor, "assisted by the preachers of the Church of God in the Nation."

28th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—In some respects the Texas and Arkansas Eldership was peculiar. Outside of Ober and Marple it was composed of ministers and elders of very limited culture, and of men largely unacquainted with our polity and usages, or even with parliamentary rules. Hence their actions sometimes are open to well-founded criticism. Thus without any right or authority the name and implied boundaries were changed in 1885, and we have the record, that "September 30, 1885, the Eldership of Texas, Arkansas and the Indian Territory met at Happy Hollow, Crawford county, Ark." "The laws of the Eldership" consisted of four simple parliamentary rules. A good many disorderly things were often done by ministers, so that charges were brought against one or more at nearly every session. This was the case in 1885, when two ministers were under charges. The enrollment consisted of eleven teaching elders, six ruling elders, six delegates and five "sister delegates." "J. W. Riddle was elected Chairman, and B. F. Reese, Assistant; G. T. Bell, Clerk, and E. M. Kirkpatrick, Assistant." Riddle preached the Opening Sermon, but at what stage of the session is not stated. The pastors were "urged to do what they can for Findlay College." Several "young Timothys were received and given the right hand of fellowship. G. T. Bell prayed for them to receive the spirit of wisdom and the Holy Ghost, and the Lord answered the prayer, and we were all baptized with the Holy Ghost afresh." "B. L. Payne, bearing a license from the Free-Will Baptist Church," applied for admission to the Eldership. He was received, and a license granted him. While "C. F. Johnson was excluded from us, as he has joined the Free-Baptist Church." There were eight circuits, not including the territory in Texas. The work in Texas was in charge of the Standing Committee for that State. When it met two of the five teaching elders were absent; three were present, with one deacon and three lay members. Two appointments were made. It was the rule at this time for each church to send a letter to the Eldership, giving a report and asking for a preacher.

29th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Laxness in licensing men to preach was a serious defect in the Texas and Arkansas Eldership. As a result the cause often suffered because unworthy men were ordained whose conduct brought the Church into disrepute. There were expulsions at almost every annual session. During the year 1885-6 the Standing Committee licensed two, and in 1886 the Eldership licensed six more. It "withdrew fellowship" from one "on account of disgraceful conduct towards the cause of our Lord." The session was held at Honey Hill, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., beginning on Wednesday, September 8, 1886. D. S. Summit preached the Opening Sermon, from Rev. i. 3. Nine teaching elders and eight ruling elders were present. D. S. Summit was chosen Chairman, and G. T. Bell, Assistant; J. W. Riddle, Clerk, and G. T. Dykes, Assistant. Delegates were elected to the General Eldership. Other progressive measures favorably acted upon were the holding of a Ministerial Association; the project of a "mission school under the auspices of the Board of Missions of the Church of God, and the appointment of a committee and devising of ways and means to secure it;" a strong endorsement of Sabbath-schools, advising each church to organize a school, and the creation of a Contingent Fund, and of a Fund for widows and orphans. A novel way of arranging the territory into fields of labor was adopted, omitting Texas, which was placed in the care of its Standing Committee. The territory was divided into four districts called Mission Fields Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4. For each district one minister was appointed as "supervisor of the circuit," or "to have supervision of stationing the ministers of the circuit." Under this plan, in addition to these "supervisors," two ministers were appointed to Mission Field No. 1; two to Field No. 2, with seven assistants, "all subject to the orders" of the supervisor. Field No. 3, one pastor "to take charge and supply the churches with pastors." Field No. 4, one "supervisor of the circuit, with two others appointed to supply five churches."

30th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The religious element was conspicuous in the Texas and Arkansas Eldership. It was "deemed necessary to have devotional services each day at 11 o'clock," as well as each evening, and so at each morning sitting "the Committee on Order and Devotion" appointed some one to "preach at 11 o'clock" and "at candle lighting." This order was followed in 1887, when the Eldership convened "with the church at Price's Springs, Franklin county, Ark., on September 7th, at 11 o'clock a. m." The Opening Sermon was preached at that hour by J. M. Howard, from Acts xx. 28, and the Eldership held its first sitting at 3.30 o'clock p. m. There were thirteen teaching elders present, and eight ruling elders; five deacons, and three delegates. Officers elected were: J. W. Riddle, President; D. S. Summit, Vice President. J. T. Kittredge, Clerk, and E. M. Kirkpatrick, Assistant Clerk. Fourteen "churches reported by delegates." On account of "the destitute condition in which quite a number of places are left," and "the financial condition of the ministry" which prevents "those places from being supplied without a hearty co-operation on the part of the whole body," the Eldership decided to "elect a Board of Missions of three members, whose duty it shall be to take charge of the mission work . . . and see that these vacant places be supplied with preaching." Power was given it to "appoint a missionary, fix his salary and see to the payment of the same." It was "authorized and instructed to take steps to collect a Home Missionary Fund." Kirkpatrick, Howard and Kittredge were chosen. Provision was made to have the Minutes of sessions of the Eldership preserved in permanent form, and to this end a blank book was ordered into which the clerks were required to transcribe the Journals. The "question of locating a school" within the bounds of the Eldership, to be under the control of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, was approved. Each church was "advised to organize a Sabbath-school," and it was decided "that the officers of such school be members of the Church of God." "The Standing Committee of the Texas part of the Eldership" was "authorized to call a meeting for the transaction of all such business" as pertained to that section. There were eight fields of labor in Arkansas and the Indian Territory. Pastors were required "to see that the churches on their respective fields of labor prepare and keep careful records of the number of members, names of officers, number of accessions, deaths, exclusions and letters of dismissal, and report the same at each Annual Eldership." Each pastor was also instructed "to preach at least one sermon on the duty of elders and deacons."

31st Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—During the year 1887-8 two of the licentiatees of the Eldership of 1887 were subjected to discipline by the Standing Committee, and their licenses were withdrawn. One of these was found guilty of "departing from the faith and teaching heresies," and the other of the "besetting sin" of that Eldership, "drunkenness and other disorderly conduct." The Eldership met November 28, 1888, with the church at Red Land, Sequoyah District, Ind. Ter., and listened to the Opening Sermon at 11 o'clock a. m., by E. M. Kirkpatrick, from John iii. 3. There were eleven teaching elders present, two deacons and five delegates. Kirkpatrick was elected President; J. W. Riddle, Vice President; J. T. Kittredge, Clerk, and J. M. Howard, Assistant Clerk. Twelve churches reported by letter. A third Standing Committee was provided for, "for the colored part of this Eldership, the same to be subject to this Eldership." Statistical reports were ordered to be made in writing annually by each pastor. Violation of the Constitution of the General Eldership was charged against the Missouri Eldership, in "licensing and giving work to ministers under its jurisdiction without having received transfers from this Eldership." The Standing Committees were charged with the duty of "arranging the matter before the sitting of either of the Elderships in the year 1889, that we may be in harmony with the law of the General Eldership." The number of appointments was the same as in 1887, but no colored churches are on the list. Eighteen churches are reported in Arkansas, with a total membership of 516, and ten in the Indian Territory, with a membership of 562. Two churches failed to report their statistics. Ten other churches were "delinquent," and "were dropped from the Roll." Four ministers were also found to be "delinquent," and "their licenses were withdrawn and called in." Two ministers ended their labors during the year—John Vanderpool and Thomas Chaney, both "earnest workers" in the Eldership. They verified Victor Hugo's characterization of a man: "A man is what he is; what he has done is the measure of his work. Beyond that, whatever you add or take away counts nothing."

32nd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The discipline administered to churches and pastors in 1888 had a wholesome effect, as reports were sent in from every church in 1889. But the revoking of licenses did not have the restraining and deterrent effect doubtless anticipated. For not only was one prominent minister "exnelled from this Eldership" at the session held at Sulphur Springs, Montgomery county, Ark., beginning August 31, 1889; but within four months after adjournment the Standing Committee gave a judicial hearing of charges against one minister for "telling falsehoods, making contracts and not fulfilling them, and making false reports in The Advocate;" two others for "teaching heresies;" one for "destroying the reputation of ministers of our Eldership, and solemnizing matrimony unlawfully," and two others for charges not published. The Eldership was organized by electing J. H. Summit, President; J. W. Riddle, Vice President; J. D. Bradburn, Clerk, and C. H. Ballinger, Assistant Clerk. There were enrolled eight teaching elders, two ruling elders, nine deacons and six delegates. After receiving reports "from the colored brethren," the Eldership decided to "send Elders Newton Langley and R. D. Duncan to organize and instruct the colored brethren." A delegate and alternate to the General Eldership were appointed for Texas, and for Arkansas, and for the Indian Territory. A general missionary was appointed to Arkansas, one to the Cherokee Nation and one to the Choctaw and Creek Nations. Besides these, there were eight circuits. Not only were deacons regular members of the Eldership; but an action was adopted to "select deacons to see after the financial interests of the Eldership, pertaining to that of serving tables, and to see after widows." Four of these deacons the teaching elders, after having "resolved ourselves into a presbytery," "ordained and set forth by prayer and laying on of hands." The Treasurer's Report indicated the confessed poverty of the Eldership, as he reported only $23.10. On October 12th the Standing Committee for the colored churches transacted its Eldership business, at Webb City, Franklin county, Ark. It "enrolled" the two white ministers whom the Eldership sent to assist them; two colored ministers, and three deacons. It renewed the licenses of the two colored ministers; received reports of the colored churches, and made appointments. There were four colored churches, one each in Logan, Franklin, Johnson and Crawford counties, organized respectively in August and October, 1886; June, 1887, and August, 1889, with a total membership of fifty-eight members.

33rd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The actions of the Standing Committee, which held a meeting on December 12, 1889, were as important and far-reaching as those of the Eldership in 1890. There was serious trouble, threatening the stability of the Eldership. J. C. Fornacrook was present to assist the Committee in its difficult work, and was made Chairman. J. W. Riddle was charged with "teaching heresies." He "made full confession," recanted the erroneous doctrine taught by him, and was "discharged." R. D. Duncan and N. Langley "were called on to answer charges of teaching the same heresies." They acknowledged their errors, and were restored. B. F. Reese was charged with "solemnizing the rites of matrimony unlawfully," and was suspended from the ministry. Charges of moral misconduct were preferred against two ministers, but were not sustained. The heresy charges were for teaching that the written word of God was the Word spoken of in John 1. The Committee also found "a division in the body on the subject of washing the saints' feet, and other things." The advocates of the erroneous views were cited "to be present at the next Annual Eldership, in order to thoroughly settle the points in question." The Eldership convened at Uniontown, Crawford county, Ark., on September 3, 1890. E. M. Kirkpatrick was elected Speaker, and D. S. Summit, Assistant; J. D. Bradburn, Clerk, and C. H. Ballinger, Assistant, and R. A. Wallace, Treasurer. "A good number of teaching and ruling elders, deacons and delegates was enrolled." D. Blakely, General Missionary, was present, and exerted a good influence in the work of the body. He regarded the Eldership as possessing "the elements of success; men of loyalty; men hard to discourage; men fearless in fire and smoke." Ober pronounced it "one of the most pleasant meetings I ever attended." The aftermath of the Standing Committee meeting was the charges against B. F. Reese, and the subject of feet-washing. Reese's "license was restored." "The subject of feet-washing was referred to the next Eldership." The adoption of a Constitution, Blakely stated, "was one of the items of greatest importance acted upon. It will doubtless add largely to the order and dispatch of business, as well as the harmony and unity of the body." Ober vouched for $100.00 for a Texas missionary, and the Eldership requested the Board of Missions of the General Eldership to pay $200.00, and recommended J. C. Caswell and E. M. Kirkpatrick as suitable for the missionary work in Texas. The licenses of eighteen ministers were continued. The organization of Sabbath-schools in all the churches was strongly recommended.

34th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—As the Indian Territory was embraced in the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, the Minutes gave it the name of the "Texas, Arkansas and Indian Territory Eldership." Under this title it convened at Enterprise, Sebastian county, Ark., September 2, 1891. J. W. Riddle was chosen Chairman; C. H. Ballinger, Assistant; R. A. Wallace, Secretary; James W. Brown, Assistant. There were thirty-three ministers enrolled, and eight were licensed, and one "restored." "The Introductory Sermon was preached by E. M. Kirkpatrick. Churches as well as ministers reported to the Eldership. Fifteen churches in Arkansas reported, and twelve in the Indian Territory. While no Funds are mentioned in the Minutes, and there was no Treasurer's Report, Joseph White was elected Treasurer. There was a regular Home Board of Missions. A resolution to divide the Eldership was defeated; but notice was given that an appeal would be taken to the General Eldership. The interests of the Texas part of the Eldership were not acted upon, but were referred to the Standing Committee for Texas.

35th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The Eldership in 1892 had several things in the way of discounts. The attendance of ministers was small—thirteen. Many who were absent did not report, and the licenses of five were withheld. Other things were greatly to the credit of the body. It convened with the church at Lone Valley, Montgomery county, Ark., August 31st. E. M. Kirkpatrick preached the Opening Sermon. He was elected Chairman; B. Ober, Assistant; R. A. Wallace, Secretary; C. H. Ballinger, Assistant, and B. Ober, Treasurer. The brethren in the Indian Territory asked permission to organize an Eldership, which was granted. The Standing Committee on January 17, 1893, went further. It cut off the Indian Territory, and declared that the name of the Texas, Arkansas and Indian Territory be changed to that of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership. The ministers in the Indian Territory organized an Eldership without waiting for the action of the General Eldership, which alone has the power to establish new Elderships. It set in motion all the machinery of an Eldership, even stationing the preachers. The Texas and Arkansas Eldership now had eight colored ministers and one hundred and five members. An organization known as "the Church of Christ" was represented at this session by six ministers. Their membership was given at between four and five hundred, located in southern Arkansas, with some organizations in Texas, and a number of colored churches. They "preached and practiced the same doctrine the Church of God does." They came to the Eldership "to advise with us relative to terms of union." Three of the six "took license from the Eldership." They appointed a committee to meet a similar committee named by the Eldership at Hot Springs, Ark., "to form a union." The Eldership created a Contingent Fund, and required each minister to lift collections for it. It committed itself "to so instruct and teach and preach in every way that we can, so as to raise the cause of temperance and sobriety." There were twelve fields of labor, while six ministers were "to work up their own fields as they can."

36th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Counties in Arkansas in which churches were reported at the session of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership in 1893 were Montgomery, Garland, Sebastian, Crawford, Yell, Logan, Franklin, Washington and Hempstead. The session was held at Price's Springs, Franklin county, beginning September 3rd. D. S. Summit was elected Chairman; C. H. Ballinger, Assistant; R. A. Wallace, Secretary; A. L. Cunningham, Assistant. The names of three ministers were "dropped." Five new church organizations were "admitted into the Eldership," while "the increase of membership in the old organizations was about one hundred and ten." The churches were all urged to organize Sunday-schools. To secure a larger attendance of ministers at the Elderships, every preacher was required "to report in person to this body, when not provisionally hindered." Two sermons each year were to be preached by pastors "on the subject of finances," and "two on the subject of intemperance." Each church was "assessed the sum of $1.00 for General Eldership Mission Fund," and "each member to pay 50 cents into the Home Mission Fund." There were "$5.10 in the treasury." There were nine appointments.

37th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The efforts to secure a fuller attendance of ministers and delegates at the annual session of the Eldership were not successful in 1894. There were present eleven ministers, two ruling elders, five deacons and seven delegates. Only nine churches reported. The session was held at Sulphur Spring, Montgomery county, Ark., and opened on August 29th, when at 10 a. m., "a short discourse was delivered by W. N. Rhodes." Officers were elected as follows: J. M. Howard, Chairman; D. Summit, Assistant; R. A. Wallace, Secretary, and W. N. Rhodes, Assistant. At 11 o'clock each morning sitting a sermon was ordered to be preached. At the first sitting, at 11 o'clock, J. M. Howard delivered the Opening Sermon. Conditions throughout the Eldership territory were favorable. "Religion is somewhat gaining, having not lost but little interest in some parts. The interest of religion has gained a great hold in other parts of the country. The increase in our churches is sufficient to give great encouragement." H. C. Tell, Treasurer, reported $5.00 in the treasury. No Foreign Mission funds, and no Home Mission funds. General Eldership funds,

$5.75. The withholding of licenses of a number of ministers marks every session; but the ranks were annually recruited by newly licensed men, six having been thus received in 1894. While not all the churches were supplied with pastors, there were eight circuits to which eleven preachers were appointed, with twenty-two church organizations. "All ministers not employed on any work must go out and preach and work up their own fields."

38th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The churches in the Texas and Arkansas Eldership made regular annual reports, mainly by letters. They remitted moneys raised for the various Funds, which were the General Missionary, Home Missionary and Contingent. But the amounts were small, as the churches were weak financially. In 1895 the Eldership directed "each church to pay $1.00 each year to the General Board, and each member 50 cents for Home Mission Fund." The Eldership which convened with the church at Mt. Nebo, Logan county, Ark., August 28, 1895, was attended by fourteen ministers, three ruling elders, six delegates and three deacons. It began its first sitting at 10 o'clock a. m., Wednesday, was constituted and organized by the election of J. H. Summit, Chairman, and J. M. Howard, Assistant; D. S. Summit, Clerk, and J. W. Burns, Assistant, and then at 11 o'clock a. m., listened to a sermon by P. J. Costlow. This was the order for each day, the Eldership adjourning at 10.45. On Thursday at 11 o'clock a. m., D. S. Summit delivered the Opening Sermon. Texas was represented by letter from E. Marple, and he was given charge of the work in that State. The interest there was "at a low ebb for want of ministerial aid." The Treasurer, J. W. Burns, handled the small amount of funds in a way to give good satisfaction. "No special steps were taken in the bounds of the Eldership in the temperance cause." There was good interest in some parts of the Eldership in Sabbath-schools. September was the season for protracted meetings, and so the time for the meeting of the Eldership was changed to the first week in October. The giving of "a note and security by any person owing any amount of money to the Eldership" was required. There were thirteen fields of labor, to which fourteen preachers were appointed. Those not receiving appointments were "advised to select fields of their own, and extend the borders of the Church."

39th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The Texas and Arkansas Eldership rarely indulged in the discussion of outside issues, such as the Texas Eldership had prior to its extension northward into Arkansas and the Indian Territory. They apparently thought that these are controversial issues which might just as well be relegated to the debatable ground, and left there. They would give themselves to the primary questions touching their own direct interests, and let go of the various other issues which make no difference to them, and not think that they have to settle everything. Hence, even temperance as a political issue received limited attention. In 1896 it was simply declared that "we find special steps taken in the boundaries of the Eldership in the temperance cause." On Education reference is only made to "some interest in Sabbath-schools in some parts of the Eldership... the interest in general is at a very low ebb." The session was held at Big Cedar Creek, Scott county, Ark., beginning September 30, 1896. Fourteen ministers were in attendance, four ruling elders, five delegates and five deacons. The Chairman was J. M. Howard, and the Assistant, J. H. Summit; Clerk, J. W. Burns, and the Assistant, Owen Jones. Burns was also elected Treasurer. Preaching at 11 o'clock each day, and at night. While the session opened Wednesday morning, the Opening Sermon was preached in the evening of said day, by J. M. Howard. Four new churches were received into the Eldership. The colored brethren in Sebastian county, Ark., requested that "a committee be sent there to organize them into an Eldership," which the Eldership did, naming J. M. Howard and J. J. Stewart as the committee. The Treasurer's receipts, "altogether," were $5.40. The "ranks of the Eldership were invaded by the great enemy, who has taken from our midst our beloved Brother Hicks." There were eleven fields of labor in Arkansas. E. Marple was put in charge of the work in Texas.

40th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The small attendance at the Eldership in 1897 was discouraging, and prompted the passage of a resolution in which the presence of the ministers at the annual sessions was strongly urged, adding, "We beg you to come to the Eldership each year." There were but seven ministers present, four ruling elders, four delegates and three deacons. The session was held at Oak Grove, Franklin county, Ark., and began September 8, 1897. J. M. Howard was elected Chairman, and D. S. Summit, Assistant; J. H. Whittington, Clerk, and J. D. Bradburn, Assistant, and J. T. Shelby, Treasurer. Each minister was assessed $1.50 for the Contingent Fund, and each church $1.50 for the same Fund. The presence of R. L. Byrnes, West Pennsylvania Eldership, and President of the General Eldership was highly appreciated. Under a charge of "heresy" the license of one minister "was revoked." There was but little interest taken in Sunday-schools, and the churches "were recommended to be more active in Sunday-school work all over the bounds of the Eldership." Thirteen churches reported to the Eldership. On the nine fields of labor there were over twenty preaching places, with some churches unsupplied. They were to be served by fourteen ministers. Unassigned ministers were instructed "to look out their own fields of labor, for behold the harvest is great and the laborers are few." The churches were located in the following ten counties: Montgomery, Scott, Garland, Yell, Sebastian, Franklin, Crawford, Logan, Perry and Washington.

41st Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The action of the Eldership in 1897, deprecating the small attendance, and expostulating with the members to be more faithful, did not have the desired effect. For while in 1898 there were two more ministers in attendance, no ruling elders nor delegates were present. The body convened with the church at Rose Creek, Perry county, Ark., September 15, 1898, with nine ministers and two deacons present. The Rose Creek church was located "quite a distance from any other church of God organization," and "the enemy had been there, sowing seeds of discord." "The 'Holiness' people had been preaching there, claiming to be the Church of God, and some of the brethren had gone after them, and were praying for God to heal all their afflictions." The officers elected were J. H. Summit, Chairman, and P. J. Costlow, Assistant; J. W. Burns, Clerk, and W. R. Pennington, Assistant, and J. H. Whittington, Treasurer. A "reorganized church in Hempstead county" was received into the Eldership. Great disappointment was expressed because of the small attendance, and the Eldership made an appeal especially to the younger ministers: "Knowing that the time is soon coming that we older preachers will pass away and quit coming to the Eldership, and if the younger preachers are not more punctual in their attendance and become better acquainted with the business pertaining to the Eldership, and have her interests more at heart, that when we are gone the Eldership will cease to meet." Twenty-two ministers were on the Eldership Roll. The state of religion was "at a very low ebb throughout" the Eldership. Prayer was offered, that God would "show us the hindering cause, and help us to remove the same out of our land." As faith and works must co-operate, the Eldership was solicited to "take such steps as to change the state of affairs, and the churches to co-operate and combine their efforts to effect a change." The territory was divided into thirteen fields of labor, to which eighteen ministers were assigned, while churches not supplied were "to apply to the Standing Committee for pastors."

42nd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The threatened dissolution of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership seemed impending in 1899. "The ministerial delegation was unusually small, and so the business was transacted mainly through correspondence." Thus the Eldership made only appointments to six fields of labor. On November 11th, the Standing Committee assigned ministers to five other circuits, and also appointed J. S. Evans Evangelist for South-western Arkansas. It granted the W. G. M. S. permission to work within the bounds of the Eldership. The session of the Eldership was held with the church at Price Spring, Franklin county, Ark., beginning September 13, 1899. Small as the attendance was, "good feeling and marked interest prevailed through each sitting. The preaching was extra good, with a marked degree of spirituality." But "the information obtained from reports of preachers was not very encouraging. The cause of Christ seems to be lingering, with large fields for extensive missionary work in this State." J. W. Burns preached the Opening Sermon. J. M. Howard was elected President; J. A. Whittington, Clerk, and also Treasurer. E. Marple was the choice of the Eldership for appointment by the General Eldership Board of Missions as missionary to the State of Arkansas. The condition in this Eldership was one of the occasions to give rise to the question as to whether the Polity of the Church of God could not be changed so that better results would follow; whether a different form of government might not prevent such serious losses of promising territory.

43rd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—It was the adverse fortune of the Texas Eldership, even as late as 1900, to be charged with having "withdrawn from the general body." B. Ober, one of the originators of the Eldership, denied this in June, 1900, stating the facts touching its organization before the war, and the opening of hostilities in 1861 "before the Texas Eldership was recognized by the General Eldership." And while "several attempts were made by some of the Texas brethren to declare our independence, and withdraw from the general body, it was voted down almost unanimously." After the war, when the General Eldership recognized the Texas Eldership, later the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, it was always loyal, and conformed to the established system of co-operation. The session of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership was hindered from meeting on August 29, 1900, by reason of "high waters;" but met August 30th, at Onyx, Yell county, Ark., with ten ministers present, one, J. D. Henson, from Tyson, Texas. Twenty churches were represented by delegates or letters, and four additional ministers reported. The body was organized by electing D. S. Summit, President; J. H. Whittington, Clerk. Two applicants for license from Texas were granted Certificates of Ordination, and two from Arkansas. Two Standing Committees were elected, one for Texas and one for Arkansas. In Arkansas there were nine fields of labor, located in Crawford, Washington, Scott, Montgomery, Yell, Garland, Sebastian, Logan, Hempstead and Franklin counties. The Eldership manifested an abiding disposition to revive and extend the work in Texas. It appointed J. D. Henson to Hill county, Texas, and requested E. Marple to "co-operate with the brethren in Texas, and to do all he can to build up the work there." Henson was also to do "mission work in the State of Texas." The time for the meeting of the Eldership was changed from the latter part of August, or the beginning of September, to "Wednesday before the fourth Sunday in July, to remain so for ten years, unless changed by a two-thirds vote of the Eldership."

44th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The fields of labor in the Arkansas part of the Eldership were generally large, churches weak and support inadequate. J. H. Whittington's circuit included two churches in Franklin county, one in Sebastian county and one in Logan county. The Standing Committee of the Arkansas part of the Eldership arranged for a Ministerial Association to meet one day before the session of the Eldership. This interfered with the organization of the Eldership, which was deferred one day, to July 25, 1901, when the Opening Sermon was preached at 1 p. m., by D. S. Summit. Officers elected were J. H. Whittington, President; Owen Jones, Clerk. Withholding of licenses, or "dropping from the Roll" of ministers, was a common occurrence. At this session one license was withheld, and the licenses of three others "were revoked," one that of a woman. The Eldership required "each pastor to collect the $2.00 assessment on each church," and the pastors were "held responsible for the same, unless they give a reasonable excuse." Two new churches were received into the Eldership. The second-work doctrine had secured some adherents in the churches, and in the ministry, and was occasioning some trouble. The doctrine was defined as "a second and instantaneous work of grace wrought in the heart by the Holy Spirit," and the Eldership decided that it "is not the doctrine taught by the churches of God," and therefore "from henceforth this Eldership will not grant a license to any one who advocates such a doctrine." There were nine appointments made, all to fields in Arkansas.

45th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The Texas part of the Eldership was making no progress, and neither in 1901 nor 1902 was there any report received. In Arkansas there was a willingness to further to the extent of their ability every general enterprise, as well as to work with a self-sacrificing spirit for the promotion of their own interest. Hence, a visit from O. A. Newlin in 1902, in behalf of the Ft. Scott Institute, was much appreciated. The Eldership convened at Enterprise, Sebastian county, Ark., July 23, 1902. Ten ministers were present, by whom "the business of the Eldership was carefully transacted." They declared the "need of a better educated ministry, and the great benefit of educating our children in institutions of learning conducted by the churches of God." The fields of labor had increased to eleven, served by fourteen ministers. J. M. Howard at Mena and surrounding community was also the appointee of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. Some of the churches, however, were unsupplied, and were placed in the care of the Standing Committee.

46th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The forty-sixth session of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership was blessed with "the presence of our aged and highly esteemed brother, E. Marple, who was an inspiration to the Eldership." In addition to Marple there were eight ministers present during the session, which was held with the church at Lone Valley, Montgomery county, Ark., beginning July 22, 1903. The body organized by electing D. S. Summit, President; J. H. Whittington, Secretary. The state of religion and the condition of the churches "were at least hopeful." "Crime is on the increase, and the preaching of the gospel does not produce as good results in the conversion of souls as it did in former years." It was considered that "there is a great opportunity for the building up of the Church within the bounds of the Eldership." The Eldership rejoiced over the fact that the Board of Missions of the General Eldership had appointed J. H. Whittington as missionary in Arkansas. It asked also that D. S. Summit be appointed by the Board as "a general worker in the bounds of our Eldership." The names of all ministers who "fail to make their whereabouts known" were to be "dropped from the Eldership Roll." The number of fields of labor was reduced to eight; but they were enlarged, so that on all but one there was one assistant to the pastor, and on two there were three assistants. Texas was to be looked after by the Standing Committee. On August 21, 1903, occurred the death of G. T. Bell, one of the most active and successful missionaries of the Eldership. He was converted when a youth and united with the church at Union Bethel, Lamar county, Texas, and was licensed by the Texas Eldership in 1869. Having emigrated to Arkansas in 1866, he began his missionary labors in that State about 1874, "under a fiery current of persecution." But "he preached the pure, uncompromising doctrines of the Church of God." "He was an able gospel preacher." "In his death a great and good man has gone up into a higher, brighter life."

47th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—The Eldership in 1904 was very small, there being but five ministers present from Arkansas and two from Texas. Ten others reported by letter or proxy, and five were not heard from. "Much sickness" was the cause. The session was held with the church at Price's Springs, Franklin county, Ark., and the Opening Sermon was delivered July 20, 1904, by E. Marple, of Texas. J. D. Henson, of Texas, was also present, and was chosen to preach the Opening Sermon in 1905. The names of seven ministers "were dropped from the Ministerial Roll." E. Marple was chosen President; J. H. Whittington, Secretary and Treasurer. Conditions throughout the Eldership were "better than a year ago, and the outlook for the future was encouraging." Two ministerial and two lay delegates to the General Eldership in 1905 were elected; but all were ministers, the names of no laymen appearing on the records for years. The fields of labor were rearranged, and numbered twelve, one of them in Texas, to which J. D. Henson was assigned. D. S. Summit was appointed missionary, as he was in the employ of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, and E. Marple, General Worker. While the Eldership reported no Funds and no money, it raised "money to pay dues to the General Eldership for the present year," and "made arrangements to pay the back dues during the year."

48th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Increasing interest throughout the bounds of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership territory characterized the year 1904-5. The ministers were "awake to the fact that our distinctive doctrines should be kept to the front." The eight sittings of the Eldership in session at Mt. Zion, Garland county, Ark., beginning August 30, 1905, "were precious seasons of grace," as well as of careful business transactions. Fourteen ministers were present, but no record of laymen. J. D. Henson was elected President; E. Marple, Journalizing Clerk; J. H. Whittington, Transcribing Clerk; D. S. Summit, Treasurer. While three new names were added to the Ministerial Roll, and one minister was reinstated; two "were dropped from the Roll." Frequent troubles were experienced, so that it was no surprise to the Eldership to be called on to investigate charges against one of the ministers, whose "license was withheld until reconciliation is perfected between the two parties." These estrangements between ministers were viewed with apprehensions. And they were not always caused by the wrong doing of those against whom the charges were preferred; but grew out of the law laid down by Tacitus: "It is the nature of the human disposition to hate him whom you have injured." Though the churches were mostly weak and poor, and the pastors received limited support, much interest was manifested in the publications of the General Eldership, in missions and educational institutions. There were eleven fields of labor, in ten counties in Arkansas. One field was un-supplied; but seven of the pastors had an "assistant," and J. D. Henson was the General Evangelist.

49th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—As the work in Texas was not profitable to the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, the Executive Board of the General Eldership was petitioned to permit it to be "dropped," and the body be called "The Arkansas Eldership." Said Board having no authority to change boundaries or titles, the matter was left to rest. The body convened as "The Texas and Arkansas Eldership," August 29, 1906, at Mt. Nebo, Logan county. It was organized by electing D. Summit, President; J. H. Summit, Clerk; J. S. Summit, Treasurer. In addition to the twelve teaching elders present, there were also two ruling elders, four deacons and one delegate, all having the full rights of members. In the evening, after the first day's sittings, the Opening Sermon was preached by James Roland. Arrangements were made to hold a Ministerial Association at Cedar Creek, Scott county, in December. The finances of the Eldership were limited, as there were only $14.95 in the treasury, and the Eldership was indebted to the Contingent Fund of the General Eldership to the amount of $10.00. The "patronizing of our Publishing House and of Findlay College" was advised. Eighteen churches reported to the Eldership and nineteen ministers, to which number three were added by the Committee on License. The territory was divided into ten fields of labor, and the pastors appointed thereto were given the right "to choose their assistants." The Board of Missions of the General Eldership appointed two missionaries, J. H. Whittington in the northern and D. S. Summit in the southern part of the State, which "the Eldership endorsed."

50th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Ability and interest are not always commensurate. The ministers and churches of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership had limited ability to help the educational institutions of the Church, or to patronize them; but when "V. V. Diltz was elected Evangelist," he "was also authorized to represent the interests of Fort Scott Collegiate Institute, Kansas. He was the Clerk of the fiftieth session of the Eldership, which was held at Hurricane Grove, Montgomery county, Ark., beginning September 28, 1907. J. H. Summit was the President; D. S. Summit, Treasurer. Much of the time was given to the consideration of mission work. The main difficulty encountered was the lack of means. There was a surplus of ministers, as in addition to the nineteen who were assigned to the fourteen fields of labor, there were a number unemployed, and three more received licenses at this session. And yet there were churches without pastors, and "the prospects seem good for the advancement of the Church of God in this country," and prayer was asked "that the Lord may send more laborers into this part of his vineyard."

51st Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—When the Texas and Arkansas Eldership convened at Price's Springs, Franklin county, Ark., September 27, 1908, the members could review a year during which "the work was going steadily onward," although "the ingathering of souls had been unusually small." The contrast between the condition of the Eldership as a body and as representing the church work, or "state of religion" and of the churches, often awakened deep solicitude. There were ten ministers present at this session. After the reorganization, D. S. Summit preached the Opening Sermon. He had been elected President; J. H. Whittington, Clerk. Three brethren secured licenses to preach the gospel. Gratification was expressed that "the young ministers have made considerable progress." But they were counseled "to take a more systematic course of study." To facilitate this "books for a Course of Study" were adopted. These were Winebrenner on Regeneration; Jewett on Baptism; Forney's Philosophic Basis of Ordinances and Bible Doctrine of Sanctification; Reitzel's Robert Woodknow. The Eldership had some trouble with errorists, and a prolonged discussion grew out of the action of the Standing Committee "revoking the license of J. L. Shelby for teaching the so-called 'Holiness' doctrine." But the action of the Committee was sustained. Notwithstanding this discussion, and divergence of views on some other subjects, the harmony and unity of feeling were not endangered, for "peace and good fellowship prevailed to the close of the session."

52nd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—In 1909 the Texas and Arkansas Eldership commemorated its fiftieth anniversary, or held its "fiftieth session," and adopted resolutions, acknowledging the "infinite wisdom and abundant mercy by which God saw fit to perpetuate our life as an organized body." It calculated that said session was "the last meeting of our half century life." But the Texas Eldership, of which the Texas and Arkansas Eldership is the continuation, was organized in 1857, so that the session of 1909 closed the fifty-second year of its existence. By resolution the Eldership renewed its vows of "loyalty to God and his cause, cultivating the spirit of union and subordination, that he may continue to bless and prosper our Eldership for all time to come." The meeting was held at Lone Valley, Montgomery county, Ark., beginning September 1, 1909. The Opening Sermon was preached by J. H. Jordan. Sixteen ministers and ten ruling elders were in attendance. They elected D. S. Summit, "Chairman;" J. E. McElroy, Clerk. A more stringent action was taken touching reports of ministers, making it obligatory on each minister to report every year, or forfeit his license. If such action is to be regarded as measuring the value of a license, it was thought that it made licenses quite too cheap. As it was "deemed reasonable that the ministers should be about their Father's business," so the Eldership "resolved that all the preachers must preach at least twelve sermons each year, unless providentially hindered, or their licenses will be discontinued." Five applicants for license appeared, and their requests were granted. The twelve charges were all supplied with pastors, several having assistant pastors.

53rd Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—In 1909 the Texas and Arkansas Eldership adjourned to meet at Elnora, Montgomery county, Ark.; but the place was changed by the Standing Committee to Hurricane Grove, Montgomery county, where it convened on August 31, 1910, at 10 o'clock a. m. Only a few being present the organization was deferred until 2 p. m., and a sermon was preached at 11 o'clock by T. N. Gillham. J. H. Jordan was elected President; J. H. Summit, Vice President; J. E. McElroy, Secretary. Fifteen teaching elders reported in person, ten by proxy and two by letter. Eighteen churches reported, and others were instructed to report to the Standing Committee. There was an evident desire to enlarge the work, and the "great need in Southern Arkansas and Texas for mission work in order to spread the borders of Zion, establish new churches and revive old and unsupplied churches" was strongly set forth. It was accordingly arranged "to put a missionary in the field for that purpose." To provide for his support, each church was required "to pay $1.00 for each male member." The Eldership was also asked for a certain amount by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. It was realized that when God calls us to duty, the only right answer is obedience.

54th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—Though but few more than one-half of the ministers were present at the fifty-fourth annual session of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, "a good number of ruling elders, deacons and delegates from all over the work was in attendance." The presence of E. Marple, one of the original members of the Texas Eldership, was a blessing, and was highly appreciated. The meeting was held at Mt. Nebo, Logan county, Ark., and began August 30, 1911, at which time, Wednesday evening, the Opening Sermon was preached by S. S. Lee, and the Eldership was organized. The officers elected were J. H. Summit, President; J. H. Whittington, Clerk. "The business was transacted deliberately, harmoniously and evidently with an eye single to the glory of God and to the upbuilding of his church," was the testimony of the Clerk. Yet one resolution, introduced by E. Marple, "caused quite a sensation, and had some very strong opposition." There had been some differences of views and of practice on the observance of the ordinances of Feet-washing and the Lord's Supper which the resolution was intended to harmonize. The resolution required "that the churches of God celebrate both these ordinances at the same stated time." After being amended so as to make it advisory, it was adopted by "twenty-four yeas, and eight nays." The Eldership also took action on other religious subjects; but on various questions of a general or civic character it remained silent. All but one of the twelve fields of labor were supplied with pastors, but no assistant pastors were named. Twenty-three churches were named on the twelve appointments.

55th Texas and Arkansas Eldership.—In 1912 the Texas and Arkansas Eldership held its annual session with the church at Hurricane Grove, Montgomery county, Ark., beginning at 10 o'clock a. m., August 28th. J. H. Whittington was the appointee to deliver the Opening Sermon, and D. S. Summit the alternate. The officers elected were J. H. Summit, President; S. S. Lee, Vice President; J. E. McElroy, Secretary. The President appointed the Standing Committee, consisting of R. J. Scott, T. L. Tabor, James F. Summit. The Stationing Committee was composed of J. S. Story, C. B. Carter, J. A. C. Spenter, Arthur Defoor, S. S. Lee. This Committee divided the territory into eleven fields, with twenty-five churches, only one of the fields having two ministers assigned to it. J. H. Summit was "endorsed as General Missionary in North Arkansas" to "the General Mission Board;" but the Eldership requested that he be made missionary for "the State of Arkansas." The Eldership kept its high ideals alive, realizing that under many discouragements it is a difficult problem to prevent an insidious lowering of standards. And the lowering of ideals along any line means a lowered life.

XI. THE SOUTHERN ILLINOIS AND INDIANA ELDERSHIP.

With Terre Haute, Vigo county, Ind., as a center, colonies of families of the Church of God located in four or five counties in Illinois and Indiana, beginning as early as 1847. It was in the Spring of this year that the Rups, Fasigs, Snavelys and Taggarts emigrated from Richland county, Ohio, to the State of Missouri. Not being satisfied with their new homes, they returned the same Fall, and located at and near Martinsville, Clark county, Ill. H. Rupp was a licensed minister of the Ohio Eldership, and preached in German. They soon began holding prayer-meetings and to carry on church work. In 1849 John Blickenstaff, of the Indiana Eldership, visited these families and was employed by them as their preacher; but as he became involved in certain scandals, he was dismissed. In 1850 Winebrenner and Harn paid them a visit, and were impressed with the locality as a favorable one for mission work. Sending of missionaries to Illinois was that Fall determined upon by the East Pennsylvania Eldership. In the Spring of 1851, George Sandoe, a young man of Lancaster county, Pa., "full of zeal and with a robust constitution," was started West to occupy this new field. In 1854, and prior, T. Hickernell, Adams and Sweitzer visited that section; also in 1854 I. E. Boyer was preacher in charge. During this year families from Wayne county, Ohio, settled in Greene county, Ind. Among these were the Millers, the Neidigs and the Axes. Later Sandoe returned as preacher in this section. The work prospered, and there were churches, or preaching points, in Vigo, Clay, Greene, Sullivan, Parke and Putnam counties in Indiana, and in Clark, Cumberland, Crawford and Coles counties, Ill. The territory was remote from the other fields occupied in either State by the ministers of the two Elderships; the inconvenience of travel was great; they had limited means, and so, irregular as it was, and against the judgment of the Illinois Eldership, it was finally determined to organize a new Eldership. The Illinois Eldership, October 19, 1857, "disapproved the course of the southern brethren in the organization of another Eldership, believing it to be detrimental to the cause in the bounds of this Eldership." But the new Eldership had been organized October 12th, at Prairieton, Vigo county, Ind., in the Methodist meeting-house. Two circuits were represented—Greene county, Ind., S. N. Miller and D. Neidig, teaching elders, and Martinsville circuit, Ill., George Sandoe, H. Rupp and H. Schweitzer, teaching elders, and John Snavely and Edwin Longenecker, ruling elders. They "gave each other the right hand of fellowship, pledging ourselves to stand by the word of God, and one another as ambassadors of the same." S. N. Miller was chosen Speaker, and David Neidig, Clerk. James Werner, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was present. The Eldership adopted as its name, style and title, "The Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership of the Churches of God." Resolutions were adopted to do all in their power "to counteract the great and growing evil of intemperance," and to "give our undivided influence against Slavery as it exists in the Southern States of this Republic." S. N. Miller was placed in charge of Greene county circuit, Ind., and Sandoe, of the Martinsville circuit, Ill., while H. Rupp and H. Schweitzer were "to preach for the German brethren and sisters in Greene county, Ind." A Methodist minister present "delivered a short address to the Eldership" at the close of the session.

Samuel N. Miller entered the ministry when he was twenty-six years of age, receiving his first license from the Ohio Eldership at its second annual session, in 1837. He at once "offered himself to travel the ensuing year," and was appointed to the Richland county circuit. He was pastor successively of Stark county circuit, Wooster circuit, and Mohegan circuit, serving several of these fields a second term. His last circuit was the Wooster, in 1846. He had removed to Indiana prior to the organization of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, and joined the Indiana Eldership on Transfer given him in 1856 by the Ohio Standing Committee, and was appointed to Greene county circuit, Ind. When the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership was organized in 1857 he became a member, and was elected to the office of Speaker, and re-elected three successive annual meetings. In 1865 and again in 1868 he was elected a delegate to the General Eldership. In 1869 he was elected Treasurer of his Eldership. He was in the active work until 1871, when he was circuit preacher in Daviess county, Ind. He died in Highland township, Greene county, Ind., May 22, 1873, aged 63 years, 3 months and 14 days. "He was a man of great faith and undoubted piety;" "faithfully advocating the doctrine of Christ and his Apostles." "His labors were blessed to the enlightenment of many and the establishment of churches of God."

2nd Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—Encouraged by the presence of J. H. Hurley, of Decatur, Ill., who preached the Opening Sermon from 1 Peter v. 2-4, the second Eldership in Southern Illinois and Indiana gathered new inspiration as it met at Martinsville, Ill., October 25, 1858, for the transaction of its annual business. Edwin Longenecker had received license from the Standing Committee, so that there were six teaching elders, all present, with two ruling elders and five delegates. S. N. Miller presided as Speaker, and George Sandoe was the Clerk. J. Werner and J. Richards were advisory members, and served on committees. The ministers of the Eldership were advised of "the importance of pursuing a regular course of study," and, "besides the Bible, The Comprehensive Commentary, Watson's Institutes, Winebrenner on Regeneration, Carson's and Swartz's works on Baptism, and Harn on Feet-washing" were recommended. Without mentioning the author's name, a committee was appointed to examine and report upon "a certain pamphlet published by a member of the East Pennsylvania Eldership." The Committee's report was adopted, which says: "We can but express our regret that it ever found its way amongst us, inasmuch as it teaches sentiments repugnant to the principles and doctrines of the churches of God." Resolutions disaffirming all sympathy with the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage were adopted, and advising "our brethren to use their influence against the manufacturing and vending thereof." Slavery the Eldership considered an "institution derogatory to the revealed will of God, conceived in sin and shapen in iniquity." Subscriptions of brethren in the local churches were to be solicited "for the use and benefit of superannuated or worn-out preachers of the Church of God, their wives and orphans." Not to seem antagonistic to the Illinois Eldership, a resolution prevailed declaring that "we wish to co-operate with the Elderships of the Church of God everywhere." Miller had visited a Separate Baptist Association, which expressed a desire for correspondence with the Eldership.

3rd Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The third annual session of the Eldership was held "in the Bethel on Bro. John Miller's farm, Greene county, Ind., beginning October 24, 1859. S. N. Miller and George Sandoe were re-elected Speaker and Clerk respectively. Rules were adopted for the session. Ministers reported "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." S. N. Miller, who had been appointed "to bear a letter of correspondence" to "The White River Association of Separate Baptists reported a favorable reception at their Association." In response, a letter from said Association was addressed to the Eldership, and Miller was again appointed to bear a similar letter to the next Association. The cause of Missions formed the subject of "consultation," when "a committee was appointed to consider the best and most available means to raise missionary funds." The means recommended was "to appoint one man, or more, in each church to circulate a subscription, soliciting funds for home missions." Sandoe was elected delegate to the General Eldership. Miller was appointed to the Martinsville circuit, and D. Neidig to Greene county, Ind.

4th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The Opening Sermon of the fourth session of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership was preached in the Bethel at Martinsburg, Ill., October 22, 1860, by S. N. Miller. He was re-elected Speaker, and George Sandoe, Clerk. Miller gave his reasons for not attending the annual meeting of the White River Association of Separate Baptists, and was exonerated. The Eldership felt that said Association, "by failing to meet with us, and in other ways, treated this body with contempt," and so resolved "that our correspondence close." The Eldership expressed its gratitude "for our present advance in education, and earnestly recommend all moral and religious education, especially the establishing of Sabbath-schools where practicable." It pledged its "entire and individual influence against intemperance as an evil of the greatest magnitude." Slavery it denounced "as an outrage committed upon the most precious and God-given rights of man, at variance with every attribute of our common benefactor and Creator," and hence it "will not countenance this sin or villany under any consideration whatever." One man in each church "was to be appointed to collect missionary money to support one or more missionaries within the bounds of this Eldership." The entering of preachers into "the political arena," the Eldership refused to "believe is alike disastrous to the vitality and extension of the Church," and it did not regard it "as an ecclesiastical evil which should be discountenanced by all the friends of Zion," for it indefinitely postponed a resolution to that effect. The "use of tobacco as a luxury" it pronounced "a relic of barbarism, and a violation of physical, intellectual and moral law." It lamented "the removal by death of our beloved and much esteemed Bro. John Winebrenner." Two circuits and one mission were outlined, with four preachers and three "missionaries at large."

5th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—Fourteen preachers and delegates were present at the session of the Eldership which was held in the Union Bethel, Greene county, Ind., beginning October 14, 1861. J. W. Booth was elected Speaker, and George Sandoe, Clerk. D. Neidig preached the Opening Sermon on Sabbath evening. The ranks of the ministry were increased by the licensing of J. C. Hughes, W. Shipman and J. Buskirk. Fraternal relations were begun with the "Indiana Conference of the Churches of God," J. G. Laughlin and J. W. Neeley being present as delegates, bearing "a letter of correspondence." The Eldership was in favor of publishing the Journals together in one pamphlet, for which purpose the Minutes were written out in full, and but "a very brief account" furnished The Advocate.

6th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The sixth session of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, which began its session at Martinsville, Clark county, Ill., October 13, 1862, was still further encouraged to labor for union between it and the Indiana Conference of Church of God. This organization began its existence at Zion meeting-house, in Martin county, Ind., immediately adjoining the work of the Eldership in Greene county, in October, 1855. In August, 1861, they had their annual Minutes of 1860 published in The Advocate. "They have fallen back upon the original Scripture platform," said Thomas, "and we can see no reason why this Conference and the Indiana Eldership should not either blend together in one, or cordially co-operate." October 31, 1861, the Minutes of the meeting held August 30, 31 and September 1, 1861, were also published in The Advocate. In these they adopted The Advocate as their paper. They "as a Conference take the Old and New Testament Scriptures as containing our articles of faith and rule of discipline for the government and edification of the Church of God." Joseph G. Laughlin may be called the founder of this body of people. He had been a member of the M. E. Church, a local preacher; but after a prayerful reading of the Scriptures he became dissatisfied with human names and parties, and decided to withdraw from the M. E. Church. At this time he "had no thought of forming a Church." But soon finding "others anxious for a Church to be formed bearing the scriptural name and taking the word of God for the man of their counsel," a meeting was held on June 10, 1854, "for the purpose of forming and organizing a Church to be known as the Church of God." Thus originated this body of believers, with J. G. Laughlin as their leader. "S. N. Miller and D. Neidig were appointed in 1861 to carry a letter of correspondence to the Conference of the Church of God in Martin county, Ind., in September, 1862." These brethren reported "that the prospect of a union between the two bodies is very favorable, and have no doubt that could those brethren have been present a union would have been effected." They were invited "to meet the Standing Committee on the last Saturday in March, 1863, for that purpose. The "present effort to break up the Government of the United States" the Eldership "considered a great sin against God and the most precious rights of man," and declared that they "will not fellowship any person or persons who give aid to, or sympathize with, those in rebellion against the Government." The ordinances were observed the second day evening. "Dark and trying times, and doubt concerning the advancement of the Church and cause of our Master "were experienced during the year." Intemperance was denounced as "a growing evil whose natural tendency is to ruin the community, the influence of which is detrimental and ruinous to the morals of all good citizens." The Eldership "formed itself into a society to raise a Widows' Fund, by each member paying the sum of twenty-five cents annually." One circuit and one mission in Indiana, and two circuits in Illinois were formed. There were six ministers present and five absent, with two ruling elders and one delegate. W. Booth presided, and E. Longenecker was the Clerk.

7th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—In furtherance of the project of union between the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership and the Indiana Conference of the Churches of God, when the Eldership met in the Union Bethel, Greene county, Ind., October 19, 1863, J. G. Laughlin, E. Jackson and T. J. Whisnand presented letters of correspondence, and were received as advisory members. The Eldership had organized by the election of S. N. Miller, Speaker, and

William Booth, Clerk. What the Standing Committee did to effect a union with the Conference of the Churches of God was not recorded, but no action was taken by the Eldership. The prayers of the Eldership were tendered to "the President and his Cabinet for wisdom and understanding in performing the responsible duties imposed upon them." Ministers were advised that if they "fail to report either in person or by letter, they shall be dealt with, unless a reasonable excuse be offered." The death of D. Neidig was deeply felt, he having died after having obtained a furlough for home from the Army at Corinth, and a funeral sermon was preached on Sabbath morning before the Eldership.

8th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The place of meeting of the eighth session of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, in the Whisinnand school-house, near Bloomington, Monroe county, Ind., evidenced the progress made toward a union between the Eldership and the Conference of Churches of God. Monroe county adjoins Greene on the east, and was part of the territory covered by the said Conference, which originated in the county adjoining Greene on the south, Greene being territory of the Eldership. R. H. Bolton came to the Eldership with a Transfer from the West Ohio Eldership. "After some agreeable deliberation," a resolution was adopted inviting the brethren of the Conference of the Churches of God "into the union and fellowship with us as Christian people and ministers, and co-operation of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership of the Church of God." The names of I. J. Whisennand, J. G. Laughlin, J. O. Laughlin and J. W. Neeley, ministers, and Daniel Pruett, ruling elder, were entered on the Roll, and they became active members of the Eldership. The Eldership chose W. Booth for Speaker, and E. Longenecker, Clerk. A committee was appointed to draft a Missionary Constitution, which reported, and the Constitution was adopted. A delegate from the Separate Baptist Church was received. "Godspeed to the Chicago Mission" was voted, and "the influence, prayers and aid" of the Eldership promised "for its success and prosperity." A Book of Minutes of the Eldership was arranged for, "in which to record the acts of the Elderships and Standing Committees of the past, present and future." The Eldership lamented the limited good accomplished during the year. "With joy" the Eldership "hailed the era when all the oppressed shall go free," and "we as a nation will rid ourselves of the iniquitous system of a cruel and wicked slavery." Hence, "every measure taken on the part of our Government to liberate the enslaved meets our hearty approval." "The sympathy, influence and fellowship" of the Eldership was refused to "any person engaged in the iniquitous business of using or selling spirituous liquors as a beverage." Nor can "we have fellowship with any who justify the course of the rebels in rising up in rebellion against the legally elected authorities of this great Government." R. H. Bolton was "appointed to travel over the entire bounds of the Eldership as a General Evangelist, and the ministry to assist all they possibly can in serving appointments, churches, and in helping to hold special, ordinance and protracted meetings."

9th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The two Evangelists, R. H. and C. S. Bolton, who traveled over the whole territory of the Eldership, had infused new life into the body. But it also had a depressing effect on the ministry, and a lessening of interest on the part of some. This may account for the fact that when the Roll was called at Martinsville, Clark county, Ill., October 16, 1885, of the fourteen teaching elders enrolled six were absent. But two ruling elders were in attendance, and three noted as absent. The two General Evangelists had been remunerated in cash to the amount of $455.93. As a result of their labors they reported that "ministers were made earnest, churches revived and strengthened, backsliders reclaimed and about one hundred and forty souls professedly converted to God." The formation of one church, at Centerville, Vigo county, of twenty members, was reported. W. Booth was elected Speaker; R. H. Bolton, Journalizing Clerk, and C. S. Bolton, Transcribing Clerk. The translation of the American Bible Union was commended. The ministers and churches were earnestly urged "to engage in the glorious work of Sunday-schools." The use of tobacco, being "a filthy practice, and a useless waste of money," it "should at once be dispensed with by all." "A happy, but slow, improvement in the cause of religion within the past year in our Eldership" was acknowledged. In a lengthy series of resolutions, with separate preambles, intemperance was denounced as "the vilest of evils, most fatal in its tendency, exposing the human race to every vice, and hurling into the vortex of ruin millions of our fellow beings." Everything possible was directed to be done to "destroy this abominable compound of crime and vices." The absence of a prohibitory law, similar in its provisions to the Maine Law, was deplored. The hope was expressed that "the leaders of the so-called Confederacy will receive their proper retribution." The Chicago Mission was endorsed, and Shoemaker invited to canvass their Eldership for funds. But when the resolution was read, stating that in the matter of membership in organizations of Odd Fellows, Free Masons, Good Templars, etc., "we recommend all to use their own judgment whether or no they will hold connection with any or all these institutions," it was amended so as to read: "We recommend all brethren to stand aloof from them all." Provision was made for the drafting of a Constitution by appointing R. H. Bolton, Sandoe and Longenecker a committee for that purpose. The Stationing Committee reported two circuits and two missions, to which three ministers were assigned, to be assisted by the local ministers living on the fields.

10th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The session of the Eldership of 1866 was "most harmonious and pleasant." It met with the new church at Centerville, Vigo county, Ind., October 13th, Saturday, at 3 o'clock p. m. S. N. Miller was chosen "Chairman," and R. H. Bolton, Clerk. The Separate Baptist Association had sent Silas White as a Messenger, bearing "a letter of Correspondence," which were received. The funeral sermon of Elder James Wilson was preached on Sunday afternoon, by Bolton and Miller. The Eldership was declared to have "lost one of its most exemplary members." On the temperance question the Eldership expressed its readiness "to co-operate with all proper efforts, moral and legal, for the suppression of every form of this giant evil." While recommending general co-operation with the General Eldership, it named "specially in matters pertaining to the College or Colleges." It felt thankful "for the success of the year; for the harmony which prevails among the brotherhood, and for the growing influence throughout our bounds;" but declared, "there is room for improvement, and greater interest should be felt and sacrifices made to spread Bible principles." The total amount of Life Membership in the Missionary Aid Society was $480.00. "A Letter of Correspondence was ordered to be written to the Shelby Association of Separate Baptists," the same "to be borne thither by Sandoe, accompanied by Bolton and Rupp." The attendance of elders and delegates being very small, churches were urged "to send their elder or elders, or regular delegate or delegates "to each Annual Eldership," There were but two circuits and two itinerants, with one General Evangelist.

11th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The overtures to the Shelby Association of Separate Baptists were received in a kindly spirit, and at the opening of the session of the Eldership in 1867, Silas White, a Messenger from the Association, was received, bearing a Letter of Correspondence. This courtesy was "highly appreciated," and the hope was expressed that "our interchange of views may tend to unite our efforts in the cause of God." A letter was directed to be written to the Association, and the bearers thereof were Shafer, Rupp and Sandoe. The date of the Eldership meeting was October 21st, when eight ministers and seven delegates and ruling elders were present. Considerable of a missionary spirit was awakened, so that the Stationing Committee, in addition to the two circuits, named three missions—Centerville, Daviess county and Milton—with eight preachers, and five others "to assist all they can." The total amount of Life Membership of the Missionary Aid Society was increased to $570.00. Provision was made to create a Contingent Fund for the General Eldership. As the need of a better educated ministry was felt, action was taken to prepare a Course of Studies for ministers; but only four branches were named—the Bible, on which essays were to be written; Grammar, Geography and Church History. The presiding officer of the Eldership was William Booth, with George Sandoe, Journalizing Clerk, and J. W. Neeley, Transcribing Clerk. As the income from the Life Memberships amounted to less than $40.00 a year, the Eldership directed that each pastor preach a missionary sermon at each preaching place, and lift a collection for missions.

12th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—With its three missions during the year, and receipts of but $29.24, plus $5.75 in the treasury, the urgent need of more funds was self-evident. Eleven new Life Members were secured, making the total amount $680.00. So the Eldership which met at Union Bethel, Greene county, Ind., Thursday, October 22, 1868, had this as one of its most important problems to deal with. Hence, it was again made the duty of "each minister in charge of churches to take up a missionary collection at every point during the year, besides soliciting Life Members of the Missionary Society." The year just ended these collections aggregated but $5.18. Quarterly payment of salaries of ministers was insisted upon. There were present at this session eight teaching elders, two ruling elders and two delegates. William Shafer was chosen Speaker, and George Sandoe, Clerk. The correspondence and exchange of delegates with the Association of Separate Baptists were continued. In addition, the Eldership expressed its willingness "to correspond with other bodies of Christians on the subject of Church union, and, if desirable, send delegates, with letters of correspondence." Elder Wesley Shipman had emigrated to Kansas. A very hopeful spirit animated the Eldership, as it believed "that if we are faithful, the future will reveal great and glorious results." A minister of "the Christian, or New Light, Church," T. T. Miller, was received and licensed. Two churches, one in Madison and the other in Delaware county, north-east of Indianapolis, sent delegates to the Eldership, and asked admission to fellowship. But being within the territory of the Indiana Eldership, they were referred to said body. There were arrangements made for three missions, two circuits and one separate church.

13th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—As it had been resolved to alternate between the two States with the annual sessions of the Eldership, the session of 1869 was held at Martinsville, Clark county, Ill., beginning October 21st. Nine absentees are noted, while an unusual number of lay elders and delegates was present, there being eight ministers and eight delegates and ruling elders. They chose for Speaker, William Booth, and for Clerks, George Sandoe and R. T. Sargent. While in 1868 the delegates from the two churches in Madison and Delaware counties were referred to the Indiana Eldership, the Standing Committee during the year had appointed Wm. Booth to preach for them till the Eldership. The Eldership expressed its "high esteem of the many virtues of the deceased Elder E. H. Thomas, a man of unswerving devotion to the principles of truth and of arduous labors among us." The Itinerancy had been made a prominent topic by the discussion at, and the action of, the General Eldership, and so strong resolutions were adopted, characterizing it as "an efficient instrumentality in spreading the gospel of Christ," and "considering it essential to the speedy dissemination of the principles of the Church of God in the world." It was directed that a committee of the Eldership "mature a plan for the co-operation of all the churches on each field of labor to support the preacher in charge." This was prompted by the fact "that there is too little effort on the part of the churches to support their preachers." The churches were advised that "unless they wake up to this matter it will be impossible to supply them with regular preaching." This the Eldership claimed was "the only difficulty—means to send ministers to preach the word to our fellow men." With the accession of A. J. Fenton to the ministerial ranks, the Eldership had the men to send out on its five fields of labor, with assistants on each one. Sandoe was to travel generally, "to open new points for future missionary operations, and to present the missionary claims to the churches and secure Life Members."

14th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The exchange of delegates between the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership and the Shelby Association of Separate Baptists continued. Delegates were again appointed "to meet with the Association." It was a minority Eldership that met at White Bethel, Madison county, Ind., August 25, 1870, there being but five of the sixteen enrolled teaching elders present, with four ruling elders and delegates. Doubtless this was owing to the distance to the place of meeting. A. X. Shoemaker "was appointed Speaker" and Geo. Sandoe, Clerk. The Eldership was $64.00 in arrears on General Eldership assessments, and Sandoe was instructed "to collect the same forthwith." It was made the duty of preachers on entering upon "their fields of labor to call the churches together and ascertain what can be procured by subscription for their support." The Board of Missions reported $720.00 Life Membership; but only $84.30 was "paid out during the year." The Eldership pledged itself to "labor without ceasing for the entire overthrow of the liquor traffic in our land," and declared that "we will not give our suffrage to any man (if we know it) trafficking in, or drinking, spirituous liquors." The Martinsville circuit was divided into Martinsville and Robinson circuits, and a minister appointed to each. This gave the Eldership six appointments, three of which were missions, viz.: Milton, Centerville and Davless county. It was decided that "the present Eldership year end with the first of November, and hereafter with the sitting of the Eldership." The Eldership now had churches near the boundary lines separating it from the Indiana Eldership, in Howard, Madison and Delaware counties, the second counties south of Huntington and Wells, and much more convenient to be supplied by said Eldership. It therefore requested the Indiana Eldership to supply them, or it will cede said counties to the Indiana Eldership. But said Eldership in October, 1870, took no action in the matter, though it was brought before it by Shoemaker and W. A. Gourley, appointed a committee for that purpose.

15th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—It was rather the common practice in western Elderships to make visiting ministers of other Elderships full members, with the privilege of voting, sitting on committees and holding office. So it was not peculiar when at its session at Martinsville, Ill., beginning August 21, 1871, the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership not only again received Shoemaker as a full member, but re-elected him Speaker. Geo. Sandoe was First Clerk; and R. T. Sargent, Second Clerk. Eleven teaching elders attended the session, while nine were absent. There were seven ruling elders and six delegates in attendance. The Eldership manifested a spirit of harmonious co-operation with the General Eldership, and while in arrears to the said body, it made an effort to pay all its assessments. The Missionary Baptist Church was represented by L. W. F. Gilbert as delegate. Having adopted strong resolutions urging diligent Sunday-school work by all pastors and churches, it was arranged to suspend preaching on Friday night to hold "a meeting in the interest of Sunday-school work." At this meeting these questions were discussed: "What is a Sunday-school?" "What relation does it sustain to Christianity?" "How shall we awaken greater interest in this work?" "Shall we have a Sunday-school Convention?" The Eldership declared that it will "use all our efforts against intemperance," and "will in every lawful way strive to put it down;" and that it "will fellowship no person who deals in intoxicating liquors." The "use of tobacco" it resolved to be "a useless, filthy and expensive practice in the main," to discourage which it will use its influence. The itinerancy it regarded as "a powerful element in the hands of the ministry in the accomplishment of good," and that "the Eldership stick close to the old landmarks." Correspondence with the Shelby Association of Separate Baptists was continued, and Fenton and Sandoe were appointed delegates to their next meeting. The Eldership now had seven appointments, two of which are classed as missions.

16th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—Sometimes commendations imply reflections. And so when the Correspondent of the Eldership of 1872, either for himself or the body, stated that "greater devotion was manifested among the ministry than formerly," the reader can make his own deductions. No absentees are noted, and fourteen teaching elders responded to their names, with eight ruling elders, when on August 22nd the Eldership was constituted. In the organization H. Rupp was chosen Speaker, and R. T. Sargent, Clerk. "A better financial system for the Eldership" was affirmed to be "absolutely necessary to the success of the Church," and as an important measure to this end the Eldership resolved to "appoint a general missionary and financial agent to travel at large throughout the bounds of the Eldership to assist in the double capacity of missionary and financial agent." To raise funds, it was suggested that "a general subscription paper be drawn up for immediate use;" the General Missionary and Financial Agent to "visit the several fields of labor as soon as possible, call together the leading members of the respective circuits and stations and introduce the subscription and appoint sub-agents in every church to attend to this matter." In addition, "each preacher in charge of a field of labor" was instructed "to take personal missionary subscriptions at each appointment to be exclusively applied to home missions." A secretary and treasurer were to be "appointed in each church" to whom these subscriptions were to be given for collection.

17th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—By appointment of the Eldership in 1872, R. T. Sargent delivered the Opening Sermon of the Eldership in the evening of August 20, 1873. Eleven of the seventeen ministers attended the session, and nine ruling elders and delegates. A regular fund was created for the purpose of defraying the expenses of delegates to the General Eldership, by requiring each pastor annually to collect twenty cents from each brother and ten cents from each sister for that purpose. The Eldership mourned the death of S. N. Miller, whose "labors in our ranks were extended over a number of years, and were blessed to the enlightenment of many and the establishment of churches of God."

The financial plan adopted in 1872 was approved; but two men, one in Illinois and one in Indiana, were "appointed to make one round among the churches this Fall and speak upon the duty of all to support the ministry and otherwise assist the churches in this good and great work." After adjournment, the Standing Committee agreed to call a meeting "to hold a Ministerial Association," and appointed a committee to draw up a program. The time for the Eldership year to begin was changed to October 1st. There were seven fields of labor, two of them being missions. Some of the local preachers were appointed assistants to the pastors.

18th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The action of the Standing Committee, calling a Ministerial Association was unheeded, and so the first official action of the Eldership which met at Centerville, Vigo county, Ind., September 24, 1874, was to decide "as a means of gaining information that we hold a Ministerial Association as often as the Eldership may think best." Conditions in the Eldership and among the churches were such as to inspire the hope "that the coming year will be one of greater prosperity than the past." A division of the Eldership was suggested, and a committee appointed to consider the question. It reported in favor of a division, as this was the original purpose, that "as soon as we are sufficiently strong, and it was thought best for the advancement of the cause of God, to form two Elderships instead of one." The delegates to the General Eldership in 1875 were instructed to ask for such division, the division to be along the State line, and the Elderships to be called respectively the Southern Illinois and the Southern Indiana Elderships. To secure greater co-operation meetings of elders and deacons on the different charges once a month were suggested, to "consult and devise as to the best means of taking care of the preacher in charge, and other interests of the Church." The Sunday before Christmas was designated as the day for the churches "to meet in order to donate moneys for missionary purposes." Geo. Sandoe presided as Speaker, and R. T. Sargent was Clerk. The Stationing Committee made appointments to ten fields of labor, with one General Missionary.

19th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—A comparatively small representation of the Eldership met to hold the session at Martinsville, Clark county, Ill., September 23, 1875. The session lasted two days and one evening sitting, during which "harmony and good feeling prevailed." George Sandoe was the Speaker, and R. T. Sargent, Clerk. There was "quite an ingathering of souls during the year, with increasing prospects for future success." "Greater diligence to qualify themselves by study for the great work of the ministry" was urged upon the ministers. All were requested to "labor more fully to organize Sabbath-schools." Ober, who lived within the bounds of the Eldership, in Greene county, Ill., near the Mississippi, offered to open a mission there, asking $300.00 for two years' labor. No appointment was made, but correspondence with him solicited. The body lamented the early removal of Elder Bratten by death. Appointments were made to seven circuits and three missions.

20th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The seven circuits and three missions of the Eldership were represented at Centerville, Vigo county, Ind., September 20, 1876, by ten teaching elders, five ruling elders and eight delegates. Four charges were not represented, and fourteen teaching elders and three exhorters were absent. On the evening previous R. T. Sargent delivered the Opening Sermon. J. W. Neeley was chosen Speaker, and R. T. Sargent, Clerk. Sandoe, on the Charleston circuit, reported the dedication of two church-houses, one at Oak Point, Clark county, and one three miles east of Charleston, both in Illinois. The propriety of dividing the Eldership was discussed, but it is not clear what action was taken. By request of the General Eldership, each pastor was required to lift collections in all the churches for general missionary purposes during the month of November. It was a feature of this session that a number of special seasons of prayer were held. The propriety of "holding a special meeting once every three months on each circuit" was to be presented to the churches, the preachers on different circuits to assist each other. At the close of the session the Stationing Committee reported twelve fields of labor, to which twenty ministers were assigned.

21st Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The session of the Eldership in 1877 was held at Martinsville, Clark county, Ill., beginning September 20, 1877. Thirteen of the twenty-six ministers were present, nine ruling elders and fifteen delegates. Positive action was taken on the question of a division of the Eldership by its indefinite postponement. E. M. Love preached the Opening Sermon the previous evening. The election for officers resulted in the choice of W. Booth for Speaker, and R. T. Sargent, Clerk. The importance of education for the ministry was emphasized, and ministers of the Church were strongly recommended to "prepare themselves fully for their work," and the churches were requested to "encourage and support young men in the pursuit of an education." The divine blessing was invoked upon the churches, to give them "a spirit of liberality, and young ministers an earnest, absorbing desire to qualify themselves for their high calling and noble work by a liberal education." Saturday evening was "set apart for a mass temperance meeting." A leader of the discussion was appointed, and a special feature was an invitation to "any reformed inebriates, or any drinkers who may desire to reform, to give us the benefit of their experience." J. W. Neeley was appointed a delegate to the Association of General Baptists, to bear a letter prepared by the Standing Committee. When the delegates to the General Eldership were elected they were "instructed to vote to have a man appointed to write a History of John Winebrenner for publication." The appointments were rearranged so as to make five circuits and three missions.

22nd Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—The Eldership now numbered thirty ministers, but only eleven attended the session held at Union Bethel, Greene county, Ind., beginning September 19, 1878. Twenty-one delegates were in attendance. George Sandoe delivered the Opening Sermon. R. T. Sargent was elected Speaker, and D. H. Miller, Clerk. A spirit of hearty co-operation with the General Eldership was expressed in its efforts to secure funds "to carry forward the great work of missions in our land." The Eldership also heartily endorsed the project of publishing the "Sunday-school Workman." On temperance the Eldership declared that "there is only one safe course to pursue:—that we array ourselves against the distillation and use of the accursed beverage in all its forms." A committee was appointed to devise a plan for future missionary operations, claiming that the territory of the Eldership was too extensive for proper cultivation, and points are calling for help which can not be supplied, the Board of Missions was asked "to help to support at least one man in the bounds of this Eldership." The more efficient plan for home missions recommended by the committee was "to appoint a collecting agent to canvass our bounds and solicit cash and subscriptions for home missionary purposes." The need of such funds appears from the Treasurer's Report, which shows "amount of money in the treasury last year, $8.00. Amount of money collected during past year, $2.00. As a further evidence that the Eldership meant that its members shall become better qualified, a committee was named "to prescribe a Course of Studies for young ministers." The Committee arranged them into two classes. Class A was to study, "The redemption of man, and how accomplished." Class B, "The fall of man, and its cause." The fields this year were seven circuits, two missions and one station. On several circuits there were two ministers and an assistant. One minister was appointed missionary at large.

23rd Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—Provision had as yet not been made for either Permanent Rules of Order, or for a Constitution, as western Elderships preferred to call it, "A System of Co-operation." A committee, hence, reported Rules of Order at the beginning of the session of 1879, which was held at Martinsville, Clark county, Ill., and opened on the morning of October 9th. And a committee was named to prepare and report a System of Co-operation. The Opening Sermon was preached by A. Miller. The Eldership was constituted with forty-two members—seventeen teaching elders, ten ruling elders and fifteen delegates. I. J. Whisinnand was made Speaker, and D. H. Miller, Clerk. Great complaint continued to be made with reference to the support of pastors. It was, therefore, ordered that "at each preaching appointment, immediately after the Eldership, a subscription be set on foot, the same to be placed in the hands of the deacons, or some suitable person, and the same to be paid over in quarterly payments to the ministers." The Eldership agreed "to co-operate with the other Elderships in holding a semi-centennial camp-meeting in 1880." It was agreed to "create a fund for superannuated ministers and their widows, to be called the Widows' Fund. Each minister, if able, was to pay annually $1.00 into this Fund, and all others "who wish to assist in creating the Fund." "Every able-bodied minister" was required to "preach at least twelve sermons during the year." The appointments made indicate the extent of the territory and the spirit of aggression in the Eldership if the means had been at its command. The Stationing Committee arranged eight circuits and five missions. These missions were Shelby county, Madison county, Indiana; Jack Oak, Gibson county, Ind., and Jefferson county, Neb. There were also two missionaries at large.

24th Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership.—A general survey of this Eldership, convened at Union Bethel, Greene county, Ind., October 14, 1880, shows eight circuits and four missions, represented by twelve ministers, three ruling elders and fourteen delegates; while twenty ministers were absent. The choice of the Eldership for Speaker was E. M. Love; Clerk, William Buzzard. The Rule of the Eldership was to have members of classes in the Course of Studies prepare essays, or discourses, and deliver them. Three classes were represented in 1880. To one was assigned as a subject "The Fall of Man," and to the other "The Redemption of Man." The "brotherhood, and especially the ministry" were "urged to increased activity in the cause of education, in the family circle, in the Sabbath-schools, in the Church and amongst the people generally." The Eldership declared that it "will not help to put men into offices of trust who will either use or sell distilled liquors as a beverage," and it "opposed the use of tobacco by the brethren, especially in the church-house." A resolution on the division of the Eldership was considered, and "was unanimously agreed to, every member rising to his feet." It declared that "it was the agreement of the men who first organized the Eldership, that as soon as the body was strong enough they would form two Elderships;" that "the time has come when the cause of God can be built up more rapidly in each State by having two Elderships;" that "the division is not asked for 'because of any unpleasantness existing among us, but because we believe it to be for the advancement of the cause of God.'" The "deficiency" in the support of the ministry was deplored, and each pastor was directed "to call together the officary on his charge once each quarter, for the purpose of obtaining a co-operative understanding and action in this important work." Each pastor was also directed "to appoint two sisters in each church to solicit twenty-five cents from each member for general missionary purposes." There were fifteen fields of labor, of which four were missions, to which the Stationing Committee appointed sixteen pastors. The Eldership Treasurer was continued, John Miller, Jr. The evening previous to the organization the Eldership listened to the Opening Sermon by I. J. Whisinnand, from Ps. cxlix. 4. This session terminated the existence of the organization known as the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, which "from our first organization had the sweetest fellowship, and have at this time"—when the resolution was adopted to petition for a division. The Illinois part went back to the Illinois Eldership, and the balance became the Southern Indiana Eldership.

1st Southern Indiana Eldership.—At the General Eldership held at Findlay, Ohio, in May, 1881, "the request from the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, asking for a division of territory, with a view of creating two Elderships," was favorably acted upon so far as the Indiana portion of the Eldership was concerned. The portion lying in Illinois agreed to consolidate with the Illinois Eldership. Action was taken to create the Southern Indiana Eldership, with boundary lines as previously defined, except that the State line between Illinois and Indiana shall be the western boundary line of the Southern Indiana Eldership. As this was the line agreed upon by the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership in 1880, the action of the General Eldership was entirely satisfactory. Though the Southern Indiana Eldership could not be strictly regarded as a new Eldership, yet it discarded the old ordinal number of the sessions and its Minutes were officially published as "The Journal of the First Annual Meeting of the Southern Indiana Eldership of the Church of God." The announcement of this meeting by the Clerk of the session of the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership of 1881, states that meeting "on October 13, 1881, at Shiloh, Daviess county, Ind.," is "for the purpose of organizing a Southern Indiana Eldership and to transact the usual Eldership business." Seventeen teaching elders resided in the territory of this Eldership, but seven were absent. There were present three ruling elders and nine delegates. The previous evening C. T. McKee preached the Opening Sermon, from Ps. xx. 2. There were in this first organization four circuits and four missions. The election resulted in the choice of S. Timmons for Speaker, and William Buzzard, Clerk. Rules of Order were adopted. The publications of the General Eldership were strongly endorsed. It was affirmed that "a part of the Christian work is to support the ministry." The pastors were directed "to take up collections at different times at the various points for the support of the missionary-at-large of the Eldership." Only two Funds were reported by the Treasurer: Widows', $23.25; General Eldership Contingent, $3.90. The Report on the State of Religion stated that "religion is prospering within our Eldership bounds;" yet "some of the churches are cold and indifferent." The Eldership put itself on record as "opposed to the manufacture and sale of distilled liquors as a beverage, and that we will use our utmost endeavors to prohibit its evil influence on the rising generation." It favored education, but evidently of a very elementary character. Applicants for license must appear in person, and "pass a favorable examination." The death of President Garfield was deeply lamented. S. Simons' death was deplored as a visitation of Providence by the hand of affliction. Sermons were directed to be preached on Sunday-schools by each pastor. The Eldership voted "to create a Fund for Superannuated ministers and their widows." It was "to be called The Widows' Fund," and a "Constitution of the Widows' Fund" was adopted. It was to be a Permanent Fund, secured by the annual payment by all ministers, "and all others who wish to assist in creating this fund," of $1.00.

2nd Southern Indiana Eldership.—Seven fields of labor were represented by one-half of the twelve preachers, with nine delegates, five ruling elders and one exhorter, when the Eldership convened at Union Bethel, Greene county, October 19, 1882. The Opening Sermon was preached the previous evening by E. M. Love, from Acts xxvi. 29. The organization was effected by the choice of I. J. Whisinnand, Speaker, and J. Miller, Clerk. After his Report was adopted, John Miller, Jr., was elected Treasurer. The Speaker, under a motion, appointed C. T. McKee, J. Miller, Jr., and I. J. Whisinnand "to draft a Constitution and By-Laws to govern the Eldership in transacting business." It at once reported. The name, style and title as fixed by the General Eldership was adopted. The object of the "Constitution shall be to secure and promote the mutual welfare of the ministry and churches, and to co-operate in the benevolent, educational and missionary work of the Church." "Licensed ministers, exhorters and ruling elders, with two delegates from each church of God" shall "be members of this Eldership." Duties of officers were defined, times of meetings fixed; provision made for a Standing and Stationing Committees, and their powers defined; requiring transfers to, or from, other Elderships. Applicants for license must present "evidence of, 1. A divine call; 2. Fitness for the office; 3. Qualifications required by the Scriptures, and 4. Ability to teach." The liberal endowment of Findlay College was urged. The Eldership pledged itself to "do all in our lawful power for the submission, and for the prohibition amendment to the State Constitution." A missionary-at-large was provided for "to be supported by each preacher in charge of churches taking up collections in all the churches under his care." The Standing Committee was empowered "to sell the Salem church property in Owen county." Seven appointments were made, of which four were missions, with Whisinnand as General Evangelist.

3rd Southern Indiana Eldership.—As in the previous year only half the teaching elders were present at the session held again at the Union Bethel, beginning October 11, 1883, with five ruling elders and eight delegates. But there were only ten, instead of twelve, teaching elders on the Roll. I. J. Whisinnand delivered the Opening Sermon, from II. Cor. vi. 1. A ballot resulted in the election of A. Miller, Speaker; William Buzzard, Clerk, and J. Miller, Jr., Treasurer. The beginning was made for a Missionary Fund, by directing the pastors "to solicit donations for that purpose, and when such fund amounts to $10.00, to be loaned out, only the interest to be used." A similar provision was made for a Widows' and Superannuated Fund. The "State prohibitory amendment against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage" was endorsed. The education of the ministry was insisted upon because "the Bible is the foundation of all true knowledge;" because "the mind is the window of the soul, and a minister of the gospel must cast the rays of light through that window in order to save the immortal soul," and because "men must be convinced of the error of their ways before they will or can reform." As "the Constitution provides for a Ministerial Association," a committee was appointed "to arrange a program," the Eldership selecting the time and place. The Treasurer reported no missionary money in his hands; Widows' Fund, $23.24; Contingent Fund, $6.45. Each pastor was required "to preach at least one sermon at each appointment during the year on the support of the ministry as taught in the Bible." The sum of $19.50 was "apportioned among the several churches for the Contingent Fund."

4th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The Eldership in 1884 was unusually small, there being present three teaching elders out of the eight on the Roll, and ten ruling elders and delegates, with two exhorters. The Opening Sermon was preached on the evening of October 1st, by C. T. McKee, from Matt. xiii. 3. I. J. Whisinnand was chosen Speaker on the morning of October 2nd; William Buzzard, Clerk, and J. Miller, Jr., Treasurer. "Religion is in a very low condition," was the report of the Committee, "and is not progressing as it should." One name was taken from the Ministerial Roll during the year by death, that of T. T. Miller, "who had long been known as a true follower of Christ." The condition of the treasury indicated improvement, as there was in the Widows' Fund 29.44 1/4; Contingent Fund, $10.05; Home Contingent Fund, $20.00. The Eldership lost one minister, A. Miller, by transfer to Kansas. There were only four fields of labor, one of them a mission, and one, unsupplied, a single school-house appointment. The Greene county circuit had four points; the Daviess and Martin counties, five, "and other places as much as they can," two ministers and an assistant having been assigned to this field. McKee was "to preach at least one sermon at each preaching point in the Eldership during the next Eldership year."

5th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The Southern Indiana Eldership was largely the theater of Mrs. Woodworth's revival labors, in so far as she confined herself within Church limitations. This is in part the explanation of the fact that so large a percentage of the teaching elders of the Eldership were at one time women. But in 1885, when the Eldership convened at Shiloh, Daviess county, Ind., October 22nd, the name of only one is given as having reported. Six of the eleven teaching elders were absent; five ruling elders and eight delegates were present. On the previous evening E. M. Love preached the Opening Sermon, from John iii. 3. I. J. Whisinnand was elected Speaker; William Buzzard, Clerk, and John Miller, Jr., Treasurer. Funds were very limited. There were but $29.44 in the Widows' and Superannuated Fund, and $12.45 in the Contingent Fund. The small assessments of from 25 cents to $1.50 were only "partially complied with." The Eldership pledged itself "to use all our influence in every honorable way to crush the hydra-headed monster of intemperance...the greatest curse of our land." Religion was declared to be "at a very low ebb, and not progressing as it should." The Eldership rejoiced at the prospects of a good institution of learning at Findlay, Ohio, and the brethren were urged "to assist all they can with their means." The Eldership deplored its inability to "aid in carrying forward the foreign missionary work at the present time," as it stood greatly in "need of a missionary at home, and had not the means to put one in the field." One preacher's license was withheld and his "name dropped from the ministers' list" because "he continued to hold, and declared his intention to preach, a doctrine not in harmony with the doctrine of the Bible as received and taught by the Church of God in America." There were three circuits, with six ministers, and one "missionary-at-large." The Eldership decided to hold a Ministerial Association; appointed the time and place; named the minister to "deliver the opening discourse," and appointed a committee on program.

6th Southern Indiana Eldership.—While one teaching elder was added to the number in 1885, and none dismissed, according to the Minutes, there were but ten enrolled in 1886, six of whom were absent. Five ruling elders and seven delegates were in attendance. The Opening Sermon was preached in the Union Bethel, Greene county, on October 6th, by E. M. Love, from Rev. ii. 10. I. J. Whisinnand was chosen for Speaker; John S. Walls for Clerk, and Whisinnand was also elected Treasurer. The state of religion was reported to be "in a prosperous condition throughout the bounds of the Eldership." This seems to be confirmed by the Report of the Stationing Committee, which divided the territory into five fields of labor, one of which was a mission. John S. Walls, later a member of the Illinois Eldership, received license to preach the gospel. While the funds were exceedingly limited, and no missionary money was reported, the Eldership manifested quite an interest in mission work. A special Committee on Missions was appointed, and an hour was set apart to consider its Report. This declared the Eldership's "full sympathy with all the interests of the Church," and expressed a willingness "to do what we can for the upbuilding of God's kingdom and the salvation of souls." But "as an Eldership we are very weak; in dollars and cents we are very poor." But the hope was expressed "that it is not far in the future when we shall be able to do our part" in home and foreign mission work. Much interest was also developed in the Superannuated and Widows' Fund, and ministers were admonished to pay into it "annually the amounts they feel themselves able," and to "present the matter to the churches, and hold collections for the same."

7th Southern Indiana Eldership.—Signs of progress are evident in various directions as the Journal of 1887 is scanned. The place of meeting was the capital of the State, Indianapolis, Marion county, where a church had been organized. There were important accessions to the ministry of the Eldership, as H. H.

Spiber, C. P. Diltz, P. H. Woodworth and Mrs. M. B. Woodworth presented transfers from the Indiana Eldership. Eight out of fifteen applicants for license were ordained to the ministry, among them three sisters. Eight of the fifteen teaching elders enrolled when the Eldership convened were present, with ten ruling elders and twenty-three delegates. During the year the Standing Committee had licensed two, one a sister. The Opening Sermon was delivered on the evening of October 12th, by W. L. Young, from Heb. xiii. 1. He was chosen Speaker; J. S. Walls, Clerk, and I. J. Whisinnand, Treasurer. The Eldership placed itself on record as against the teaching that sanctification is "a second work of grace," but "that it is obtained in a true conversion, and that we attain higher attainments by a growth in grace." The "cause of God in the Eldership" was reported to be "in a prosperous condition," and "prospects for the future very encouraging." A committee to revise the Constitution reported in favor of "President" as the official title of the presiding officer, which the Eldership approved. The Eldership ordered a seal to be procured for the use of the body. It was decided to hold a Sunday-school Convention in June, 1888, and a committee to prepare a program was appointed. There were eleven fields of labor, and as many pastors. The Woodworths were designated as "General Evangelists," and C. P. and Sarah Diltz "evangelists, to labor within the bounds of our Eldership." This apparent distinction was construed by the Woodworths as a license to go beyond the bounds of the Southern Indiana Eldership, and even into the territory of other Elderships, to labor in their capacity as evangelists.

8th Southern Indiana Eldership.—At Anderson, county seat of Madison county, Ind., as at Indianapolis, Mrs. Woodworth was successful in organizing a comparatively large church, which in the Fall of 1887 erected a fine Bethel. Here the Eldership convened October 2, 1888. The previous evening I. J. Whisinnand delivered the Opening Sermon, from I. Tim. iv. 16, who was chosen President, with J. B. Baring, Clerk, and F. M. Bickman, Transcribing Clerk. There were present seventeen ministers, thirteen ruling elders and eighteen delegates; while fourteen ministers were absent. Five new church organizations were reported. Mrs. Woodworth's independent spirit manifested itself before she was a member of the Eldership a year. For in February, 1888, the Standing Committee declared her license forfeited, as well as that of her husband, because "they could not conform to the laws of co-operation of the General Eldership, as found in Article xxix. in the Constitution of said body." This Article simply restrained the members "of one Eldership" from removing "into the territory of another Eldership, or laboring within its territory, without becoming a member of said Eldership and coming under its jurisdiction," a provision which is generally approved by religious bodies. The Woodworths had been holding revival meetings at several points within the territory of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, whose Standing Committee made complaint to the Standing Committee of the Southern Indiana Eldership, which resulted in the above action. This course on the part of the Woodworths was the beginning of trouble and disintegration in the churches organized by them at Indianapolis, Muncie, Anderson and other points. The name of A. P. Stout, pastor at Indianapolis, was "dropped from the ministerial Roll." He came in under Mrs. Woodworth's revival. The license of G. Haines "was revoked for insubordination." The church at Indianapolis was divided, the larger part withdrawing from the Eldership. There was little cohesion in the churches organized by Mrs. Woodworth, and the stability of the converts was proverbially of an inferior order. But the Woodworths sent a letter of apology to the Eldership, which was "accepted," and "they were reinstated as ministers of the Southern Indiana Eldership, and a transfer was granted them." The Eldership made strenuous efforts to raise the amounts of the several General Eldership Funds apportioned to it; but it realized that this was not possible "on account of the impoverished and financially weak condition of the churches." But it adopted a resolution to "organize a Board of Missions," and manifested a zealous and aggressive spirit. It also "instituted an Eldership Contingent Fund, out of which the current expenses of the Eldership shall be paid." The new Board of Missions began work at once, advising "the sisters of each local church of God to organize a Woman's Home Missionary Society, to help to raise missionary money to carry on the work of the Lord in this Eldership." It also appointed a general collecting agent for the Board. There were thirteen appointments made by the Stationing Committee.

9th Southern Indiana Eldership.—A successful revival meeting had been held and a church organized in Louisville, Ky., by Mrs. Woodworth, which, with one organized in Greene county, Ind., was "received and enrolled" when the Eldership convened at Union Bethel, Greene county, October 1, 1889. The previous evening H. H. Spiher delivered the Opening Sermon, from Mark xvi. 15. There were present thirteen teaching elders, nine ruling elders and sixteen delegates. I. J. Whisinnand was made President; and J. S. Walls, Clerk, and Whisinnand, Treasurer. The transfers of P. H. and M. B. Woodworth had not been made use of, as M. B. Woodworth "reported by letter," and her "license was renewed;" but P. H. Woodworth returned his license and resigned his membership, which was "accepted." Trustees for the Eldership were provided for, and Spiher, Love and John Miller, Jr., were elected. Two sisters were granted licenses to preach. The state of religion was reported "to be in a more prosperous condition than heretofore." But finances were low, as the Treasurer reported the receipt of only $10.60 missionary money, and $14.50 contingent. The Superannuated and Widows' Fund had $89.14 to its credit. The Eldership strongly urged "the necessity of our ministers seeking as thorough a knowledge of English Grammar and History (especially Bible History) as possible. As a modification of its former action on Sanctification, the Eldership adopted a resolution, declaring, "that we will, by the help of God, strive as never before to heed the injunction of the Scriptures, 'Be ye holy, for I am holy,' and so separate ourselves from all sin and impurity of heart and life." There were thirteen fields of labor, all but one supplied with pastors.

10th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The Southern Indiana Eldership spent two days prior to its session in 1890, holding the S. S. Convention and Ministerial Association. The three simultaneous meetings were held in the Cross Roads Bethel, in Greene county, the former two on October 14th and 15th, and the latter beginning October 16th. The growth and strength of the churches were gratifying. There were also two new organizations reported; but "some purgings were necessary" in the churches of such heterogeneous elements as were brought together under the Woodworth excitements. The church at Louisville, Ky., "the first organization of the Church on Kentucky soil," was composed of "a few good, noble brethren for the Church of God, straight and sound in an organized church of God in the midst of a great and growing city." H. H. Spiher was appointed pastor of this church, and was also "to work as a general evangelist in the Southern Indiana Eldership." Besides Louisville, Ky., there were twelve fields of labor, all supplied with pastors, including Indianapolis. The Board of Missions of the Eldership "consisted of two sisters and three brethren." The "Macedonian call came from Kentucky," indicating favorable conditions for mission work in that State; but the General Evangelist and pastor of the Louisville church made his headquarters at Muncie, Delaware county, Ind., and could give but little time to Kentucky. J. W. Neely was President of the Eldership; E. M. Love, Secretary. The churches "felt the pressing necessity for more liberal giving to the work" as the demands for more laborers and the widening of the territory forced itself upon them. Hence also "the brethren and sisters holding licenses in the Eldership are recommended to open up new fields of labor."

11th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The same arrangement for holding the S. S. Convention, Ministerial Association and annual session of the Eldership was followed in 1891 as that which was so satisfactory in 1890. The Ministerial Association was held on October 13th; the S. S. Convention, on October 14th, and the Eldership began its session on October 15th. On the evening of October 14th the Opening Sermon was delivered by I. S. Havens. The Ministerial Association discussed five subjects: 1. Bible Justification. 2. Is it the duty of ministers to preach on the support of the ministry? 3. What is the true meaning of Bible Sanctification? 4. What is a church? 5. Does the Bible teach a Trinity in Unity? In addition to making assessments the Missionary and Contingent Funds separately, delinquencies were charged up against churches which failed to pay the full amount assessed the previous year. Correspondence was maintained between the Eldership and the General Baptist Association, and I. J. Whisinnand was designated "to attend their next Association." Several Committees were "appointed to investigate important matters," and report to the Standing Committee. These included the property at Markleville, where "certain expelled members had rented the Bethel to the U. B. church half the time," which was declared "null and void;" charges against a minister who "had invited a certain sister into the stand and gave her liberty to speak, which she did in an unchristian manner;" complaints touching finances and reorganizing the church at Muncie. Other troubles existed at Muncie, "a number of the members acting in insubordination in different ways." It was decided that no man should be considered a member of the Church of God who will not conform to its rulings and the rulings of the Eldership.

12th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The transfer of W. R. Covert to the Southern Indiana Eldership added greatly to its strength, and gave it a man capable of contending with the somewhat abnormal conditions in and surrounding the Eldership. At its session which convened with the church at Union Chapel, Greene county, October 6, 1892, the recognition of this fact by the body became quite clear. He delivered the Opening Sermon on the evening of October 5th. He was made the pastor at Anderson and Muncie, where there was considerable trouble. He was also chosen one of the three ministerial delegates to the General Eldership to convene in 1893. The President of the Eldership was E. M. Love; Clerk, J. Vinson. There were appointments made to ten fields of labor. Two of the appointees were "Eldress Mary A. Shelley," and "Eldress S. A. Diltz." No one was appointed to Louisville, Ky. "The saloon traffic," the Eldership declared to be "a moral, mental, physical, social, financial and political curse." "No Christian should vote to legalize the saloon traffic." The "members of the Church of God" were urged "to use all their intellectual, moral, financial and political power to suppress this great evil."

13th Southern Indiana Eldership.—Financially the Southern Indiana Eldership was weak, as the Report of its Treasurer showed as made some time after its session in 1893. But it paid its assessments for missionary purposes to the General Eldership. It seemed to lack not only in liberality, but in methods and energy. The assessments were indifferently paid, so that in 1893 thirteen out of the nineteen churches were delinquent. The aggregate assessments for all the churches was $56.00 for Contingent Fund, and $112.00 for Mission Fund. The Eldership session was held at Curtisville, Tipton county, beginning October 20th. E. M. Love delivered the Opening Sermon on the previous evening. Twelve of the twenty-six ministers were present, nine ruling elders and delegates and two exhorters. And the names of two ministers "were dropped from the Eldership Roll," while that of one was added, who had been a Methodist. E. M. Love was chosen President; J. Vinson, Clerk, and I. J. Whisinnand, Treasurer. Indirectly the "second-work Sanctification" theory was condemned by dropping the name of one minister "on account of his second-workism." To work up one or two Eldership Sunday-school Conventions two ministers were appointed. The death of Joseph G. Laughlin, a man ennobled more by nature than by study, was deeply felt by the Eldership. He became a member of the body in 1864, and served it efficiently in various capacities. There were eleven fields of labor, one being in St. Louis, Mo., to which H. H. Spither was appointed. None of the licensed sisters was made pastor at this Eldership.

14th Southern Indiana Eldership.—Efficient work was done by pastors during the Eldership year 1893-4. The newly-organized churches at Fairview, Howesville and Fairland were represented at the session of 1894. Other evidences of progress were not wanting. The session was held in the Shiloh Bethel, Daviess county, and was opened October 11th. The Annual Sermon was preached by I. J. Whisinnand the previous evening. Thirteen ministers were present, and eleven absent, with seven ruling elders, ten delegates and four of the six exhorters. E. M. Love and J. Vinson were elected President and Clerk respectively. "The traffic in intoxicating beverages," the Eldership declared, "we condemn in unmeasured terms as an indirect traffic in the souls of men." "A growing interest in Church work throughout the Eldership" was reported, as indicated "in a great gathering of souls into the Church, and great energy and interest manifested." One minister, Jacob B. Seneff, was removed by death during the year. The character and services of the deceased were such as to make his death a great loss to the body. The Eldership voted in favor of changing "Church" to "Churches" in the titles of Elderships. The churches were requested to deed Bethels and parsonages to be built hereafter to the trustees of the Eldership, which were "authorized to receive and hold in trust all deeds, mortgages and bequests, and moneys coming into their possession, subject to the orders of the Southern Indiana Eldership. "The Muncie church property was ordered deeded to the mortgagee" "in consideration of his mortgage, expenses and costs." The appointments numbered eight, and there were three ministers appointed "to labor as General Evangelists in the bounds of this Eldership."

15th Southern Indiana Eldership.—As the fifteenth Southern Indiana Eldership was held within seven months of the meeting of the General Eldership, the question of changing the place of meeting of the latter body was extensively discussed. The Executive Board had changed the place from Muncie, Ind., to Harrisburg, Pa., which gave serious umbrage to at least the Southern Indiana Eldership. The right of the Executive Board to make such a change was called in question; the fact that the Southern Indiana Eldership did not ask for the change was urged, and the offer to have Anderson substituted for Muncie was also set forth as reasons why the Board should "reconsider its late action, and have the General Eldership meet at Anderson." Reasons, too, which received no official recognition were evidently exercising quite an influence in making the change. The Eldership held its session at Anderson, Madison county, beginning with the Opening Sermon on the evening of October 9, 1895, by J. W. Neely. Nineteen ministers were present, and thirteen absent; five ruling elders and eight delegates. Two of the delegates were women, and six of the ministers. The officers elected were President, J. W. Neely; Clerk, O. E. Smiley; Assistant Clerk, John Vinson, and Treasurer, James Groenendyke. The Constitution was amended so that the Stationing Committee would consist of "five members of the Eldership" instead of "two ministers and three delegates." The state of religion was "reasonably fair," and "the cause of Christ was onward." There was, however, a good deal of disputation in the Eldership and in some of the churches. In a few instances "certain persons intruded themselves into pulpits" and sowed seeds of discord. Conflict of authority in the local churches was set straight by an action which decided that "the ruling of the local churches of God is in the hands of the pastors, elders and deacons." The evils of the second-work sanctification doctrine were manifested in the schisms which resulted, so that the Eldership condemned the practice of holding "so-called cottage prayer-meetings, which are often led by dissatisfied members, and especially by the so-called 'Come-Outers,' and those holding the doctrine of sanctification as a second work." This doctrine was repudiated. "All their intellectual, moral, social and political powers" were to be used by "the members of the church of God of this Eldership to suppress and prohibit the liquor traffic." Mrs. Woodworth offered "to place the church of God members at St. Louis (not the bethel) into," the Southern Indiana Eldership. They were received. The second-work doctrine was also creating trouble in said church. H. H. Spither was appointed pastor of this church, against whom "grievances were presented by certain complainers who believe in, and advocate, the doctrine of second-work sanctification." There were eleven fields of labor. The delegates to the General Eldership were "instructed in favor of the system of annual renewal of preachers' licenses."

16th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The year following the Eldership of 1895 was one of a good deal of disquietude, discord and contention, perhaps insinuated in the notice of the meeting of the Eldership in 1896 in which it was stated that "the Opening Sermon would be preached by W. R. Covert from the words: 'Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say, John xii. 27.'" The St. Louis church also petitioned the Standing Committee to change the place of the meeting of the Eldership to some other church. Serious charges were filed before the Committee against four of the ministers, and against one of the churches. Insubordination, disloyalty, creating dissensions, falsifying, duplicity, licentiousness, vulgarity and infidelity were among the counts in the indictments. There were also actions of the Eldership which by implication revealed the abnormal condition in which the body found itself, and that notwithstanding the report on the state of religion, which declared a "gain in membership, and a marked improvement in spirituality." The Eldership disapproved of any minister "in any way or manner, either directly or indirectly, working against any pastor in charge of a field of labor, or at any of his preaching places, or in any way injures the influence of a pastor among the brethren, or before the public." Any one guilty of such action was to be deprived of his license. The Eldership was financially embarrassed, and "three or four churches houses" were in danger of being lost to the Eldership. The right to discipline a whole church was asserted on the ground that, "according to the Constitution of the Eldership, 'all elders are members,' and are thus 'put under the jurisdiction of the Eldership,' which in case of insubordination has a 'right to administer its local matters.'" In the exercise of this power representation was to be denied to any church "until its assessments are first paid in full." The "old church of God at Indianapolis" was reported extinct. The Markleville church had only three members left, and three others were extinct.

The session was held at Walnut Grove, Greene county, beginning October 15, 1896. It was presided over by I. J. Whisinnand, President; with John Vinson as Clerk, and James Groenendyke, Treasurer. Fourteen of the twenty-seven ministers were absent; there were present eighteen ruling elders and delegates, while six exhorters were absent. Assessments were made for the Contingent and Missionary Funds, but the amounts were quite small, aggregating $70.00 for both Funds. Each minister was also required to pay "$1.00 into what shall be known as the Superannuated Ministers' and Widows' Fund. Churches were advised to form Young People's Societies, and missionary societies, and collect funds for home and foreign missions. There were eleven fields of labor.

17th Southern Indiana Eldership.—Neither the General Eldership nor any Annual Eldership at any time came to the point of a deliberate consideration of a mutual union with any other religious organization; several annual Elderships held negotiations with ecclesiastical bodies which manifested a disposition to unite with them. Propositions of this character were canvassed by certain churches in Indiana during the Summer of 1897. They reached a practical point by September, so that when the Southern Indiana Eldership met at Greensburg, Decatur county, September 22nd, an official communication was on hand from a minister "of another Church of God outside the Eldership" containing overtures looking toward union. Initiatory steps were taken, after the Eldership was organized by the election of H. H. Spiher, President; C. P. Diltz, Clerk, by accepting "the friendly invitation of Elder M. A. Hughes to send delegates to the Church of God which meets in conference at Sitka, Ind., October 6-8th, as requested by that body." H. H. Spiher and J. W. Neely were the delegates. Twelve of the twenty-six teaching elders were present; three ruling elders and six delegates, and one of the five exhorters. Mrs. Woodworth's activity as an evangelist outside of the Eldership having been officially criticised, the Eldership freed itself of responsibility by declaring that her license gave her no such privilege. Expressing high esteem for her, she was asked to devote more time "in the bounds of our own Eldership." The Eldership took serious exception to the action of the Board of Missions making appropriations to any point within its bounds conditional upon the "withdrawal of all official relations from Mrs. Woodworth." It not only refused to do so, but demanded charges against her. The Muncie church property having been sold, a loan was asked of the Executive Board of the General Eldership to redeem it. This was not agreed to by the Board because its terms were not complied with. The Treasurer's total receipts were $115.35. Groenendyke was re-elected Treasurer. The stringent resolutions of 1896 against delinquencies bore fruit, as but one church was in arrears on its assessments. The Standing Committee was charged with the duty of revising the Constitution. There were ten appointments, which included St. Louis, Mo., and Indianapolis.

18th Southern Indiana Eldership.—E. M. Love attended the Conference of the Church of God at Sitka, White county, Ind., October 6, 1897, in lieu of H. H. Spiher. The body was organized about 1850, and at this time numbered about one thousand. Their faith and practices were about identical with those of the Eldership. Their church houses numbered ten, with an interest in a few others. They discussed the question: "Would it be profitable for us to unite with the Church of God?" A committee was appointed to meet a similar committee of the Eldership. The Minutes of their Annual Conference at Sitka were forwarded for publication in The Advocate. A resume of their beliefs was also published January 19, 1898, over the signatures of a committee of five ministers. They were reported to the Eldership in 1898 as "expressing a desire to unite with us as a body." But there the matter rested so far as both the Eldership and the Conference were concerned, except that J. Vinson of the former attended the Conference and became "an ordained minister of this Conference." The annual Minutes of the Eldership and Conference were published together in pamphlet form. The session of the Eldership was held at Fairview Bethel, Clay county, and opened on September 29, 1898, the sermon having been preached on the previous evening, by H. H. Spiher, from Eph. v. 27. Theme: "A Glorious Church." There were ten of the twenty-five ministers present, and ten ruling elders and delegates. H. H. Spiher was chosen President; C. P. Diltz, Clerk, and also Financial Clerk, and bonded in the sum of $500.00, and James Groenendyke, Treasurer, who was also required to give bond in the sum of $500.00. The names of four "ministers were dropped from the Ministerial Roll." The amended Constitution was "debated and passed upon." The membership of the Eldership shall consist of "the licensed ministers, and two ruling elders from each church who shall be designated by the church having fifty members or less; also one ruling elder from each church for every hundred members, or major fraction thereof, over fifty." In the absence of elders "other members selected by the church as alternates may fill their seats." A Board of Missions, a Board of Education, and a Board of Church Extension are provided for. The Eldership "sustained a great loss "in the death of J. W. Neely. He was "an able expounder of the doctrine of the Church of God, an able counselor, a true friend of all good men, a special friend of young ministers, and one always willing to sacrifice that the cause of Christ might be built up." Thale's idea seems to have been exemplified in him: "We can live most justly and honestly if we do not act ourselves what we reprehend in others." There were eleven charges, and Arthur Barnett, licentiate, was "to do missionary work in St. Louis under the supervision of the pastor of the First Church of God in the city."

19th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The number of ministers of the Southern Indiana Eldership at its nineteenth session was twenty-six, of which five were women. The strained relations between Mrs. Woodworth and the Eldership are seen in the placing of "her license in the hands of the Standing Committee until she consents to work more in the bounds of this Eldership, or takes her transfer to the Eldership where she expects to labor most in the future." Also in another action "discountenancing physical healing and phenomena as not being the fruits of the Holy Spirit." The session was held with the church at Shiloh Bethel, Daviess county, beginning October 12, 1899. H. H. Spiher preached the Opening Sermon the previous evening. He was chosen President; R. M. Pine, Clerk; G. W. Miller, Financial Clerk, and James Groenendyke, Treasurer. Spiher and Groenendyke, by invitation, went to Idaville, December 20, 1898, "to compare points of government and doctrine with some brethren who are known as the Church of God," but no conclusions touching union were reached. The church property at Anderson was sold for $1,200.00, amount of debt, subject to redemption within three years, the church to hold "joint possession with a certain Industrial school." It was ordered that "a committee be appointed to frame a written form of what we believe to be a scriptural form of church government for the government of local churches." The Board of Education was "instructed to outline a course of studies to be pursued by those desiring to enter the ministry." W. R. Covert was appointed "to bear the kindly greetings of the Eldership to the General Baptist Association to be held at Winslow, Pike county, Ind. Greetings from said Association were delivered to the Eldership by ——— Manners. It was claimed that the value of Church property owned by the Eldership aggregated $6,500.00; by local churches, $13,725.00; that there were fourteen Bethels, seventeen churches; membership, 1,025; pastors' salaries, $1,196.38. Seven appointments were supplied with pastors.

20th Southern Indiana Eldership.—The President of Findlay College, C. Manchester, and the Financial Agent of the College, attended the twentieth session of the Southern Indiana Eldership with the purpose of developing a deeper interest in the College. They succeeded in "enlightening some in regard to the magnitude of the work and its necessity in order to the preparation and prosperity of the churches." The session was held at Union Valley Bethel, Greene county, beginning October 4, 1900. The officers elected were W. R. Covert, President; R. M. Pine, Clerk. Quite a number of ministers were absent, some because of age and infirmities, and others because of indifference. One of the "most important items of business transacted was a slight change in the Constitution, closing the door against isms, and not allowing parties to put their own construction upon the law, thus enabling the Eldership to guard the interests of the churches more securely against intruders." "Incorrect statements and false representations" had been put in circulation against some members of the Eldership. These were corrected so as "to redound to the good of the churches." The number of fields of labor was nine, all but one supplied; but "the Report of the Committee caused some friction," as the assignments were not all "satisfactory to the churches and communities in the southern part of the Eldership territory."

21st Southern Indiana Eldership.—An important addition to the Eldership was made during the year 1900-1, when the church at Idaville, White county, decided to cast its lot with the Eldership of the churches of God. At the session held at Shiloh, Daviess county, opening on September 26, 1901, said church "was admitted to membership, and the delegates given seats." It was at this time the strongest and most influential church in the Eldership. The Opening Sermon was preached by W. R. Covert, the theme being, "Christ the Only Foundation." H. H. Spiher was elected President; R. M. Pine, Clerk; G. W. Miller, Financial Clerk, and James Groenendyke, Treasurer. It was a session exceeding many former ones in "the interest manifested on the part of ministers and delegates." The Eldership made an effort "to raise the standard of education" by adopting a Course of Studies, and requiring all who "desire Certificates of Ordination to pass the four years' course of reading and study." The motive submitted for "all Christians to use their influence to do away with the use of, and traffic in, intoxicating liquors," and to "cast their votes against the traffic," was that such use and traffic "are detrimental to the cause of Christ, and to the success of his church." "A more liberal spirit manifested by the churches" encouraged the pastors in entering on their fields for the coming year. There were twenty-one preaching points named on the nine fields of labor, two being in St. Louis, Mo. J. W. Cornell was appointed General Evangelist. W. R. Covert was the first pastor of the church at Idaville.

22nd Southern Indiana Eldership.—The church at Idaville had the distinction of entertaining the General Eldership in 1902. But the Southern Indiana Eldership met at Cross Roads Bethel, Tulip P. O., Greene county, and began its session October 16, 1902. The Opening Sermon was preached by W. R. Covert, who "took for his theme, 'The Church of God Composed of those whose names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life.'" It was combative throughout, and vigorously attacked the fallacy of a vision distorted by passion known as "the infallibility of Elderships." Covert had lived for some years in an atmosphere of controversy, and was strong in the defense of truth as he saw it, or in assaults on what to him were errors. A more moderate temperament, it was believed, would have enhanced his power as a disputant. The "Official Reporter" of the session states, that "the sermon was well received, and 'co-operation' was the keynote of the Eldership." This was evidenced by sundry actions, among them the appointment of Mrs. May S. Bloyd, with Mrs. Nettie Spiher, and Miss Della Jewell as Assistants, "Eldership organizers of Woman's Missionary Societies." Also the policy adopted which relegated to the past "the doctrine taught many years ago that it was wrong for a minister to receive a salary." A better financial policy was adopted, which Covert called a "common sense and scriptural plan of finance." A Church Extension Fund was also provided for "to save our property held in trust by the Eldership." In effecting an organization H. H. Spiher was chosen President; James Cornell, Clerk; I. V. Stalcup, Assistant Clerk; Henry Ireland, Treasurer. Resolutions were adopted, stating that the Eldership does "not approve of the taking of the money by the Treasurer of the Board of Missions" of the General Eldership, "which was in the treasury of the W. G. M. S., and suggesting its 'return back to said W. G. M. S.'" And also, because "the abuse of a good thing is not an argument against the good thing." The "sisters of the churches of the Eldership" were "urged to at once commence work and the organization of missionary societies," so that two delegates might be appointed to attend the Convention to meet in June, 1903, "to form a general society, as per action of the General Eldership." The "locating and erecting of a fine academy building in a central place for the churches of God of our Eldership" was approved. This was to be a place "for holding an annual camp-meeting and a Chautauqua." Covert was appointed as "promoter to see if such a plan can be carried out."

23rd Southern Indiana Eldership.—The Idaville church, White county, being within the boundaries of the Indiana Eldership, with forecasts of other churches of the "White River Conference of the Church of God" coming over, probably hastened negotiations for the union of the two Indiana Elderships. On July 29, 1903, announcement was made of a meeting of the Standing Committee of the Southern Indiana Eldership at Idaville, on August 13th, and inviting "the Standing Committee of the Indiana Eldership to meet with us in joint session." The Chairman of the Indiana Eldership Standing Committee issued a notice simultaneously, calling a meeting at the Johnston Hotel, Logansport, Cass county, adjoining White county on the East. This notice stated the object of "the joint session of the two Committees at Idaville" to be "to consult with reference to uniting the two Elderships." This joint session was held on the date published, and after "a free and open discussion" the union was agreed to, and was to be effected by the ministers of the Southern Indiana Eldership uniting with the Indiana Eldership, and the trustees of the Southern Indiana Eldership transferring the property held by them to the Indiana Eldership. The former Eldership was to "surrender its State Charter and return its ecclesiastical Charter to the General Eldership." This action, however, did not preclude the annual session of the Eldership in 1903. It therefore convened, as per adjournment, at Shiloh, Daviess county, September 22nd. The Annual Sermon was delivered by I. V. Stalcup. The officers chosen were W. R. Covert, President; R. M. Pine, Clerk; G. W. Miller, Financial Clerk; Henry Ireland, Treasurer. It was evident that new life and energy had been infused into the body, and a determination was evinced "on the part of the churches and ministers to keep up with the times." After appointing the ministers to the different fields of labor, six in number, and adopting resolutions on the missionary and other interests, the question of "uniting with the Indiana Eldership as a whole" was taken up. "After mature deliberation and strong discussion, it was unanimously agreed to, on certain conditions." The Eldership consisted of twenty-seven teaching elders, of whom fifteen were absent; six ruling elders, and eleven delegates. Two women were enrolled as teaching elders, and six as delegates. One Transfer for all the ministers was signed by the President and Clerk of the Eldership, and a certified list of ruling elders and delegates. These were at once carried to the Indiana Eldership in session at Sugar Grove, Noble county, and after considerable discussion were accepted, and conditions agreed to, and the two Elderships were one.

XII. THE KANSAS AND MISSOURI ELDERSHIP.

1st Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—The last Eldership was formed fourteen years ago, in 1857, and yet quite an amount of Church extension work was done during these years. Emigrants had been going into Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. In some instances colonies of Church families had located in different counties, constituting centers for Church work. These called for preachers, and several had responded as early as 1865. The territory in south-western Missouri and south-eastern Kansas was at quite a distance from the territory of any organized Eldership. The ministers were from the West Ohio Eldership, the Indiana, the Southern Indiana, the Iowa, the West Pennsylvania and the East Pennsylvania, as well as one from the Texas Eldership, all without any official bond of unity except that some of them were in the employ of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. The work prospered reasonably well, and the prospects in both States, Missouri and Kansas, were hopeful and encouraging. These brethren and ministers felt the need of closer association and of a governing body in their midst. Consequently, but whether through their initiative or not can not now be known, at the General Eldership at Decatur, Ill., in 1866, on motion, "the brethren in Kansas were authorized to form themselves into an Eldership, if they deem it practicable." But no action was taken, nor was the matter agitated until toward the Fall of 1871, when C. B. Konkel and D. Keplinger and a few others began to urge the organization of the Eldership. There was some opposition, partly on the ground that the territory was claimed to be under the jurisdiction of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, and said Board, it was apprehended, might withdraw its support, and go elsewhere. Besides, Iowa Eldership had taken up the work in the northern part of the State. Nor was it a settled question whether the permission granted to organized an Eldership in 1866 had not lapsed with the General Eldership session of 1869. Hence the further inquiry as to whether the brethren who were leading in the movement were "not too fast." Keplinger, "who has taken the lead in the matter," took the precaution to communicate with R. H. Bolton and other members of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, received encouragement enough to urge the organization in 1871, instead of waiting until after the General Eldership of 1872. He thought, for some unexplained reason, that "we will be losers by deferment," and hence, wrote Bolton in October, 1871, he "proposes to organize this Fall." Bolton recalled the General Eldership action of 1866, and assumed that it has full force. An appeal to the Editor of The Church Advocate elicited a reply in which it was stated that the General Eldership in 1866 had "given them right to organize themselves into an Eldership when they deemed it expedient to do so. That right they still have." The Editor also stated that "the occupying of part of Missouri by the Iowa Eldership did not determine the question of boundary." Thus the objections having been answered, the brethren seemed a unit in favor of the immediate organization of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership. Accordingly a meeting of ministers and ruling elders and delegates was called at the Keplinger school-house, Crawford county, Kas., being on the Missouri State line, the second county north of the Oklahoma State line, for November 13, 1871. At this time there were nine organized churches within the territory to be included in the boundaries of the proposed Eldership, of which seven were in Missouri and two in south-eastern Kansas, and seven preachers. On Sabbath, November 12th, there were preaching services, and on Monday morning they met for business. The following resolution was submitted, discussed and adopted: "Resolved, That it is expedient that we form ourselves into an Eldership capacity, thereby enabling us to have some kind of co-operation system among ourselves." An enrollment was made to "ascertain who will become members of this body," when "the following presented themselves: Teaching elders:—D. Keplinger, C. B. Konkkel, W. Shipman, Wm. Konkkel and J. C. Cunningham. Ruling elders:—D. Gross, Wm. C. Ruth and A. Whisler. Delegates:—H. S. Berkstresser, T. J. Stephens, S. J. Konkkel, A.

D. Keplinger.

J. Davidson, J. B. Killing and T. R. Funk." S. V. Sterner and D. Blakely were absent, the latter on account of illness; but both were represented by letters, expressing their intention to become members of the Eldership, and they were enrolled as members. "D. Keplinger was appointed Speaker by ballot," and C. B. Konkkel, Clerk. Rules of Order were adopted, identical with those of the Iowa Eldership. Committees were appointed by the Speaker on Arrangements, Overtures, State of Religion, License, Finance and Resolutions. The Eldership elected a Standing Committee of three, and a Stationing Committee of three. Thomas Stephens made application for license to preach, but "he was recommended to improve his talents another year." A delegate was elected to the General Eldership in 1872, and was "instructed to use his influence to have the General Eldership give us all the territory south of the Missouri River." Provision was made for an Opening Sermon at the next Eldership. On temperance the Eldership declared that "the use of ardent spirits is a great moral evil," and that "we will countenance all lawful means for the suppression of this great evil in our land." It "recommended and encouraged the organization of Sabbath-schools throughout the bounds of the Eldership." It appointed delegates to attend "Sabbath-school Conventions in Crawford and adjoining counties." Ministers from other parts of the country" were earnestly invited "to come and join in with us in carrying on the glorious cause of religion." The periodicals of the General Eldership were strongly approved. The delegate to the General Eldership was "instructed by his influence and vote to have established by the General Eldership a 'Tract Fund,' to publish tracts, books and pamphlets in the interest of the Church of God." The Stationing Committee created the circuits of Leavenworth county, Kas.; Bourbon and Linn counties, Kas.; Montgomery, Wilson and Allen counties, Kas.; Crawford county, Kas., while Blakely and Sterner were to labor among the churches in Missouri.

David Keplinger was a native of Virginia, born September 1, 1823, and died at the Soldiers' Home in California, November 13, 1907, aged 84 years, 2 months and 13 days. He was ordained to the ministry by the Ohio Eldership, in 1849. He became identified with the Indiana Eldership, in which he labored until June, 1852, when he removed to Wells county, Ind., and became a member of the Indiana Eldership on November 1st, of that year. He soon became a prominent member of this Eldership, a successful missionary and an indefatigable worker. He presided over the Eldership as Speaker in 1853, 1854 and 1855. He traveled some very large circuits, one of them, in 1854, was "450 miles around." At the Indiana Eldership in 1867 he was among the absentees. He reported by letter, stating that on October 3, 1866, he left for Missouri, locating in Jackson county. Thence he removed to Crawford county, Kas. He continued to labor in Missouri and Kansas until he removed to California, where he still did considerable preaching, and reported annually to his Eldership up to 1907. He was remembered by his Eldership "as the one great helper in the cause of the Master." It regarded him as "our beloved brother whom Providence has called to the home above." He was pronounced "faithful to the Kansas Eldership, of which he was a charter member, also faithful to his fellow men and to the God he so fondly loved." Of limited education, his strength lay in his natural talents and the nobility of his character and fulness of his consecration.

2nd Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—The territory of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, as claimed according to actions of the Stationing Committee was exceptionally large, including the two States. Appointments were made to the counties in the extreme north-eastern and south-eastern counties of Kansas, and the south-western and north-western and central counties of Missouri, while the Iowa Eldership was requested to supply Peakville, in the north-eastern corner of the State. Hence, there was "a lack of active workers to supply the demand" at the second Eldership. The ministers and delegates assembled at the Frederick school-house, Cass county, Mo., some twenty-five miles south of Kansas City, Mo. There were eight teaching elders present, and R. H. Bolton, who was made a member of the body during the session; two ruling elders and three delegates. D. Blakely was chosen Speaker, and C. B. Konkell, Clerk. "The ground occupied by this Eldership," the Committee on Resolutions said, "properly speaking, is a missionary field," and hence the Eldership looked for continued and liberal aid from the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. It rejoiced over "past success," and exhorted ministers and churches "to take courage to labor more zealously in the future." More missionaries were asked for the "inviting fields yet among us." Quarterly ordinance meetings were recommended. It was suggested to the Standing Committee "to appoint at least one camp-meeting to be held during this year." The Eldership was deeply touched by the death of Domer, from whose Eldership D. Blakely came, and expressed the sense of its "loss of a truly good and great man, whose brilliant career in the active ministry has not only won for himself honor due the ministry, but endeared him to the body." Nine fields of labor were created, in addition to Peakville, which were to be served by twelve ministers. In the Crawford county circuit was included Fort Scott mission, county seat of Bourbon county. Each preacher was required "to lift a missionary collection from each church on his charge." And also "raise a public collection for Eldership contingencies." The prospects for "the future growth and prosperity of the Eldership" were reported "flattering," and "if all workers do their part, a good and glorious success may be reported the following year." A committee "to draft a system of co-operation," which was adopted, "reported that of the East Pennsylvania Eldership in part, and in part that of the Iowa Eldership."

3rd Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—The Eldership in 1872, desiring "to meet further north so as to afford a favorable opportunity for the ministers and churches in northern Missouri and Kansas to attend," selected the Keystone Settiement, Clinton county, Mo., as the place of holding its session in 1873. But there was some disappointment, as seven of the ministers were absent when, on Tuesday, October 2nd, the Eldership convened. There were, however, several accessions, as George Thomas and C. S. Bolton handed in their transfers. R. H. Bolton, being present and "received as a member of this body during its session," was elected "Chairman;" C. S. Bolton, Clerk, and J. C. Ozias, Treasurer. There were present eight ruling elders and four delegates. Two very important items of business, of which the Boltons doubtless deserve the credit, were brought before the Eldership. R. H. Bolton, George Thomas and D. Blakely were named as a committee to "draft a Constitution for missionary purposes." They reported at a missionary meeting the full draft of a Constitution of what was called "The Missionary Aid Society of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership." The payment of twenty cents made a person a member for one year; ten dollars, a life member, or a subscription of $10.00, with payment of interest, and the principal at death, and $100.00 on the same conditions, "an honorary life member." The money thus received was to be exclusively appropriated for mission work. The amount of $300.00 was at once subscribed. A "Constitution of the Superannuated and Widows' Fund" was also adopted and the money thus secured was to be used "to maintain superannuated and disabled ministers in good standing, and the widows and children of ministers." By some means the Report of the Stationing Committee reduced the circuits to six.

4th Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—In 1874 the Eldership returned to near the boundary line between the two States, meeting at Pleasant Hill, Cass county, Mo., about ten miles south-east of Kansas City, on October 5th. J. Moreland preached the Opening Sermon the previous evening. Nine teaching elders were present, five ruling elders and three delegates. C. S. Bolton was elected Speaker; D. Blakely, Clerk, and J. C. Ozias, Treasurer. The error made by the first Eldership in receiving "J. E. Cunningham somewhat irregularly, he being a member of the Texas Eldership," which "had been rejected by the General Eldership," was corrected, "by voting him a member of this Eldership, and granting him a license." The Book Depository at Harrisburg, Pa., was "hailed with joy." The delegates to the General Eldership were instructed to use their influence to have the ratio of representation in the General Eldership changed to one in every fifteen. The Eldership resolved that "the scriptural ruling power of each individual church is vested in the ruling elders thereof." Some difficulties having grown out of ministers trespassing on each other's territory, such acts were strictly forbidden. The moral reason for abstaining from the use of intoxicants as a beverage were strongly set forth. Young men contemplating the Christian ministry were advised to "avail themselves of the educational advantages offered so freely on every hand." Cass county was considered "the center of our Eldership;" and as it was not able to support a minister, but "ought to be sustained," the Eldership made an appropriation of $50.00 "for the support of a preacher the coming year." The Eldership as a committee of the whole stationed the preachers on five circuits, three in Kansas and two in Missouri. The "news of the prosperity of our beloved Zion" was "not as cheering as we could wish," or as was predicted; yet the Eldership rejoiced "to know that numbers have been converted and some churches organized in our Eldership bounds during the past year."

5th Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—Even in so young and small a body as the Kansas and Missouri Eldership was at this time, it had its troubles. There was a radical difference of sentiment on the Keystone and Caldwell circuit, which the Eldership concluded could only be adjusted by a division of the field. The Stationing Committee with unaffected artlessness thought "the whole circuit required more piety." Then a spirit of "electioneering" seems to have possessed the representatives of circuits, which the Eldership declared that it "stoutly condemned, as calculated to anticipate and supercede the work of the Eldership." The Eldership convened at Center View, Cass county, Mo., October 7, 1875. The officers chosen were C. B. Konkell, Speaker; S. D. C. Jackson, Clerk, and H. S. Berkstresser, Treasurer. There were nine ministers in attendance. John Coulum, a young Englishman, was ordained. As a tendency toward congregationalism in the local churches manifested itself, the Eldership called "the attention of the churches to a strict recognition, both in theory and practice, of the scriptural investiture of the Eldership with the supervision and rule of God's church, in contradistinction to the unauthorized principle of congregationalism." In a strong resolution the body disapproved of "any teaching elder to subordinate his services in the Church to his secular interests, so as only to accept such appointments as lie contiguous to his farm or place of business, or so circumstance himself as to necessitate the residence of his family many miles from his scene of activity. Such as are called, health and opportunity allowing, should be 'wholly given to the ministry.' "

6th Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—Of the fifteen teaching elders seven were present at the organization of the sixth session of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership which convened at Polo, Caldwell county, Mo., October 5, 1876. Eight ruling elders were present. The Eldership was organized by the election of C. B. Konkell, Speaker; D. Blakely, Clerk, and D. Keplinger, Treasurer. "Intemperate use of all things" was condemned, and the Eldership filed its "utter protest against the use as a beverage of all intoxicating drinks." The written report sent in by the aged Wm. Konkell, "probably his last report," made a deep impression on the body, and was spread on the Journal in full. He expressed the fear that many ministers were "not teaching genuine conversion, or heartfelt religion. Hence, we see so many spiritual declensions in the churches." "I have mourned to see ministers and churches so indifferent in regard to the kind of material used in establishing churches." Finding more pressing needs for all their funds in support of pastors, it was agreed to "set aside our Home Mission and Widows' Fund Society until such time as our financial circumstances will justify us in taking them up." But the Eldership was careful to preserve inviolate a one hundred dollar trust fund donated to this Society. The Stationing Committee reported eight fields of labor, two of them being in Kansas, in Crawford and Wilson counties. Peaksville appointment in the extreme north-eastern corner of the State was cared for by the Iowa Eldership. The Eldership manifested a spirit of loyalty to the General Eldership; approved and commended its publications, and expressed its willingness to bear its part of all the common burdens.

7th Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—During the year the Eldership lost several of its strongest members by removal. C. S. Bolton went to the Nebraska Eldership. John P. Coulum returned to England, and was "appointed missionary," and S. D. C. Jackson was transferred to the Illinois Eldership. In the way of accessions were G. R. Kinzey, of the Iowa Eldership; W. C. Peters, of the Ohio Eldership, and Evan Wilson and Clara Yutzy licentiates. The Eldership assembled with the church at Frost's school-house, De Kalb county, Mo., October 4, 1877. The previous evening the Opening Sermon was delivered by D. Blakely, from Matt. xxviii. 19, 20. D. Keplinger was chosen Speaker; S. A. Wagner, Clerk, and C. B. Konkell, Treasurer. The ministers were all strongly advised "to apply themselves closely to study, keeping pace with the age of advancement in which we live." But it was believed that in addition, "a course of studies should be fixed by the Eldership for all ministers of the body," and that "a committee of three be chosen annually to examine all ministers of the body in such branches as may have been assigned them by the previous Eldership." The renewals of licenses was made dependent on passing in these studies. During the year five new churches were organized, and one disorganized. An effort was made to minimize the evil influence resulting "from preachers either neglecting or deserting the work assigned them," by rendering them liable to the censure of the Eldership. The anticipated death of Wm. Konkell occurred "perhaps at the very time his report, a year ago, which will not soon be forgotten," was being read, and was lamented with genuine sorrow. He was "a noble father in Israel, whose wise counsels yet speak." Every licensed preacher was requested "to canvass the membership and take a collection at each preaching point" for the General Eldership Missionary Fund. The Stationing Committee made nine fields of labor, three of them being missions.

8th Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—Returning to Kansas, the eighth annual session was held at the Keplinger school-house, Crawford county, beginning October 10, 1878. D. Blakely delivered the Opening Sermon the previous evening, from Ps. lxxviii. 11—The Word and its publishers. There were eight teaching elders present, and one delegate. Balloting resulted in the election of C. B. Konkell, Speaker; C. S. Bolton, Clerk, and P. Heflinger, Treasurer. A judicial trial had found one minister guilty of "contempt of Committee," and "untruthfulness;" but acknowledgments were accepted, and the offending member restored. Letters to the Eldership were declared unauthentic unless the names of the ruling elders were attached thereto. The movement to make a course of studies effective bore fruit, as the ministers in the course were examined in English Grammar, Church History, Ancient History and Geography. An overture was adopted to the Iowa Eldership, providing that the work in Page county, Iowa, be taken over by the Kansas and Missouri Eldership in exchange for the Peaksville circuit. The second-work sanctification theory had been preached at some points in Missouri; but the Eldership declared that "we entertain no fears in relation to the evil effects of the error of the second blessing doctrine, clothed in a false garb, giving it a Bible cast." On the subject of temperance the deliverance of the Eldership was in harmony with its doctrine of "moderation in all things, the rightful use of all things essential to our well being." It defined "regeneration" to be a radical change in the inner man, twofold in its nature, moral and spiritual, effected by the power of truth and the efficiency of the Holy Spirit." And "repentance implies a deep humiliation of spirit before God, a deep-seated indignation against sin, an ardent desire for the remission of sin and acceptance with God." On the question of "the second blessing" in the work of sanctification the yeas and nays were called, resulting in yeas, 7; nays, 3. This year the Eldership mourned the death of George Thomas, who had "stood in the front for over thirty years as a minister of the gospel; was amongst the most useful preachers among us; was the instrumental means under God in the salvation of many souls, and organized many churches." A Ministerial Association was appointed to be held in June, 1879. "Great declension in the spirituality of the churches" was lamented, and was attributed to "the neglect of prayer." It was accordingly recommended that "every church keep up a weekly prayer-meeting; that every family, preacher and church member, keep regular family worship, morning and evening, as far as possible." The first day of January, 1879, was "set apart as a day of fasting and prayer."

9th Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—The Eldership at the session in 1879 realized that it was mistaken clemency which restored a guilty preacher upon his confession, and made him a General Missionary. For during the year J. H. Woodbury, "twice censured for falsity and dishonesty with the brethren," in conjunction with a few others, and "without the consent and consultation of the Eldership, acted insubordinately, and became one of the leading spirits in the organization of an Independent Eldership in Kansas." He was accordingly "expelled from the body," and "we further caution the brethren in Kansas and Missouri of the man." J. M. West, who became "insubordinate, and connected himself with" the Independent Eldership, was also expelled. Two additions in the persons of Newton Hill and Jasper Smith were received during the session. The Eldership convened at Polo, Caldwell county, Mo., October 2, 1879. C. B. Konkel preached the Opening Sermon on said evening. Theme:—"Repentance and Conversion." Konkel had been elected Speaker; C. S. Bolton, Clerk, and P. Heffelfinger, Treasurer. It was becoming a practice to form "Circuit Elderships," one of which existed in Crawford county, Kas., which transacted business for the circuit, recommended ministers, and arranged the affairs of the circuit. Though there "were divisions and strifes" during the year, yet the Committee on the State of Religion believed "the cause is on the advance; some of the obstacles are being removed from our midst which have been great hinderances to the cause, and that the accessions have been greater during the year than the number that fell away." The ministers were directed to take collections at all appointments for a Contingent Fund. Co-operation between churches and the Eldership was insisted upon, and efforts to foster and encourage such a spirit were to be made by all the ministers and churches," and prayer was urged to be made that this "result may be speedily accomplished, until brotherly love and union shall reign, without a schism in the body." A conference was solicited by "Elder Linn, of the Baptist Church," with "some of our ministers, at Pleasant Hill, Mo.," who "expressed a desire to become connected with the Eldership and take a work." The invitation was accepted, the conference to be held "some time in the future." Three of the nine circuits to which ministers were assigned were in Kansas—Osage and Crawford counties, and the South-west Kansas Mission. To secure greater care in granting licenses, the application of M. H. Northrop was refused because a Rule had been adopted "requiring all applicants to be present."

10th Kansas and Missouri Eldership.—The last session of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership was held at Keystone, Clinton county, Mo., and began on Wednesday morning, October 13, 1880. The previous evening the Opening Sermon was preached by E. Wilson, from Isaiah lv. 7. The membership present consisted of six ministers, three ruling elders, three delegates and two exhorters, while ten ministers were absent. E. Wilson presided as Speaker; N. Hill was Clerk, and P. Heffelfinger, Treasurer. There were six sittings during the three days of the session, apparently very busy ones. An appeal case came up after organization, taken by C. Eckard, from the action of the church at Keystone Bethel, Kingman county, Kas., "on the grounds of illegality of procedure." After reading the proceedings from the church Minutes, the appeal was entertained. The "legality was then discussed by Heffelfinger, Blakely, C. S. Bolton, Sudsberry, Hill and Ogden," and "the action of the church was sustained, and the appeal dismissed." It was decided that applicants for license "before receiving a license shall be solemnly set apart by an ordination address, followed by the solemn prayers and invocation of the body, led by one appointed for the occasion by the Speaker." Positive resolutions were adopted in favor of "setting apart the seventh part of time for special service in God's sacred worship;" that "God commands the business world to a standstill during this time for divine service at his public altars," and that "all business transactions of a worldly character on the sacred day are wrong, and should be rebuked by the example and life-acts of every Christian." In poetic phrases education was lauded, and "the brilliancy of our star of educational interests" admired, "as it has assumed additional proportions in strength and luster." To secure a better support for the active preachers, each circuit was advised to have "the officials of each church meet soon after the Eldership, and appoint a committee to make a pro rata assessment on each church, to be paid by said church to the minister." Circuit Elderships were held on some fields, which were approved. Against the evils of intemperance the body spoke in clear, strong terms, and especially condemned "the visiting of saloons with the object of tippling by any church member," as being "in direct violation of the teachings of the Master." A protest against "even the use of tobacco" was incorporated in the resolutions on temperance. A strongly worded protest was adopted against the Iowa Eldership for "taking entire control of the Peaksville, Mo., work, in supplying the pulpit without consulting our Eldership," and the matter was called to the attention of the General Eldership. On the divorce question the Eldership "solemnly protested against the soliciting for divorce and the dissolution of the marriage relation in all cases excepting for the cause stipulated by our Savior, believing this to be the scriptural rule." All "laborers within the bounds of this Eldership" were "earnestly entreated to devote their time and talents to the work of sustaining and extending the cause in which we labor, as a kind providence may direct." Churches were admonished "to co-operate in harmony with the elders, not only in appointments made by the Eldership, but in standing by appointees with sympathy and support." Appointments were made to all the circuits, ten in number, both in Kansas and Missouri.

XIII. THE MARYLAND AND VIRGINIA ELDERSHIP.

1st Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—No Eldership had been organized with as much deliberation as the Maryland and Virginia. This was doubtless the result of opposition by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, whose territory included Maryland and Virginia, and which had built up the work in those States by the employment of its men and means. The agitation to form an Eldership was begun prior to 1853, by J. F. Welshampel, a native of Baltimore, Md., and member of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. He was a constant traveler, going from church to church over almost the entire territory of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, sometimes as authorized agent of The Church Advocate, and at other times on his own account. His was an inventive, fertile mind, and his schemes were quite numerous, if frequently not approved, or unsuccessful. A great deal of his traveling in those early days was on foot. In this way he got into the homes of very many of the families of the churches not only in Maryland, but also in Pennsylvania. He had thus canvassed the project extensively with the Maryland churches and brethren. In a letter addressed "To the Maryland Brethren," in 1853, he argued strongly in favor of organizing an Eldership in that State. In it he states that he "had brought the matter before the East Pennsylvania Eldership several years ago; but it was laid on the table." The movement was not spontaneous with the Maryland churches. They knew the objections and disadvantages. One of these objections was the slavery question; the fear that an Eldership in Maryland might become pro-slavery, and thus cause serious trouble. This objection Welshampel attempted to meet in his open letter in 1853. The matter apparently slumbered, after this defeat, for ten years, when, in 1863, Welshampel made a journey through Carroll, Frederick and Washington counties, Md., on foot, and agitated the matter, carrying with him a "Petition" for a Maryland and Virginia Eldership. When his canvass was about completed he published an article in The Advocate, in which he stated, that "all the churches went in strongly for the petition to the next General Eldership for the grant of the privilege to form an Eldership in Maryland, as soon as the way is ready;" that he thinks "the time has come, and has long been, when Maryland ought to have an Eldership of her own." He had also with regret alluded, in June, 1860, to the neglect of mission work in Maryland by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, citing Frederick City as an instance; "but it will be so until Maryland has an Eldership of its own. All the churches in Maryland seem favorable to such an organization." To Welshampel's letter in 1863, Thomas, the Editor, replied at some length, and with some severity criticised Welshampel and his project. "Welshampel has laid hold again of one of his pet projects with a will and determination that, if directed to a proper and really useful object, ought to succeed. We have no pleasure in opposing or throwing difficulties in the way of any of the numerous schemes projected by our mechanically minded brother. We have no misgivings in predicting that, should he succeed in severing Maryland from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, it would result in almost fatal disaster to the former." He then states two objections: 1. "That there are only two circuits in Maryland;" and, 2, "The churches do not have the strength, even if they should have the pecuniary means, to support a separate organization." This second objection he elaborated to a considerable extent. S. V. Sterner, pastor of the Washington county, Md., circuit, took up the first objection, and endorsed it, proposing that "an effort be made to raise $50.00 or $75.00 missionary fund by the time the East Pennsylvania Eldership meets, and tender it to said Eldership on condition that it find a missionary and support him out of said fund, which would enable us to form another circuit. An Eldership should never be formed with less than three circuits." But the "Petition to the General Eldership from a number of brethren to be granted permission to form an Eldership in the State of Maryland," was presented to that body in 1863. It was referred to a committee composed of Shoemaker, Swartz and T. Hickernell, who reported it with a negative recommendation, which the Eldership adopted. Thus the matter rested for five years, when, in 1868, the East Pennsylvania Eldership met at Uniontown, Carroll county, Md. The matter was brought before said Eldership, in an auspicious time and place, and it was referred to the ministers and delegates present from Maryland. They met together and discussed the question, and then voted against it. But at the General Eldership which met at Mt. Carroll, Ill., May 29, 1872, "a memorial was received from a number of prominent brethren in the State of Maryland, praying this body to grant them the privilege of organizing an Eldership in their State." The Committee on Boundaries, A. Megrew, D. Keplinger and J. F. Meixel, reported favorably on this memorial, and fixed the boundaries: "That the lines run along the line between Pennsylvania and Maryland, up to the Allegheny mountains, and along the line of said mountains through Virginia, including all of Virginia east of the Allegheny mountains." This report was adopted.

The way having been thus officially prepared, "the ministers and elders of the churches of God in Maryland and Virginia met at Creagerstown, Frederick county, Md.," in October, 1872, to decide whether or not an Eldership shall be organized. Ephraim Garner, a lay elder, was elected President, and C. L. Amy, teaching elder, Secretary. This Convention resolved to "appoint the time and place for forming said Eldership;" named Uniontown, Carroll county, Md., as the place, and November 27, 1872, as the time; "requested all the ministers and ruling elders in Maryland and Virginia to be present," and "solicited the hearty co-operation of all the brethren of the East Pennsylvania Eldership."

As per action of the Convention, "the delegates appointed by the different churches of God in Maryland and Virginia met in Uniontown, Md., on Wednesday evening, November 27, 1872, for the purpose of organizing an Eldership for the State of Maryland and Virginia. The Opening Discourse was preached by Elder S. Spurrier." The officers of the Convention were made the temporary officers of the Eldership, and it was agreed, "that all the teaching and ruling elders of the churches in Maryland and Virginia, and all the delegates present, be entitled to full membership during the present sessions." To these were added "all the brethren whose names were subscribed to the Petition to the General Eldership." The following, under these actions, were enrolled as members: C. L. Amy, Wm. Palmer, P. Lookingbill, B. Williams, S. W. Naill, J. W. Kipe, J. A. Saxton, S. S. Richmond, P. D. Collins, S. Spurrier, Wm. McElroy, J. H. Esterline, teaching elders; J. Spielman, J. Shupp, N. Greenawalt, C. Easterday, S. N. Harbaugh, John Rowser, P. Hahn, B. Fleagle, E. Garner, John Gore, D. Fuss, J. H. Chew, A. Garner, J. Rowe, J. Hooker, J. E. Strickler, J. H. Christ, Ezra Garner, A. Slonecker, J. Hollenberry, Joel Caylor, D. S. Segafosse, A. Harris, S. P. Ogle, Geo. W. Gilbert and Jesse Williams, ruling elders and delegates. J. H. Chew, C. L. Amy and P. D. Collins were named as a committee "to form a Constitution and By-Laws for the government of this Eldership," which reported "a Constitution which was in substance the Constitution and By-Laws of the East Pennsylvania Eldership," and which "with a few unimportant alterations was adopted." The Eldership then organized by electing S. Spurrier, Speaker; J. H. Chew, Treasurer; C. L. Amy, Journalizing and Stated Clerk; J. H. Christ, Transcribing Clerk, and Geo. W. Gilbert, Financial Clerk. The advisory members were C. H. Forney, J. Haifeigh and G. W. Seilhammer, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Eight ministers signified their willingness to take appointments. When the Stationing Committee reported it named eight fields of labor, one of them the Virginia and Potomac Mission, to which it appointed eight pastors with four assistants. A resolution was adopted pledging every candidate for license "not to use as a beverage any spiritous or malt liquors, or wine," to which was added an amendment instructing "all ministers to preach against intemperance in all its forms." A Board of missions was appointed, consisting of J. H. Chew, E. Garner, J. Spielman, J. Gore and P. Hahn.

all ruling elders. A Board of Education was named, consisting of C. L. Amy, J. H. Christ and P. D. Collins. P. D. Collins, J. H. Chew and J. Spielman were named as the Standing Committee. S. W. Nail and D. Fuss were licensed to preach. The Eldership rejected a resolution declaring that it is "advisable for the ministry of this body not to acknowledge any as members of any local church until they shall have been baptized." Each church was requested "to appoint an active brother or sister to collect all the missionary money possible." Resolutions of a general character were adopted, recommending to members "the improving of their own minds by all the means within their reach, and securing for their children the best educational facilities their means will allow."

The Speaker of the first session of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership, S. Spurrier, was a native of Maryland, born near Mt. Airy, in Frederick county, September 9, 1828. He had no educational advantages, and had neither means nor time for mental improvement. But he was a careful student of the Scriptures, and possessed good natural powers, so that he became an acceptable and influential minister among the common people. His stalwart Christian and moral character was the strongest recommendation among the people with whom he labored. He was a stonemason, and in building bethels where he labored, he often did the mason work himself. He received his first license from the East Pennsylvania Eldership at Shiremanstown, Pa., November 10, 1858. After being a member of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership from 1872 to 1880 he returned to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, in whose fellowship he continued until 1897. He was instrumental in the organization of a number of churches, laboring most of his years in the active ministry on missions, or poor charges. He built the following eight houses of worship: Pleasant Ridge, Carroll county, Md.; Creagerstown, Frederick county, Md.; Friends Creek, Frederick county, Md.; Germantown, Washington county, Md.; Fairplay, Washington county, Md.; Berkeley county, Va.; New Baltimore, Franklin county, Pa., and Mt. Hope, Adams county, Pa.

2nd Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The harmony which characterized the first session of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership was disturbed before it met in annual session at Creagerstown, Frederick county, October 8, 1873. S. Spurrier, Speaker, had trespassed on C. L. Amy's field of labor, and in other ways had laid himself open to charges, which were preferred against him by Amy before the Standing Committee, which came up at the first sitting for approval. It had decided that Spurrier had done wrong; but it also reflected on Amy "for using too strong language in writing and speaking to other parties." As the parties "assented to this, the difficulty was amicably settled." But Amy's license was later withheld "until existing difficulties between him and the church at Fairplay be amicably adjusted." Twelve teaching elders, fifteen ruling elders and three delegates were present at this session. The officers elected were P. D. Collins, Speaker; J. H. Christ, Stated Clerk; B. Williams, Transcribing Clerk; J. Kolb, Financial Clerk, and J. H. Chew, Treasurer. By resolution "each member of the Eldership personally agreed and hereby promised to make an effort to collect all the money possible between now and the meeting of the next Eldership for the purpose of paying on bethels built by the Church of God." The Board of Missions had appropriated a total of $410.00 during the year. Mission work had been started at Frederick City, and Amy was instructed to continue his labors there. A missionary meeting was held on Friday night, when "the sum of $264.87 was subscribed for the Missionary Fund." Applicants for license were placed "under the instructions" of their pastors. Dates were fixed on which the pastors were required to take up collections for Contingent, Missionary and Superannuated Funds. On the use of tobacco the Eldership would only urge "the members of this body to abstain from the use of tobacco while in the house of God." Ten fields of labor were constituted, of which three were missions. Spurrier was appointed "General Missionary of the Eldership; authorized to raise all the missionary money he can on the entire ground." Each licensed minister was to have at least one appointment, and "each minister of this body be requested to visit Virginia, and assist the pastor to hold protracted efforts for the advancement of the cause of God in Virginia."

3rd Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The friction created between C. L. Amy and the Standing Committee was not allayed during the year, and made some trouble during the session of the Eldership in 1874. Amy offered an amendment to the Committee's Report, that its action in his case "be made null and void, and that the whole matter be referred to a special committee." After considerable discussion this was not agreed to. And when the Report was adopted, Amy preferred charges against the Committee for "malfeasance in office," and other offenses. The matter was investigated with closed doors; but the public record shows that "Amy has fully acknowledged he has done wrong," and he was "exonerated from all charges made against him." But the wounds were not healed. The Eldership sat at Carrollton, Carroll county, Md., meeting Thursday evening, October 22nd, with quite a full representation. P. D. Collins preached the Opening Sermon, from 2 Tim. ii. 3. He was chosen Speaker; J. H. Christ, Stated Clerk; B. Williams, Transcribing Clerk, and J. W. Kipe, Financial Clerk. The Committee on the State of Religion rejoiced that it could "report progress in the different churches. New churches have been organized and numbers have been converted during the year and added to the Church." It made special mention of the progress of the work in Virginia. Studies were prescribed for the younger ministers, and they were required to meet the Board of Education to be examined in the first year's studies. To insure pastoral visiting, each minister was required "hereafter before receiving his license to report the number of families on his charge visited by him." Again the Eldership placed itself on record against requiring ministers "not to fellowship any one before baptism." At a Missionary meeting held on Monday night a total of $227.86 was received in cash and pledges. Members of the churches were requested "to assist the young ministers in procuring books, and encourage the work of education among the young." One sermon each year was to be preached by each minister "against the sin of using intoxicating liquors as a beverage." There were eleven circuits and missions supplied by the Stationing Committee, two of them being in Virginia.

4th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—In theory all the Annual Elderships maintained the parity of teaching and ruling elders; with a few other Elderships, the Maryland and Virginia reduced this theory to practice. At the session which was held at Warfieldsburg, Carroll county, beginning November 11, 1875, John H. Chew, a prominent lay elder, was elected Speaker, with J. H. Christ, Clerk, and John Gore, Treasurer, both lay elders. But B. Williams, Transcribing Clerk, and J. W. Kipe, Financial Clerk, were teaching elders. B. Fleagle preached the Opening Sermon. There was an unusually large attendance, and the business was dispatched with unanimity. The good feeling was deepened by the mellowing influence of death in their ranks, for the Eldership mourned the departure of P. D. Collins, whose loss was keenly felt. "We had earnestly hoped that our beloved brother should have lived long to fill his place as a useful member of the Church of God." He "labored earnestly and faithfully for the extension of the Church." L. H. Selby was received by transfer from the West Ohio Eldership. The friction in the relations between the Eldership and C. L. Amy brought about an unusual condition. Instead of taking an appeal in regular form to the General Eldership, he presented a preamble and conclusion, stating that on account of "a disposition in the Eldership to suppress my evidence in relation to matters concerning myself, I hereby withdraw wholly therefrom to labor independently until the meeting of the General Eldership in May, 1878, to which I appeal." The "withdrawal from the Eldership" was accepted, with a "protest against the grounds of his withdrawal." The incorporation of the Eldership was decided upon. A Ministerial meeting was ordered to be held in February, 1876. Stated times were fixed for lifting the collections for the different Eldership Funds. The Eldership closed on Wednesday night with an ordinance meeting.

5th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The anomalous position in which Amy had placed himself became evident during the year, and in consequence his request for a conference in his case between the Standing Committee of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership and that of the East Pennsylvania Eldership had to be refused, he not being a "member because of his voluntary withdrawal." The nine fields of labor were represented by fifteen teaching elders, fourteen ruling elders and nine delegates, when the body convened at Fairplay, Washington county, Md., October 27, 1876. John H. Chew, having been licensed by the Standing Committee, preached the Opening Sermon. The officers elected were S. W. Nail, Speaker; J. H. Christ, Stated Clerk; B. Williams, Transcribing Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Financial Clerk, and John Gore, Treasurer. Chew, having failed to secure an Act of Incorporation, was continued as a committee to attend to the matter. When J. A. Staub made application for license he was "requested to occupy at least twenty minutes in a theological discourse before this body." The same course was taken with Elias Woods and G. Hornbaker. The Bethel which had been built in Virginia was "recommended to be sold and the debt paid." Perhaps during no other session of the Eldership was a more practical turn given to be-reavements than at this. Wm. McElroy, the devoted missionary to Virginia for so many years, had ended his earthly labors. He had been an active minister for forty years. Humble, unaspiring and self-denying, "he endeavored to preach Jesus to the people. Wherever he went, he went preaching." Each member of the Eldership was admonished "to follow him as he followed Christ." The death of Bro. John Sweden, whose bequest of $1,300.00 to the Eldership created the "Sweden Fund," was made the occasion for solemn admonitions to "our dear brethren and sisters over the entire bounds of our Eldership to live more holy and pious lives." A general camp-meeting was provided for. Each preacher was instructed to "preach at least one sermon each year at each of his appointments on the evil effects of the use of intoxicating liquors."

6th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Eldership in 1877 met as an incorporated body by Act of the Maryland Legislature. The session was held at Uniontown, Carroll county, Md., where the Opening Sermon was preached by S. W. Naill, on Thursday evening, October 18, 1877. The following morning an organization was effected by the election of L. H. Selby, Speaker; J. H. Christ, Journalizing Clerk; B. Williams, Transcribing Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Financial Clerk, and John Gore, Treasurer. The receipts reported by the Treasurer for the different Funds were:—Missionary, $136.32; Widows' and Orphans', $93.62; Contingent, $17.52; Bethel, $20.90; Superannuated, $41.36. While one Bethel had been sold in Virginia, a special committee to visit that part of the territory reported one "in course of erection west of Martinsburg about five miles." There were "five or six members of the Church of God in the vicinity." At the missionary meeting the "amount collected and subscribed was $200.35." When the Committee on Temperance reported it submitted one resolution in which the Eldership would pledge itself "to abstain not only from the use of intoxicating liquors, wine or cider as a beverage, but to discourage their use in others." It was proposed to strike out "cider," and also to insert the word "hard" before "cider." This prevailed, and the resolution was adopted. Later, on a motion to erase the whole resolution from the Journal the yeas were four, and the nays, nineteen. The territory was divided into ten circuits and missions, several of which were left unsupplied.

7th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—In 1878 the Eldership held its annual session at Creagerstown, Frederick county, Md., beginning October 9th, with twelve teaching elders, eleven ruling elders and four delegates present. J. H. Chew was elected Speaker; J. H. Christ, Stated Clerk; E. Appler, Transcribing Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. The Treasurer's Report showed receipts for Mission Fund, $237.52; Widows' Fund, $105.01; Superannuated Fund, $76.38; Bethel Fund, $12.81; Contingent Fund, $50.98. The Eldership expressed its readiness "cheerfully to co-operate with the General Eldership in all laudable efforts to extend the cause of God." An appropriation out of Eldership funds was made "to aid the church at Sharpsburg in erecting a house of worship." The amount of $125.00 was thus appropriated out of the Missionary Fund. Two elders and some of the members of the church at Union Bethel were condemned because they "persisted in holding an ice cream festival in opposition to the will of a majority of the members of the church." The Eldership also voted, "that the holding of festivals by the Church of God for the purpose of raising money for any cause is wrong." The total amount received from the Sweden estate was $1,897.34, "invested at 6 per cent. for the benefit of the Eldership." On Saturday evening of the session a missionary meeting was held at which "$91.26 were received in cash and subscriptions." The place for holding a Pentecostal meeting was selected, and the holding of a Ministerial meeting was decided upon, and a Committee on Program was named. Monday evening, after an appropriate sermon by J. W. Kipe from John xiii., on "The ordinance of washing the saints' feet," "the ordinances of the Church were attended to." It was also decided to "hold an Eldership camp-meeting," which was placed under the direction of a committee appointed for that purpose. Nine fields of labor were arranged by the Stationing Committee, two of them being missions.

8th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—Still further to encourage the Sharpsburg church for whose benefit an appropriation was made in 1878, the session of the Eldership in 1879 was held at said place, in Washington county, Md., beginning on Tuesday morning, October 28th. The Opening Sermon was preached on Monday evening by Wm. Palmer, from 1 Cor. i. 21—"The Salvation of Man." Palmer was chosen Speaker; J. H. Christ, Stated Clerk; E. Appler, Transcribing Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Financial Clerk, and John Gore, Treasurer. To still further aid the Sharpsburg church in paying for its house of worship, the missionary meeting was dispensed with, and instead "an effort was made to collect funds to cancel the debt." Debts reported by a committee on different houses of worship aggregated $559.29. To enforce payment in full by churches when a pastor "has discharged his duty," the Eldership decided that it is "under no obligation to supply such churches with a minister until the amount agreed upon is paid." The minister and ruling elders of "every organized church within the bounds of the Eldership" were "required to organize a Sabbath-school." In the will of John Sweden it was provided that from the income from his bequest "the bethel at Carrollton and the burying ground be kept in good order and repair," and so the interest from said bequest for the following Eldership year was appropriated for said purpose. The Stated Clerk, J. H. Christ, was at this Eldership ordained a teaching elder. The committee in charge of the camp-meeting in 1878 reported holding the same, but stated that it "did not continue the camp over Sabbath because they believed they could not do so without encouraging "a great amount of sinful and unlawful trafficking on the Lord's day." The Eldership not only adopted the Report, but also a resolution committing itself against Sunday trafficking "at our religious gatherings." Samuel Fleagle, "a faithful and efficient member and minister of the Eldership," had passed away during the year, and his death was lamented by the body in suitable resolutions. The number of fields of labor arranged by the Stationing Committee was twelve. Virginia Mission was connected with Sigler's appointment, in Maryland.

9th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—Several unusual incidents characterized the ninth session of this Eldership. Of these one was "a challenge received during the latter part of the session by Wm. Palmer to discuss certain scriptural questions." The Eldership gave its official "approval of said discussion," which was held in January, 1881. A minister of the German Baptist Church made application "to become a member of the body." He was "recommended to examine more fully the Scriptures on the action of baptism." Action was taken, providing for certain amendments to the Constitution, one of which entitled any minister who paid $1.00 annually into the Widows' Fund "to draw from said Fund his pro rata of the whole amount of said Fund for the benefit of his widow." The session was held at Carrollton, Carroll county, Md., and began October 13, 1880, on the evening of which day Wm. Palmer preached the Opening Sermon, from Jer. iv. 2, who was elected Speaker; J. H. Chew, Stated Clerk; Elias Appler, Transcribing Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Financial Clerk, and John Gore, Treasurer. The Treasurer's Report showed that during the year the Missionary Fund received $194.27; the Widows' Fund, $52.91; the Contingent Fund, $18.16; the Superannuated Fund, $20.99; the Bethel Fund, $12.29. An "applicant for license was allowed twenty minutes to speak before the Eldership;" but was then "instructed to improve his talents," and report the following year. The Eldership declared that it "will put forth our utmost efforts to stop the traffic in intoxicating beverages," and each pastor was "required to preach one sermon at each appointment during the year on the sin of using intoxicating liquors as a beverage." A compromise was proposed touching the Sweden bequest, whereby the Eldership retain $1,000.00, and "the balance to be paid over to the elders of the church of God at Union Bethel." The vote stood, yeas, 8; nays, 14. As the "financial condition of the Eldership is not as good as desired," it was ordered that "each member of the Eldership endeavor to become more interested in all the collections," and the brotherhood was "urged to increase the funds by responding more liberally." A Camp-meeting Committee was appointed to conduct the Eldership camp-meeting. The Eldership also resolved to hold a Ministerial Association, and named the place. Virginia was omitted from the list of appointments, which consisted of seven circuits and five missions.

10th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—Providence favored the Eldership during the year, so that the ranks were unbroken when the twenty-four teaching elders and three delegates convened in annual session at Locust Valley (Sigler's), Frederick county, Md., October 27, 1881, to listen to the Opening Sermon by William Palmer. But the body sympathized with the East and West Pennsylvania Elderships, and recorded suitable sentiments of condolence on the death of George Ross, P. Loucks, S. S. Richmond and J. S. Gable. J. W. Kipe was chosen

Speaker; J. H. Chew, Stated Clerk; Elias Applier, Transcribing Clerk, and John Gore, Treasurer. A Board of Education was also elected. The financial condition of the Eldership was deplored, and more liberal contributions requested "to carry on the great work of the Church." The interest in the Palmer-Wells debate of January 7, 1881, still survived, and a "committee to report on the discussion" was appointed, which expressed "the feeling of gratitude" experienced by the Eldership "for the victory achieved," according to Palmer, "the highest commendation for the able manner in which he conducted the discussion." The College project was strongly endorsed, and "the agent of the Board of Education heartily invited to canvass our fields to solicit funds for that purpose." G. Sigler, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, attended the session, and was requested to preach on the ordinance of Feet-washing on Tuesday evening preparatory to observing the ordinance. Religious conditions were fair, but the cause was "not progressing to the extent desired." The "ministerial brethren and the brotherhood" were exhorted "to push forward the good work."

11th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Eldership camp-meeting had been so conducted in 1880 and 1881 as to become subject to severe criticism. Ministers and brethren of the Eldership were urgent in advocating reforms, or abandoning the camp-meeting entirely. A resolution was, therefore, adopted in 1882, in which it was declared that "the trafficking, bartering, selling and making the camp-meeting a place of merchandise for financial profit is contrary to the teaching of Jesus as set forth in the Scriptures," and hence the Eldership, representing "the churches of God in Maryland, will abstain from this practice hereafter." The session of the Eldership was held at Friendship Bethel, Frederick county, Md., and began October 18, 1882, when J. W. Kipe preached the Opening Sermon, from Mark xvi. 15. The following morning the body was organized by electing J. A. Saxton, Speaker; re-electing Chew, Applier and Gore, and making choice of J. A. Staub for Financial Clerk. The Sweden Fund and the Bethel Fund now figured in the Treasurer's Report. The former, however, was invested, and was not in the Treasurer's hands; but $63.04 are credited to the Fund. The latter had $34.86 to its credit, which was paid on the Brownsville Bethel. An attempt "to strike out the Bethel collections" failed. The annual missionary meeting was held on Monday evening, when the amount raised in pledges and cash was $50.36. There were eight fields of labor, but Unlontown, by request, was left unsupplied. J. A. Saxton was appointed General Evangelist.

12th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The unsupplied charge of 1882 was filled by the transfer of W. P. Winbigger from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, who was reappointed in 1883. Virginia was again placed on the list of appointments to be served by three different ministers "every six weeks alternately." The Eldership convened at Fairplay, Washington county, Md., on October 11, 1883, the Opening Sermon being preached the same evening by J. A. Saxton, from Phil. i. 6. There were enrolled as present twenty-six ministers and delegates. William Palmer was the choice of the body for Speaker; John H. Hornbaker, Journalizing Clerk; John A. Saxton, Financial Clerk, and John Gore, Treasurer. The report of the Treasurer indicated a healthy improvement, the total available for missions being $897.60; Contingent Fund, $33.24; Widows' Fund, $215.30; Superannuated Fund, $183.51. The working of the "Bethel Fund" is seen in the report of a committee "on the Bethel at Sharpsburg," which paid off a judgment of $340.90, and took title to the property for the Eldership. These reports having been acted upon, Gore resigned as Treasurer, and J. A. Saxton was elected. Charges were preferred against one of the most active members of the Eldership by Winbigger, who claimed to have been "misrepresented by the statement that he was liable to indictment before the grand jury." But the matter, after much discussion, was indefinitely postponed. The missionary meeting resulted in cash and pledges amounting to $80.00. Prior to the observance of the ordinances by the Eldership on Tuesday evening, William Palmer preached on the ordinance of washing the saints' feet. The Eldership greatly rejoiced over the triumph of the temperance cause in Iowa and other States, and urged renewed activity in temperance work by the ministers.

13th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The action of the Eldership taken in 1882, deprecating the desecration of the Sabbath by Sunday trafficking at the camp-meeting, did not effect a change. The matter was agitated without interruption during the two years, and the evil work continuing, the Eldership in 1884, under the leadership of John H. Chew, adopted most drastic measures to put it to an end. A resolution was passed, declaring "that this Eldership will withhold the license from any teaching elder of this Eldership who violates the resolution passed by this body in the year 1882, in regard to trafficking at camp-meetings." The Eldership held its session at Mayberry, Carroll county, Md., beginning November 6, 1884. J. W. Kipe preached the Opening Sermon. P. Lookingbill was elected Speaker; J. H. Chew, Journalizing Clerk; J. H. Hornbaker, Transcribing Clerk; B. Williams, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. While "the missionary work in the Eldership was warmly advocated by the brotherhood," and a Board of Missions was regularly elected, only $20.00 were appropriated during the year for missions, leaving $84.27 in the treasury. "One of the strong men in the Church of God in Maryland, Benjamin Fleagle, was called from labor to reward since the last Eldership." The Eldership recorded its "high esteem for his marked fidelity during the many years of his service as a true minister of the Church of God." It was determined that the Church at Sharpsburg "must pay the interest on the judgment" held against the property by reason of the payment of the debt, keep the bethel insured, or the "Eldership will foreclose said judgment and sell the property." By all lawful and just mean, "the Eldership declared, that it will oppose the monstrous evil of intemperance." It also decided "to hold a Sabbath-school Convention, in May or June." There were nine fields of labor, including Virginia, to which a missionary was appointed.

14th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—"A grand success" was the judgment pronounced on the fourteenth session of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership by William Palmer, official correspondent. He declared "it was good in its reception;" "delightful in its sittings." Its "standing" was said to be "better than it has ever been." Missionary money to the amount of "about $600.00 was loaned out to liquidate debts on different houses of worship." It had "$1,000.00 in the Contingent Fund" on interest; a "Widows' Fund of not less than $250.00;" "perhaps $250.00 Superannuated Fund." In the main a layman, later licensed, J. H. Chew, was the active manager in gathering these Funds. A total of twenty-five members, all called "elders," except one delegate, were present at this session, which began October 15, 1885, at Warfieldsburg, Carroll county, Md. Peter Lookingbill preached the Opening Sermon, from Heb. xiii. 17. J. W. Kipe was elected Speaker; J. H. Chew, Journalizing Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Transcribing Clerk; J. A. Staub, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. Denouncing intemperance in emphatic terms, the Eldership only "agreed to use all lawful means to stop this great evil." The "brotherhood" was "strongly recommended to pay their respective pledges" for the support of Findlay College, "and as much more as possible," and "to pay liberally to aid in mission work at home and abroad." The Eldership lamented the death of Elias Appler, a man of "noble Christian traits of character." The interests of the body in Virginia were not prospering. But a minister was appointed to that field, and "a special agent" collected $160.00 to pay toward a house of worship on that mission. In addition to this mission there were nine fields of labor. A general missionary was also appointed. The Uniontown circuit was left unsupplied. It had been served by a minister of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, but he received a transfer back to said body, and the Stationing Committee was informed that said "circuit will not receive a preacher from the Maryland and Virginia Eldership the present year." The Eldership resolved "that no Eldership, or body shall supply said circuit without the consent of this Eldership."

15th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Eldership during the year came to a consciousness of the inadvisability of direct control of funds by the body. It formerly made appropriations on the floor; but a resolution easily passed this session, "that hereafter our ministerial brethren apply to the Board of Missions for appropriations." The Eldership convened at Union Bethel, near Carrollton, Carroll county, Md., October 8, 1886. There were in attendance thirteen teaching elders, thirteen ruling elders and four delegates. They elected J. A. Staub, Speaker; J. H. Chew, Journalizing Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Transcribing Clerk; G. E. Hughes, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. The Eldership resolved to "use all and every legitimate means to suppress the acknowledged evil of intemperance by not only talking it down, but by living it down." A missionary meeting was held on Monday evening, at which an "aggregate amount of $67.96" was received. The Treasurer received for the same fund for the year $182.79. R. T. Anderson, of New Jersey, was licensed to preach, and "in connection with A. W. Philhower," was appointed a "General Missionary in New Jersey." There were eight other fields of labor, and one General Missionary for Maryland. The cause of religion throughout the Eldership was reported to be "in a prosperous condition." On the last evening a sermon was preached by the Speaker "on the subject of the ordinance of feet-washing, after which the ordinances were observed. The Uniontown circuit this year received the appointee of the Eldership, J. A. Saxton.

16th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—It was doubtless good policy for the Eldership in 1886 to vote to hold its next session at Oak Hill, and let the Standing Committee change it to Uniontown. And further, for the body in 1887 to divide Uniontown circuit so as to make Uniontown a station and concede to it the privilege of securing a pastor from the East Pennsylvania Eldership. G. W. Seilhammer was prevailed upon to accept the charge. He united with the Eldership, and when it convened at Uniontown, Carroll county, Md., October 28, 1887, he was chosen Speaker. The other officers were J. H. Chew, Stated Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Kipe, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. The delegates to the General Eldership were required to make a formal report. The amount of missionary money which said body assessed on the Maryland and Virginia Eldership was apportioned to the different circuits. A sad coincidence of the Eldership was the death of W. P. Winbigger "just at the close of his work among us, before removing from our midst." He had received a transfer, to return to the East Pennsylvania Eldership. It was regarded as a "strange providence." He was regarded as "a good and noble Christian brother, and an able expounder of the New Testament Scriptures." In him was beautifully blended youthful optimism and matured experience. The Eldership kept a more paternal eye on incipient church enterprises, and was more ready to step in and help struggling and weak churches than was customary. This year the church at Middletown was given permission to canvass the Eldership territory for funds to aid in building a bethel. The church at Piney Creek received special attention in a matter involving the deed to its property, and in the payment of a debt on the property. The judgment on the Sharpsburg bethel, held by the Eldership, on which execution had been issued, was held over for one year, and ministers were appointed to go there, "hold a series of meetings, and assist in an effort to have sinners converted, and collect all moneys possible." Otherwise the Eldership disclaimed authority to interfere in local church business. The appointments consisted of one station and six circuits, with one general missionary.

17th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—An appeal from a local church is a proceeding quite generally considered in order, even where the next higher organization has no specific provision for it. But at least in a case in "an appeal from the decision of the church of God in Uniontown" to the Maryland and Virginia Eldership, it was not entertained. The Eldership met at Mayberry, Carroll county, Md., October 12, 1888. The Opening Sermon was delivered by G. W. Seilhammer the previous evening, from Ps. cx. 3. Thirty-four ministers and delegates were in attendance. William Palmer was their choice for Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Stated Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Kipe, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. Under its strict business system of managing funds the Eldership instructed the delegates of a delinquent charge "to return and collect the deficit." Yet it was so far oblivious to the requirements of fiduciary integrity as to adopt an action which "instructed the Treasurer to take money out of any fund that belongs to the Eldership if needed to meet the wants of this Eldership, except the Sweden Fund principal." Because his "moral character, on his own confession, was such as was intolerable by this body," one minister "was expelled by a unanimous vote of the Eldership." Always particular to pay assessments made on it by the General Eldership, it was ordered that "the amount lacking in our General Eldership assessments be paid by the Treasurer out of any fund in his hands, to be replaced as the brethren return to him their collections for that purpose." To prevent a similar deficit a year later it was resolved, "that the Eldership positively enforce on the ministers to collect the General Eldership assessments on the Maryland and Virginia Eldership, and if not paid, hold them responsible." Besides the "New Jersey Mission," there were eight fields of labor. Virginia Mission was omitted.

18th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—During the year the most active, aggressive spirit in the Eldership for years terminated his earthly career. Though he had fallen under a cloud the year previous to his death, his moral delinquency was measurably condoned, and the Eldership lamented his departure as that of "one who had been so useful as a counselor and prominent in all of the work of the Eldership." The session was held at Sharpsburg, Washington county, Md., and the Opening Sermon was delivered by William Palmer on September 5, 1889, from Lam. iv. 21. When it convened the following morning thirty-four ministers and delegates responded to their names. They elected J. A. Staub, Speaker; retained Seilhammer as Stated Clerk; elected J. P. Garner, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Kipe, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. The funds were in a creditable condition. Receipts for Missionary Fund, $249.00; Contingent Fund, $122.79; Superannuated Fund, $245.79; Widows' Fund, $332.78; Sweden Fund, total, $1,272.65. The ministers were required, by an amendment to the By-Laws, "to pay $1.00 into the Widows' Fund annually, and $1.00 annually into the Superannuated Fund." The beginning of the Eldership year was changed from "the first day of April, as formerly, to the first day of November." A Sunday-school Convention was agreed upon "this coming year;" the place selected, and a Committee on Program named. R. T. Anderson, the New Jersey missionary, had no report before the Eldership, and "no person knowing any thing about him, his name was stricken from the Roll," as was also the name of the Mission. There were eight fields of labor, five of which received appropriations out of the Missionary Fund.

19th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—Local interest in the doings of the annual Elderships prevailed in keeping their Minutes in The Advocate year after year for quite a period after they were generally disapproved. And when in 1890 the Maryland and Virginia Eldership published "a short synopsis of the proceedings" its dissatisfaction was voiced officially by the Clerk: "It may not be satisfactory to many of our brethren that are interested in the general workings of the body; but those parties who hitherto refused to take The Advocate on account of the long Journals (if their profession be true) will not object to our brevity." The session was held at Middletown, Frederick county, Md., and began September 25th. J. A. Staub preached the Opening Sermon. J. W. Kipe was elected Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Stated Clerk; J. H. Christ, Transcribing Clerk; B. Williams, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. Seventeen ministers were present, nine of which were appointed to the fields of labor. No work was being done in Virginia. Action was taken to have pastors go to their new fields of labor on November 1st. Assessments were made for the Home and for the General Eldership Missionary Funds. While only two pastors received appropriations by the Stationing Committee, it was decided that "the missionary money collected during the year be divided among the ministers at the coming Eldership as their wants may deserve."

20th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Maryland and Virginia Eldership has always enjoyed the reputation of a harmonious and internally untroubled body. So the session of 1891 was said to have been "well attended, well entertained, and for harmony and good will it excelled any previous Eldership for years." It met at Fairplay, Washington county, Md., October 15th. T. Still was elected Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Stated Clerk; W. H. Engler, Financial Clerk; Jesse Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. The interests of the Eldership were "in fairly good condition," and the "state of the churches spiritually and financially" was gratifying. All but one of the eight fields of labor were supplied. A General Missionary appointment was also made. One young man was ordained. The local churches organized Aid Societies to help to gather funds for their own use and to replenish the Eldership treasury.

21st Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The session of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership in 1892 was "an interesting and harmonious one, and showed some progress." This does not seem to have been sustained by the Report of the Stationing Committee, which reduced the fields of labor to seven. The Maryland churches have supplied more preachers for other Elderships in proportion to their numerical strength than those of any other State. They have suffered from the emigration of ministers, and the Eldership has frequently been short of preachers adapted to the work. But in all the history of the body the members have struggled disinterestedly and heroically to uphold and advance the cause. During the year 1891-2 "all the missionary moneys, both for home and general purposes, were collected," and the other funds were well replenished. The session of 1892 was held at Carrollton, Carroll county, Md., beginning on Thursday evening, September 1st, when S. J. Montgomery delivered the Opening Sermon. The organization was effected by electing J. A. Saxton, Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Journalizing Clerk; Jesse Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk, and W. H. Engler, Financial Clerk.

22nd Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—During the year 1892-3 the Eldership sustained a serious loss in the death of P. Lookingbill, originally ordained by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1869. He was a faithful minister, hard-working and self-denying, and the body sincerely mourn his death. The Eldership convened at Uniontown, Carroll county, Md., October 12, 1893, and continued in session until the 16th. "Temperance" was the theme of the Opening Sermon delivered by J. A. Saxton, from Hab. ii. 16. W. H. Engler was chosen Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Stated Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. A. Staub, Financial Clerk, and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. Thirteen ministers and twenty-three delegates and elders were reported. On Saturday evening a missionary meeting was held. On Sababth evening the ordinances were observed. The Eldership "ordered that each pastor collect $1.00 for each member he reported at this Eldership," to be paid on the College debt. The number of members was 911. The Eldership always took an active interest in the financial affairs of local churches, and frequently aided them in their struggles to free themselves from debt. A debt of $200.00 on the Germantown Bethel was to be provided for. An effort was directed to be made to raise the money. If it failed, the church was authorized to borrow the money, the Eldership agreeing "to pay the interest until such time as the church may be able to pay the principal." Assessments aggregating $216.00 were made for Home and General Eldership Mission Funds. The Stationing Committee made seven appointments to fields of labor; one General Missionary in Southern Maryland; one Missionary "on the territory on which he lives," and one General Missionary of the whole Eldership, "to have the general oversight of the missionary work of the body." Hagerstown interests were placed in the hands of the Standing Committee, which was "empowered to draw on the Eldership resources to meet their purposes."

23rd Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—Baltimore received no attention at the Eldership in 1893. But in 1894 J. A. Saxton was appointed to "Baltimore Mission." And shortly after the adjournment of the Eldership the Standing Committee "met in the city of Baltimore, in the Mission House, on the corner of Cross and Cleveland streets." The session of the Eldership was held at Germantown, Md., beginning October 12, 1894. S. B. Craft had come into the Eldership on a transfer, and he was chosen for Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Stated Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk, and W. H. Engler, Financial Clerk. The fields of labor were increased to twelve, including Baltimore Mission; Western Mission, and Papertown and Maryland and Virginia Mission. The Western Mission was unsupplied. Nine ministers were "instructed to aid their respective pastors, and work as opportunity may afford."

24th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—While the ministers of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership took no part in the discussion in The Advocate of the questions to be decided by the General Eldership in 1896, yet they were observant and thoughtful readers. When the time came for them to vote in their own Eldership their decision was already made, and the questions were decided without disputation. This was at the annual meeting held at Sharpsburg, Washington county, Md., where the session began with the Opening Sermon on the evening of September 4, 1895, preached by S. B. Craft, from Acts xx. 28. The attendance was small, only seven of the twenty ministers being present, nine ruling elders and five delegates. An organization was effected by the election of W. H. Engler, Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Stated Clerk; Jesse F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Rodkey, Financial Clerk, and John A. Saxton, Treasurer. The delegates to the General Eldership were instructed to vote for the title "The Eldership of the Churches of God." Also in favor of "the laying on of hands in setting the candidates apart to the holy ministry." The delegates were instructed to vote "that our present system of renewing licenses annually be continued." Assessments were made for the Home and the General Missionary Funds, and one evening sitting was devoted to missionary interests. The Treasurer's bond was fixed at $500.00. The territory was divided into ten fields of labor, one of which was left unsupplied. D. C. Eyer was appointed General Missionary. The local preachers were "instructed to preach in connection with the ministers in charge."

25th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Maryland and Virginia Eldership was one of these annual gatherings visited by Clara Landes shortly before sailing for India to begin her missionary work. She was received as an advisory member; addressed the body at the Friday morning sitting in a manner to be "highly appreciated by every one present, and very favorable resolutions were adopted."

The session was held in the Carrollton Bethel, Carroll county, Md., where on Wednesday evening, October 14, 1896, W. H. Engler delivered the Opening Sermon, from Judges ii. 2-4. Eleven ministers, eight elders and three delegates responded at Roll Call, after which S. B. Craft was chosen Speaker; G. W. Seilhammer, Stated Clerk; J. W. Rodkey, Financial Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; and J. A. Saxton, Treasurer. There were six regular Eldership Funds, the total amount being $1,814.52. The state of religion in the churches of the Eldership was reported as "not as progressive as it has been in former years;" but progress was noted in Christian Endeavor work, and "in other societies of a similar character." But the Committee added in terms of defection that it is "compelled by the spirit of truth to express our faith and mind to this body that we believe true and undefiled religion is in the background." The Eldership was admonished "to search and find out the causes, and rally to the front, and lay all selfishness on the altar of God, so God will have all the glory and honor." The principal accession to the ministry of the Eldership was that of Thomas B. Tyler, a minister of the U. B. Church, who was "placed under the care of his pastor" for a year. On Temperance the Eldership advised "Christian men, and all other well-wishers of society, to use their ballots, the only means by which we can have any hopes of effecting a change in the distressful condition of the world which has been brought about by the manufacture and sale of the demon rum." The ten fields of labor were all supplied, Tyler and J. R. Gearinger, licentiates, receiving appointments.

26th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—During the Eldership year 1896-7 the Maryland and Virginia Eldership sustained its most serious loss, in the death of G. W. Seilhammer. He was not only a "beloved and much-esteemed brother;" but "useful as a counselor and prominent in all the workings of the Eldership during the greater part of its existence." He was originally licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1868, and served a number of circuits and stations with efficiency. He was highly esteemed as pastor and preacher. He had an enthusiasm for the Church and brotherhood which was as generous as it was genuine. With limited culture of the schools, his triumphs were many, and where he had failures they left his honor untarnished. In the shadow of this sorrow the Eldership convened at the Germantown Bethel, Wednesday evening, October 6, 1897, and listened to the Opening Sermon by S. B. Craft, from Luke x. 7. Fourteen ministers, twenty-four ruling elders and four delegates were present. They made choice of James W. Kipe for President; William H. Engler, Stated Clerk; Jesse F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Rodkey, Financial Clerk, and John A. Saxton, Treasurer. The "assets" of the Eldership were $2,005.92, which included the Sweden Fund of $1,375.36. The revision of the Constitution was completed, and it was adopted. The Eldership differed on an important item of polity from the parent Eldership—the East Pennsylvania—in that new churches organized were formally received into fellowship. The Catoctin church was thus received in 1897. The ten fields of labor were all supplied with pastors except one. Virginia, however, was left off the list. J. A. Saxton was appointed General Missionary. The Eldership was dissatisfied with the management of a camp-meeting and "certain bush-meetings;" but the sentiment was not sufficiently crystallized to result in positive action.

27th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—It is said that in a volume of Suetonius which Mark Twain read until his very last day, there is a reference to one Flavius Clemens, "a man of wide repute for his abnormal want of energy," and in a marginal note Twain had written: "I guess this is where our line starts" (Clemens being Twain's real name). Any other characterization would better portray the two faithful, useful ministers of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership who had died during the ecclesiastical year 1897-8—L. H. Selby and J. W. Kipe—whom the Eldership in 1898 memorialized as "wise counselors and active members of the Eldership in all its workings, who gave the greater part of their lives to the gospel ministry." Selby was first licensed by the Ohio Eldership, in 1851, and was transferred to the Maryland and Virginia Eldership in 1888. Kipe was ordained by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1871, and became a charter member of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership in 1872. The Eldership in 1897 adjourned to meet "at Sigler's Bethel" in 1898. On the official records, however, it is known as "Locust Valley Bethel, Burkettsville," Frederick county, Md., where the body convened October 2nd, when S. J. Montgomery preached the Opening Sermon, from Ps. cxxxiii. S. B. Craft was chosen President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; Jesse F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Rodkey, Financial Clerk, and

J. F. Billmyer, Treasurer. The Eldership thus far had few serious internal troubles. Its reputation for unity, peace and harmony was creditable. Yet it had a standing committee "on Grievances," which often was a mediating committee, and effected "settlements out of court." There were appointments made to ten fields of labor, but as the Standing Committee possessed nearly all the powers of the Eldership, on October 26th it made five changes in the appointments, and increased the number of appointments to twelve.

29th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Ministerial Association was directed to meet on Tuesday evening before the Eldership. It continued its sittings until Wednesday afternoon, with nearly all the ministers and delegates in attendance. On Wednesday evening, October 4, 1899, at Bark Hill, Md., the Opening Sermon was delivered by S. B. Craft, from Ezek. x. 14. The attendance was comparatively large, and "some interesting and spiritual discussions were features of the business meetings on numerous topics." "About twenty-five ministers and delegates were present." The exceptional fact, is noted, that "all the ministers were returned to their last year's fields of labor." Upon organization of the Eldership L. F. Murray was made President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; J. H. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; S. A. Kipe, Financial Clerk, and J. F. Billmyer, Treasurer. The Virginia Mission was again placed on the list of appointments, with A. S. Poisal as missionary. Three other charges received missionary appropriations. Regular assessments were made on the circuits for Home Missions and General Eldership missions, and for Contingent Fund. These aggregated for Home Missions, $147.06; General, $72, and Contingent, $36. To these was added by the Standing Committee an aggregate assessment of $45.20 for the Delegate Fund.

29th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—An intended visit of C. Manchester, President of Findlay College, to the Maryland and Virginia Eldership was prevented in 1900; but he attended the Ministerial Association, and by his address before that body and intercourse with its members won their confidence and esteem. The Eldership then commended "the masterly manner in which Dr. Manchester is conducting the college work of the churches of God." It also pledged co-operation with him in the work. The session was held at Warfieldsburg, Md., beginning October 10, 1900. S. J. Montgomery preached the Opening Sermon, from Isa. vi. 8—"Messengers Sent." T. B. Tyler was elected President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; Samuel A. Kipe, Financial Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk, and also Treasurer. The Boards and Standing and Stationing Committees were composed of not less than two-thirds ministers, and some of them had no lay members on them. The greetings of the East Pennsylvania Eldership were not only reciprocated; but the Eldership agreed to "unite with the East Pennsylvania Eldership in prayer on the last day of November for a revival of religion throughout our bounds." Assessments were laid on the eleven fields of labor for Home Missions, General Missions, Contingent and Delegate Funds; but the amounts were not large, being in order as follows: Home Missions, $133.00; General Missions, $70.00; Contingent, $36.00; Delegate, $45.00. Two of the fields were unsupplied, while four ministers "were instructed to work wherever opportunity presents itself." The Virginia Mission was taken care of in connection with a point called Harpersburg. Important actions on various subjects of interest were taken, but not published. For the session "was arduous and the business important."

30th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—It is an interesting study in nomenclature to trace the origin of names and their significance. They are often lost in the course of events, and speculation is of little value. In many instances they are of special biographical interest, and "biography," Carlyle thought, "is by nature the most universally profitable, universally pleasant of all things." For more than two generations no one could mistake the origin of the name of the place where the Maryland and Virginia Eldership convened October 16, 1901. It was then called Locust Valley (Burkettsville), in Frederick county, Md.; but its former name was "Sigler." A. W. Philhower delivered the Opening Sermon. Text—Acts xvi. 30, 31. L. F. Murray was President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; S. A. Kipe, Financial Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk and Treasurer. The Eldership was well represented on the Boards. Board of Missions—J. W. Rodkey, W. H. Engler, G. H. Bowersox, T. B. Tyler, Samuel A. Kipe. Board of Education—W. H. Engler, T. B. Tyler, J. F. Billmyer. Board of Church Extension—L. F. Murray, T. B. Tyler, W. H. Engler. Standing Committee—L. F.

Murray, T. B. Tyler, W. H. Engler. But one layman was on these Boards. The Eldership frequently lost ministers by transfer to other Elderships. In earlier years it suffered greatly in this way. In 1901 S. B. Craft was transferred to West Virginia Eldership, North; but his place was supplied by J. D. Clark, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, while J. R. Thorp and V. K. Betts were granted licenses. The Eldership did not express its preference as to change of place for the General Eldership; but referred the matter to the Executive Board of the General Eldership. This year the fields of labor numbered ten. J. W. Evans was the General Evangelist.

81st Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Standing Committee of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership during the year 1901-2 experienced its power to reduce assessments "ten per cent., saving on the Delegate and Contingent Funds." It also granted a license to a member of the church at Kasiesville, James Shipp, who had emigrated to Iowa, and granted a Certificate of Ordination to J. D. Clark, East Pennsylvania Eldership, who had become pastor of the church at Uniontown, Md. "The Linwood Camp-meeting Association" made a proposition to the Uniontown church, through E. B. Garner, that said church "take charge of the camp-meeting proper, he retaining selling and boarding privileges; the church paying the ministers' expenses." In this way the contention between the camp-meeting and the Eldership was to be terminated. This proposition the church rejected five to one. The Standing Committee not only rejected a proposition made by E. B. Garner with a view of settling the dispute; but it required Garner "to notify the Western Maryland Railroad Company not to use the name of the Church of God in any manner in advertising the camp-meeting to be held at Linwood, Md., at any time from and after April 10, 1902." Garner "accepted this request." These actions were adopted by the Eldership which assembled at Mayberry, Md., October 15, 1902, on the evening of which day the Opening Sermon was preached by T. B. Tyler, from Ps. cxxvi. 8. Theme:—"Christian Sociability." On Thursday morning the Eldership elected J. D. Clark, President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Transcribing Clerk; S. A. Kipe, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. The new Treasurer was placed under bond. The Frederick Mission was "placed under the jurisdiction of the Standing Committee and Board of Missions." The Virginia Mission was omitted from the list of appointments. There were eleven fields, two "to supply themselves, subject to the approval of the Standing Committee." The delegates to the General Eldership reported an action taken by said body on the doctrine of sanctification. The Eldership voted on the Report, and sustained the said action. Though the attitude of the body was generally known, yet the resolution of former years was reaffirmed, stating that "our belief in the truth, that the Holy Scriptures are the only authoritative rule of faith and practice, and that in themselves, when properly studied, they are sufficient for doctrine, reproof, correction and for instruction in righteousness."

82nd Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—With the exception of the Woman's Missionary Society, the Maryland and Virginia Eldership was thoroughly organized in unison with the general plan of Annual Elderships. During the year 1902-3 conferences between the leading workers resulted in a better prospect for united effort in this line of religious activity. When the Eldership convened at Oak Hill, Md., October 14, 1903, this matter was taken up, and a Special Committee on Foreign Missions was appointed, which, in conjunction with a committee of three appointed by the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Uniontown, Md., was instructed "to organize a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society within the borders of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership." This brought the women of the churches throughout the Eldership into united co-operation with the W. G. M. S. of the General Eldership. The officers of this Eldership were L. F. Murray, President; T. B. Tyler, Stated Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Rodkey, Financial Clerk. The Eldership had both a Board of Missions and a Board of Church Extension, the latter having in charge the weaker fields. The Board of Education looked into the literary qualifications of applicants for license, and examined in the prescribed studies of the Eldership. The practice of formally receiving churches newly organized into the "fellowship of the Eldership" was exemplified in 1903, when the church at Wakefield was thus received. Shortly after the adjournment of the session of 1902, on November 8th, Death claimed John W. Evans, a man "possessed of wonderful faith and spiritual power." He was ordained October 16, 1874, and labored as an evangelist, making "full proof of his ministry."

33rd Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The Wakefield church, Carroll county, Md., enjoyed the privilege of entertaining the Eldership in 1904. The session began October 19th, and the Opening Sermon was preached by T. B. Tyler. The officers chosen were L. F. Murray, President; W. H. Engler, Journalizing Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Rodkey, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. These officers were described by a ministerial visitor as "a quartet of fine, venerable men, whose very appearance gave gravity to the sittings." A noticeable trait of the Eldership was "the sympathy and respect manifested toward the aged ministers of the body." The organization of the W. M. S. was perfected, and all the churches were requested to take an active interest in the missionary work. The nine fields of labor, with the exception of Uniontown and Frizzlesburg, were all supplied with pastors. The Uniontown charge secured the services of R. L. Crawford, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. The Eldership also appointed one General Worker, one General Missionary and one General Evangelist. The presence of G. Sigler, a native of Maryland, but a member of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was highly appreciated, and his preaching was strongly commended. His sermon on "Conversion" was published, and three hundred copies ordered by the Standing Committee. Said Committee made the assessments for four Funds aggregating $134.00 for Home Mission Fund; $77.00 for General Eldership Mission Fund; $34.00 each for Contingent and Delegate Funds.

34th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The W. M. S. of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership maintained a close relation to that body. It met with the Eldership, and was officially connected with it. Its second meeting, held in 1905, received much inspiration from addresses by ministers of the Eldership, R. L. Crawford and S. B. Craft, the latter having come from Ohio to take charge of a work, and Lydia A. Forney, of the W. M. S. of East Pennsylvania. The session of the Eldership was held at Carrollton, Carroll county, Md., beginning with the Opening Sermon at 7.30 p. m., October 18, 1905, by A. W. Philhower. M. H. Penn was chosen President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. W. Rodkey, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. The spiritual element was prominent in the work of the Eldership. The President and Treasurer of the Eldership were lay elders, a good lay delegation representing the churches at each session. Loyal in all things, the body was ready to co-operate with the East Pennsylvania Eldership "in making an effort to endow a professorship of Latin in Findlay College." Accordingly "the Board of Education was instructed to carry out said proposition, and to adopt such measures and put forth such efforts as will bring about results in harmony with the action of the General Eldership." The Day of Prayer for Findlay College was ordered to be observed and "an offering equal to ten cents per member of each church to be taken." The Sunday-school Convention was endorsed, and "the Standing Committee was instructed to arrange for a Ministerial Association meeting." It was necessary to restrain "ministers from intruding on other ministers' fields of labor." The redistribution of the territory made twelve charges, all but one supplied with pastors. A. W. Philhower was appointed General Evangelist, and John A. Saxton, General Worker. On November 24, 1904, the labors of John Royer terminated in eternal rest. He was ordained October 16, 1893, and "spent his ministerial life in a local capacity, and was ever ready to help any pastor who might ask for his help. He was a man of great faith and godliness."

35th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—Maryland churches have been notably prolific in preachers. Sons of Maryland have been efficient ministers in a majority of the Annual Elderships in earlier years. When they returned as visitors to the annual sessions they were honored and commended. In 1906 E. Angel, of Iowa, was present, and preached, and enjoyed pleasant fellowship with the ministers and elders. The session was held with the church at Edgemont, Frederick county, Md., and began on Thursday, at 8.30 a. m., October 11, 1906. The previous evening the Opening Sermon was preached by S. J. Montgomery, from 1 Cor. xvi. 13. An organization was effected by the election of M. H. Penn, President; W. H. Engler, Journalizing Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; R. L. Crawford, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. The session was portrayed as having been "the most harmonious that has ever been held in the history of the Eldership." "The religious and preaching services were an inspiration to the soul." Yet subjects were discussed and acted upon which usually developed antagonistic views. Among these was the Sunday-school literature, resulting in "the appointment of R. L. Crawford as special agent to see after its interests." Also the temperance question, "on which strong resolutions were adopted." As the state of religion was not wholly satisfactory, ministers and churches were counseled "to put forth a greater effort in the ensuing year than has been in the past." The fields of labor were eleven, with A. W. Philhower General Evangelist. V. K. Betts was also put in charge of Baltimore Mission, and J. A. Saxton, of Brunswick Mission.

36th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—There was generally some difficulty in Maryland to secure enough active ministers to fill all the appointments satisfactorily. The Eldership had to depend frequently on men from other Elderships. In 1907 it received Elmer W. Moyer from the Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership, and "G. W. Stine and George W. Masser were ordained to the gospel ministry." Thus the Eldership was enabled "to supply all the fields of labor," after rearranging the circuits and reducing the number to nine. The session was held at Sample's Manor, Washington county, Md., from Thursday morning to Saturday afternoon, October 31 to November 2, 1907. The Eldership was liberal in "granting the privilege of speaking on all questions" to James E. Shipp, of the Iowa Eldership; W. S. Shimp, of the West Virginia Eldership, North, and H. S. Bickel, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Shimp received one of the nine appointments, "subject to his transfer." Balloting for officers resulted in the election of S. A. Kipe, President; Stated Clerk, W. H. Engler; Transcribing Clerk, J. F. Billmyer; Financial Clerk, V. K. Betts. The Opening Sermon was preached on Wednesday evening, by L. F. Murray, from Matt. xvi. 18. The most serious question before the Eldership was "the difficulties which have arisen in our foreign mission work." But as the W. M. S. of the Eldership was co-operating loyally with the General Eldership W. G. M. S., there was not much diversity of sentiment on the question in the Eldership. Resolutions were presented, which declared it to be of "the utmost importance that the churches and Annual Elderships within the bounds of the General Eldership give expression to their views relative to this important matter," and therefore "the Maryland and Virginia Eldership" affirmed its "loyalty to the General Eldership." They also "endorsed the action of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership with reference to foreign mission work," and prohibited every person "soliciting funds for foreign missions within the bounds of this Eldership, unless they are subordinate to the Rules and regulations of the General Eldership." The "resolutions were adopted by a unanimous aye vote." The aggressive and zealous spirit of the Eldership was evidenced by "the growth of the Church in all her departments; by accessions throughout her boundaries; by the increase of her finances, and by the building of one new house of worship."

37th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—In view of the meeting of the General Eldership in 1909, the Maryland and Virginia Eldership in 1908 adopted resolutions on the W. G. M. S. difficulties, in which it expressed its belief that "the establishment of the W. G. M. S. of 1903 was regular, wise and legitimate," and endorsed the actions taken "to establish harmony and union." The session was held at Unlontown, Carroll county, Md., beginning October 15, 1908, the Opening Sermon having been preached on the evening of the 14th, by J. M. Carter. V. K. Betts was elected President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; Jesse F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; J. A. Saxton, Financial Clerk; Jas. E. Smith, Treasurer. The exceptional distinction was given to Mrs. D. Fuss and Mrs. G. W. Seilhammer, widows of ministers of the Eldership, of making them "honorary members of the body." The presence of C. I. Brown, President of Findlay College, was highly appreciated, and he received some cash, and also the universal testimonial of a recess by the public schools so that scholars and teachers could attend the sitting and hear his address on Christian Education. There were nine fields of labor, all but one supplied with pastors, with seven "General Workers." Yet the fact was realized that to do aggressive work there was "great need of young men to take up the work of the ministry." "There is no better field for home missionary work than in the State of Maryland." And even the aspirations of the Eldership to do greater things were not without reward. For Thoreau was right when he affirmed his question: "Did ever a man try heroism, magnanimity, truth, sincerity, and find that there was no advantage in them—that it was a vain endeavor?" So with a religious body in its seeking to do greater things for the Master.

38th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—Even more explicit and pronounced action was taken on the W. G. M. S. question in 1909 than at previous sessions of the Maryland and Virginia Eldership. The General Eldership in May, 1909, had taken final action on the matters pertaining to the W. G. M. S., so that sentiment in the Eldership had assumed fixed and definite shape before the session opened. Little discussion was required to secure unanimous action on the resolutions submitted. After reciting the main facts, "the action of the General Eldership" was "emphatically endorsed," as were also "the actions of the Executive Board and the Board of Missions relative to this matter, in seeking to establish harmony and union." The session was held at Germantown, Washington county, Md., and opened on Thursday morning, October 14th. The preceding evening S. A. Kipe preached the Annual Sermon, from John xii. 21. The organization was effected by the election of M. H. Penn, President; W. H. Engler, Journalizing Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; S. A. Kipe, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. In conference with representatives of the churches the fields of labor were rearranged "so that no circuit will pay less than $350.00 salary to the pastor per year." Ten charges were formed, all supplied with pastors. The Field Secretary of Findlay College, O. A. Newlin, attended the session, and his "valuable services were fittingly recognized by resolutions." The organization of a Sabbath-school and C. E. society in each church was regarded as of "vital importance," and each such organization "should be represented by the minister and at least one delegate in the Annual Convention." The pastors were "instructed to preach at least one missionary sermon each year at each of his appointments." One minister of the Eldership was taken during the year from earth, not by Death, but by Christ, the Head of the church, namely, J. R. Thorpe. He was a native of New York State. Removing to Sample's Manor, he was converted under the labors of A. W. Philhower and united with the church at said place. He was ordained October 22, 1894. He was an ardent student of the word, and "spoke by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven." He had "great natural abilities, which gave him power with God and man."

39th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—It was on the Sabbath morning of the Eldership of 1910 that the Reopening Sermon of the bethel in which the session of the Eldership was held was preached by L. F. Murray. The Opening Sermon was delivered in the evening of October 19th, by W. S. Shimp. The Eldership convened the following morning in the bethel at Zittlestown, Washington county, and organized by electing Shimp President; W. H. Engler, Stated Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; C. Amos Reynolds, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. The Eldership by the reception of an expelled minister of the West Pennsylvania Eldership made itself subject to official complaint before the Executive Board of the General Eldership. The matter was amicably adjusted, as the two Elderships concerned were actuated by friendly and generous motives, with no disposition to disregard each other's rights, or ignore their mutual responsibility. The Stationing Committee had a "most difficult task;" but it succeeded in securing pastors for the eleven charges, as two brethren ready for active work were ordained to the ministry. Nova Mission was made a charge, and the General Evangelist, J. A. Saxton, was "to prospect Frederick City and Hagerstown," with a view of starting missions in those towns. The Blue Mountain church was received into the Eldership.

40th Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—The pledge toward the payment of the debt of Findlay College was not fully paid, and final arrangements were approved to cancel it. The fortieth annual session was held at Maple Grove, Franklin county, Pa., the Opening Sermon having been preached by S. A. Kipe, on Wednesday evening, October 11, 1911, from Acts x. 20. An organization was effected by the election of L. F. Murray, President; W. H. Engler, Journalizing Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; C. A. Reynolds, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. The finances of the Eldership were in good condition, more money having been received and expended "for work done during the year than the previous year." The Financial Clerk at this session also reported increased collections for the different Funds. To insure better results the following year assessments were made for these Funds: Home Mission, General Mission, Contingent, Delegate, Findlay College Pledge. The pastors were "requested to make every possible effort to collect the assessments." The ten fields were supplied with pastors, with W. H. Engler, General Worker, and six ministers "to work in conjunction with their pastors." Viola G. Hershey, returned missionary in India, attended the session, and the Eldership gave hearty testimony to her faithful work in the foreign mission field, and her blessed influence at the Eldership. With much enthusiasm the work of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Eldership was commended.

41st Maryland and Virginia Eldership.—A quite thorough Course of Studies for the young ministers was prepared for adoption by the Eldership in 1912. The session was held at Carrollton, Carroll county, Md., beginning October 17th, and ending on the 21st. Geo. W. Masser delivered the Opening Sermon on Wednesday evening, the 16th, from Ex. xiv. 15. The following were the officers: J. A. Saxton, President; S. A. Kipe, Stated Clerk; J. F. Billmyer, Transcribing Clerk; C. Amos Reynolds, Financial Clerk; James E. Smith, Treasurer. The institutions of learning of the Church, and the periodical literature for the churches and Sabbath-schools, were strongly commended. The body was well organized as to its permanent boards and committees. The Standing Committee was composed of L. F. Murray, W. S. Shimp, S. A. Kipe; the Board of Education, of W. S. Shimp, J. M. Carter, S. A. Kipe; the Board of Missions, L. F. Murray, S. A. Kipe, J. F. Billmyer, J. Ebaugh, M. H. Penn; Board of Church Extension, J. A. Saxton, S. A. Kipe, J. F. Billmyer. One minister, F. I. M. Thomas, was received by transfer from the Ohio Eldership, and granted a Certificate of Ordination, and two, G. F. Nichols and T. J. Coffman, received annual licenses. A. W. Philhower's useful career ended August 26, 1912. He was a native of New Jersey, where he was born June 6, 1841. Prior to becoming a member of the church of God at Zittlestown, Md., he was a minister of the United Brethren Church, holding a Quarterly Conference License. He was ordained October 24, 1874, by the Maryland and Virginia Eldership. He served a majority of the fields of labor in the Eldership as pastor, built several bethels and organized a few churches. His zeal for the cause he loved was untiring. While his literary qualifications were limited, "he was an able defender of the distinctive doctrines of the churches of God."

The territory of the Eldership in 1912 was divided into twelve fields of labor, one being known as Jennings's Mission, and all supplied with pastors. The good condition of the Eldership is indicated by the Statistical Items of 1909, when there were 10 charges, 30 church organizations, with "a house of worship at each appointment," and 1,200 members. There was a Permanent Fund of $1,000.00, the interest of which is used for the general work of the Eldership. "Harmony and good will prevail throughout the Eldership." On the civic issues of the day the Eldership seldom expressed its sentiments, except on temperance. The position it occupied on this subject was indicated in 1912 when it set apart an hour on Saturday afternoon to hear an "address in the interest of prohibition by the Prohibition candidate for President of the United States." The ministry of the Eldership realized the great truth that "there is no substitute for thorough going, ardent and sincere earnestness," and it insisted on this trait in pastors.

XIV. THE NEBRASKA ELDSHIP.

1st Nebraska Eldership.—Nebraska was organized as a Territory in 1854, after an understanding had been reached that the Territory was to be "free" forever. It was included in the Louisiana Territory, ceded to the United States by France in 1803. The present limits of Nebraska were occupied by more than eight Indian Tribes. On this account, and because of the lack of precious and non-precious metals, and inadequate means of communication, the progress of the Territory was slow. The building of the Union Pacific railroad, with Omaha for its eastern terminus, drew attention to the exceptional agricultural advantages of the eastern and southern sections of the Territory, and substantial tides of immigration and eastern capital began to set in. The Territory was admitted into the Union as a State on March 1, 1867. About this time families of the Church of God began to remove thither, locating in the counties in south-eastern Nebraska, such as Polk, York, Seward, Lancaster, Saline, Gage, Richardson and a few others. Quite a good deal of missionary work had been done prior to the meeting, in 1874, to consider the advisability of organizing an Eldership. The work started in north-eastern Kansas, and was extended northward into three or four of the counties in Nebraska. Some of the missionaries were appointed by Annual Elderships; others by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. When in 1866 the General Eldership accepted Centralia College, and arranged to send several additional ministers into that section of Kansas, it was deemed proper to grant permission to organize an Eldership. But nothing was done in that line so far as

Nebraska was concerned, the Kansas and Missouri Eldership having been organized, and it was given the whole States of Kansas and Missouri. But by 1874 at least six missionaries were laboring for different periods in Nebraska, and as many in north-eastern Kansas, and not less than a dozen churches had been organized. North-eastern Kansas being contiguous to the Nebraska territory occupied by these missionaries, it was thought it should become a part of the Nebraska Eldership. By some concert of action a convention was called to meet in the bethel at Crete, Saline county, Neb., November 7, 1874, called "the Preliminary Eldership," to consider the question of organizing an Eldership. The recorded membership was as follows: Teaching elders:—E. D. Aller, D. S. Warner, Geo. F. McElwee; ruling elders:—J. K. Paxton, G. K. Mooney; delegates:—K. A. Moore, A. M. Mahaffey, G. K. Mooney, A. D. Root and John Litzberg. The south-eastern Nebraska Mission was not represented. After electing K. A. Moore Chairman, and Geo. F. McElwee and D. S. Warner, First and Second Clerks, the Convention took up for discussion the question, "Shall we take the initial steps toward the organization of an Eldership in the State of Nebraska?" After due deliberation, a series of preambles and resolutions was adopted, that "we form ourselves into an organization to be known as the Eldership of the Church of God in the State of Nebraska, with the approval and recognition of the General Eldership of the Church of God in North America;" "that a committee of twelve be appointed to prepare and present the necessary application for recognition to the General Eldership at its next regular meeting, to be held at Smithville, Ohio, in May next;" "that we adopt the Rules of Order of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, subject to such changes as may be deemed necessary." Under these Rules a full list of committees was appointed. A Standing Committee was also appointed. The following composed the Committee to Memorialize the General Eldership: E. D. Aller, D. S. Warner, G. F. McElwee, B. Hahn, J. K. Paxton, G. K. Mooney, J. H. Anderson, J. W. Kager, A. L. Nye, W. J. Howard and J. Kooken. A ministerial Association was provided for, which was to meet quarterly. A third sitting, in the evening, was devoted to the discussion of the Polity of the Church; the History of the Church, and reports of missionaries. Resolutions were also adopted, regarding "the sin of intemperance as one of the greatest evils which curse our nation and the world;" pledging their "influence to prohibit the manufacture and vending of all intoxicating liquors;" strongly urging education, and expressing appreciation of the periodicals of the General Eldership and of the liberality of said body in promoting mission work in the State.

At the General Eldership held at West Salem (instead of Smithville), Ohio, in May, 1875, "the memorial of ministers and churches of Nebraska" was received by mail, neither of the twelve members appointed at the "Preliminary Eldership" being present. It was referred to the Eldership, was read and then referred to a special committee, consisting of Shoemaker, Kennedy and Ross. Said Committee reported favorably, and the Petition was granted, and "the name, style and title" was fixed, to be "the Eldership of the Church of God in Nebraska." Being thus regularly chartered, the Nebraska Eldership assembled to hold its first session at Cropsey, Gage county, Neb., October 1, 1875. Without designating them by their official titles, fifteen members were enrolled, viz.: C. S. Bolton, E. D. Aller, C. S. Kilmer, J. W. Figart, G. F. McElwee, E. C. Gilbert, J. W. Kager, T. S. Clayborne, I. Tompkins, G. E. Ewing, J. K. Paxton, H. H. Hoffer, K. A. Moore, H. Wensel and Geo. K. Mooney. An organization was effected by the election of G. F. McElwee, Speaker; E. D. Aller, Clerk, and J. K. Paxton, Treasurer. The members of the Standing Committee were K. A. Moore, E. D. Aller and G. F. McElwee. A Board of Missions was appointed, consisting of K. A. Moore, E. C. Gilbert and H. H. Hoffer. Also a Board of Incorporation, composed of G. F. McElwee, E. D. Aller, J. K. Paxton, K. A. Moore, E. C. Gilbert and H. H. Hoffer.

G. F. McElwee was originally a member of the Iowa Eldership, having received his first license from that body in 1870, along with B. F. Bolton, R. M. Pine, J. S. Miller, L. F. Chamberlin and several others. He was appointed to the mission in Page county, Iowa, and Nodaway county, Mo. For reasons which do not appear, he was more or less indifferent to his relations to the Eldership, as he was not heard from in 1871; was not mentioned in 1872, and marked "absent" in 1873. From his mission field in the Iowa Eldership he went to Kansas, and in 1874 reported by letter to the Iowa Eldership. He was a man of good natural talents, who made a favorable impression wherever he went. He manifested quite an interest in the work in Kansas and Nebraska, and was present at the Nebraska

Preliminary Eldership, in 1874, and acted as one of the Clerks. When the Eldership was regularly organized, in 1875, he was chosen Speaker, and was appointed to the Blue River circuit, in Nebraska. He was again elected Speaker in 1876. Between 1875 and 1880, he was employed part of the time by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, and gradually became less active in his relations to the Nebraska Eldership.

The territory of the Nebraska Eldership originally included the whole State of Nebraska and part of the northern tier of counties in the State of Kansas. Later these counties were given to the Kansas Eldership. The Constitution which was adopted at this first session has been amended at several subsequent sessions. It provided that the name shall be "The Nebraska Eldership of the Church of God," later changed to "churches." The membership shall consist of "regularly licensed teaching elders and ruling elders chosen by the local churches." The Standing Committee was made "trustees of the Corporation during the intervals between meetings of the Eldership." It has power "to fill all vacancies in any of the offices." The "Corporation" was a distinct thing from the Eldership, as its "annual meetings shall be held with the meeting of the Eldership; but meetings may be held at other times." The Corporation was also "a Home Missionary Society."

2nd Nebraska Eldership.—The proportion of territory occupied in Nebraska and Kansas respectively is seen in the record of the second Eldership session. Seven circuits were reported when the Eldership was constituted, two of which were in Kansas. The body convened at Barkey, Gage county, Neb., September 6, 1876. There were four teaching elders present, and five ruling elders. McElwee was elected Speaker; E. D. Aller, Stated Clerk, and J. K. Paxton, Transcribing Clerk. The Constitution was amended as the first item of business, so as to provide for "one ruling elder appointed and sent by each church to act as delegate," which "shall be entitled to full membership." Article X. was also amended so as to give the Standing Committee power to grant licenses, to make such changes in the appointments as may become necessary, and to fill vacancies, and to try ministers upon preferment of charges, and to suspend, but not to expel. A new field of labor had been opened in Jefferson county, and was reported to the Eldership, by Joseph Broady. The necessary measures were taken to secure an Act of Incorporation. The Eldership readily acquiesced in actions of the General Eldership relative to the collection of missionary funds, and the ministers were instructed "to take up missionary collections in each church on their charges." And one evening was devoted to missionary interests. Each church in the Eldership was also "requested to organize a missionary society as soon as practicable." It was agreed that ministers move to new fields of labor in October. On Temperance the Eldership pledged itself "to use all honorable means in our power to stop the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage." And it classed "the use of tobacco as intemperance." The By-Laws were so changed as to close the Eldership session each year with an ordinance meeting. In ordaining ministers a "charge" was delivered, and "the licentiates were fellowshipped by all present in the midst of shouts of praise to God." A committee to define the boundaries of circuits reported nine fields of labor, two of which were in Nemaha and Marshall counties, Kansas. Those in Nebraska were in Saline, Polk, York, Seward, Fillmore, Jefferson, Gage, Lancaster and Richardson counties. The work in Jefferson county soon enlarged to such an extent that the Standing Committee divided it, and made two circuits, increasing the total number of fields to ten.

3rd Nebraska Eldership.—Quite a perceptible increase in the numerical strength of the Eldership is noticeable as it was constituted at the Barada Bethel, Richardson county, Neb., August 29, 1877. There were enrolled and present eight teaching elders and nine ruling elders, and also two delegates. George E. Ewing was elected Speaker; C. S. Bolton, Clerk; Jay C. Forncrook, Financial Clerk, and E. C. Gilbert, Treasurer. The grasshopper plague had so crippled the churches financially that collections ordered had not been lifted, and the Eldership requested the General Eldership to exonerate it from all collections for its funds. Nevertheless, the Board of Missions had appropriated $200.00 to three of its missionaries. There were five additions to the Ministerial Roll, three from other Elderships, and two licentiates—Jay C. Forncrook and Franklin M. Wixon. Provision was made for a Widows' Fund, and a collection was ordered to be lifted for it in April. "A Course of Studies for young ministers" was arranged, and studies prescribed for the first year. By resolution the Eldership "especially urged the young brethren in the ministry to use their best efforts to acquire a more general education." A more complete course of studies was to be prepared to be acted upon in 1878. The Report of the Treasurer showed but $28.65 receipts; but the Eldership directed that he "be required to give bonds of one thousand dollars." The holding of a Ministerial Association was approved. At the close of the Eldership the Boundary Committee's Report made twelve appointments, of which three were missions.

4th Nebraska Eldership.—The want of proper care in ordaining men to the ministry seems always, in the earlier years of Elderships, to have been one great source of weakness. As a result, names were dropped and unworthy ones dis-fellowshipped by harsher measures, and the cause suffered harm. When the Fourth Nebraska Eldership convened and was constituted at White Hall, near Centralia, Nemaha county, Kas., September 4, 1878, ten teaching elders were present, and thirteen ruling elders. Five ministers were absent. One was received by transfer from the Iowa Eldership, A. L. Nye; one from the Michigan Eldership, A. B. Slyter, and C. Manchester was ordained. His significant record stands on the Journal. "On motion, the following names were dropped from the Roll of ministers of the Nebraska Eldership." There are entered six names. The organization was effected by the choice of E. D. Aller for Speaker; P. K. Shoemaker, Clerk, and P. Shaw, Treasurer. The bethel at Vermillion, Kas., was in "danger of being lost" because of debt. The community was asked to pay one-third of it; the Nebraska Eldership to pay one-third, and "the Board of Missions of the General Eldership be earnestly requested to pay the remainder." Several persons to whom the Eldership declined to give licenses to preach were recognized as useful workers, and were commended to the churches and placed "under the care of regularly licensed ministers." The Eldership appointed the "committee to prepare a program for the Ministerial Association." The Stationing Committee arranged the territory into one station, two missions and ten circuits.

5th Nebraska Eldership.—In 1879 the Eldership convened at Barkey, Gage county, Neb., October 1st. Fourteen fields of labor were represented by twelve teaching elders and twenty-one ruling elders. Four teaching elders were absent. E. D. Aller was chosen Speaker, and G. W. Mellinger, Clerk. Provision was made whereby "all property held by virtue of any deed, gift, grant or trust, by any church organization, when the church organization becomes extinct, shall be vested in this Eldership." Under this action the Eldership at once claimed title to a lot in Flrth, Neb., bought and paid for by K. A. Moore, for the use of the church at said place, and "the church having no organized form as recognized by this Eldership," ordered that a deed "be executed for the said lot of ground to the said K. A. Moore." "Auxilliary missionary societies" were directed to be organized in each church "to raise as much money, however little, as they possibly can, not to go beyond moral obligations." There were three or four sharply contested questions, on which the yeas and nays were called; but after the storms there was quiet and peace. One of these was a resolution pending the adoption of the Report of the Standing Committee, when it was decided that "on our behalf the Standing Committee erred in allowing themselves and witnesses to be sworn." The state of religion was declared to be "better than any previous year." To prevent personal grievances from being ventilated in open session it was decided that "no business relating to individuals or churches wherein disaffection exists shall come before this Eldership for its action further than to refer it to a committee, the report of which shall be received and adopted or rejected without discussion." Eleven fields of labor were arranged, one being a mission in Phillips and Norton counties, Kas., in the north-western part of the State, with J. C. Forncrook as missionary. On his return homeward after the Eldership P. Shaw organized a church at Ash Creek, on the Otoe Reservation, thirty miles from where the session was held. The Reservation was part of Barkey circuit, assigned to Shaw.

6th Nebraska Eldership.—The ministers of the Nebraska Eldership were of resolute purpose, not daunted by adversity, nor influenced by worldly allurements. They would preach and push forward the work to the extent of their powers. Yet some had "agricultural aspirations," and so the whole Eldership in 1880, led by Forncrook, Miller and Kilmer, was asked to place on record a resolution "that we, the preachers of the Nebraska Eldership, will follow the plow as the last resort, and that by the prayers and liberality of the brethren and the blessing of God we will stick to our calling." This session of the Eldership was held at Wayland (Victor), Polk county, beginning on Tuesday evening, September 21st, with the Opening Sermon by J. C. Forncrook, from Heb. 1. 1, 2, 3. Twelve teaching elders were present, and nine were absent; with eight ruling elders and nine messengers. E. D. Aller was elected Speaker; J. T. Clement, First Clerk; J. C. Forncrook, Second Clerk; J. S. Kilmer, Financial Clerk. Trespassers on the territory of the Eldership were warned by a resolution, that the whole State belongs to the Nebraska Eldership exclusively, and that it "will be regarded as a breach of the Rules of our system of co-operation should there be any innovation on the rights of the Eldership, and will be resisted as such." The Eldership discussed the question seriously, "How shall we support our ministers, and thus enable them to devote their whole time and all their powers to their calling?" The brotherhood was "urged to put forth every effort in their power" to this end. It also expressed its conviction that "to carry on the work successfully we must make it more effective, raise the necessary funds to meet the required demands," and zealously co-operate in every department of the work. A special sitting was devoted to the discussion of "such financial policy as will recuperate our finances and enable us to carry on the good work." C. Manchester took a transfer to the Kansas and Missouri Eldership. The Eldership acknowledged that it was "greatly deficient in educational qualifications," and hence "heartily endorsed the efforts to establish an institution of learning to be owned and controlled by the Church." "All the members of this body," it declared, "and all lovers of our race and of our God, are morally bound to do all in their power to suppress, banish and exterminate the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating drinks." It expressed opposition to the transfer of the northern counties in Kansas to the Kansas Eldership. The condition of the churches morally was generally encouraging. A Ministerial Association was provided for, in May, 1881. Nine fields of labor were mapped out, to which eleven ministers were assigned.

7th Nebraska Eldership.—As the General Eldership in May, 1881, made the boundary line between Kansas and Nebraska the northern boundary of the Kansas Eldership, against which a protest was adopted by the Nebraska Eldership in 1880, at the session held at Uebels, Saline county, October 6-8, 1881, it adopted a resolution stating, that "with regret we acquiesce in the action of the General Eldership in granting the territory of northern Kansas to the Kansas Eldership." The session was presided over by Jesse Evans, Speaker; and J. C. Forncrook was Journalizing Clerk; D. B. Zook, Transcribing Clerk; J. H. Barkey, Financial Clerk, and C. S. Kilmer, Treasurer. The body expressed its abhorrence at the assassination of Garfield, and a special committee voiced "the respect and sorrow of this body occasioned by the death of so noble and virtuous a man." On the ground of "illegality" certain actions taken in 1880 were declared "void." The action of the General Eldership in appointing "a Secretary and Collecting Agent for the purpose of forwarding the mission cause" was greatly appreciated. The Crete church property, at Crete, belonged to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and a resolution was agreed to, asking its transfer to the Nebraska Eldership. The policy of issuing licenses to exhorters was approved, and two exhorters were licensed. A Judiciary Committee was added to the list of committees. A Ministerial Association was provided for, and it was agreed "that in connection therewith we have a normal class." The project of "establishing a Church School by the General Eldership" was cordially endorsed, with a "prayer that able and liberal friends of the school may be multiplied until it is made a glorious success." A Sunday-school Convention was provided for in connection with the Ministerial Association, and committees on programs for both were named. The Church "people everywhere" were "encouraged to labor earnestly to advance the interests of the Union Sunday-schools within our bounds." Nine fields of labor were reported by the Stationing Committee, with fourteen appointees, three of which were in the employ of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership.

8th Nebraska Eldership.—Twelve of the twenty teaching elders of the Eldership failed to respond at Roll call when the eighth session began at Indian Creek, Fillmore county, September 20, 1882. And but four delegates were in attendance. The Opening Sermon was preached the previous evening by A. G. Bogart, from Isa. xxviii. 16. Jesse Evans was made Speaker; D. B. Zook, Journalizing Clerk; J. C. Forncrook, Transcribing Clerk, and J. A. Horton, Treasurer. In Kansas and Iowa Prohibition was voted upon and carried as a Constitutional Amendment in 1880, and the Eldership "congratulated the temperance people of Kansas for their grand victory," and the body pledged itself "to do all in our power to place Nebraska third in the rank among the noble States which dare to stretch forth the mighty hand of the Law to 'rescue the perishing.' " The state of religion was reported as "generally good." The Treasurer was required to give bond in the sum of $200.00. There being so many absentees, a resolution was adopted, expressing "the sense of this body that every minister holding a license ought to meet with us, if possible, and at least honor the Eldership by sending a report of his labors." This was emphasized by renewing the licenses of absentees, and placing them in the hands of the Standing Committee awaiting their reports. Provision was made for the Speaker to preach the Opening Sermon of the succeeding Eldership.

9th Nebraska Eldership.—After the organization of the Eldership at Possum Hill School-house, Saline county, September 13, 1883, the Speaker, W. J. Harris, was authorized to name "a committee of three on Constitution and By-Laws, to report at the next session." Moore, Zook and Aller were appointed. That "ministers may be able to act intelligently when called to a place in which they must decide parliamentary questions" they were requested to study Cushing's Manual, which was adopted to govern the Eldership. Rejoicing over the success of prohibition in other States, the Eldership resolved to "do all in our power to place our own State in line with all others" on this question. "A warm discussion" followed a resolution from the same Committee "greatly deprecating the use of tobacco" and pledging the Eldership "to discourage its use, especially among the ministers of this body;" but it was adopted after thus amended. Churches were "urged to organize home missionary societies." Action was taken "to constitute a fund for the support of widows and orphan children of deceased ministers." Each minister was required "to pay $1.00 into this Fund when making his annual report," and "each member of the Church" was "invited to pay annually 25 cents into this Fund." The death of P. Shaw, "a good man of God, an earnest defender of God's word and a wise counselor in our deliberations," was sincerely lamented. He was first licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, in 1840. Fornecrook was transferred to the Illinois Eldership. These losses were partly made up by the addition of several new men. The bethel at Barada was partly wrecked by a storm, and a committee was "appointed to devise ways and means to rebuild it." The appointments numbered twelve, but there were several quite inadequately supplied. D. B. Zook, Clerk of the Eldership, apologized for the oversight by the Eldership to elect delegates to the General Eldership in 1884. Probably for want of funds in the treasury, J. A. Horton, Treasurer, made no report.

10th Nebraska Eldership.—The committee to draft a Constitution and By-Laws were ready to make its report when the Eldership convened in 1884. It recommended that "the Articles of Incorporation as recorded in the Secretary's office at Lincoln be adopted" as the Constitution. These Articles give the name as "the Nebraska Eldership of the churches of God." The object is "to give legal existence to the Eldership." The membership is to consist "of regularly licensed teaching elders, and ruling elders chosen by the local churches." Officers provided for are "a Speaker, Stated Clerk, Treasurer, Board of Missions and Standing Committee." These constitute the Board of Incorporation. The Standing Committee shall act as trustees between sessions of the Eldership, and shall fill vacancies. The Corporation shall hold its annual meeting with the meeting of the Eldership. It shall also be a Home Mission Society. When, after the Opening Sermon by W. T. Harris, on September 3, 1884, the Eldership convened for business on the morning of the 4th, seven teaching elders were present, and eight absent. Six ruling elders were also present, and one exhorter. Harris was elected Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and J. A. Horton, Treasurer. By-Laws to govern the body while doing business were adopted; yet they also provided that each local church shall "organize and control a home missionary society." The question, "What position shall we assume on the prohibition agitation?" was discussed by Aller, Moore and others, and several sittings later the Committee on Temperance reported, that "we will not be satisfied with a law upon this subject short of entire prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all intoxicants of every form and character." The Home Missionary funds were "transferred to the Contingent Fund until enough Contingent funds can be raised to replace them." The "setting apart of the first Lord's day after the Week of Prayer as a day of fasting and prayer for the general prosperity of the Church," as recommended by the General Eldership of 1884, was "heartily endorsed." The session of the Eldership was held in the Friendship school-house, Gage county, "the Board of Directors having suspended school for one week and opened their school-house, and welcomed this body into their building."

11th Nebraska Eldership.—The eleventh session of the Nebraska Eldership had the gratification of enrolling as advisory members two ministers of the Free Baptist Church, L. B. Wharton and A. D. Williams. The latter "made a cordial response, recalling some of his associations with the former standard bearers of the Church in the East." He contributed to The Advocate an interesting report of the session. He was reminded "of the old East Pennsylvania Eldership forty years ago. There was the same devotion, the same earnestness, the same responsive heartiness, the same sharpness of conflict and the same generous fraternity after it was over; the same earnest contending for cherished opinions, and the same readiness to fight whatever may oppose, coupled with the same burning fire of personal devotion." The session was held at Barkey, Gage county, beginning October 22, 1885. On the evening of October 21st J. L. Jackson preached the Opening Sermon. Eight fields of labor, with six pastors and six ruling elders, were enrolled; also ten "local ministers and one exhorter." E. D. Aller was chosen Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and J. L. Jackson, Treasurer. By invitation Dr. Williams "made a statement of the success of the Free Baptist Church, and gave the plan of its system of co-operation." As he was Corresponding Messenger of the Free Baptist Association, the Eldership appointed Aller and Zook "delegates to the next Yearly Meeting of said brethren." The Eldership placed itself on record in favor of unfermented wine in the Communion, "in order to avoid the possibility of evil, or even the appearance of it." A radical change was made in the system of Co-operation. It was directed that "the State be divided into three districts, and that a man be appointed in each district to assist the pastors in their work; to incite the brethren to a better support of the ministry, and to build church houses and contribute to our various Funds; to heal divisions, to promote harmony and co-operation, and to have a general supervision over the whole work in his district." The "need of more consecration, both among the ministry and laity," was emphasized. The poverty of ministers "from the extreme northwest" was recognized in the action directing that on "Sabbath morning and evening collections be held to help these brethren to return to their fields." The organization of missionary societies in the churches was strongly insisted upon. As directed, the Stationing Committee divided the territory into three Districts, with a Superintendent for each one. There were seven circuits. The "local workers," were "recommended" to the different Superintendents.

12th Nebraska Eldership.—During the year the Eldership sustained a serious loss in the death of A. B. Slyter. Death is a terrible leveler. It not only "mows down all with an impartial hand;" but in the grave there is no distinction. Yet in character, talents and efficiency in service not all are of the same rank, and so the Nebraska Eldership could justly lament the death of Slyter as that of "an able preacher of the gospel and a wise counselor." He was originally licensed by the Indiana Eldership in 1856. The session of the Eldership in 1886 was held at Janesville, Custer county, where the Opening Sermon was preached on the evening of October 6th, by J. W. Adams, from I. Tim. iv. 16. Eighteen teaching and ruling elders were in attendance. The officers elected were C. S. Kilmer, Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and J. L. Jackson, Treasurer. One minister was required to confess that he had done wrong "in expelling a member from a church not strictly according to the word," with a promise of forgiveness. The confession followed. Sympathy was expressed for "the members of this body given to the bad habit of the filthy use of tobacco," and the Eldership declared that it "earnestly, prayerfully and feelingly invites, persuades and urges all of them immediately to cease using it in any form." It also pledged itself "not to vote for any candidate whom we know to be against the submission of the temperance question to a vote of the people." The tendency of "teaching elders to stand aloof from local membership" was disapproved, and they were required "to hold membership in some local church." There being "too much slackness in observing the ordinances," the Eldership gave it as its judgment that "each minister in charge of a work should hold ordinance meetings as often as once a quarter." The building of houses of worship was strongly insisted upon, and each minister was "requested to urge upon the people the great need of this work." The plan of districting the territory and appointing "Superintendents" was disregarded, and the Stationing Committee appointed the ministers to nine circuits, on several of which two were appointed, and on a few others one pastor with one and two "helpers."

13th Nebraska Eldership.—The "borrowing" of money from funds of the Eldership to be replaced later by collections was not uncommon, usually from the Home Mission Fund. To pay funeral expenses the previous year this was authorized by the Eldership. Wherein this differs from misapplication of funds by officials of institutions of a financial character is a question in casuistry not raised by the Nebraska Eldership. It held its thirteenth session at Kilmer, Lincoln county, beginning October 1, 1887. The previous evening J. W. Adams delivered the Opening Sermon, from Acts ii. 42. There were twenty teaching elders and nine ruling elders present. J. W. Adams was elected Speaker; D. B. Zook, Journalizing Clerk; C. S. Kilmer, Financial Clerk, and Eli Stark, Treasurer. To raise the amount which the Board of Missions of the General Eldership asked, an assessment was made on the different circuits. The By-Laws were amended so as to have "ministers change fields on the first of November following the meeting of the Eldership, instead of the first of March." The Report on Temperance affirmed the extreme position that "the responsibility of our saloon system lies upon us," and hence the duty "to cry aloud and spare not until victory shall crown the effort to drive out of our land alcoholic drinks as a beverage forever." The state of religion was encouraging, as "bethels had been built, churches have been greatly strengthened, new churches have been organized and the ministry and laity feel greatly encouraged to prosecute the work." The negligence of "brethren holding positions of trust in not attending to their duties promptly" was "earnestly condemned," and a specific "vote of censure upon the past Treasurer for his negligence" was adopted. Money "borrowed" from the Missionary Fund in 1886 had not yet been replaced, and ministers were again "urged to raise money to replace said missionary money." The territory was divided into ten circuits, with one "General Worker."

14th Nebraska Eldership.—The territory of the Eldership being very large, during the year an effort was made to create sentiment in favor of a division of the Eldership. But when the question was submitted to a vote it was decided in the negative. The session was held in Berwyn, Custer county, beginning October 18, 1888, and was attended by eleven of the twenty ministers, and by nine ruling elders. J. W. Adams was Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and Eli Stark, Treasurer. The year had been a less successful one than the previous one, yet all were "hopeful for the future." However, the reports showed about two hundred conversions, "the organization of three or more churches," and the erection of one bethel. The only funds received by the Treasurer were $6.00 Home Mission money from Zook. The date for the Ministerial Association was fixed for Saturday preceding the meeting of the Eldership. A parsonage at Waco, "useless to the church," was ordered to be sold, the net balance to be paid toward the new bethel at Thayer. It was resolved to "strike at the head of the serpent of intemperance in word, deed and by our vote." A call was received from Frontier county for a missionary. E. K. Howe was appointed. There were nine other circuits, for three of which the Eldership could not furnish pastors. As Henry Gardner had arranged to locate in the State of Oregon, and offered "to pay the fare out and back of J. W. Adams, provided he will agree to go with him and remain until a work for the Church has been started and organized," the Eldership recommended him to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership for an appropriation to assist him in said work.

15th Nebraska Eldership.—The Waco parsonage was sold, as ordered, during the year; but the bethel at Thayer was not built, as anticipated. Hence the Eldership did not meet there in 1889, as was proposed, but at Rosemond School-house, near Thayer, York county, the session beginning on October 3, 1889, with the Opening Sermon the previous evening, by D. B. Zook, from John xii. 27. The officers elected were E. D. Aller, Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and C. S. Kilmer, Treasurer. The attendance was small, only eight of the twenty-one teaching elders being present, and three ruling elders. And while the work was characterized as "drooping," reports showed that "over two hundred have been converted, one hundred and twenty-six added to the Church, and we are hopeful for the future." The Eldership took a positive stand for Prohibition, and the Report adopted was of unusual length. It declared that the liquor traffic is destructive to national existence in any form, and especially to our peculiar form of government," and hence the Eldership declared "that prohibitory laws are indispensable to the triumph of the temperance cause; that the license system is a most prolific, and standing paramount as an auxiliary in the great devastation and ruin resulting from its power." "People who have the interest of humanity at heart" are "urged to support at the ballot box all men and measures calculated to destroy the traffic." The Eldership "will boldly move to the entire prohibition of the liquor traffic." Of the three brethren ordained to the ministry was John Swanson, a Swede, who desired to preach among his countrymen. The Eldership did not have the men to supply two of the eleven circuits. Several points once quite promising had gone down, among them Crete, where the work was at first quite encouraging; but at this time the church had become extinct, and the property was placed in the hands of a committee to sell. "The Uebel Bethel is going to ruins," was the committee's report. K. A. Moore and John Kilmer, "faithful and efficient laymen, who were among the important factors in the origin, growth and development of this Eldership" were called to their final reward, and were sincerely lamented.

16th Nebraska Eldership.—As in most of the annual Elderships, so in Nebraska, conformity to the action of the General Eldership in 1890 reduced the published Minutes to a minimum. The Church at large remained uninformed and uninfluenced by their transactions. The Nebraska Eldership met in 1890 at Victor School-house, Wayland, Polk county, September 25th. E. D. Aller preached the Opening Sermon. The day preceding, the Ministerial Association held its meeting. D. B. Zook was elected Speaker, and H. G. Moore, Clerk. The territory of the Eldership extended over the following counties: Gage, Saline, Fillmore, Clay, York, Polk, Custer, Sherman, Lincoln and Frontier. A colony of Swedes had received the doctrines of the Church, and John Swanson, who was of that nationality, was "recommended to labor among the Swede people as a pastor, and to preach to them in the language of their native country." Including this mission, there were eleven fields of labor, Frontier county being "in the hands of the General Worker, A. Wilson."

17th Nebraska Eldership.—"The most pleasant and harmonious meetings of the Nebraska Eldership," it was held, were enjoyed at the session in 1891. There were indications of progress and prosperity, which always work for peace and harmony. After parts of two days spent in the Ministerial Association, the Eldership, on the evening of October 14th, listened to the Opening Sermon, delivered by H. G. Moore, from Jer. xxiii. 28. E. D. Aller was chosen Speaker; H. G. Moore, Clerk. The session was held at Lone Tree, Custer county. The attendance of the people was so large, especially when the ordinances were observed, that "the house was crowded from end to end, and side to side, with more on the outside." The number of fields of labor as outlined by the Committee was twelve. Sheridan county was one of the circuits. With the two newly licensed ministers, twenty-two were on the Roll.

18th Nebraska Eldership.—Being largely a mission field, the Nebraska Eldership, and the women of the churches, readily fell in line in the new movement started with the organization of the Woman's General Missionary Society. A State W. M. S. was formed, which met with the Eldership in 1892, and gave increased interest. It requested "the Eldership to unite with it in inviting Sister M. B. Woodworth to hold one or two meetings in the bounds of the Eldership." The session was advertised to be held at Lone Elm Bethel, Custer county, October 6, 1892. But D. B. Zook, who preached the Opening Sermon, October 5th, notes that it was held at Pleasant Valley, Sherman county. The officers were E. D. Aller, Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and Silas Miller, Treasurer. Two ministers, "charged with insubordination," were tried before "the Judiciary Committee;" the "charges sustained," and "the names dropped from the Ministerial Roll." The churches, according to the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion, were "below the model standard established by the Apostles." Assessments were made for the different Funds, aggregating $120.00. The work among the Swedes was continued, but the number of fields of labor was reduced to nine. To give wider publicity to the actions of the Eldership, and so of all the Elderships, and to secure their preservation in permanent form, the Eldership "instructed the delegates to the General Eldership in 1893 to work to arrange a plan to have the Journals published in pamphlet form, with all the Elderships combined."

19th Nebraska Eldership.—The Nebraska Eldership in 1893 manifested a more hopeful and aggressive spirit. Conditions generally were improving; there was a better attendance at the annual meeting, and unity and harmony prevailed. The session was held at Pleasant View, Frontier county, beginning October 19th, and continuing during the 20th and 21st. On the evening of the 18th Richard Bellis delivered the Opening Sermon, from John III. 3. Nineteen of the thirty-one teaching elders were present, and seven ruling elders and delegates. C. S. Kilmer was elected Speaker, and Richard Bellis, Clerk. There was an important addition to the membership when A. Wilson was received by transfer from the Iowa Eldership. A minister of the Missionary Baptist Church was received and licensed. "The dollar plan of raising the means to liquidate the debt on Findlay College" was endorsed, and the ministers pledged themselves "to do our utmost among our people to raise the money at an early date." As to conditions in the Eldership, it was agreed that "the outlook is hopeful, and the watchword is upward and onward;" but there was "great need of more earnest, faithful laborers." The Eldership declared "legislation a sham that encourages in any way the open and deliberate dealing out of the health-destroying, soul-ruining and heaven-defying poison" of intoxicating beverages. The Eldership had a Monument Committee, to procure funds and erect certain monuments over the graves of deceased ministers. The ten fields of labor were all well supplied, some of the pastors having assistants, two of the circuits being supplied alternately by five ministers. Those ministers "not appointed to fields, to work in conjunction with pastors, and in all ways possible to plant the standard of the Church among the people." Perkins county was added to the list of counties in which at least one church had been organized.

20th Nebraska Eldership.—Hard times in the year 1893-4 interfered seriously with Church work in Nebraska. The people were in need themselves in a number of counties, and their "critical and desitute condition" as the Winter of 1894 approached foreshadowed want and suffering. Appeals were made for "contributions in clothing or otherwise" to keep them in comfort during the Winter. It was in the presence of such conditions that the Eldership convened with the church at Lone Tree, Custer county, October 10, 1894. But five of the seventeen ministers enrolled were present, and eight delegates. A. Wilson was chosen Speaker, and Richard Bellis, Clerk. The names of five ministers were "dropped from the Ministerial Roll of the Eldership." The Eldership realized "that more aggressive work must be done by both ministers and brethren; and that owing to the far-reaching drouth in our State many have become discouraged." Silas Miller, who was re-elected Treasurer, reported an aggregate amount of $51.60 in his hands. Three were ordained to the ministry, one of them a sister. A regular "ordination address" was delivered, followed by prayer. An apportionment of Missionary and Contingent funds, aggregating $55.00, was made to churches located in ten counties. Fields of labor were merged, so that there were only seven, to which were appointed seven pastors and four assistants.

21st Nebraska Eldership.—In its Constitution and By-Laws the Nebraska Eldership is known as a "Corporation." As, "This Corporation shall be known by the name of the Nebraska Eldership of the Churches of God;" "the object of this Corporation," etc.; "The officers of this Corporation;" "The Treasurer shall receive and take charge of the funds of the Corporation;" "the annual meeting of the Corporation;" "this Corporation as a Home Mission Society," etc. But it had a Woman's Missionary Society, which was actively promoting mission work in the churches, and reported to the Corporation, as it did at the session in 1895. This session was held at New Hope, Custer county, October 4-6, 1895. It was well attended by ministers, only six of the twenty-four enrolled being absent. Six ruling elders were present. D. B. Zook was the Speaker; Richard Bellis, Clerk, and Silas Miller, Treasurer. As the Ministerial Association immediately preceded the session of the Eldership, the discussion of questions handed down by the General Eldership took place there. These were put in this form: "What is the best title for our annual and general meetings?" G. W. Mizner and T. A. Moess. 2. "Is 'church' or 'churches' the proper word in connection with our meetings?" D. B. Zook and C. S. Kilmer. 3. "Is annual license preferable to life license in our Eldership?" A. Wilson and W. H. Harris. 4. "Is ordination by the laying on of hands a Bible requirement?" Eli Stark and T. D. Conklin. The vote was taken during the sittings of the Eldership without discussion, and was against a change in Eldership titles to Association; for "churches" instead of "church"; against life certificates, and in favor of imposition of hands in ordination. The Opening Sermon was delivered by A. Wilson in the evening after the first day's sittings. The Eldership had many obstacles to contend against, chief of which at this time were "their poverty and isolation from one another;" but a strong and earnest desire pervaded the brotherhood "to accomplish more for the Master in the coming year than in all the history of the Eldership." The territory was divided into ten circuits, on two of which were stationed two ministers.

22nd Nebraska Eldership.—In the Nebraska Eldership no discrimination prevailed against women as teaching elders; yet there were only a few licensed. The Roll in 1896 under "teaching elders absent, of which there were ten, contained the name of "Hattie Rousey." And of the two licentiates one was "Sister A. E. Sharpe." She had been one of the list of "ruling elders and delegates," as were also Mattie Pitt and Nancy J. Bellis, the latter State President of the W. M. S. The Eldership convened at Eldorado, Clay county, and was in session October 15, 16 and 17, 1896, eight ministers, and eleven ruling elders and delegates, being in attendance. J. H. Barkey was elected Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and Silas Miller, Treasurer. The action of the General Eldership in May, 1896, on Eldership titles was accepted, and the title of the Nebraska Eldership changed accordingly. Two churches made application to be received into the Eldership, which was granted. "Total abstinence from strong drink as a beverage" was the expressed belief of the Eldership, and this faith was to be impressed upon the minds of children by their parents. Prayer was emphasized as a "means by all Christians, to the end that the curse of liquor selling may be blighted, routed and destroyed." An assessment of $72.00 was levied on the churches for Missionary and Contingent Funds. The ministers were engaged in arduous labors, under great privations, so that the W. M. S. through its officers expresses an "earnest longing to be instrumental in helping them to bear their hardships." While they had organized several local societies, "the failure of crops for so many seasons proved disastrous, and many of the societies became extinct by removals and discouragements." There were eleven fields of labor, all supplied with pastors except Polk county. Hattie Rousey was appointed to do missionary work in Wyoming, and John A. Swanson was the Eldership Evangelist.

23rd Nebraska Eldership.—In making up the Roll of the Eldership in 1897 there were eighteen ministers, of which number twelve were present; eleven ruling elders, and seven delegates, two of which were women. These delegates took the places of absent ruling elders. Also three exhorters, two of which were women, as was also one of the teaching elders. Thus constituted, the Eldership in session at Milburn, Custer county, October 7th, elected O. S. Kilmer, Speaker; D. B. Zook, Clerk, and Silas Miller, Treasurer. The names of two teaching elders and one exhorter "were dropped from the Ministerial Roll;" but two applicants received licenses. A request from an absent brother, "that the Eldership engage in prayer on his behalf for relief in a chronic disease" was answered by "appointing a committee to arrange for an hour of prayer in his behalf." On temperance there was more radical action taken, in declaring the Eldership's belief "in the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage;" in pledging itself to "work and vote to bring the State and Nation to recognize the evil of the drink habit and the sin of partnership in the business by the license system," and in charging "the license voter as equally guilty with the saloon-keeper and manufacturer in this nefarious, soul-destroying, conscience-corrupting business." As there was much "negligence in holding ordinance meetings, pastors were instructed "to hold these meetings at least once a quarter." The W. M. S. held its session with the Eldership, and made arrangements "to become auxiliary to the W. G. M. S." Unconverted persons were debarred from "holding office in local societies."

24th Nebraska Eldership.—The activity of the W. M. S. during the Eldership year 1897-8 is evidence in the funds collected and aid afforded pastors. More missionary money was collected than by the pastors and churches, and donations of all kinds for various purposes were in commendable amounts. In other respects the interests of the Eldership were not what the body "desired them to be." One token of this fact was the sale of the bethels in Dry Valley and at Uebel's, and the renting of the Crete bethel to the Christian Church. These facts had a dispiriting effect on the Eldership which held its session at Lone Tree, Custer county, October 27-29, 1898, and were reflected in the reduction of the fields of labor to nine. Of the nineteen ministers eight were absent; one exhorter, three ruling elders and ten delegates were present. The officers chosen were D. B. Zook, Speaker; R. Bellis, Clerk, and Silas Miller, Treasurer. The ministers were requested to "take up some course of systematic or normal Bible study," and plans were to be matured for a course of reading by the Eldership for the ministers. Active interest was taken in the organization and work of the Y. P. S. C. E. The practice of making assessments for Missionary and Contingent Funds was continued, one assessment being made, of which three-fourths was for missions and one-fourth for contingent expenses. The aggregate was $82.00. A Free Baptist minister proposed "to labor among us as an evangelist in the gospel ministry," and the privilege was granted him, without becoming a member of the Church or Eldership "with the understanding that he is to organize churches in the name church of God, and that he is to turn over the churches thus organized to this Eldership."

25th Nebraska Eldership.—"In the historic old sod school-house, at New Hope, Custer county, where the Nebraska Eldership has twice held its annual meeting," it convened Thursday morning, October 12, 1899, for its last session of the century. Tender sentiments clustered around "these old sod walls," "soon to be numbered among the things of the past, and to be rehearsed by the boys of to-day to their children." There assembled, on "a bright and beautiful" morning, eleven teaching elders, and fourteen ruling elders, while eight teaching elders and exhorters were absent. The official women enrolled were three teaching elders and exhorters, and two ruling elders, if the enrollment is accurate. D. B. Zook was chosen Speaker; R. Bellis, Clerk, and Silas Miller, Treasurer. The year had been one of "spiritual dearth"; but there was "wise and spiritual teaching along the line of truth and righteousness." In view of the Life Certificates ordered by the General Eldership, the Nebraska Eldership adopted special precautions for its own protection. A committee was named "to examine ministers as to their doctrinal views," and every "minister whose name is on the Roll of the Nebraska Eldership" was required to go before said committee and answer all questions propounded to him regarding his views on doctrine and polity." And only such as were "in strict accord and harmony with the doctrine and polity of the Eldership shall receive Certificates of Ordination." In addition to stalwart resolutions on the temperance question, the Eldership "deplored the attitude that the President and Administration have assumed in regard to the canteen system in the army." A. Wilson, almost a life-long missionary, desiring to retire from that form of activity, "donated his tabernacle to the Eldership," which the body accepted "for use where it may be needed." The ten fields of labor were located in the following counties: Gage, Saline, Clay, Polk, Custer, Lincoln, Logan, Sherman, Holt, Richardson, Frontier. G. W. Miznor, a "worthy brother in the ministry, was removed by the hand of death" during the year. He was first licensed in 1886. He was a man who never sacrificed principle for popularity, and he could confidently await the judgment of his collaborators in the ministry on that indictment.

26th Nebraska Eldership.—The Nebraska Eldership exercised wise prudence in disposing of the question of endorsing a private proposition to start a missionary enterprise in Armenia. John Vinson, of the Southern Indiana Eldership, during the Summer of 1900 became much interested in one Alexanian, a native of Armenia sojourning in the United States, and soliciting funds to organize a mission in his native country. Vinson conceived the idea that each member of the churches of God might give 25 cents to establish this mission, and sent a communication to the Nebraska Eldership, "urging immediate action in respect to occupying territory in Armenia." The Nebraska Eldership considered this communication at its session held at Victor, Polk county, October 4-6, 1900. It agreed to Vinson's proposition, "providing such action is considered by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, with their manner of working." This diplomatic answer can best be appreciated in the light of the fact that India was the foreign mission field of the General Eldership. This session of the Eldership was constituted of eight teaching elders and six ruling elders and delegates. Nine teaching elders were absent. Two of the teaching elders were women. Having provided for an additional Clerk, the Eldership elected D. B. Zook, President; R. Bellis, Clerk; T. A. Moss, Financial Clerk; D. B. Zook, Treasurer. The Stationing Committee, the Standing Committee and the Board of Missions consisted exclusively of ministers. The year had been one "of spiritual growth, with a system of wise teaching along the line of truth and righteousness." Before any application for license could be favorably considered, the applicant had to "answer in the affirmative certain questions relative to doctrine and co-operation." The Eldership had four different Funds, into which the aggregate sum of $142.01 was paid by the Financial Clerk, whose duty it was "to receive all moneys brought to the Eldership." A conservative position was taken on the liquor traffic, simply deciding "to hold up the truths set forth concerning it before our people, that they may be warned and the youth taught to shun the awful consequences of taking the first drink." The churches were asked "to excuse their pastors for two weeks during the ensuing year, that they may arrange to meet together at some central point for special services." Nine fields of labor were outlined, and but one remained unsupplied. These were in Richardson, Clay, Gage, Saline, Eldorado, Custer, Lincoln, Logan, Holt, Polk and Frontier counties. F. A. Sharp was to "continue his evangelistic work at Fairfax and Bonesteel, Gregory county, South Dakota, with a view of opening a field." There was a Woman's State Missionary Society, which made its report to the Eldership.

27th Nebraska Eldership.—The Articles of Incorporation, published with the Journal of 1901, provided for the legal existence of the Eldership in Nebraska. The persons composing it were the teaching and ruling elders, the latter being chosen by the local churches according to the Rules of co-operation. Its annual meetings were to be held with the meeting of the annual Eldership; but special meetings could be called. It met at the time and place where the session of the Eldership was held in 1901, Sunny Side, Holt county, October 24-26. D. B. Zook perached the Opening Sermon. It was an exceptionally small Eldership, but four teaching elders being in attendance and seven ruling elders. Ten teaching elders were absent. D. B. Zook was elected President; T. A. Moss, Clerk, and D. B. Zook, Treasurer. After organization a recess was taken, and A. H. Fuller delivered a discourse from John iii. 14. One-half hour of each morning sitting was devoted to preaching. E. M. Hickman was transferred to the Oklahoma Eldership, and F. A. Sharp requested a transfer to the Oregon and Washington Eldership; but three additions were made to the ranks of the Eldership. A Course of Studies was agreed upon for one year, and a Course for a second year was ordered to be prepared. There was some "prosperity in the work and spiritual growth in certain localities, while in others there had been no growth, and spirituality was at a low ebb." The Standing Committee was authorized to make assessments for the Home Mission Fund, Contingent Fund, and for the General Eldership delegates. Three of the nine charges were "given the privilege to make such arrangements for preaching as may be satisfactory, subject to the Rules of Co-operation."

28th Nebraska Eldership.—Studying the conditions of the Eldership in 1902 brings several exceptional facts to the surface. The Roll of ministers contained twenty names, two of which were women. The ministers lived in four counties and received their mail at thirteen post-offices. There may be a possible intimation in these facts of reasons operating against the progress of the work in the State, and the fluctuating numbers present at annual sessions of the Eldership. The body convened at Broken Bow, Custer county, in which county at least ten ministers lived, in the United Brethren house of worship, October 16, 1902. Fourteen teaching elders and seven ruling elders and delegates were present. D. B. Zook was the choice for Speaker; R. Bellis, Clerk; J. H. Barkey, Financial Clerk, and D. B. Zook, Treasurer. Each day at 10.30 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. there were preaching services. "The state of religion is very low as far as we have any knowledge," was the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion, and an earnest desire was expressed "that God will bless and revive the churches." Lack of means was given as the reason for "again appealing to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership to cancel and relieve the Eldership from all assessments until such time as the Board can appoint a man on our territory as missionary." Findlay College was recognized as "one of the foremost and best equipped institutions of learning in America." The enforcement of the provisions of the By-Laws was urged, which required each local church to organize and control a Missionary Society. Ministers were instructed to look after this matter, as complaint was made by the W. M. S. that this work is neglected, and "in some instances ministers are arrayed against the Society." Finances had improved, as the aggregate of Funds was $283.67. The fields of labor numbered eleven, all supplied but one. Two of the pastors were women—Annie E. Haycroft and Nancy S. Trout.

29th Nebraska Eldership.—An earnest appeal was made by the Clerk of the Eldership for a special effort to be made by all the churches to be fully represented at the session of 1903, and that "all the teaching elders be present, fully consecrated and ready to obey the Master's command." Nine ministers and five ruling elders and delegates responded to this appeal and assembled at Lone Tree, Custer county, Neb., September 30th, to hear the Opening Sermon, preached by Q. W. Clouse. Thursday morning, October 1st, the Eldership was organized by the election of C. S. Kilmer, Speaker; R. Bellis, Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. The Eldership keenly felt the loss by death of T. A. Moss, whom it characterized as a "grand and noble man." His ministerial life was short, as he was ordained in 1901 by the Nebraska Eldership. The removal of D. B. Zook to Sunny Side, Washington, was much deplored, as he was one of the most efficient leaders the Eldership had. The legalized liquor traffic was emphatically condemned, and "as ministers of the gospel of righteousness and as Christians," the Eldership resolved "to lift our voices to God in prayer and raise our hands everywhere possible against it." The Anti-Saloon League of the State was congratulated "on the good work" it was doing "in driving the liquor pest from our towns and from our presence." Appreciating the need of better qualified ministers, the Eldership "recognized in Findlay College an institution second to none in our broad land," and strongly urged that it be patronized. Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute was also heartily endorsed. Strong sentiments of regrets and sadness were expressed because "religion is at a low ebb, principally through neglect of duty on the part of both preachers and people." "The work is being crippled and the churches starved on account of the ministry having turned aside to serve tables." The "sisters of the Church" were asked "to take the work of organizing Woman's Missionary Societies in the bounds of the Nebraska Eldership, and to work in harmony with the General Eldership," and Mrs. R. Bellis was appointed to take up this work. The Eldership officially endorsed "the petition to the United States Senate to refuse to accept the credentials of Senator-elect Smoot, of Utah, and if found to be a polygamist, that he be expelled from the Senate." There were eleven circuits, but three of them had to be left unsupplied. A. Marks was appointed the General Worker of the Eldership, with an appropriation of $40.00 for the year.

30th Nebraska Eldership.—During the year 1903-4 the Nebraska Eldership suffered the loss by death of another of its active ministers, Eli Stark, whose "voice so often cheered us in our Eldership gatherings." He was greatly beloved by his fellow-ministers, who looked forward to "the reunion in that great Eldership above, where there will be no vacant seats." It was hoped that this cloud which rested on the Eldership as it assembled at Mt. Zion, Lincoln county, Wednesday evening, October 19, 1904, by a providential mercy, came to the Nebraska brotherhood less as a discipline than as a ministry of love. On that evening the Opening Sermon was delivered by A. H. Luther. The following morning C. S. Kilmer was elected Speaker; Alex. Pirnie, Clerk; R. Bellis, Transcribing Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. There were four of the thirteen teaching elders present, and eight ruling elders and delegates. One minister and one delegate were women. The Treasurer was the Custodian of Deeds, considerable of the Church property being deeded to the Eldership. Funds were low, as the assessments aggregated only $41.50. Ministers, however, were directed to "endeavor to assess all members of their churches from 10 cents to $1.00 for the Home Mission Fund, that the gospel may be preached more throughout Nebraska, and the churches of God may be built up." C. S. Kilmer was also appointed to call on the churches of God throughout the State and endeavor to collect money to help to build a church of God at Broken Bow." It was made the duty of all ministers living on fields of labor to "help the pastors, and also to open and organize new points." Great disadvantages and impediments had to be contended against by the ministers and churches in Nebraska; but, laboring under the compulsion of a clear and imperative duty, they girded themselves valiantly for the contest, hoping that "God will abundantly bless his humble servants, the ministers, on the different fields of labor, with many souls for their hire."

31st Nebraska Eldership.—The list of ruling elders and delegates in 1905, enrolled in constituting the Nebraska Eldership, included four sisters, who were appointed on five different committees. There were seven ministers present and ten delegates. The session was held with the church at Lone Tree, or Weissert, Custer county, October 11-15. R. Bellis delivered the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 11th. Thursday morning, the 12th, an organization was effected by the choice of Bellis for Speaker; W. R. Hodges, Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. "Memorial services" were held "in honor of our departed brother, C. W. Clouse," on Sunday at 2 p. m., when, by appointment, R. Bellis spoke of his "self-sacrificing spirit in the Master's cause and work," and three others dwelt on the high appreciation the body had of "him who though dead yet speaketh." At 4 p. m. there were "baptismal services." In addition to assessments aggregating $35.50, "Alex. Pirnie" was "appointed to collect subscriptions for Home Missions." "If possible, ministers assigned to fields of labor" were required to "move upon said fields in order to do more efficient work." Churches were directed "first thoroughly to canvass their fields and know how much they can pay a pastor, so that pastors and churches can come together understandingly, and that the churches of God may be as high upon the pathway of life, and thus become to the community in which they are situated an honor, and that their permanency may be guaranteed." It was in a measure realized that there was a wide discrepancy between ideals of church work and the resources with which to accomplish that work. This was evident in the aspirations for "erudition and culture" in the ministry and laity, "that we as a Church may be abreast with other church-going people," and in the counsel to "our brethren to acquire a full and complete education, and to study and improve their talents." Spirituality of the churches was below the standard. Against "the saloon and all other places where intoxicating drinks are to be obtained" the Eldership would "raise its voice as the voice of one man." There were six circuits, all supplied with pastors.

32nd Nebraska Eldership.—A "heavy snow storm that prevailed during the week" of October 22-27, 1906, prevented the assembling of the Eldership on the day fixed, October 24th. But on the 25th the Opening Sermon was preached by A. H. Luther; yet the business of the Eldership was deferred until the 27th, when five ministers and four delegates were present. Seven ministers were absent. H. W. Haycroft was chosen for Speaker; Alex. Pirnie, Clerk; C. S. Kilmer, Financial Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. Delegates reported for the churches, and from these reports the Committee on the State of Religion gathered that "the state of religion is very far beneath the privileges of the place where God intended the human family to attain," and the ministry was admonished to "preach a higher standard of religion, and that church and ministry live up to the standard of the religion of the Bible." Death having claimed H. W. Ward, memorial services were held on Sunday afternoon, when four members of the Eldership were appointed to speak. For fifteen years H. W. Ward had been a member of the Church of God, and was ordained a minister of the gospel in 1895, by the Nebraska Eldership. "He was always faithful and true." The Eldership was "not ready to give him up; but the Master came on the wings of lightning, and being enchanted by his smiles he went to heaven with him without stopping to say farewell to wife and children dear." He "lived to honor God and do good in the world." The Eldership being "very weak," it "most earnestly asked that the General Board of Missions send one of its members to Nebraska to confer with the ministry of the Eldership, to the end that peace and harmony may be restored, and the Board appoint a man to Nebraska." The Board had withdrawn aid from the Eldership. Weak financially as well as numerically, $25.00 were "transferred from the Home Mission Fund to the Contingent Fund." Transfers by churches of money have been repeatedly condemned. In addition to the assignment of pastors to six fields of labor, W. R. Hodges was "appointed to evangelical work in Nebraska and Colorado." The session was held with the church at Mount Zion, Lincoln county.

33rd Nebraska Eldership.—Peculiar conditions existed in the Nebraska Eldership when the body convened and held its annual session with the church at Lone Tree, Weissert, Custer county, October 17, 1907. Nine ministers were present during the sittings, nine ruling elders and two delegates. C. S. Kilmer was elected Speaker; Alex. Pirnie, Clerk; R. O. Leach, Financial Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. The "ministers are deficient as to knowledge, and we do insist that they apply themselves more diligently in the future, that they may be more able to divide the word of God for the promulgation of the gospel of Jesus Christ," said the Committee on Education, which was "accepted." The spiritual condition was lower than could be approved, and the Eldership "prayed God that he may awaken ministers, and also the members, to a deeper sense of the great responsibility resting upon them, that they may redouble their diligence to make the people see the great need of the Holy Ghost in their hearts." With a "degree of embarrassment" the Eldership "noted the financial condition of the pastors due to the non-payment of the salaries agreed upon." Deacons were urged to make "more diligent efforts to meet" these obligations, "deeming them a debt that should be paid." The Eldership also confessed that "we as a Church ought to be more zealous in our revival efforts to the building up of our Church, both spiritually and numerically." Ministers should be invited "to come into our midst and help us to build up the kingdom of our Lord." When the Stationing Committee reported, and its report was adopted, there were fourteen charges, and but four of them supplied with pastors.

A. Marks was appointed as Evangelist, with an appropriation of $50.00 for the year. One of the ministers, John Swanson, was located in Houston county, Tenn., where it was "hoped he may do great work for the Master." The want of "harmony" between the Eldership and the Board of Missions of the General Eldership was still felt, as the Eldership declared that it was "ignored" by said Board. R. Bellis and W. T. Harris were "appointed to memorialize the Board of Missions in our behalf." The ministers were instructed to "be more zealous to teach the laity their duty to the Church, and to teach the doctrines and usages of the Church of God more fully in the future than they have in the past."

84th Nebraska Eldership.—Spirituality was reported as still at "a low ebb" at the session of the Nebraska Eldership in 1908. Facts were submitted confirming this view of the Committee on the State of Religion, such as the "silence of localities" from which encouraging reports had been formerly received, and "churches which once bore the name of the church of God now nowhere to be found." Conditions were also clearly reflected in the report of the Stationing Committee, which had six fields on its list of appointments, one of which was "subject to the Standing Committee." There were gleams of light, as the body rejoiced and felt "thankful to God for the grace bestowed upon the ministers, and the faith and zeal found in them." But it realized "the need of a higher standard of education and culture, so as to increase our efficiency to do good in all departments of church work." The proposition of A. Willson "to deed eighty acres of land to the Nebraska Eldership for Home Mission purposes," inspired a hopeful spirit. The session was held at Berwyn, Custer county, and extended from Wednesday evening, October 7, 1908, to Saturday evening, the 10th. The first evening the Opening Sermon was preached by C. S. Kilmer, Sr. He was elected Speaker; R. Bellis, Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. The Eldership elected a delegate to the Woman's General Missionary Society to meet at Ft. Scott, Kas., in 1909, as it kept a careful supervision over the W. M. S. of the State. Interest in mission work was also stimulated by the contribution of $87.89 at the missionary meeting on Sunday evening. The Widows' Fund was replenished in part from year to year by the tax of $1.00 payable by ministers when making their reports. There was improvement noticeable in the finances of the Eldership. In view of the regrettable fact that intemperance is spreading in this fair land of ours," the ministers were directed "to preach at least two sermons against the spread of this evil to their respective congregations during the year, and do all in their power to bring about a better condition of things." Concern was expressed concerning the children of Church of God families, that they "might be like Timothy, who knew the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make us wise unto salvation."

85th Nebraska Eldership.—The ministers and churches of the Nebraska Eldership were considerably disburdened by the action of the General Eldership in May, 1909, as reported by C. S. Kilmer, Sr., delegate to said body. He stated, that "the General Eldership was willing and anxious to do all it could to build up the cause of the Master in the State of Nebraska." This message, delivered at the beginning of the session, gave a measure of new life to the deliberations. The meeting was held with the church at Berwyn, Custer county, the county in which the Church was strongest, beginning with the Opening Sermon on Wednesday evening, October 27, 1909, by C. S. Kilmer, Sr. W. T. Harris was elected Speaker; R. Bellis, Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. The Eldership had always been loyal to the General Eldership; but found itself financially embarrassed, so as not to be able to meet all its obligations. But it freely "placed itself on record as in harmony with the action of the General Eldership at Ft. Scott relative to the Woman's General Missionary Society." It also "instructed" its "Treasurer to pay our assessments to the General Eldership." The sisters of the Eldership organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, to co-operate with the W. G. M. S. There were other evidences of revived life, and "increasing spirituality" was reported in some of the churches, though "a lethargic condition" characterized others. The need of a better educated ministry was strongly expressed by the Committee on Education, consisting of Sarah Cotterson, Martha Hopkins and Rhoda Betts:—"We feel that a higher standard of education should be demanded of the ministerial brethren." Three names were added to the Ministerial Roll, of men willing to do active work, and whose "examination proved satisfactory." They were assigned to three of the ten fields of labor. Albert Marks was appointed "General Helper of all ministers on charges," receiving an appropriation of $25.00. "Ministers and members of the Nebraska Eldership" were exhorted "to put forth greater efforts in freeing our land from the blighting influence of the degrading liquor traffic." High commendation is due the members of the Nebraska Eldership for the heroism displayed by them under most exacting conditions. Where the spirit of sacrifice is in the nature of a service high and impersonal, one beholds something of the redeeming work of Christ, which brings honor to his adorable name.

86th Nebraska Eldership.—The Ministerial Roll of the Nebraska Eldership in 1910 numbered eighteen, one being the name of a woman, Anna Haycroft. Of this number ten were present at the thirty-sixth annual session, with six ruling elders and delegates seated by the Committee on Credentials. The session was held with the church at Mt. Zion, Lincoln county, October 13-15, 1910. On the evening of October 12th the Opening Sermon was delivered, by Richard Bellis. A lay elder, Alex Pirnie, was chosen for Speaker, and another lay elder, J. H. Know, for Clerk, while a third one, Silas Miller, was elected Treasurer. One member of the Standing Committee and two of the Board of Missions were laymen. The Eldership did not hesitate to provide for recourse to the civil law in cases of malfeasance, and so instructed the Standing Committee in the instance of one of its ministers "should he fail to account for every cent that he received" in trust for a given church. Rigid regulations were also adopted with reference to the circulation of evil reports. It was "deemed cause sufficient to suspend any member of the Eldership who shall say or write any evil about another member." They exemplified Philip Henry's reminder of the law to those who spoke evil of people behind their backs: "Thou shalt not curse the deaf." Those that are absent are deaf. The Eldership did not violate this law when in addition to the Report on Temperance it adopted a resolution, declaring that "James Dohleman, candidate for Governor of this State, has placed himself on record as an avowed enemy of society and the homes of this country," by his alliance with the liquor interests. The Eldership pledged itself to vote and use its influence to defeat him, and to elect his opponent, "who has so honorably and manly pledged himself to defend our homes, protect society and place this State on record as a civilized and God-fearing people."

87th Nebraska Eldership.—The organization of the thirty-seventh Eldership in Nebraska was deferred half a day because "the roads are muddy and the clouds are sending down their blessings upon the earth, and many of the brethren are travelling and striving to reach the place of holding the session." Instead of organizing, it was concluded "to honor the request of the Executive Board of the General Eldership by holding a special prayer-meeting, that unity and harmony and peace might prevail, that no schism or divisions should come among us." This symphony of peace was a fitting sequel to the actions of all the Annual Elderships after the years of contention growing out of the course pursued in relation to the organization of the W. G. M. S. of 1903. It swelled the louder in Nebraska because the Secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of the State could report "the Society in a very flourishing condition." On the afternoon of October 5, 1911, the Eldership proceeded to organize by electing R. Bellis, Speaker; A. Pirnie, Clerk; John Kilmer, Financial Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. Twelve teaching elders were present, and five absent; eight ruling elders and delegates, four of them men and four women. One minister, J. L. Williams, was located at Minnette, Alabama. The feeling of fraternal love in the Eldership was strong, as was made evident when Williams, and J. Swanson, of Tennessee Ridge, Tenn., and D. B. Zook, of Sunny Side, Wash., reported by letter. Their dependence upon the word of God was evinced when the Judiciary Committee declared its "inability to adjust the matter of boundary lines between fields on which any of our brethren or ministers may preach," and "recommended that the two brethren meet, with the word of God as the third party, and settle the matter satisfactorily to themselves and to all parties interested in the controversy." The Stationing Committee named eight local churches, with the counties in which they were located, to which the preachers were appointed, without "boundary lines governing the territory" on which the appointees might preach. Three, however, were unsupplied. Six were in Custer county, one in Lincoln and one in Logan. The session was held with the church at Lone Tree, Weissert, Custer county.

88th Nebraska Eldership.—On Wednesday, October —, 1912, at 8 o'clock p. m., R. Bellis preached the Opening Sermon of the thirty-eighth annual session of the Nebraska Eldership, at Berwyn, Custer county. The following morning he was chosen for Speaker; Alex. Pirnie, Clerk; Sister George Betts, Financial Clerk; Silas Miller, Treasurer. Eight teaching elders were present and eight were absent, with seven ruling elders and delegates, three of the latter being women, and one of the teaching elders. The Standing Committee was composed of teaching elders R. Bellis, W. T. Harris, W. A. Bence. The Board of Missions had teaching elders Bence and Bellis, and ruling elder Alex Pirnie as its members. The Speaker specially honored the women delegates and advisory members by placing one on the Committee on Arrangements, two of the three on the Committee on Resolutions, one on the Committee on the State of Religion, the three on the Committee on Education and two of the three on the Committee on Journals. Also two chosen as alternate delegates to the General Eldership in 1913 were Nancy R. Bellis and Kate Bence. "The state of religion is at a very low standard, and in a critical condition," was the belief of the Committee on the State of Religion. It was resolved "to do all in our power to uplift the cause of Christ in the coming year." A special hour was given to the Woman's Home Missionary Society. During the three years of its existence the Society had paid out $245.26. The Stationing Committee lacked men to supply the fields. It fixed the number of appointments at eight, but had only four ministers to assign to them, leaving the other four unsupplied. Six of the fields were in Custer county, one in Logan and one in Lincoln, adjoining counties near the center of the State. Ministers were also living in other counties of the State, and a few churches reported from other counties. A committee was "authorized to sell the church and all property belonging to the said church at Friendship, Gage county." Having ordered all its General Eldership assessments paid, the Eldership asked for the appointment of "W. A. Bence as an Evangelist for the State of Nebraska by the General Board of Missions." The prayers at the first sitting were answered, and "peace and harmony prevailed in every heart."

XV. THE MISSOURI ELDERSHIP.

1st Missouri Eldership.—As early as 1867 the first suggestion to organize an Eldership in Missouri was made. It occurred at the session of the Texas Eldership, when the annual report of J. E. Cunningham was under consideration. He had removed from Texas into south-western Missouri, and being at too great a distance from any Annual Eldership to attend its session, his Eldership, without any authority in the premises, "recommended J. E. Cunningham to organize an Eldership in Missouri." The Texas Eldership had been thus organized without authority from the General Eldership. The Indiana Eldership had as good a right to authorize D. Keplinger to organize an Eldership in Missouri, as he was a missionary in that State from Indiana. West Pennsylvania a little later had D. Blakely as its representative in Missouri. But these Elderships assumed no such authority. Perhaps it was this same spirit of independency which culminated in the organization by several ministers of the Missouri Eldership of an independent Eldership in Kansas in 1879, of which Cunningham was one. But there was no occasion for independent action, for at the General Eldership in 1869 an action was taken authorizing the brethren in the State of Kansas to organize themselves into a separate Eldership." Of this privilege the brethren in Kansas and Missouri availed themselves when, on November 13, 1871, they organized the Kansas and Missouri Eldership. But it was from the beginning a serious objection to have but this one Eldership for the two States. The distances between the main body of the Eldership and the parts of its territory in northeastern Kansas, north-western and north-eastern Missouri were too great for the ministers laboring there to attend, or the churches to be represented at, the sessions of the Annual Eldership. Accordingly the northern counties in Kansas were taken into the Nebraska Eldership, while the Iowa Eldership supplied north-eastern Missouri, and sometimes north-western Missouri. But even these arrangements did not quiet the agitation for another Eldership. Yet it was no easy problem to solve. The first attempt to solve it was made April 10, 1875, when what was called "The First Mission Eldership of the Church of God in Morgan County, Mo.," was organized. Morgan county is near the center of the State, and this Eldership was confined to that section. The ministers in attendance were S. V. Sterner and D. Blakely; lay elders, J. M. Sheckler, W. Berkstresser, W. H. Berkstresser and D. S. Berkstresser. After adopting a series of resolutions of a local character, the Eldership adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman.

There is no record that such a call was ever issued; but the boundaries of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership remained unchanged, and the work in the two States continued under its supervision. For three years matters remained quiescent, when on January 28, 1878, W. J. Howard submitted a proposition through The Advocate to organize "an Eldership embracing western Iowa and Missouri." The proposed boundaries were: "The Missouri River forming the south and west boundaries, and making the east line run parallel north and south through Des Moines City, Ia., connecting with the south boundary (the river) near Carrollton, Carroll county, Mo." In this territory were fourteen counties, seven in Missouri and seven in Iowa. There were in this territory "eight traveling preachers, and two local preachers." It was reasonable to suppose, as Howard did, that this proposition would be acceptable to the ministers and churches in the southern part of Missouri and Kansas. The proposition was seconded, February 20th, by D. Blakely, one of the traveling preachers included within the proposed new Eldership. His main plea was "the inconvenience in attending the sessions of the Eldership on account of the size of our territory." The brethren in Iowa experienced the same inconvenience. J. M. West, of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, not then living within the proposed boundaries of the new Eldership, had "some serious objections" to the proposition, which he published March 27, 1878. C. B. Konkel, living in the Kansas part of the territory of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, also objected to the proposed new Eldership. He stated that the Crawford county, Kas., Circuit Eldership would discuss the proposition at a meeting called for that purpose on April 27, 1878, and would make known its views to the General Eldership. The Iowa Standing Committee at a meeting held on April 9, 1878, adopted a preamble and resolution in which it "requests the General Eldership not to give its authority for the organization of such an Eldership." The authority was not granted, and the proposition failed. Though a time had been fixed for a meeting to organize, the records do not show that it was held.

The General Eldership in 1881 received, and acted favorably upon, "a request from brethren in Kansas, asking the privilege of forming an Eldership in said State to be known by the name of the Kansas Eldership of the Church of God, within the boundaries of the State. "As this Eldership was organized in the Fall of said year, and the first session of the Missouri Eldership was held, beginning October 6, 1881, it retained the ordinal number of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, and so goes down in history as "the Eleventh Annual Eldership of the Church of God in Missouri." On the evening of October 5th D. Blakely preached the Opening Sermon, on "Conversion." The following were present when the Eldership was constituted: Teaching elders—D. Blakely, E. Wilson, M. C. Ogden, J. N. Smith, W. J. Howard and C. S. Bolton. Ruling elders—James McNeal, John Repley, P. Heflinger and S. Kendig. Delegates—M. R. Wilson, Wilson Crawford and C. E. Bowen. W. J. Howard was chosen Speaker; C. S. Bolton, Clerk, and C. E. Bowen, Treasurer. Other names of teaching elders added to the Roll during the session were those of C. Manchester, S. V. Sterner, Wm. Peters and S. Collings. Because of "the recognition of the Kansas Eldership by the General Eldership, making State lines Eldership lines," it was resolved "that our name be hereby changed from Kansas and Missouri Eldership to Missouri Eldership of the Church of God." The former Constitution was retained, except the name. A Pentecostal meeting was directed to be held, and C. Manchester was appointed to preach the sermon. The Ministerial Association was directed to convene "on Friday night previous to the Pentecostal meeting." An appropriate resolution was entered on the Minutes on the death of President Garfield. Resolutions were adopted expressing "deep interest in our great mission work, and pledging co-operation with the General Eldership. In general terms the Eldership declared that it "stands ready with open hand and heart to help forward" the work of education. Local ministers were "earnestly requested to open out at least one new appointment each year." The ministers and churches were urged to work up Sabbath-school interests at each preaching point. On temperance there was a division of sentiment, resulting in the recommending of the first report, and the adoption at the last sitting of a new report, which expressed the "sense of this body that total abstinence from the use of tobacco and spirituous liquors is the only safe ground, and that prohibition is the best law." The Eldership started out with seven circuits—Nodaway county, Gentry and Harrison counties—Clinton and DeKalb counties, Ray and Caldwell counties, Cass county, Morgan county and Peakesville, Clark county.

12th Missouri Eldership.—Some friction between the two newly organized

Elderships in Missouri and Kansas arose when the latter disregarded the boundary lines, by "appointing T. Stephens to a field in the territory" of the Missouri Eldership. While they asked the Missouri Eldership "to sanction their act," yet the Missouri Eldership in 1882 "respectfully refused," not for want "of due respect to the Kansas Eldership, nor to T. Stephens; but simply on the ground of legality and uniformity of the body." Otherwise the session was pleasant and harmonious which was held at White Bethel, Gentry county, beginning with the Opening Sermon by C. Gaston, October 18, 1882. The membership present was composed of four teaching elders and four delegates, with one ruling elder. They made choice of E. Wilson for Speaker; C. S. Bolton, Clerk, and C. E. Bowen, Treasurer. Principally routine business was transacted. The total number of ministers of the Eldership was ten, but "only a few were in the active work." These were C. S. Bolton, E. Wilson, C. Manchester, C. Gaston, M. C. Ogden and D. Blakely, who were assigned to the six fields of labor. On temperance the Eldership declared that it "hailed with gladness the tidal wave of prohibition," and the ministers promised to "preach more frequently upon this subject, and take a more active part in the work." The receipts reported by the Treasurer were $10.40; expenditures, $5.00, but not credited to any particular Fund. The need of more active ministers was keenly felt. Two applicants for license were refused because, contrary "to our established usage," they were not present. The ministers and churches were strongly urged "to open, and assist in opening, Sabbath-schools wherever they can."

W. J. Howard was ordained by the Iowa Eldership in 1870, and the same year was appointed to North Bend, an indication that he was a man of comparatively strong natural talents. But there seemed lacking the staying powers of an energetic character, and so he was frequently changed, or had no charge. In 1871 he was sent to the Cairo circuit, and reappointed in 1872. He had aspirations for better intellectual equipment for his mission, and in 1872 he was one of a comparatively small number of Iowa ministers who constituted a voluntary "class to take the Eldership Course of Studies." But it was a temporary impulse. In 1873 he was not appointed to a field of labor. Nor in 1874, when he was absent from the Eldership. In 1875 he was appointed to Colo and Guthrie circuit. In 1876 he was sent to Page county circuit, which brought him in contact with the work in north-western Missouri. He was reappointed in 1877. In 1878 and 1879 he did not attend the Eldership, nor did he receive an appointment. He had held no official positions in the Iowa Eldership. His natural force of character and relatively strong personality were evinced when in 1880 he became a member of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership; was appointed to the Clinton and DeKalb circuit, and in 1881 was elected Speaker of the newly formed Missouri Eldership. But in 1882, 1883 and 1884 he was absent, and received no appointments.

13th Missouri Eldership.—Had the attendance at many of the sessions of the Eldership been a true index to the interest felt by the ministers, and even the churches, in the cause committed to them little progress could reasonably have been expected. But other causes accounted largely for the small number present on most occasions. This was doubtless true in 1883, and at other sessions following. In 1882 the Eldership met in the north-western part of the State. In 1883 it convened in Clinton county, the second county south of Gentry. The session began on September 13th, the Opening Sermon having been preached the evening previous by C. S. Bolton, in the Keystone Bethel. On the calling of the Roll only three of the eleven ministers of the body responded, and two ruling elders and seven delegates were enrolled. C. B. Konkel, not a member, was elected Speaker; A. D. Berkstesser, Secretary, and D. Wolf, Treasurer. To have a larger body for deliberation it was agreed, that "all the members present become members also of the Eldership, as to giving counsel advisable in the transaction of business." Konkel was "appointed to complete the canvass of the Eldership for Findlay College, which had the hearty sympathy of the body. A Ministerial Association was arranged for, to be held "at the time and place of the next annual session of the Eldership." On the state of religion the Committee reported, that "the cause of the Master has not made the progress that may have been desired, prayed and looked for;" but "good has been accomplished." And wisely the Eldership resolved "with renewed energy, vigor and courage to go on still laboring the more earnestly in the coming year." The Board of Missions of the General Eldership was asked to send an Evangelist "to visit all the churches in this Eldership and assist in holding meetings." Strong in its sentiments in favor of temperance, the Eldership denounced the Legislature for "not granting the voters of this State the privilege of voting for or against prohibition." Each minister was directed "to take up a collection for a Contingent Fund."

14th Missouri Eldership.—This session of the Eldership was a serious disappointment. The time and place were fixed at the session of 1883—Polo, Caldwell county, October 2, 1884. But "the representatives... failing to convene" on that date, and thus failing to legalize the giving of licenses, making appointments, etc., a call was made by the Standing Committee for the Eldership to meet at, or near, Versailles, Morgan county, on the 15th day of December, 1884." The Eldership accordingly convened in School-house No. 4. E. Wilson, who was to preach the Opening Sermon, was absent, and C. S. Bolton took his place, preaching from Prov. xv. 32. There were but six "representatives" present when the Eldership was constituted, three teaching elders, one ruling elder and two delegates; while nine teaching elders were absent. C. S. Bolton was made Speaker, and A. D. Berkstresser, Clerk. But three committees were appointed, individual members submitting resolutions which would have come from other committees. There was much informality in all the proceedings. The College was strongly endorsed, and its near-completion was hailed with joy and gratitude to God. The Eldership felt that it was greatly hampered in its work because "a number of our best ministers have gone to other Elderships, whilst some have fallen asleep in Jesus, thereby reducing our number so that the various fields can not be supplied." As a result, "the cause is not advancing as it should, but rather declining." The receipts of the Treasurer were a total of only $18.44. One death was reported, that of Jacob M. Sheckler, a "worthy brother," who had been a licensed minister of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership. The fields of labor numbered seven, but two of them were unsupplied. "The reports of ministers" were "not encouraging;" but the "Eldership still have hopes for a brighter future."

15th Missouri Eldership.—The Missouri Eldership had various difficulties to contend against. Perhaps the most serious of these was the disloyal spirit which developed in 1884-5, led by a few ambitious ministers. It was temporarily controlled, but to break out a few years later. The Eldership convened near Versailles, Morgan county, Thursday, January 7, 1886. It was called by the Clerk of the Standing Committee, to which only two teaching elders and two delegates responded, who, with the Treasurer and one messenger, constituted the body. The former Clerk, A. D. Berkstresser, "appointed E. Blacksten Speaker pro tem., and these two" constituted the Eldership. Seven teaching elders were absent. But one of these reported by letter, and the licenses of the other six were "placed in the hands of the Standing Committee till they report," which consisted of the two teaching elders present and one ruling elder. A. D. Berkstresser was chosen Speaker; E. Blacksten, Clerk, and Wm. Berkstresser, Treasurer. Manifestly discouraged, the Eldership, as a Committee of the Whole, declared, that "having no active ministry, and the Board of Missions having signally failed to give us any aid, we have thought best to dissolve and throw our influence with other Elderships; that from this date we give all our territory into the hands and to the control of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership." No preachers offering to take fields, the churches were "urged to employ, by writing or otherwise, as much preaching as they can until the Board of Missions of the General Eldership supply them." This was an extreme position taken for effect, as it was later resolved to authorize the Standing Committee to call the Eldership together in October following, should "the Board of Missions refuse to receive Missouri as a mission field." But no appointments were made and no provision adopted to supply the churches with preaching.

16th Missouri Eldership.—At the Eldership in January, 1886, T. F. Gardenhire applied for membership. His case, in his absence, was referred to a committee of one, S. V. Sterner, a member of the Standing Committee, "to be investigated." This was evidently done, and a license granted him, as he was the most prominent member of the sixteenth Eldership. Announcement of the meeting of the Eldership, October 29, 1886, was made by the Clerk, in response to which six teaching and ruling elders met at Gillis Chapel, Chariton county. In the absence of the former Speaker, Gardenhire was elected Speaker pro tem., and also Speaker; D. Blakely, Clerk, and W. Berkstresser, Treasurer. The churches which sent letters earnestly asked for preachers. Resolved into a Committee of the Whole, the Eldership appointed S. V. Sterner to Clark county; T. F. Gardenhire to Morgan, Mani-teau and Chariton counties, leaving Cass, Clinton Caldwell, Gentry and Nodaway counties unsupplied. Two delegates were elected to the General Eldership; but no reference was made to the action taken by the Eldership in January, 1886, nor instructions given to the delegates. So well received was an essay on Feet-washing read by D. Blakely, that he was requested to have it published in The Church Advocate. The churches were directed "to organize all useful church work, and to adopt system in church work as far as possible, so that there may be work for all and have all at work." The action on temperance was aimed at druggists, and also the saloons, claiming that the liquor business under the law was taken out of the hands of the latter to be placed in the hands of the former.

17th Missouri Eldership.—With the close of the sixteenth Eldership there seemed to be an infusion of new life, notwithstanding the spirit of disaffection which developed on the part of several ministers. An admirable spirit was manifested during the session held at Keystone, Clinton county, beginning September 29, 1887. D. Blakely was elected Speaker; J. H. Ohlhausen, Clerk, and David Wolf, Treasurer. There were three accessions by transfer from the Texas, Arkansas and Indian Territory Eldership. Also two from the Kansas and South Missouri Eldership, an independent body. The Eldership generously expressed an "earnest desire for a union of the two Elderships in this State," and appointed "a committee to confer with the members of said Eldership, and draft a plan of union, to be submitted at the next Eldership." The Eldership pronounced against "baptism as a condition of church fellowship, much less a condition of pardon, but simply an act of Christian duty." It was ordered that essays be prepared by brethren named, to be read before the Eldership in 1888, on "The True Elements of a Successful Christian Life;" "The Best Methods of Holding Special Meetings;" "The Bible Import of Temperance and the True Standing of the Church on the Same," and "The Evidences of True Conversion." Ministers were stationed on five circuits. G. T. Bell was specially appointed "to prepare an essay on The Elements of a Successful Ministry." The Constitution was amended so as to preclude a deadlock in elections by providing that "the person getting the majority of votes cast is elected, instead of a majority of the whole Eldership."

18th Missouri Eldership.—The effort to effect a union between the Kansas and South Missouri and the Missouri Elderships, made during the year, was unsuccessful, as the leaders in the former body were opposed to it. One of these was J. H. Woodberry, whose membership in the Missouri Eldership had not been discontinued. But he was "expelled from the body" in 1888. Individual members of the "Independent Eldership," however came into the Missouri Eldership, and the seceding body gradually disintegrated. There were two articles of faith on which they differed from the Missouri Eldership—congregational government and the order of the ordinances. The Eldership convened at Brackney Bethel, Bates county, September 20, 1888. Twelve ministers, five ruling elders and one delegate were in attendance. John Hendricks was elected Speaker; C. S. Brumbaugh, Clerk, and D. S. Wolf, Treasurer. A rearrangement of circuits being necessary, a Committee on Boundaries was created, which mapped out ten circuits. A few of these fields consisted of two and three counties each. The Stationing Committee added Kansas City, Mo. Thirteen ministers were appointed to the eleven charges. The Treasurer's Report showed receipts to have been only $8.01, and "a collection taken up for missionary purposes resulted in raising the sum of $1.36." "The cause of religion" was reported to be "in a favorable condition." An Eldership Contingent Fund was created, for which $45.00 were to be raised, which included "for Home Missions, $10.00." Foreign mission interests were to be brought by pastors before their congregations. The Eldership resolved to organize itself "into a Church Extension Association, the object of which shall be to assist in building houses of worship." Circuits were directed also to organize themselves. During the year one minister, W. S. Wood, was removed by death, but to prove that there is no death to the Christian; the glorious gospel takes away death. It prompted the Eldership to "establish a Widows' Fund."

19th Missouri Eldership.—The Standing Committee possessed nearly all the powers of the Eldership, and so it licensed four men during the year and made eight changes of pastors. The Eldership held its session at Oberg, DeKalb county, where on October 2, 1889, the Opening Sermon was delivered by J. H. Ohlhausen, from John xiv. 3. There were only four ministers and four ruling elders present when the organization was effected by electing a layman, J. Keisman, Speaker; J. K. Smith, Clerk, and D. S. Wolf, Treasurer. T. F. Gardenhire, who was censured by the Eldership in 1888, was again under charges, he being accused of "untruth-fulness and dishonesty." A motion prevailed "to drop his name from the Ministerial Roll;" but after recommendation, and pending a motion "embodying a severe Eldership censure," "at his own request his name was dropped from the Roll." Not only did the Eldership declare that "the spiritual rule and authority are vested in the elders of the church;" but it granted them the right to "discharge from the pulpit for lawful causes, or cause," a minister appointed by the Eldership. But the minister had the right of "appeal to a higher court." A "Literary Association" was formed, "whose members shall be subjected to a yearly course of studies, to be examined each year by a committee appointed by the Eldership." The Eldership sustained a great loss in the death of C. S. Brumbaugh "in the morning of his useful life." He was "an esteemed and much beloved brother," and the body "invoked divine strength while we drink the bitter cup of our irreparable loss." A spirit of insubordination developed in the church at Hannibal, which was organized under the labors of Mrs. Woodworth.

20th Missouri Eldership.—In proportion to the membership, the twentieth session of the Missouri "Eldership was largely attended by members south of the Missouri River, and but thinly by those to the north." It convened at the Pleasant Valley Bethel, Lawrence county, October 22, 1890. H. Edwards preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of October 21st. The election for officers resulted in the choice of J. Hendricks for Speaker; H. Edwards, Clerk, and John E. Thomas, Treasurer. Salaries paid ministers were so inadequate that it was found difficult to get ministers to fill all the appointments. But fourteen regular fields received appointees; "all other points to be supplied by the Standing Committee." D. Blakely, who had been a member "from its youth up, in all its trials, toils and crosses," decided to seek work in some other Eldership, and received "an open transfer." There was much friction in the Eldership, and "the meetings were not characterized with that degree of love and spirituality that were desired." Not the best feeling existed between ministers and churches, for while the churches were regarded as illiberal, yet they asserted their authority, and sometimes exceeded it, in dealing with pastors. Applicants for license were required to have "not only certain qualifications, but must appear in person before the Committee on License." Nearly thirty reports from churches and ministers "were good," and indicated a fair outlook for the following year.

21st Missouri Eldership.—The twenty-first session of the Missouri Eldership was not largely attended, there having been present eight ministers and six delegates. But these were encouraged with the evident tokens of progress. The session was held at Jenkins, Barry county, and began Thursday morning, September 17, 1891. On the previous evening V. B. Sutter preached the Opening Sermon. John Hendricks was made Speaker, and H. W. Allen was chosen Clerk, and D. L. Frazee, Treasurer. Twenty-four ministers who reported had their licenses renewed, while "all who had not reported were licensed, and their licenses were placed in the hands of the Standing Committee until they report." Not only did the Committee on the State of Religion report "the cause prospering;" but the fields of labor were increased to sixteen, while there were churches unsupplied. "One of the fathers in Zion's cause, J. M. Klein," was called to his eternal rest. He was one of the early pioneers in mission work in Illinois, Iowa and Missouri, who, "scorned or acclaimed, had kept his armor bright." He was originally licensed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership, in 1842. Thence he went to West Pennsylvania, and while laboring in that Eldership he was appointed one of the three missionaries to Illinois. He was "a man of fine natural abilities." Died April 21, 1891, in his 73rd year.

22nd Missouri Eldership.—In 1892 the Missouri Eldership held its session at Lone Star school-house, four miles from the county town of Bates county, beginning October 6th. On the previous evening J. N. Smith preached the Opening Sermon. A good spirit animated the body, as the past year "showed that some good was accomplished; the gospel had been preached in many new fields, and some churches had been organized." Yet for unexplained reasons the circuits were reduced to eleven. John Hendricks was elected Speaker; H. W. Allen, Clerk, and J. N. Smith, Treasurer. St. Louis was to be the scene of active labors by Joseph Shedron, while A. J. Hill was State Missionary, appointed by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. Death had visited the ranks of the ministry and removed Alfred Ellis, in whose honor "strong and feeling resolutions were adopted." He was a young minister, having been licensed in 1889. While the salaries of ministers were small, the Eldership had requested the Board of Missions to pay the State Missionary $500.00 a year. In addition to the State Missionary, the Eldership also appointed H. Gearhart State Evangelist.

23rd Missouri Eldership.—The tender fraternal feeling which was often manifested in the Elderships where ministers lived far apart, and rarely saw each other during the year, was illustrated at the Missouri Eldership in 1893. The session continued until Monday evening, when H. W. Allen preached from the words: "Finally, brethren, farewell." The body had convened with the church at Sycamore, Barry county, September 23rd. John Hendricks was elected Speaker; H. W. Allen, Clerk, and Wesley Hendricks, Treasurer. "Peace and general good feeling prevailed throughout the session." The dollar per member proposition to pay the indebtedness of Findlay College was approved, and each pastor was instructed to bring the matter before his congregations and ask for that amount. The privilege was granted the Agent of the Board of Missions, W. B. Allen, "to make collections for the General Eldership Mission Fund." The appointments were ten in number to which pastors were assigned; but certain "points" were "to supply themselves," as the Eldership did not have sufficient ministers willing to travel, though three were licensed at this session. There were eight ministers present, and twelve "lay members." Provision was made to raise $30.00 for fees to secure a State Charter for the Eldership. There were eighteen churches assessed for General Mission, and General and Home Contingent Funds.

24th Missouri Eldership.—The "open door" for the Church in Missouri is evidenced by the withdrawal several years previous of three ministers, with two churches of about seventy-five members and one house of worship, from the Baptist Church, and at this session joining the Eldership. It was the result of reading R. H. Bolton's "Plea of the Church of God." They were located in Hickory and St. Clair counties. The year had been a prosperous one, as "several churches were organized, several bethels built and quite a goodly number were converted." The Eldership met at Maple Grove, Saline county, October 11, 1894. When the Eldership convened there was no organized church at Maple Grove, but "five or six persons who had been converted to Church of God doctrine." Several ministers continued a meeting after adjournment, during which ten were converted, who, with two Presbyterians, were baptized, and "a church of twenty-two good, substantial members was formed." Sixteen ministers, two ruling elders and two delegates were present. The officers of the previous Eldership were re-elected. On temperance the Eldership voted "to use every reasonable means by voice and vote to put down the terrible evil of intemperance, and that we will not vote for any one who upholds and indulges in the intoxicating draught." The Treasurer's bond was fixed at $100.00. With unfeigned sorrow the Eldership recorded the death of D. Blakely, and commended "the life-time example to the ministerial brotherhood as worthy of emulation." He was "an acknowledged leader among men, always loyal to the Church and its doctrines." A regular Board of Trustees, consisting of five members, was elected under the Charter. The Constitution was amended so as to provide for a Transcribing and a Financial Clerk. The Eldership now had enrolled twenty-nine ministers. There were fourteen fields of labor, all supplied with pastors.

25th Missouri Eldership.—The twenty-fifth session of the Missouri Eldership was conspicuous for the radical differences on the General Eldership questions handed down and for the doctrinal declarations which it made. Some of the strong leaders on the questions submitted were voted down after discussions. On Eldership titles it was apparently assumed that the body would favor a change, and so the resolution declared that "we as an Eldership decide favorably to said change, believing it to be more in harmony with the teachings of Christ and the Apostles." But when the yeas and nays were called there were five yeas and ten nays. So the motion in favor of ordination without the imposition of hands was lost. On doctrine the Eldership pronounced in favor of the "spiritual new birth as regeneration," and against "sects teaching the doctrine of baptismal regeneration." It declared that it "will cease receiving any persons as members of the Church on any thing short of immersion as baptism." This the Clerk construed to be a "resolution on baptism as a door into the Church." The Eldership at this session consisted of twenty-eight ministers, of which only eleven were present when it convened at Shady Grove, St. Clair county, July 31, 1895. Also four ruling elders and six delegates. On the evening of July 30th the Opening Sermon was preached by C. S. Bolton. Theme:—"The Family of God." John Hendricks was elected Speaker, and H. W. Allen, Clerk, and D. L. Frazee, Treasurer. The Eldership pledged itself to "give our voice and our vote to no man to a position of office or honor who engages either in the use or sale of intoxicating liquor knowingly." It was sententious in its actions on Education: "1. We urge the study of the Bible. 2. The study of English Grammar. 3. Endorse and encourage Findlay College. 4. Heartily recommend The Church Advocate as worthy the support of all members of the Church." The Widows' Fund was "dispensed with." The territory was divided into fourteen circuits; but three were unsupplied.

26th Missouri Eldership.—The Missouri Eldership lost its oldest minister in years of active service during the year 1895-6, in the person of S. V. Sterner. Strong resolutions on his moral and ministerial character were passed. He was first licensed by the West Ohio Eldership, in 1858. Thence he removed to the Indiana Eldership, and later to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, from which he took his transfer to the Kansas and Missouri Eldership. He was above all things a practical man; but, as is generally accepted, such men do not always have the power of making their minds and personalities known to their contemporaries. The Eldership which sang his requiem held its session with the church at Lone Star, Bates county, beginning September 25, 1896. While the Eldership "believed the cause to be advancing," there were signs of decadence. But a spirit of optimism was evident, and it was stimulated by the visit of the prospective missionary to India, Clara Landes, and reports of "the noble efforts put forth by many of our sister Elderships" in missionary enterprises. J. B. Murphy delivered the Opening Sermon. Eleven ministers, eight ruling elders and fourteen delegates constituted the Eldership. John Hendricks was the Speaker; H. W. Allen, Clerk, and Alman Daniels, Treasurer. G. L. Chapman, who became a very active, earnest missionary, applied for license at this Eldership. Not being present, his case was deferred; but he was "urged to preach and labor all he can for the Master." Of the fourteen circuits five were unsupplied by the Eldership. P. L. French was designated as General Evangelist.

27th Missouri Eldership.—The ministers of the Missouri Eldership ever seemed to act under an irresistible impulse to be true to their high calling. And when adversity was apparently written over their self-denying efforts they planned better things. In 1897 there were but seven of them in attendance when the body convened at Antioch Bethel, Morgan county, September 9th. Three ruling elders and six delegates represented the churches. On the evening of the 8th H. W. Allen preached the Opening Sermon, from Mark vii. 7. They chose for Speaker, J. N. Smith; Clerk, H. W. Allen, and Treasurer, G. W. Reed. The Eldership was in arrears to the General Eldership $76.00 for several Funds, which exceeded the total collected for all its Funds per annum; yet it at once resolved to raise this whole amount and pay the debt on or before January 1, 1898. If any minister failed to "collect his pro rata of the amount, he shall pay it himself." Also each minister was "to collect $2.00 for foreign mission work." Missionary societies were directed to be organized on all the fields. The state of religion was "found to be fairly prosperous throughout the State." Feeling the need of more bethels, it was decided "to make a pro rata assessment for a building fund, and pay for the erection of new bethels as follows: for a building costing $600.00, $50.00; one costing $1,000.00, $100.00, and so on in proportion." Contracts were authorized to be made by pastors for their salaries, and the penalty for failure to pay the amount, "if the minister fill his part of the contract," was that "said church shall be stricken from the Eldership Roll." A reflection seems implied in the decision not "to ordain to the office of the gospel ministry any who are not total abstainers from intoxicants of any kind." And a like resolution on "the use of tobacco in any form" was agreed to. G. W. Frisbee was during the year "called to his eternal reward." He had been in the ministry five years, and possessed elements of usefulness had there been time fully to develop them. There were twelve circuits, all supplied, and one General Evangelist, one State Evangelist and one State Missionary.

28th Missouri Eldership.—Creeds are sometimes made by accretion. In various forms, and even by inadvertence, a body will add one article of faith after another, until they cover many essentials in theology. The Missouri Eldership was not addicted to such a practice, yet in 1898 it reached the consciousness that such a process was in progress. It at once resolved to desist, and resolved "that all records made by Elderships in the past affecting articles of faith, creeds or Discipline be reconsidered, and that we adhere to our time-honored and God-given rule of faith and practice, the Bible." It convened with the church at Lone Star Bethel, Bates county, September 2nd. Jarrett Nugen preached the Opening Sermon. John Hendricks was elected Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; H. W. Allen, Financial Clerk. The new form of Life Certificates was ordered to be issued. Neither the Eldership nor the Standing Committee was hereafter to grant licenses to applicants who failed to appear in person; and the rule was at once applied, and W. E. Tuttle, of Colorado, appeared before the Licensing Committee, passed an examination and received a preacher's license, while the applications by letter of G. Swan, Andrew Carnes and G. W. Balden were refused. After appointing pastors to nine fields of labor, and naming one as State Evangelist, the unsupplied churches were authorized to supply themselves. The extension of the work was contemplated in an action requiring "each minister having a work to hold a protracted meeting of three weeks within ten miles of his preaching point."

20th Missouri Eldership.—As a possible result of the aggressive spirit which breathed in the resolution of instructions to pastors in 1898, the number of circuits advanced again to ten in 1899. The meeting was held with the church at Black Jack, Stone county, beginning October 12, 1899. On the previous evening the Opening Sermon was preached by P. L. French. W. E. Tuttle, ordained in 1898, was meeting with success in Colorado, having organized a church in Prowers county. It worshiped in Clover Meadow school-house, but contemplated building a Bethel. The session was "pleasant and profitable," and "unanimous throughout." It took "more advanced views on College work and General Eldership interests generally" than for some years. Requests to General Eldership interests were not only urged, but in some instances implied in speeches. Except on one day of the sittings, the Eldership adjourned at 11 a. m. "to listen to a soul-refreshing sermon." Among those present and preaching was J. D. Henson, of Texas, formerly a minister in the Primitive Baptist Church, who "as a close student of the Bible read himself out of the Baptist Church into the Church of God." With such a spirit prevailing in the body, the business was largely routine. John Hendricks presided, and C. A. Marksbery acted as Clerk. One additional circuit was enrolled among the appointments. One minister was appointed State Evangelist and one General Missionary. The most of these twelve ministers were comparatively young men, or young in the work; but "the harmonious spirit and earnest resolves of the Eldership inspired them with renewed hope." The hardships they were willing to endure; but the question was whether the inability through poverty of the churches to sustain them could be overcome. They were strong men, and heroic. To endure and still endure, and to be withstood, they could without loss of nerve or temper, even if it be the acid test of strong men; but want might drive them to other fields like some before them.

30th Missouri Eldership.—During the year 1899-1900, John F. Thomas secured a Charter for the Missouri Eldership, which was approved, with the "hope that interest will increase in our great State till all are working together, and until all churches in Missouri can be cared for by us, and co-operation prevail in the entire State under the provision of the General Eldership." The session in 1900 was held with the church at Lingrove school-house, four and one-half miles southeast of Slater, Saline county, where on the evening of October 3rd the Opening Sermon was delivered. H. W. Allen presided, and Chas. A. Marksbery was the Clerk, and J. Nugen, Treasurer. The relations of this Eldership to the Kansas Eldership had become somewhat strained, growing out of the transfer of P. L. French and W. E. Tuttle from the former to the latter body. After considering the "exceptions to the act of the last Missouri Eldership taken by the Kansas Eldership," it was found that the friction grew out of a mere "technicality." The good standing of the two ministers was certified to; their "relation to the Kansas Eldership" conceded; the kind spirit of said Eldership in the matter acknowledged, and a prayer for the continuance of "the past good feeling" adopted, and so the incident was closed. The interest in the meeting was tense, and crowds were present to hear and see. An admirable spirit pervaded the session, and the ministers went to the eleven fields of labor filled with new zeal for the cause they represented. J. F. Thomas was appointed State Missionary, and H. W. Allen, State Evangelist and Financial Agent. The Eldership made a change from annual licenses to Life Certificates of ordination. It expressed hesitancy to license any one addicted to the use of tobacco. Hearty approval was expressed of "the Act passed by Congress prohibiting the sale of liquor in the Army Canton."

31st Missouri Eldership.—In some sections in the State of Missouri the churches suffered from "false teachers," "teaching the doctrines of men for the truths of the Bible." F. F. Manchester, Mission Worker, found them near Osborn, Mo., teaching "second-work sanctification and can't-sin-holiness." With these errorists the Eldership sometimes had to deal energetically, yet diplomatically, lest wheat be uprooted with the tares. The session of 1901 was held with the church at Fairview, Hickory county, beginning with the Opening Sermon on the evening of October 23rd, by J. F. Thomas, from I. Thess. ii. 14. The officers were: Speaker, John Hendricks; Clerk, C. A. Marksbery; Treasurer, J. Nugen. There were two or three applicants licensed during the year by the Standing Committee; but several good workers had removed to other Elderships, one of them, H. W. Allen, who had gone to Oklahoma. One departed to the "other room in our Father's house"—G. W. Drummond. His warfare was of brief duration, having been ordained in 1898. But his exemplary life and beautiful character were to others an abiding inspiration "to live in deeds, not years." "Few of the churches sent in their assessments," so that the Eldership was almost without funds; but a commendable effort was made to meet its obligations to the General Eldership. Some churches had "dwindled down to a few members," but had not lost their zeal. The adoption of some "systematic form of co-operation, financial and otherwise," was strongly advocated. While the Eldership emphatically endorsed all the periodicals of the General Eldership, there were "some members who fight our Church paper and Sunday-school literature, and everything else except the Bible."

32nd Missouri Eldership.—"The dark side of the Missouri Eldership" was called to the attention of the members in July, 1902, by G. L. Chapman, much of his time a very zealous missionary. "The wolf" has been in the fold, and there was much "slaughter and many wounded." There was too much laxness in the enforcement and practice of resolutions adopted. The "load we have to carry" as ministers is too heavy. But not discouraged with this view of "the progress and destiny of the Missouri Eldership," Chapman assured his brethren that "the cross is not greater than God's grace," and they "can conquer every foe." Under these conditions the Eldership convened with the church at Antioch Bethel, Morgan county, October 16, 1902, the Opening Sermon having been preached the previous evening by G. L. Chapman, from Hag. i. 4. Before organization, J. F. Thomas "delivered an address on the Missouri Eldership, showing it had done more for the advancement of the Church than many thought." H. W. Allen was elected Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; W. E. Riddle, Financial Clerk; J. F. Thomas, Treasurer. There was a peculiarity in the composition of the Committee on Temperance, as "it consisted of Sisters Mary Wyatt, A. E. Marksbery, Maud Berkstresser, Mabel Cummings, Ola Cummings and Lillie Hepford. They brought in a Report of four paragraphs. They declared "intoxicating drinks an invention of the devil." They did not "believe God ever intended us to take the wholesome fruits, and bread from many children, and feed from our animals, and put it to rot, and catch the poison which was intended to escape." They believed intoxicating drinks "to be soul-destroying and hell-supplying fluid." They asserted that the traffic in, and use of, liquor "cause more deaths than war," and insisted that as we pray for the overthrow of this evil, so "we should work in harmony with our prayers." Denouncing the use of tobacco most vigorously, the Committee "begged our Church of God brethren to consider the evil, praying God that we may soon be united in our efforts." A form of statistics adopted by the General Eldership was approved, and adopted for use by the ministers in making reports. There were nine fields of labor, all supplied, and H. W. Allen and W. E. Riddle were named for Leedy, Oklahoma.

33rd Missouri Eldership.—Encouraging words were repeatedly spoken to the younger members of the Eldership, to inspire them to hopeful endeavors in promoting Church growth in the State. None was more insistent than J. F. Thomas, a native of Missouri, who was exceedingly anxious "to see the churches of God prosper, so that when our young men enter the ministry they will not have to go to other States to find prosperous fields to work in." He knew the whole territory, as he had been General Missionary, and organized a number of the churches. He was Speaker of the Eldership which held its session at Leann, Barry county, beginning October 8, 1903; with C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; J. R. Huges, Treasurer. J. Aleshire preached the Opening Sermon on Wednesday evening, October 7th. Eleven ministers were present. President Manchester, of Findlay College, was cordially received, and the College strongly commended. Such visits, the Eldership declared, "are worth a great deal to us in the West." It is noticeable that, in making the appointments, in addition to H. W. Allen, Missionary to Western Oklahoma, J. H. Cummings was assigned to Leedy and Burmah, Oklahoma. G. L. Chapman was made the State Missionary. Saline county and Southern Missouri were to supply themselves for want of available men. Yet there were "preachers which had no work," and, who were "to open new fields and establish permanent work wherever opportunity affords."

84th Missouri Eldership.—With pardonable enthusiasm G. L. Chapman wrote of the Missouri Eldership of 1904, as "a Pentecost from start to finish." Other of "the oldest brethren in the Eldership said it was the best one they had ever attended." They rejoiced over the successful effort to pay their indebtedness to the General Eldership of over $77.00. Also over the fact that "the people are beginning to wake up to the support of the ministry." On Saturday evening six were converted, after listening to a sermon by O. A. Newlin, Principal of Ft. Scott Institute, Kansas. The session was held at Fairview, Hickory county, beginning October 20, 1904. J. F. Thomas preached the Opening Sermon, from Acts ii. 39. Theme: "The Rich Promises of the Lord to Those Who Obey." Thomas was elected Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; G. L. Chapman, Financial Clerk; Thomas Scott, Treasurer. The sentiment of the Eldership was in harmony with the General Eldership in all its interests, and it took an active interest in the questions relating to the W. G. M. S. The mission cause in its own territory was receiving renewed attention, and the fact was evidenced in that "it has reached the pocket-books." The delegates elected to the General Eldership "were instructed to request all the territory for which the Charter of the Eldership calls." The number of fields of labor was nine. And though the Eldership had to "regret the loss of so many ministers which had been transferred to other Elderships," all the appointments were supplied, with G. L. Chapman as missionary in addition to being the pastor at Rich Hill. "New work" was to be "opened by all other preachers."

85th Missouri Eldership.—The Missouri Eldership recognized the need of a form of government, and so declared in the Preamble to its Constitution that "a system of co-operation can only be efficiently carried out in conformity to certain permanent principles of government." These were laid down in the sixteen Articles constituting its fundamental law. The membership consisted of all "licensed ministers of this body, together with the ruling elders and regularly appointed delegates, and by virtue of their office the officers of the State Woman's Missionary Society." This Society was organized under its own Constitution. The officers of the Society in 1905 were:—President, Iva Crawford; Vice President, Kate Powell; Secretary, Maud Berkstresser. The short notice of change of place and the long distance for some ministers and delegates reduced the attendance at this session of the Eldership, which convened at Crane, Stone county, October 12, 1905. J. F. Thomas delivered the Opening Sermon, from John xvii. 20-22. Theme—"Union." He was elected Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; Thomas Scott, Treasurer. The ordination papers of two ministers were "revoked;" but Certificates of Ordination were granted to three new applicants. The criticism was at times openly made by ministers, that the Eldership erred in its eagerness to increase the Ministerial Roll, and hence often made mistakes in licensing unqualified men. No one justified this with the plea, that "God sent us here to make mistakes;" but they failed in reconciling their theory of a divine call to the ministry and human certification thereof. The Eldership expressed its lively satisfaction at the presence of O. A. Newlin, representing the Ft. Scott Institute. It passed commendatory resolutions, and also recognized Findlay College as "becoming one among the leading institutions of learning," and "recommended its work to the public, and urged upon the young people everywhere to attend it." In the absence of a Course of Studies, ministers were admonished "to study to show themselves approved unto God, workmen that need not be ashamed." But a committee was also created to outline a three-year Course of Studies "for all new applicants for license." Applicants were "to take the first year's studies and stand an examination before asking for a Certificate of Ordination." The Eldership "highly endorsed the action of the General Eldership on the W. G. M. S. question." It resolved to "use all means possible to preserve union on the subject among our people." A deep shadow rested on the Eldership occasioned by the "sudden removal of our worthy brother and co-worker, A. C. Denham. He was a man 'faithful in the discharge of his duties;' eminent for 'the wisdom and ability which he exercised in the Church,' and exemplary in word and conduct. There were eleven fields of labor, all supplied with pastors, and one Missionary, G. L. Chapman; one State Evangelist, J. E. Mitchell, and one General Worker, C. A. Marksbery.

36th Missouri Eldership.—There had been at this time a small body of people in Missouri, almost identical in faith with the churches of God, "known as the Presbytery of the churches of God in Missouri." Negotiations with their ministers in 1905-6 resulted in union with the Missouri Eldership. At the session of the Eldership held at Antloch, Morgan county, beginning September 27, 1906, three of the ministers were received into the Eldership, "with all the organizations of the Presbytery," which gave new inspiration, and "conditions seemed better" and the outlook more promising "than it had been for several years." J. F. Allman preached the Opening Sermon, from Neh. ii. 17. Theme:—"Rebuilding the Walls of Jerusalem." G. L. Chapman was elected Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; Thomas Scott, Treasurer. Attendance was small, but "everything went off in peace and harmony." Several "bright and promising young men entered the ministry." Not only were the educational institutions of the Church approved; but J. F. Allman was elected General Agent of the Eldership for the Fort Scott Collegiate Institute. The work in St. Louis was giving the Eldership much concern, and "the church was left in the hands of the Standing Committee, with discretionary powers." G. L. Chapman was appointed Missionary; C. D. Bradley, Evangelist in Dallas, Laclede and Camden counties. There were six other charges, with one to three points on each. There were also some unsupplied churches, which had granted them the privilege "to supply themselves," which too often proved detrimental.

37th Missouri Eldership.—The conditions under which the thirty-seventh session of the Missouri Eldership was held verified to the sixteen in the delegation the aphorism that "where there is no sacrifice there is no service." Cherry Grove school-house, Dallas county, where the meeting was held, was "far from the railroad (probably thirty miles), making it inconvenient to get there." Other "sacrifices" were also required. But elements of success in the work gave increased firmness of purpose to the faithful ministers and delegates of the body. The session opened October 17, 1907, the Opening Sermon having been delivered on the evening of the 16th, by J. F. Allman. The Eldership appreciated the presence of the Principal of Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute, O. A. Newlin, whose preaching and counsels were helpful. More care was taken in licensing men to preach. Experience seems to have been needed to induce a careful and dispassionate action in ordaining men to this holy calling, and to teach

"The truths we could not prize without The sorrow of our sad mistakes."

G. L. Chapman was elected Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; J. F. Allman, Treasurer. L. B. Shannon, of Nashville, Tenn., was granted a Certificate of Ordination, and was appointed pastor of the church of God organized in that city. The "subject of a Woman's Missionary Society" was revived, and a President, Vice President and other officers were chosen, they to co-operate with the W. G. M. S. of the General Eldership. Statistics of the churches were provided for, embracing the number of "resident" and "non-resident members;" "number of members on Roll," and amount of support for the pastor. A Children's College Day was directed to be held in the Sunday-schools, and collections taken for Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute, while "as many as can" were urged "to complete the course at Findlay College." The Eldership "condemned the use of intoxicating liquors," and censured "persons signing dram-shop petitions, or voting for any one that upholds the liquor traffic in any way." Two sisters, "Mattie Hale and Emma Allen, read essays on the use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco." The number of appointments, including Nashville, Tenn., was eleven. G. L. Chapman was the missionary in southeastern Missouri, and J. F. Allman in southwestern Missouri. The special feature of this Eldership session was the "revival, which started the first night." There were six conversions by Sunday at 11 o'clock service, and on Sunday evening there was a beautiful baptismal service, the ordinance being administered by A. F. Berkstresser. Yet not all was "pleasant at the time" in the deliberations of the body; but "if we keep in the love of God and a meek spirit, these things soon vanish, and they have a tendency to make us more careful in the future," soliloquized the Clerk. It is still true: "We learn in error's troubled route."

38th Missouri Eldership.—A good deal of dependence was placed upon local workers, not only to care for churches unsupplied with pastors, but "to spread the gospel in various parts of the State, as they often lived far from each other." Such had been the case in the early years, but was less frequently realized later. Not only were conditions imperfect for, but often adverse to, successful church work. It remained for the Missouri Eldership to make the best of these stringent circumstances. And year by year the members persisted manfully in the task of trying to leave things better than they found them. This was revealed in the deliberations of the session held at Johnston City, St. Clair county, beginning October 8, 1908. There were present seven ministers, seven lay elders and twelve delegates. G. L. Chapman on the previous evening preached the Opening Sermon. He was re-elected Speaker, and C. A. Marksberry, Clerk. J. F. Allman was elected Treasurer. The Eldership had a Board of Trustees, which held and controlled the property of the body, the members serving five years, one to be elected each year. G. L. Chapman was the Chairman elected this year, and J. F. Allman, Clerk. Having a year before paid its dues to the General Eldership, an assessment was authorized for mission funds for the current year. Resolutions of approval were adopted relative to "the actions of the Board of Missions in regard to the W. G. M. S." Also "recommending all our Church literature, and commending all the editors." "The Committee on Temperance consisted of the sisters, except Father John Martin." The report was a strong endorsement of prohibition, and the organizations working for better social and moral conditions. The W. M. S. officers were re-elected by the Eldership. While there were nominally twelve appointments made, only ten ministers were assigned to them. Five churches were not supplied. There were two missionaries.

39th Missouri Eldership.—A crisis was reached in the matter of the St. Louis church early in 1909. The Standing Committee took the matter up, and requested "the Board of Missions of the General Eldership to take the matter into consideration, and to do by it just as wisdom and judgment may direct." The condition, "both financial and spiritual," demanded attention; but the Eldership at its session held at Leadwood, St. Francois county, did not fully approve this action, but asked "the Board of Missions to co-operate with the Missouri Eldership" in the matter. The Eldership convened October 28th. The Opening Sermon was preached the previous evening, by G. L. Chapman, from Dan. xi. 33. Theme:—"The sure blessings of God to those who serve and obey, and the sure threatenings to those who disobey." Three new names were added to the Ministerial Roll by ordination and one by transfer from the Kansas Eldership. But J. B. Shannon, of Nashville, Tenn., returned his Certificate of Ordination, and "he was dropped from the Ministerial Roll." The action of the General Eldership in 1909 on the W. G. M. S. question was fully endorsed. Mrs. C. M. Ritchie, Illinois, Organizer of the W. G. M. S., was gladly welcomed, and gave special assistance to the State W. M. S., to which the entire time on Saturday evening was given. The spiritual condition of the Eldership was attested by the conversion of three souls during the session, and three more on Sunday. There were ten fields of labor, St. Louis, Mo., and Nashville, Tenn., being left off. Six points were left "to supply themselves."

40th Missouri Eldership.—Reviewing the session of the Eldership in 1910, G. L. Chapman says: "We as a Church in Missouri are not decreasing; but instead, there is a fairly good increase. The missionary spirit is more prominent than it has been for years, if ever before." The Eldership session was a "fine one." It was held with the church at Linn Grove, Saline county, and began on the morning of October 13, 1910. The previous evening G. L. Chapman delivered the Opening Sermon. The church at Linn Grove had completed its new bethel in time for the session of the Eldership. Thirty-two ministers and delegates constituted the Eldership. While there was "much business, it was all splendidly transacted." "The spirit of love and self-sacrifice had come with the delegates." In making the appointments the Eldership named points on each pastor's charge. There were eight ministers assigned to charges, with eighteen preaching points, and two additional points which were authorized to supply themselves. Two ministers were designated as "assistants under the pastors and missionaries." G. L. Chapman and J. F. Allman were the "missionaries in Missouri;" V. S. Mitchell, General Worker, and M. S. Sikes, Evangelist.

41st Missouri Eldership.—"Censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being great." But the Missouri Eldership was criticised by two of its most loyal ministers in 1911. One said: "Some things cropped out, showing that we are subject to error. But we pray that we may be more perfect in the future, and especially along the line of licensing men who fall in many ways in filling the requirements of both the Bible and our Constitution and By-Laws." Another, as a reason for limited success, said: "Many of our preachers are following the plow, or doing some other kind of secular labor, when they ought to be in the study." "The church that causes her minister to resort to secular labor, when it is not necessary, is committing spiritual suicide." But the Eldership in 1911, understanding these conditions, "appointed I. Ossman as Financial Agent and Field Worker, to try to bring pastors and people closer together along this line." The session was held at Antloch, Morgan county, beginning Monday, October 9th, and continued until the 12th. The Ministerial Association held its meeting on Friday and Saturday of the previous week. It was the first ever held by the Eldership. G. L. Chapman was elected Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; A. F. Berkstreser, Treasurer. The "finances showed up better this year than usual." This was "one of the chief subjects discussed at the Ministerial Association." The lack of a good financial system was considered "one of our greatest weaknesses." Ministers' salaries ranged from $150.00 to $300.00 a year. And if during some years their labors were not attended with the success which may have crowned the efforts of others, yet they were marked by a no less heroic spirit. If some of the ministers did not have the requisite training for efficient service, or were not as studious as they should have been, there was some justification in the meager support. However, the Eldership was disposed to make fewer concessions on these grounds, and directed a committee to prepare a Course of Studies for young ministers. The schools of the Church were commended to the patronage of the Missouri brotherhood, and ministers were requested "to try to interest our young people in a higher education." A strenuous effort was to be made to resuscitate the St. Louis church and save the property from levy and sale by the authorities of the city. Chapman was made pastor of the St. Louis church, in addition to three other points. There were eight other charges, one of them unsupplied. D. Long was appointed General Worker, and I. Ossman, Financial Agent.

42nd Missouri Eldership.—Not until September, 1912, did the Clerk of the Missouri Eldership publish the assessments made on the churches for General Eldership, Contingent and Church Extension Funds, which were to be collected and reported at the Eldership in 1912. They were levied on twenty-eight churches, aggregating $119.05. The session was held with the church at Fairview, Hickory county, and opened October 21, 1912. On the preceding Sunday the Annual Sermon was preached by G. L. Chapman. Friday before the Ministerial Association held its meeting. Provision was also made for the State W. M. S. to hold its annual meeting at the same time and place with the Eldership. The spirituality of the Eldership was of a decided character. "It was one of those old-time Elderships, where the Holy Spirit seemed to be always present in every service." The evening services were evangelistic, and on the last evening "three penitents kneeled at their seats, asking God for mercy." Four young men received Certificates of Ordination. "More competent pastors" was considered "the great need of this Eldership." The work hitherto had been mainly in the country for want of "competent pastors for towns and cities." This was viewed as a mistake that should be remedied. The Eldership was organized by the election of J. F. Thomas, Speaker; C. A. Marksbery, Clerk; A. F. Berkstreser, Treasurer; C. Hale, Financial Clerk. C. Martin returned his Certificate of Ordination, and I. Ossman and D. Long were transferred to the Iowa Eldership. The Standing Committee was composed of J. F. Thomas, C. A. Marksbery, J. F. Allman, L. E. Bradley and Samuel Van Meter. G. L. Chapman was elected trustee of the Eldership. In general, but strong, terms "all the publications of the General Eldership were recommended." The body was especially emphatic against "endorsing sectarian compromising in any form, either in our schools or churches; but we stand for the churches of God in all that the name implies, believing that our Lord is one and his name one." Much interest developed in missionary work. "The services of the W. M. S. created quite an interest in missions. New fields were also represented at the Eldership, which contributed to the spirit of rejoicing which prevailed.

XVI. THE MAINE ELDERSHIP.

1st Main Eldership.—The organic form of the body known as the Eldership of the Church of God in the State of Maine was the result of gradual developments. H. Mills, the leading minister in the movement, was brought to see the scriptural form and polity of the Church under the luminous teaching of P. Loucks, of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, while on a visit to Maine in June, 1873. Mills was a delegate to the Cambridge Quarterly Meeting, where Loucks preached, setting forth the polity of the Church as exemplified in his own Eldership and the General Eldership. He says: "I went to my home from this meeting a Church of God man." Shortly afterward he met Silas L. Pennell, "who had organized several churches, but not connected with any particular sect." He had also received the truth, that Church of God was the only title for the Church, and he came to the conclusion to assume the title." They agreed on a time and place to effect an organization. Accordingly they met "at the town of Palmyra, at the Gale school-house, Somerset county, where the right hand of fellowship was given to some twenty." This was the first organization of the Church of God in Maine, and was formed in August, 1873. This was thereafter known as "the Somerset Quarterly Meeting." A similar organization was formed in the adjoining county on the East, and was known as the Penobscot Quarterly Meeting. This nomenclature was adopted from the Free-Will Baptist Polity. On September 19, 1874, the delegates from these Quarterly Meetings met and "organized the first Annual Meeting of the Church of God, in Somerset county, town of Palmyra." In a later historical article Mills locates this first Annual Meeting at South Charleston, Penobscot county. This "Yearly Meeting was formed of eleven churches and six ordained preachers." Additional Quarterly Meetings were organized, and Yearly Meetings were held at different points in 1875 and 1876. In 1877 "the question came up as to a change in polity, when a majority voted to establish an Eldership on the Pennsylvania Polity, and a meeting was appointed for that purpose, to be held at Glenburn, Penobscot county," in June, when the change was effected, and the body was organized as an Eldership. It was numbered "the fourth Annual Eldership of the Church of God in Maine" when it met in annual session at the Gale Bethel, Palmyra, Somerset county, September 13, 1877, the sessions in 1874, '5 and '6 being called "Yearly Meetings." The peculiar character of the Maine ministers and churches is seen in the fact that the first attempt to organize the body into an Eldership proved "a failure" because "several ministers withdrew" when the change was decided upon.

At this first Eldership, or fourth annual meeting the "preaching brethren and sisters found in attendance" numbered eleven, three of them sisters. Ten ministers were absent. There were also two exhorters and eleven delegates present; and nine delegates absent. Equal rights for brethren and sisters is indicated not only by the fact of three of the preachers being sisters, but four delegates were sisters. The officers chosen were Dr. J. I. Brown, President; George H. Moore and V. A. Brown, Clerks, and Alonza Trim, Treasurer. Among the committees not found in other Annual Elderships was the "Executive Committee." The Quarterly Meetings represented were Somerset, Penobscot, Waldo and Kennebec. Much attention was given to Sabbath-schools, as the Committee on Sabbath-schools made an interesting report of the different schools, which report was followed by "addresses full of instruction and advice." No resolutions were adopted, the three days the Eldership was in session were taken up in considering the work and interests of the churches, Sabbath-schools and Quarterly Meetings. Much time was taken up with preaching and "seasons of prayer." There was a sermon on Thursday evening, the 13th, by Otis G. Trundy, on "The Oneness in Christ." Friday morning "an hour and a half was spent in prayer and praise to God." Friday evening a sermon by Eliza Cook, from Ps. lvi. 13. Sabbath morning "prayer-meeting at 9 o'clock." At 10.30 sermon by Dr. J. I. Brown, from Luke ii. 10—"Joy at the Birth of Christ." At 2 o'clock, sermon by Otis G. Trundy, from Jer. viii. 7." "At 7 p. m., sermon by Dr. J. I. Brown, from Dan. xii. 13." On Monday morning another sermon by Dr. Brown, after "a precious season of prayer," and one by Hosea Welsh at 2 p. m., from Luke viii. 12. The three appointees were H. Mills, General Missionary, and minister "to labor in Penobscot Quarterly Meeting;" L. W. Hammons, Missionary for west of the Kennebec, and A. F. Brown, east of the Kennebec.

5th Maine Eldership.—Unabated religious fervor characterized the fifth session of the Maine Eldership, which convened at Bradford, Penobscot county, September 19, 1878. What may be called the Opening Sermon was delivered by L. W. Hammons, from Col. iii. 11. Exhortations after sermons was the rule, the record not unfrequently being "a number of exhortations." Twelve ministers were present. On Friday morning prayer-meeting from 9 to 12 o'clock. Dr. J. I. Brown was elected President; Henry Dawson, Clerk, and S. L. Pennell, Corresponding Secretary. It was a feature peculiar to the Maine Eldership that instead of preachers reporting, the churches and Quarterly Meetings reported. At this session the Quarterly Meetings of Kennebec, Somerset, Penobscot and Waldo counties reported. These reports were most encouraging. Kennebec, "church active and in working order." Somerset, "very good report from that section of the State." Penobscot, "very able report." Waldo, "churches in a very flourishing condition." In addition there were reports from Swanville, Searsport and Islesboro. A Missionary Board was elected, and one General Missionary and three Home Missionaries were appointed. All the ministers were "examined"—their moral and official conduct was inquired into, as well as their theological views, as is revealed in the record made. "All passed a good examination, with the exception of O. G. Trundy, who was not sound on the principles of the Church of God, and refused to answer the questions of the council; therefore he surrendered his papers, and is now not recognized as a preacher by the people of the Church of God." To raise missionary money "every member of the different churches" was "required to pay $1.00 per year into a missionary fund for the benefit of the missionaries." The doctrine of the non-resurrection of "the wicked," and that "there is no resurrection of the just and the unjust; that the righteous dead sleep in the grave until the resurrection, and that there is no resurrection of the body," was declared to be heretical, and the Eldership declared that it "withdraws its fellowship from all such preachers that hold forth and preach such doctrines." A committee of ten ministers was appointed "to confer with the brethren in Pennsylvania to the end that our Annual Meeting may become united with the General Eldership of the Church of God in the United States." Provision was made "to have licenses to continue one year as to Christian character and soundness of principles." The Eldership voted "to have a camp-meeting ground," and appointed a committee to procure it.

6th Maine Eldership.—This body is still called by the Clerk who announced the session, "The Annual Meeting of the Church of God in Maine." It was to begin September 19, 1879, Friday morning. There was "a social meeting for the brethren on the evening of the 18th. H. Mills had united with the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and attended its session in 1879, and so was not present at the Maine Eldership. He highly complimented said Eldership, and commended to the Maine brethren its "manner of conducting its business." He also revealed the dissensions among the brethren in Maine, some of whom were "finding fault with the Pennsylvania polity." Their presence, he felt sure, would have convinced them that "the laws and usages of the Pennsylvania Eldership are such that no better can be found." Nothing was published concerning the session of the Maine Eldership in 1879.

7th Maine Eldership.—There seemed to be little cohesiveness in the body known as the "Annual Meeting of the Church of God in Maine," so that there were constant defections, and also new additions. But in 1879 a final division occurred, when "the Waldo Quarterly Meeting withdrew from the general body in Maine; and assumed the name of the Waldo Eldership, and adopted the Rules of the East Pennsylvania Eldership." But this Quarterly Meeting, now an Eldership, embraced the counties of Waldo, Penobscot, Kennebeck and Lincoln. The annual session was held beginning June 10, 1880, "with the second church in Monroe," when the Opening Sermon was preached by M. E. Curtis. On the 11th the body was organized, with A. F. Brown, Speaker; C. C. Moody, Treasurer, and E. F. Hanson, Journalizing and Transcribing Clerk. The Eldership "voted to adopt the itinerant system." One church had "been recently organized." Brown and Curtis were to supply the churches in Penobscot county. Hammons and Hanson were appointed to Monroe, Searsport and Islesboro. Cook was to preach for churches at Cooper's Mills, Windsor Neck and Frankfort. W. L. Brown was made a general evangelist. An assessment of "$1.00 on each male member, and 50 cents on each female member was made, to be paid quarterly, said money to be expended as the Church may deem proper." A Contingent Fund was to be raised by voluntary pledges made to the preachers. A record was directed to be kept by each church of "the date of organization, by whom organized, number of members and names of church officers." A camp-meeting was to be held in August. This session the Clerk notes was "our first annual meeting." "Perfect union prevailed" between those who constituted it.

8th Maine Eldership.—"The brethren in the State of Maine" which constituted the Eldership in 1880, without taking official action, sent a "request to the General Eldership to be formed into an Eldership." This was acted on in May, 1881, and the recommendation of the Committee on Boundaries of the General Eldership was adopted, that "the name of said Eldership be 'the Eldership of the Church of God in the State of Maine,'" and that "the boundary lines be the State boundary lines." Under this Charter the body met at Bradford, Me., June 16, 1881, when the Opening Sermon was delivered by A. F. Brown, from Luke iv. 18. The session continued three days. E. F. Hanson was Speaker; David Mitchell, Treasurer, "and E. F. Hanson was again appointed Journalizing and Transcribing Clerk." Only two committees were appointed, a Standing and a Stationing Committee. The Eldership did not act on any resolutions, except to vote "to continue in force all the doings of last year." The names of seven ministers are recorded as present. "Everything had been pleasant within the borders the past year." "We enjoyed perfect peace and prosperity the past year," was the testimony of the Transcribing Clerk.

9th Maine Eldership.—This was "the third annual meeting of the Maine Eldership" as a chartered body of the General Eldership. It met with the church at Islesboro, June 16, 1882, an island about two hours' sail from Bedford City. "About sixty" were in the party going to the Eldership, the church standing a short distance from the wharf." L. W. Hammons was chosen Speaker; E. F. Hanson, Journalizing and Transcribing Clerk. The "past year had been one of prosperity." Two "newly organized churches" were received, and others made good reports. H. Mills, who had joined the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was received, "and the right hand of fellowship was extended to him." It was decided that "no church shall be reported that has no church Record, and is not regularly organized." All other churches were "to send a written report to the Eldership." The Standing Committee was instructed "to look after and ascertain the Standing of the brethren in Aroostook county, with a view to their reception into the Eldership in 1882." The annual camp-meeting was again appointed on Maple Grove campground.

10th Maine Eldership.—At the annual session in 1883, no report was made by the Standing Committee on the case of the brethren in Aroostook county. But M. E. Curtis, with whom the Clerk was "to correspond, and learn his position toward the Church and brethren," was present, and Hammons, who was to preach the Opening Sermon, being absent, Curtis took his place. When on June 15th the body convened for business, he was elected Speaker, and was also placed on the Standing Committee. A. F. Brown was placed in the Clerk's chair. The session was held at Charleston, Penobscot county. In addition to the counties represented in the Eldership in 1880, there was a "report from Franklin county, the new ground of H. Mills." The Church in Maine was "in good working order." What was "wanted was more preachers." Eight ministers were present.

11th Maine Eldership.—An Eldership held in the woods is a rare occurrence, possibly owing to the season when Eldership sessions are held. But the Maine Eldership convened at Searsport, Waldo county, "on the Maple Grove campground," Friday, June 20, 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., and made choice of A. F. Brown for Chairman, and S. H. Burton, Clerk. Burton preached the Opening Sermon in the evening. There was preaching three times each day, and the small amount of business was transacted between the services. Burton was a new member, to whom "the right hand of fellowship was extended on Sunday." No report was published from either of the two committees, Standing and Stationing, but a resolution was passed, that "these above-named officers do stand by and sustain Bro. L. W. Hammons and all others in their pastoral work as far forth as their work agrees with the teaching of Christ."

12th Maine Eldership.—The camp-meeting spirit prevailed largely among the ministers and churches in Maine. The Quarterly Meetings were frequently held at camp-meetings. Their Eldership meetings were more on the evangelistic order than were such gatherings in Middle and Western States. The Eldership which met at East Thorndike, June 18, 1885, did very little ecclesiastical business. It "commenced with the Spirit's power" under the preaching of the Opening Sermon by H. Mills. M. E. Curtis was elected Speaker; E. F. Hanson, Journalizing and Transcribing Clerk. While a Stationing Committee was elected, no report was published. The annual camp-meeting was appointed for the last Thursday in August, at Maple Grove, to continue ten days. A camp-meeting was also appointed to be held at Charleston, to commence September 12th, and continue over two Sabbaths. The religious feature of the meeting predominated, and it was noted by the Clerk that "the meetings were a decided success. God manifested his power in every meeting. The brethren preached with power." A spirit of hopefulness was strongly in evidence. "The Church of God in Maine is advancing to a higher position before the people."

13th Maine Eldership.—The Maine Eldership had never been represented in the General Eldership, and when in 1886 it failed to elect delegates, the attention of its Standing Committee was called to the matter. Nor had it taken any interest in the College, nor in general mission work. The session which was held at Dixmont Center, Penobscot county, beginning June 18, 1886, devoted its time wholly to its own internal affairs. There were fifteen ministers enrolled, of which six were absent. M. E. Curtis preached the Opening Sermon. H. Miller was chosen Speaker, and M. Cook, Clerk. All the preachers were required to report annually in person or by letter. Fourteen churches are on the list, of which number seven reported. Six of the preachers were given charge of the churches, while one was appointed "missionary in the State of Maine." Each church was directed hereafter to report "by delegates or by letters." The Eldership asserted its right to the title of "Eldership of the Church of God in Maine," as the only body chartered in the State by the General Eldership. This as against "a few here in Maine, led by one Silas L. Pennell, who claims to have an Eldership of his own." "The Eldership," as reported by the Clerk, commenced in the spirit and power of Elijah's God, and it was carried through in the same."

14th Maine Eldership.—At least in the localities where the Maine Eldership held its session there was very favorable sentiment and widespread interest. Houses were "crowded to overflowing." This was the case at North Troy, Waldo county, where on June 17, 1887, the fourteenth session was held. H. Mills preached the Opening Sermon. E. F. Hanson was chosen Speaker, and M. Cook, Clerk. As there were no Eldership Funds, a Treasurer was not needed. There was little business to be transacted. Churches reported, and with but one exception they were in "good condition," "good working order," or "good, and in working condition." One church was "rather low." There was preaching three and four times each day. The session lasted two days and three evenings; but "there were eight sermons, twenty prayers, two hundred and ninety exhortations, seventy-three songs of praise." In the case of one minister it was decided to "take his papers from him." Further action was taken in case he should "refuse to surrender his papers." "The Standing Committee shall commence action against him, as he has gone contrary to the Rules of the Eldership." The preachers, ten of them, were appointed on eight fields of labor.

15th Maine Eldership.—Of the character and doings of the Maine Eldership in 1888 nothing is known. No report was published. It was announced to meet at West Winterport, June 22nd.

16th Maine Eldership.—The sixteenth session of the Maine Eldership was made the subject of editorial criticism because its Journal contained "matter which does not properly belong to such a document," of which "meditations of the Clerk" and "reports of religious meetings" are mentioned. It also was mentioned that this was only the tenth session of the chartered Eldership. The fact that again no delegate was elected to the General Eldership was unfavorably commented upon, and even "no action of any character taken relative to the parent body from which the Eldership received its charter." The body met at Islesboro, on an island in Penobscot Bay, about twelve miles from Belfast, Waldo county, on June 20, 1889. The Church of God had a dominant influence on the island. Instead of an Opening Sermon the "yearly meeting was opened by a prayer and praise meeting." And "when the meeting closed that night we recorded eighty-seven exhortations, a number from the converts, as there had been a revival." At the business meeting on Friday morning A. F. Brown was elected President, and H. R. Dawson, Clerk. Two churches with their pastors were received into the Eldership. One of the pastors had been a Free Baptist, if not both, and doubtless the churches. Sixteen other "towns were represented, besides Islesboro." There were twelve appointments, with as many ministers. In Monroe there were two churches, with two pastors. The Islesboro church is described as "a church with a congregation of 500, and 40 converts at the last revival." At a "prayer and praise meeting at 8 o'clock p. m., there were one hundred exhortations." The "sermon at 2.30 p. m. was followed by forty-five exhortations in about thirty minutes."

17th Maine Eldership.—When the seventeenth Eldership session was held in Maine conditions were somewhat unfavorable and prospects not inspiring. Mills testified that the outlook was "not as hopeful as it was some time ago." While there were still a number of loyal ministers, the "laity to some extent was indifferent." All felt "somewhat grieved" because of a sense of neglect by other Elderships and the General Eldership of interests in New England. They thought at least one strong man should have been sent to Maine and one to Massachusetts as missionaries. "New England," said J. I. Brown, "is a nursery to all parts of the United States." He was an enthusiastic Church of God minister, laboring in Massachusetts. Through his efforts the church of God at Lowell, Mass., was organized in January, 1890, with six elders and twenty members. This church, and others organized in the State, desired to unite with the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Brown, however, was sent as a delegate to the Maine Eldership, which convened at North Troy, June 20, 1890. He had full power to effect a union with the Maine Eldership, and did so. He was "given oversight of the work in Massachusetts," as "Missionary for Massachusetts," and President of the Eldership in Massachusetts, "with power to grant licenses." He was a very positive advocate of the ordinance of feet-washing, this being a distinctive doctrine of the Church of God which first appealed to him. The Eldership ordained two to the ministry, one of which was a converted Catholic—A. R. McDougall. He, too, declared, that "the first thing that attracted his love for the Church of God was the belief in the washing of the saints' feet." The Eldership sent S. H. Burton to Lowell, Mass., to be the pastor of that church.

18th Maine Eldership.—The Maine Eldership was a fully organized body, patterned after the East Pennsylvania Eldership. The business was transacted under the same Rules, and in the same general order. But the religious element was more prominent. The eighteenth session (or the twelfth according to their numeration) was held at West Winterport, Me., beginning June 19, 1891, and continuing three days. It was a more hopeful one than that of 1890. M. Andrews was chosen President, and H. R. Dawson, Clerk. It was ordered that hereafter "ministers appointed over the different churches shall give an account in writing of the number of appointments they fill and the amount of money they collect." Delegates were present from twelve churches in Maine, and three from Massachusetts. Eleven ministers were appointed to churches in Maine, and two to the churches at Lowell and Haverhill, Mass. One General Evangelist and one General Missionary were appointed "for the State of Maine." By vote of the Eldership the churches in Massachusetts were "to be under the jurisdiction of the Maine Eldership for one year."

19th Maine Eldership.—The churches in Massachusetts remained under the jurisdiction of the Maine Eldership, and received pastors from it in 1892. The session of the Eldership was held at North Troy, and began June 17th. L. W. Hammons was chosen Speaker, and J. I. Brown, Secretary. Twelve ministers, two from Massachusetts, were present. One of the ministers in Maine and one in Massachusetts "asked to withdraw from the Eldership," and "it was granted." There was preaching during the session at 9 a. m., and 2 and 7.30 p. m. One "afternoon was devoted to the reports of preachers and churches." A Woman's Home Missionary Society was organized at Pittsfield, Mass. While the State Missionary reported "some of the churches in a flourishing condition," the report of Dr. Brown stated that "the church at Haverhill, Mass., is in a struggling condition." Conversions at Eldership meetings were not uncommon, and at this session "many sinners and backsliders rose to witness their belief of the gospel of Christ."

20th Maine Eldership.—The ministers of the Maine Eldership having been strongly urged to appoint delegates to the General Eldership in 1893, decided to hold "a special meeting" for that purpose. Officers of the Eldership had also "resigned and left said Eldership." This meeting was held December 28, 1892, at Swanville, Me., when J. I. Brown was elected Moderator, and Sister V. A. Brown, Secretary. Two more ministers "called for, and received, letters from the Eldership." J. I. Brown and H. Mills were chosen delegates to the General Eldership. Another meeting was held February 2, 1893, at the Mayo school-house, West

Frankford, Me. Two delegates were chosen to attend the Yearly Meeting of the Primitive Baptists. Two lay delegates were also chosen to the General Eldership—W. E. Goen and ——— Morrill. Plans were made to secure "funds to pay the Maine indebtedness to the General Eldership." The regular annual session was held on the Maple Grove camp-ground, Maine, and began June 8, 1893. The officers elected were M. Andrews, Speaker, and Vesta A. Brown, Clerk. Joseph D. Prentiss and his wife, and Sarah Curtiss "presented themselves for membership in the Eldership," and were received. H. Mills was appointed "as missionary for Massachusetts," and Stephen Dinsmore, missionary for New Hampshire. The forecast was disquieting, "as many had left who had long time been members, and the ranks of the Maine Eldership thinned and weakened."

21st Maine Eldership.—Another special session of the Maine Eldership was called upon petition of five of the members. It was held on the Maple Grove camp-ground, near Searsport, Me., August 31, 1893. Eight ministers and four ruling elders were present. The unusual feature of this meeting was the presence and reception of R. H. Bolton as an advisory member, he having been under suspension by the Ohio Eldership. He had united with the church at Searsport, Waldo county, Me., and was "recommended by the Quarterly Meeting for license, and ordination by the laying on of hands by the Presbytery." This was "according to the custom of the Maine Eldership, and required by the laws of the State." Bolton was received, and was ordained "by the laying on of hands by five elders." He was appointed General Missionary of the Maine Eldership, at a "salary of $300.00 or more." He was also appointed, with two others, "to draft a Constitution, By-Laws and Rules of Order," to be reported at a special session October 20, 1893.

The special session, October 20th, was held at the Bagley Hill school-house, Waldo county, Me. Five of the thirteen ministers were present, and five elders and delegates. J. W. Bolton, of the Ohio Eldership, was received as an advisory member. He had united with the church at Bagley Hill school-house, which "recommended him to the Maine Eldership for ordination." He was ordained in manner and form as was his father in August. For the first time the Eldership adopted resolutions with reference to Findlay College, and raised $19.00, to be forwarded to the Treasurer of the College. The Constitution was adopted, as well as a Constitution of the Woman's Home Missionary Society. J. W. Bolton was also appointed a General Missionary, "to be a co-worker with his father."

The regular session was held at West Winterport, Waldo county, Me., beginning June 28, 1894, when the Opening Sermon was delivered by R. H. Bolton, from Mark xvi. 15. Eighteen teaching elders were enrolled, eleven not being present, and seven churches were represented by delegates. A. F. Hatch was elected Speaker, and J. W. Bolton, Clerk. It was believed that "the outlook is more favorable" than it had been for several years. A Ministerial Association was provided for. Susanna Moore, a licensed minister, had died during the year. She was "a good and faithful Christian." The Eldership "favored Constitutional and statutory prohibition in State and nation." H. Mills, who had been one of the first ministers of the Church of God in Maine, "requested that his name be dropped from the Eldership Roll. Four appointments were made, one being R. H. Bolton as General Missionary.

The complications which arose in consequence of the Maine Eldership receiving and ordaining R. H. Bolton hastened the dissolution of that body. The Ohio Eldership called official attention to this violation of the Constitution of the General Eldership. The Maine Eldership was not accustomed to such extraneous restraints, and would not undo its unconstitutional action, nor indeed mention in its Journal of 1894 the receipt of any communication from the Ohio Eldership. It withdrew its patronage from The Advocate, and did not report its Minutes of any sessions held after the one in June, 1894. But it evidently "withdrew from the General Eldership," as the Minutes of the Board of Trustees of Findlay College, May 21, 1896, stated that, "Inasmuch as the Maine Eldership has withdrawn from the General Eldership." This is confirmed by the action of the General Eldership, held in May, 1896, which took action on this item by declaring "void the representation on the Board of Trustees heretofore accorded to the Maine Eldership."

XVII. THE KANSAS ELDERSHIP.

1st Kansas Eldership.—Orderly proceedings marked the division of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership into the two State Elderships of Kansas and Missouri. After some consultation with the ministers and churches in Kansas, a notice was duly published in The Advocate, headed, "Preliminary Meeting of the Kansas Eldership." The Keplinger school-house was named as the place, and Saturday, September 18, 1880, as the time for the meeting. Preaching on Friday evening. The meeting was "to continue over Lord's day," and the ordinances were to be observed in the evening of said day. The object was stated to be "for the purpose of considering the organization of a Kansas Eldership." When the ministers and representatives assembled at 10 o'clock a. m. on the date published, C. B. Konkel, whose name was signed to the call, "called the meeting to order," and W. Shipman conducted the devotional services. C. B. Konkel was chosen Speaker, and J. V. Whisler, Clerk. Other names which were recorded in the Minutes are those of D. Keplinger, Newton Hill, who with Konkel and Shipman constituted the "Committee on Organization"; M. C. Ogden and Joshua Good, who with Hill, Shipman and Keplinger, were members of the "Committee to draft Constitution and By-Laws"; S. Deal, who with Whisler and Keplinger, composed the "Committee on Arrangements," and D. Engle, who offered the closing prayer. Whisler, Deal, Good and Engle were laymen. The ordained sister of the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, Clara Yutzey, was a member, and preached on Sabbath, at 11 o'clock a. m. "After due deliberation, and the reading of letters from ministers and members in the northern part of the State," a "committee was named by the Speaker to draft resolutions, praying the different bodies interested to grant us the privilege of organizing a Kansas Eldership of the Church of God." This had reference to the Kansas and Missouri and the Nebraska Elderships, and the General Eldership. The Committee reported, in harmony with its instructions, and stated that "under present arrangements of the territory. . . . the ministers and various fields of labor cannot properly labor together, and are unable to meet and confer with each other to advance the interests of the Church of God." Hence "we realize the need of an immediate remedy in the formation of a Kansas Eldership." A request to the General Eldership "to grant us the privilege of forming an Eldership in the State of Kansas" followed. Also one to the Kansas and Missouri Eldership. A petition was also reported to the Nebraska Eldership "to grant us the territory lying in Kansas, and now a part of said Eldership." This Report was adopted, and finished the work of the "Preliminary Eldership."

J. V. Whisler, Clerk of the "Preliminary Eldership," addressed a letter, embodying the action taken, to the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, convened at Keystone, Clinton county, October 18, 1880, which was read at the Friday morning sitting, October 15th. Newton Hill, of the "Preliminary Eldership," and D. Blakely discussed the proposition on a motion "that the request be granted." "Pending this motion," the Eldership took a recess until 1.30 p. m. No minute was made of any action on the motion.

At the General Eldership which began its session at Findlay, Ohio, May 24, 1881, the communication from the "Preliminary Eldership" in Kansas, over the signature of its Speaker, C. B. Konkel, was referred to the Committee on Boundaries. Said Committee reported on Tuesday afternoon, May 31st: "A request from the brethren in Kansas, asking the privilege of forming an Eldership in said State. Your Committee recommend that their request be granted, and that the name be The Kansas Eldership of the Church of God, within the boundaries of the State." This report was adopted, and everything was now in readiness for the organization of another body in the growing family of Elderships.

Pursuant to action taken at the Preliminary Eldership, "a call was accordingly published in The Advocate for a meeting of the ministers, elders and delegates of the churches of God in the State of Kansas to meet September 23 and 24, 1881, at the Keplinger school-house, Crawford county, Kansas, for the purpose of organizing the Kansas Eldership of the Church of God." The Opening Sermon was preached the previous evening by Newton Hill, from Col. iv. 17. The enrollment showed the following membership: Ministers—David Keplinger, Christian B. Konkel, R. T. Sargent, Newton Hill and Clara Yutzey. Exhorter—Thomas Stephens. Ruling elders—H. Bosley, A. L. Oory, J. Frederick, J. L. Konkel,

E. Simon, W. H. Sheets, A. Whisler, J. V. Whisler and J. L. Huffman. Delegate—S. Diehl. A ballot being taken, C. B. Konkell was elected Speaker; N. Hill, Clerk, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. A Standing Committee of three, and a Stationing Committee of three, were elected. The former was composed of Konkell, Keplinger and Sargent; the latter, of Hill, Huffman and Yutzey. After six other of the usual committees were appointed by the Speaker, the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws, appointed at the Preliminary Eldership, reported. The Constitution contained fifteen Articles. Art. I. accepted the name given the new body by the General Eldership. Art. II. defined the object to be "to secure and promote the mutual welfare of the ministry and churches of the Church of God in Kansas, and to co-operate in the benevolent, educational and missionary work of the Church." Art. III. fixed the membership—"to consist of all licensed preachers and exhorters, ruling elders, together with a delegate from each church not represented by ruling elders." Art. IV. related to the time and place for the annual sessions. Articles V., VI., VII. and VIII. defined the duties of the officers, Speaker, Clerk and Treasurer. Art. IX. related to the first sitting of a session, the Opening Sermon and constituting the Eldership. Art. X. names the two principal committees—the Standing and Stationing—and fixes the number of each and defines their duties, giving the Standing Committee the powers of the Eldership. Art. XI. requires annual reports from ministers, renewal of licenses, and other information from each pastor. Art. XII. relates to Transfers. Art. XIII. states the points on which applicants for license were to give evidence. Art. XIV. directs that Rules of Order shall be adopted "at the first annual meeting." Art. XV. provides for future amendments. Rules of Order were also submitted. As thus amended, having been considered seriatim, the Report was adopted. John Hammer received license. Absent ministers residing within the State, who reported by letter, were Jay C. Forncrook, J. W. Felix, B. Hamilton, J. W. Keplinger, W. J. Shipman and J. Smedley. The Committee on Boundaries outlined eleven circuits and missions. The Stationing Committee appointed ministers to thirteen. These fields were in Crawford, Miami, Montgomery, Elk, Jackson, Pottawatomie, Nemaha, Brown, Smith, Jewell, Cloud, Phillips, Ellsworth, Rice, Reno, Kingman, McPherson, Bourbon, Linn, Sumner, Sedgwick, Harvey, Wilson, Allen. A committee was appointed "to recommend a certain course of reading to be pursued by the ministers of the Eldership." On the temperance question the Eldership strongly endorsed the "law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage," which had "been passed in the State of Kansas," and resolved "to aid all in our power to enforce the same." It favored a better "observance of the Lord's day," and insisted on ministers and church members "setting an example by refraining from unnecessary labor and travel, and by attendance upon the services of divine worship." The Legislature was urged "to change existing laws so as to grant divorce only upon scriptural grounds." Resolutions were also adopted, commending the periodicals and publications of the General Eldership; the General Missionary Secretary; the American Bible Society and its work; the College enterprise, and on the assassination of President Garfield. A "course of reading for our newly licensed ministers" was approved, consisting of the Bible, Winebrenner's Sermons, Butler's Analogy, Doddridge's Rise and Progress of the Soul, Paley's Evidences, Horn's Introduction, Cushing's Manual, and Constitution and By-Laws of the General Eldership.

O. B. Konkel, Speaker of the first Kansas Eldership, belonged to an excellent family which were originally brought into the Church in Nodaway county, Mo. At the Iowa Eldership held at Fairview, Cedar county, Iowa, October 21, 1869, he was an applicant for license, having sent a communication to that effect to the Eldership. The Eldership appointed a committee to visit him and William Konkel, and authorized the Standing Committee to grant them licenses upon a favorable report. Both were licensed and their names enrolled when the Iowa Eldership was constituted in 1870, though neither was present. Nor did he attend any session of the Iowa Eldership, and had no charge, preaching only in a local capacity. His name was dropped from the Roll of the Iowa Eldership in 1873. But in 1871, at the organization of the first Kansas and Missouri Eldership he was enrolled as a member; elected Clerk, and appointed to Leavenworth county circuit, Kas. Here began his career as an active minister. He was Clerk of the Eldership in 1872, and reappointed to Leavenworth county circuit. In 1873 he was reappointed. He served on important committees, but held no other office. In 1874 he was chosen Speaker, and also in 1875 and 1876. In 1874 he was sent to Crawford county, Kas., and reappointed in 1875. In 1876 he was assigned to Caldwell and Ray counties, Mo., circuit. In 1887 he received no appointment, and held no office, though present; but was elected an alternate delegate to the General Eldership. In 1878 he was again chosen Speaker, and was appointed, with Clara Yutzey, assistant to J. M. West on the Crawford county circuit, Kas. In 1879 he was again chosen for Speaker, and became the pastor of Crawford county circuit. These circumstances threw him into the Kansas Eldership, where his energetic, aggressive disposition found a large field for healthy exercise. He was a man of strong natural powers of mind, force of character, an influential leader of men and a good gospel preacher. His death in 1884 was "a sad bereavement, and the Eldership mourned him as a beloved and highly honored brother, and a sweet counselor," and made the memorial exercises a special order for Friday at 11 o'clock a. m.

2nd Kansas Eldership.—The idea of circuit Elderships was one of the progressive features of the Kansas churches. As the presbytery originally was in the local church, these higher bodies might appropriately have been designated by extrabiblical names. But Kansas adhered to the older nomenclature, and its highest judicatory was still the Eldership. And so the second session of the Kansas Eldership began its work on "Friday morning, September 29, 1882, at Mendon school-house, near Little River, Rice county." The Opening Sermon was delivered on the evening of the 28th, by R. T. Sargent, from Col. i. 28. Sargent was elected Speaker; N. Hill, Clerk, and Joshua Good, Treasurer. The College enterprise was "hailed with joy," and "a voice of welcome" was "extended to the collecting agent in securing funds." "The standard of religion" was declared to be "better to-day than it has ever been, and that never was truth so generally taught." The Committee on Temperance had its Report "referred back," and another member added to the Committee. When it reported its resolutions were adopted, affirming "intemperance" to be "one of the greatest evils in the land," and declaring that "we as a body unanimously raise our voice against this deadly enemy, both by precept and example; not only as pertains to the intoxicating cup, but also to the filthy use of tobacco." An assessment was made on fields of labor to secure funds to pay its proportion of General Eldership Contingent Fund money. Funds of the Eldership were limited, there being but $22.35 in the Treasury. The General Eldership Missionary Collector was assured a welcome to the State. Local church missionary societies were commended, and churches which had none were urged to organize them. "Thursday before January 1, 1883, was appointed a day of fasting and prayer," and "the churches throughout the Eldership were all asked to meet on said evening to offer special prayer that the Church may prosper, souls be converted and more laborers be sent into the fields of labor." The Committee on Boundaries outlined twelve fields of labor, adding several new counties, and the Stationing Committee increased by one the fields to which it assigned the ministers, one of which was "left in care of the Nebraska Eldership." The Eldership remained over Lord's day, and observed the ordinances in the evening.

3rd Kansas Eldership.—The energy, enthusiasm and devout consecration of the Kansas ministers and churches was bearing fruit. The field of vision expanded, and plans for larger work were everywhere in evidence. Conservative in some particulars, in others the body eagerly adopted innovations which gave promise of better results. The body convened with the church at Riley Center, Riley county, at 9 a. m., Thursday, October 11, 1883. C. B. Konkel preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 10th. The only ill-timed phase of the session was the absence of ten of the eighteen preachers. And only four ruling elders and two delegates were present. But those present were encouraged by the accession to their number of J. C. Froencrook, and P. K. Shoemaker, of the Nebraska Eldership; G. J. Bartlebaugh, of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, and two licentiates—E. L. Latschaw and C. S. Kearns. These two brethren were "set apart for the work of the ministry by an address, prayer and the extending of the hand of fellowship by the brethren." P. Clippinger was elected Speaker; W. H. Cross, Clerk, and C. B. Konkel, Treasurer. The Eldership deplored the fact that "many of our brethren in this and our sister Elderships are turning from the work of the ministry to secular employments." The Eldership was requested to make them "the special subjects of our prayers, for their own good and that of the Church." It also named "Thursday before January 1, 1884, as a day of fasting and prayer." Subjects of prayer were submitted: Purity of the Church, More Laborers, Reconsecration, Conversion of Souls, the Universal Spread of the Gospel. It asked the General Eldership to establish a fixed annual day of fasting and prayer. A Ministerial Association was provided for. The pastors were directed "to collect mission funds through societies." It denounced the non-enforcement of the prohibitory law, and made the declaration that "we will not assist any one to office, either by vote or influence, who will not enforce, as far as lies in his power, the prohibitory law." There were sixteen fields of labor, seven of them missions, for six of which appropriations were requested from the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. P. Clippinger's contemplated "visit to brethren in Colorado and California" was made the occasion for a "request to the Board of Missions to recommend him as a minister worthy of their confidence and encouragement." The death of P. Shaw was duly remembered. He was ordained by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1846; emigrated to Iowa, and thence to Kansas. Isolated members were admonished to "endeavor to maintain their connection with the Church of God." It was found that there were about two hundred such members in the State. The Chairman of the Standing Committee was instructed to locate them and, where possible, to have the nearest ministers preach for them.

4th Kansas Eldership.—This was the best attended session of the Eldership to this date. Fifteen of the twenty-three ministers were present, eight ruling elders and five delegates. It met at the old headquarters, Kiplinger's school-house, Crawford county, October 2, 1884. On October 1st Clara Yutzey was to preach the Opening Sermon; but in her absence G. J. Bartlebaugh officiated. He was chosen Speaker; with Newton Hill, Clerk, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. A Free-Will Baptist church at Graham school-house, Graham county, asked to be identified with the Church of God, and requested the services of a minister of the Eldership. "The appointee to that part of the State was instructed to visit and reconstruct said church, that it might become a church of God." The Committee on Temperance had to deal with a new issue, the question of the resubmission of the prohibitory amendment to the vote of the electorate. It reported that "we as an Eldership take a stand against resubmission, and by voice and vote sustain the law as it now is." The Chairman of the Committee was Sister L. E. Cross. The churches were urged "to adopt a system for obtaining a support for their pastors." The Committee recommended that "upon appointment of a minister to a field, it shall be the duty of the deacons to secure pledges of amounts, to be paid quarterly, and report the same to the minister when he enters upon the work." The local preachers were required to preach more, and "to devote more of their time and talent in the Master's vineyard." Feeling that a law without a penalty is only counsel, it was amended by adding: "That ministers who neglect, or refuse, to engage in active work during the coming year shall be suspended until they give sufficient reasons for such neglect, or refusal." C. S. Kerns withdrew from the Eldership, and "joined the Free-Will Baptist Church." Steps were taken to have the Eldership incorporated under the laws of the State. Churches were advised to "so deed their properties that they may fall into the possession of the Eldership in case the churches become disorganized." Trustees were elected which would hold and control all such property. The Constitution was amended in two Articles. One, requiring applicants for license to appear in person; one, making it the duty of the Treasurer to "give bond in double the amount usually coming into his hands." This was no hardship, as he reported "amount on hand, including Note, $51.20." The statistical report had these items: Number of ministers, 24; sermons, 1,300; conversions, 100; baptized, 40; added to the churches, 100; present membership, 350; isolated members, 250.

5th Kansas Eldership.—The Kansas Eldership was now an incorporated body. On September 10, 1885, the Secretary of State certified that a document which he promulgated was "a true and correct copy of the original instrument of writing filed in my office February 28, 1885." It was brief, declaring that the subscribers, R. T. Sargent, Newton Hill, W. H. Cross, Wm. Konkel and J. V. Whisler, "voluntarily associate ourselves together for the purpose of forming a private corporation under the laws of the State of Kansas." The name was "The Kansas Eldership of the Church of God." The purpose—"To secure and promote the welfare of the ministry and churches of the Church of God in the State of Kansas, and to co-operate in the benevolent, educational and missionary work of the Church." Five "directors or trustees" were provided for. The term of its existence was ninety-nine years. The session in 1885 was held at Zion Hill Bethel, Labette county, beginning October 22, 1885. The previous evening N. Hill delivered the Opening Sermon, from Acts xx. 28. Seven ministers, five ruling elders and two delegates were in attendance. These elected R. T. Sargent, Speaker; N. Hill, Clerk, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. The day of fasting and prayer set apart by the General Eldership was directed to be observed. "Moral suasion" was to be used "to persuade men to refrain from the use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage," and "legal suasion to prevent the manufacture and sale of the same." The foreign mission project in connection with the Free Baptist Church was strongly endorsed. The Church of God in Kansas was declared to be "making progress, slowly, but steadily and surely." By implication, in the case against Clara Yutzey, a licensed minister, who obtained a divorce, as charged, "on unscriptural grounds," according to "the abstract of the court record," the Eldership seemed to agree that "other serious reasons" than the one biblical reason would justify divorce. The Treasurer's Report showed $35.29 to the credit of the Widows' Fund, with receipts of but $7.00; Contingent Fund receipts, $2.40; while $52.46 were received for the Konkel Monument Fund. The Eldership assumed a debt of $72.00 on Center Bethel, Labette county. There were seventeen circuits, extending into fourteen counties.

6th Kansas Eldership.—By actions of the Standing Committee during the year the number of circuits was reduced to fourteen. Of these, six were "not represented" by either a minister, ruling elder or delegate. This induced the Eldership to strike "not represented by a ruling elder" from the Constitution. The meeting was held at Mendon school-house, Rice county, beginning September 9, 1886, with the Opening Sermon the evening before, by C. S. Bolton, from Matt. xviii. 19. Bolton was elected Speaker; R. T. Sargent, Clerk, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. Believing that "one great cause of declension in spirituality among us is largely due" to "the very meager support of the ministry," the Eldership directed "each minister on entering on his field of labor to hold a meeting at some point on said field for the purpose of making arrangements for his support; and that these meetings be held quarterly, composed of elders and deacons, with the minister in charge, and brethren and sisters as advisory members." The Konkel Monument Fund was not yet completed, but $6.10 having been received during the year. "The cause is onward," reported the Committee on the State of Religion, whose Report showed 165 conversions, 154 accessions, 109 baptized. The Stationing Committee made fourteen appointments, of which six were called missions, three of which were "subject to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership."

7th Kansas Eldership.—When it is remembered that Kansas is in length 400 miles, and in width 200 miles, and that circuits were occupied in north-eastern, north-western, south-eastern and south central Kansas, it is not a matter of surprise that at a session of the Eldership held in the south-eastern corner of the State the churches should not be largely represented. On September 1, 1887, the Eldership convened at the Bumgardner school-house, Wilson county. There were twelve teaching elders present, and fifteen absent; with eight ruling elders and six delegates. The Opening Sermon was preached by G. J. Bartlebaugh, in the absence of the regular appointee. He was chosen Speaker, with R. T. Sargent, Clerk, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. To have the same committee as a Committee on Boundaries and a Stationing Committee was found expedient. While the Eldership lacked system in raising funds for its own use, it adopted the assessment plan to collect funds for the General Eldership. Notwithstanding the placing of licenses in the hands of the Standing Committee in the absence of reports from ministers, a number failed to report, and occasionally a name was thus dropped from the Ministerial Roll. The plan adopted in 1886 to "raise ministers' salaries proved a success wherever it was carried out," and it was hence more strongly urged upon all other ministers and churches. The statistics showed that 865 sermons had been preached during the year; there were 124 conversions; 59 baptized; 103 fellowshipped; membership 303; total amount of salaries, $808.40. Of the six applicants for license, the cases of four were favorably considered. The delegates to the General Eldership were required to make a report. The Stationing Committee made fifteen appointments, and named G. J. Bartlebaugh for "General Evangelist of the State," to be supported by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. Fort Scott was made a station, with J. W. Keplinger as pastor. P. Clippinger had removed to, and was preaching in, Florida; but was not appointed by the Eldership. Final disposition was made of the Konkel monument project by turning over the balance in the hands of the Treasurer to the administrator of the Konkel estate.

8th Kansas Eldership.—There were two important accessions to the active ministry of the Kansas Eldership through the action of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. J. C. Forncrook was appointed General Missionary for the State, and C. Manchester missionary at Ft. Scott. But one efficient minister, on May 14th, who had fought the good fight without reproach or fear as a soldier of Christ, ended his warfare. R. T. Sargent was 53 years of age. A native of Madison county, Ind., he served during the War of the Rebellion in the Union army. He was first licensed by the Indiana Eldership. Thence he removed to Illinois. From there to Missouri, and later to Kansas. He met every issue with courage and convincing decisiveness, and everywhere secured the confidence of the churches and people among whom he labored. The Eldership which convened at Riley, September 20, 1888, decided to erect a monument to his memory. C. S. Bolton, as a member of the Standing Committee, issued the call for the meeting, in place of Sargent, the Clerk. He preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of September 19th, and was chosen Speaker; with N. Hill, Clerk, and J. V. Good, Treasurer. The long discussions in The Advocate were disapproved; but all the periodicals and other publications of the General Eldership were strongly commended. The formation of Women's Missionary societies in all the churches in the State was earnestly recommended. The importance of concentration of Church families moving to Kansas where there are, or can be, formed, organizations of churches of God, was called to the attention of "ministers and brethren in the East." The resolution "for the better support of the ministers in charge of churches" was directed to be read by pastors to their churches. The Eldership placed itself on record in favor of the public observance of the ordinances. The names of two ministers "were stricken from the Roll" for failing to report for two years. A church had been organized at Ft. Scott, and a Bethel was in course of erection, and ministers were instructed "to hold special collections from each church for this building." "A course of reading for our young ministers" was agreed upon. There were but $120.48 in the six Funds of the Eldership, and the Finance Committee reported that "in the matter of ministers' support the state of affairs is even worse, indicating that there is something wrong or deficient in our system of raising funds." There were two Articles added to the Constitution, embracing the system of collecting funds adopted at previous Elderships, with the forfeiture of license as a penalty for failure to comply with their requirements. There were fourteen charges, and one General Evangelist. The project of "establishing a school at Ft. Scott, under the care of C. Manchester, appointee," was initiated.

9th Kansas Eldership.—The agitation of the question of the resubmission of the Prohibition Amendment during the year made it a live issue at the Eldership in the Fall of 1889. A unanimous "protest against resubmission" was adopted. The session was held at Ft. Scott, Bourbon county, Thursday, September 5, 1889. On the evening of the 4th P. K. Shoemaker delivered the Opening Sermon, from Matt. xviii. 16-18, which the Eldership requested to be published in The Advocate. W. H. Cross was elected Speaker; P. K. Shoemaker, Clerk, and J. V. Good, Treasurer. Each delegate to the General Eldership "was permitted to choose his own alternate." This was done at once, and they were reported and their names entered on the Journal. A Church Extension Fund was created, and each minister was required to collect to the amount of ten cents per member on his field of labor. Three ministers who failed to report were dropped from the Roll. The state of religion in the Eldership was "quite encouraging." The ministers had preached 1,635 sermons; they reported 108 conversions, and 17 reclaimed; 92 baptized; 156 fellowshiped; present membership, 731; churches organized, 12. The State was divided into four districts for the purpose of forming Women's Missionary societies. The Committee on License, J. C. Forncrook, C. S. Bolton and P. H. Shoemaker, demanded of a candidate for license that he abstain from the use of tobacco; reported favorably, "having been assured by the brother that he has this 7th day of September, 1889, put away forever the use of tobacco." There were fourteen appointments, including Ft. Scott station.

10th Kansas Eldership.—The Kansas Eldership held its Ministerial Association in connection with, and immediately preceding, the annual sessions. "The attendance from abroad was very small" in 1890; but the Association was instructive and profitable. The "discussions were animated, and much good was accomplished." The Eldership session began September 25th, when nine ministers and eight delegates were enrolled as present. A. Miller was elected Speaker, and Jay C. Forncrook, Clerk. While the sittings "were harmonious," "at times the discussions were very spirited." "Questions came up that were not pleasant." One of these, "which threatened for a time to be very serious," arose out of an expression in the report of the Secretary of the Board of Missions, and which seemed to be a reflection on members of the Eldership: "We have quit employing inefficient men, and are employing efficient men, with larger salaries." A committee of five sisters was appointed "to prepare for the organization of a State W. M. S. at the next Eldership." The Eldership had twelve fields of labor, three of which it had to leave unsupplied. Jay C. Forncrook was stationed at Fort Scott, "subject to the Board of Missions" of the General Eldership.

11th Kansas Eldership.—The usual controversy over Mrs. Woodworth's methods and views and practices at her evangelistic meetings developed in connection with her work at Topeka, Kas. Resolutions were offered "commending her labors," and also "requesting her to return to our State and labor among us." The last clause "was objectionable to a number of brethren." But on a yea and nay vote the resolution carried "by about two-thirds." The session was held in the Maple Grove Bethel, Wilson county, beginning September 17, 1891. But for the episode touching Mrs. Woodworth's work, "harmony prevailed throughout." A layman, Joshua Good, was chosen Speaker; J. C. Forncrook, Clerk, and W. H. Cross, Financial Clerk. Toward the close of the session the action on the Woodworth resolution was reconsidered, and "with one exception, the vote stood unanimous for striking out the last clause of the resolution." It was insisted that she had violated the Constitution of the General Eldership in coming into the territory of the Kansas Eldership without its consent, and "to invite her to return would be sanctioning past violations of the Rules of Co-operation of the General Eldership." The Opening Sermon of the Eldership was preached the evening preceding the first day's sitting, by E. L. Latchaw. A W. M. S. of the Kansas Eldership was organized upon report of the committee appointed the year before. The number of fields of labor was increased to seventeen, two of them unsupplied. One of the fields, "Hay Shootes," was in the Indian Territory. Topeka station was added as the result of the labors of Mrs. Woodworth.

12th Kansas Eldership.—With nearly all the weaker and poorer Elderships, the Kansas Eldership was dissatisfied with the exclusion of their Minutes from The Advocate, as directed by the General Eldership in 1890. Accordingly, its delegates to the General Eldership in 1893 were "requested to use their influence to have Eldership proceedings printed in full" in the paper. The session was held at Topeka, and began September 8, 1892. B. P. Parks, substitute for W. T. Turpin, preached the Opening Sermon. It "was one of the best Eldership meetings. Harmony, love and brotherly preferment prevailed." J. C. Forncrook was elected Speaker, and C. S. Bolton, Clerk. Temperance and prohibition "were strongly endorsed." Three young men were licensed, and thus the Stationing Committee was enabled to supply fourteen of the sixteen fields of labor. One of the licentiates removed to California, if possible to take up work in that State. An appropriation of $400.00 was asked of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership for Fort Scott, and $200.00 for the Norton county mission. Assessments were made for "general mission purposes." The reports of pastors did "not show as great a percentage of ingatherings as in previous years." As was so common, "some, because of not receiving sufficient support, could not push the work as they desired." A Special Committee on Missions was appointed, which considered the whole question of missions in the Eldership. It reported that "the Kansas Eldership at the present time needs help as never before in its history. Many churches in our bounds have become discouraged. We very much need means to carry on the work of the Church, as many churches are small and poor." It recommended "the support of a general worker among us" by the General Eldership Board of Missions. To "withhold their support at this time from Fort Scott Mission would at least border on criminal carelessness." A special effort was recommended to be made to pay off the mortgage on the Fort Scott bethel ($850.00)," and $175.50 was subscribed at once.

13th Kansas Eldership.—Imitation of others sometimes leads men to overdo things. While it is doubtless true in that wider field of activity in the other house of our habitation, what Confucius said: "A thousand years of study is only preparation for the real knowledge one should possess to be able to stand among his ancestors;" yet a seven years' course of studies for ministers on the Kansas Eldership Roll was a mistaken emulation of the oldest Eldership, judged by results. The Eldership which adopted this proposition held its session at the Janes' school-house, Labette county, beginning September 18, 1893. The previous evening J. C. Forncrook delivered the Opening Sermon, from I. Cor. i. 21. Nine of the twenty-one ministers were present; two exhorters, five ruling elders and eight delegates, four of which were sisters. J. C. Forncrook was elected Speaker; C. S. Bolton, Clerk, and A. E. Kepford, Financial Clerk. The prohibitory amendment to the State Constitution was heartily endorsed, as were the efforts of the Prohibition party to enforce the prohibition law of the State. The Eldership also resolved that "we use our influence to promote the cause of woman's suffrage in the State of Kansas." It rejected "the term 'reverend' which should not be applied to men, as the title only belongs to God." The Treasurer, J. V. Whisler, reported Super-annuated Fund, $1.80; Home Mission Fund, $2.00; Widows' Fund, $122.11, and General Mission Fund, $24.05. There was one license granted, to Sister S. V. Johnson, "God having given to woman all the rights he has to man." But the names of five ministers were "dropped from the Roll." There were "thirty preaching places" in the territory of the Eldership; 212 conversions during the preceding year; 210 fellowshipped. Two Ministerial Associations were arranged for, one "in connection with the next Eldership." The territory was divided into thirteen fields of labor, all of which were supplied, one of them, Riley and Milford circuit, being given to Mrs. Johnson, who was then "ordained." The Board of Missions of the General Eldership gave Kansas "two appointments, and appropriated largely for the work of the Church" in the State.

14th Kansas Eldership.—The disparity between the number of persons fellowshipped and the number baptized has always been noticeable and undesirable. Perhaps the fact was more general in the newer Elderships. It was conspicuous in Kansas in 1893-4, when there were 300 conversions, 207 fellowshipped, and 63 baptized, as gathered from incomplete reports. The Eldership convened at Englevale, Crawford county, September 10, 1894. R. M. Johnson delivered the Opening Sermon. J. C. Forncrook was elected President; W. H. Kepford, Clerk, and W. H. Cross, Financial Clerk. Ten ministers were present, six ruling elders and five delegates. The Eldership realized that there "are many fields of labor ripe for the harvest." It found "the state of religion to be deplorable." To meet these conditions so far as possible, the Eldership appointed J. C. Forncrook "State Worker," and resolved to "buy a tabernacle" for his use. It was bought for the sum of $125.00, and with equipments cost $144.50. But it was short of ministers, so that three of its thirteen fields of labor remained unsupplied, and Wilson County Mission was attached to the Verdigris circuit. One hour of the Wednesday afternoon's sitting was "set aside to consider mission work." The Eldership was enthusiastic in commendation and support of Findlay College, urging "the brotherhood to send their children" there, and strongly endorsing the management of the College. As "this enlightened age demands a better qualified ministry," it was ordered that the committee to prepare the seven years' Course of Studies be appointed, said Course "to be read by all ministers of our Eldership." An assessment of $125.00 on the churches was ordered to be made.

15th Kansas Eldership.—The Kansas Eldership, like others in the West, suffered from the unsettled condition both of Church families and ministers. These, however, were secondary causes. The commendable desire to better themselves financially caused the unrest. And this operated against successful Church work and hindered the building of strong churches. The Roll of ministers and delegates was constantly changing. In 1895 the Roll of ministers was not fully made up for publication, and can not be accurately determined. Seven were present, with five delegates, and two delegates from the W. M. S., when the body was organized at Milford, Geary county, on September 2nd. The session was held in "the Tabernacle," and the Opening Sermon was preached by W. H. Cross, at 11 o'clock a. m., September 1st. The retiring Speaker, J. C. Forncrook, "stated the needs of the Church in Kansas," after which he was re-elected Speaker; F. F. Manchester, Clerk; W. H. Cross, Financial Clerk, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. Church letters were declared "null and void one year after date." Ministers were prohibited to go on the fields of other pastors. The Eldership had a good financial system, and all the required Funds, and the main drawback was fidelity of pastors and ability of churches. A "statement included in a Transfer" given one minister was: "We deplore the fact, that while on one of the best fields in our bounds, he has not taken up a collection for Eldership Funds for the whole time he has been with us." In order "to keep the churches pure and the records straight," it was ordered that the pastors call "business meetings at least once a year of each church, when the Roll shall be called, and as the names are called each member rise and briefly answer, telling how they are getting along spiritually, and what are their desires and intentions in the Christian life." A proper watch-care was also required over any members removing to other localities. The impeachment of State, county, or municipal officers refusing to enforce the laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants was demanded, and also their "punishment as traitors to the State and country." The Eldership voted against a change in Eldership titles, and "in favor of the present form of Church government." There were now twenty bethels in Kansas, thirty-nine preaching places; number of conversions and accessions, 225; number baptized, 156, and total membership, 690. The territory was divided into twelve fields, including Ft. Scott mission, and Topeka mission.

16th Kansas Eldership.—While the Kansas Eldership was not in favor of a change in its title, it promptly acquiesced in the action of the General Eldership, and on September 28, 1896, it convened at Topeka, Shawnee county as "the Eldership of the churches of God in Kansas," and one of its first actions was the passage of an amendment to its Constitution changing its title. Ten of the twenty-one teaching elders were present, and twelve ruling elders and delegates. The officers chosen were: Speaker, J. C. Forncrook; Clerk, J. V. Whisler; Financial Clerk, W. H. Cross, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. Upon the payment of $100.00 the Eldership secured as a donation "the Harrison Chapel." A mid-Summer Ministerial Association in addition to the one held in connection with the Eldership session was arranged for. Churches in Oklahoma and Indian Territory requesting membership in the Kansas Eldership were received conditioned on the approval of the Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership. P. Olippinger had removed to Florida, and his work in that State was recognized. The alarming increase in profaning and desecrating the Sabbath was deplored; the influence of the Eldership was pledged "to retard and stop such unholy action." An important question was settled when the Eldership decided that "any minister whose license is in the hands of the Standing Committee is not legally qualified to solemnize marriages, or perform the other functions of the gospel ministry." There is no intimation that Lizzie Dupree, who received license, was a colored woman. For insubordination to the Eldership and disloyalty to the Church of God the name of one minister was "dropped from the Roll of ministers." By request, and because of neglect to report for two years, the names of four others were "dropped." Though the list of appointments numbered thirteen, one was unsupplied and two were dropped from the Roll—Big Creek circuit and Phillips county.

17th Kansas Eldership.—Every deliberative body has its embarrassments, its trials, its troubled waters, or enters the cave of Traphonius. This might be inferred relative to the Kansas Eldership in 1897, when "the waters seemed troubled at times." Conditions were less inspiring than they had been, as some of the strongest men in the ministry went to other Elderships; three fields were dependent on the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, and the Topeka Mission had become quite unpromising. A "Peace Committee" was created, whose work is not clearly disclosed, nor its actions recorded; but it served its purpose so well that "the oil soon quieted the waters, and the sea was calm." The result was "a pleasant Eldership." The session was held with the church at New York Valley, Woodson county, and the Opening Sermon was delivered on the evening of October 5, 1897, by J. W. Kingston. Friday and Saturday the Ministerial Association held its meeting. The Stationing Committee mapped out nine fields of labor, four of which were missions. All were supplied with pastors. The mission "in the outskirts of the city" of Topeka was not directly recognized; but Lizzie Dupree, in charge of it, solicited "chairs and other church furniture in Topeka" for use at this mission. The Tabernacle owned by the Eldership was offered for sale to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. Being in sympathy with Findlay College, it approved "the dollar plan" for the support of the College, and the pastors were instructed "to urge each local church to make an offering for that purpose on Thanksgiving Day."

18th Kansas Eldership.—The W. M. S. of the Kansas Eldership was closely connected with said body, as delegates had seats in the Eldership, and an hour of a sitting was given to its work, besides one evening was allotted to it. The pastors were also "requested to act as organizers on their fields of labor, and that a State Organizer be elected." The Eldership convened at Harrison Chapel, Wilson county, September 26, 1898. On constituting the Eldership thirty-three "members were present," of which number seven were women. The balloting for officers resulted in the election of J. W. Kingston, President; L. C. Barnard, Clerk, and J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. The Funds were in gratifying condition, there being in the Home Mission Fund, $50.44; General Mission Fund, $55.54; College Fund, $12.11; Church Extension Fund, $213.25; Widows' Fund, $145.87; Contingent Fund, $14.14. The Eldership declared that "the temperance cause is suffering for the want of more thorough support and co-operation of the churches, and that by our example and vote we will do all we can against the monster of intemperance." It also "discouraged the use of tobacco." One evening was set apart for an ordinance meeting, when J. W. Kingston delivered a sermon in the Tabernacle, "after which the brethren and sisters repaired to the Bethel for the ordinance services." "Trashy literature" was denounced as "ruinous to be read." The Eldership found itself in debt to the General Eldership for Mission Fund, $193.30; for Contingent Fund, $50.00. Part of this debt was at once ordered to be paid. The trustees of the Eldership were instructed "to see after insurance on Bethels." The sale of the Tabernacle was ordered. The number of fields of labor were eleven. Six ministers were named "to assist in opening new points." There was also one "General State Worker," and "Lizzie Dupree General Worker with colored people in the State." The members "had a glorious time at the Eldership, which we pray may continue among us the whole year round."

19th Kansas Eldership.—The spiritual element was conspicuous in the Kansas Eldership in 1899. "We had a glorious feast of the love of God and the brethren" is the report of L. C. Barnard, Clerk. An aggressive missionary spirit is revealed in the arrangement of the fields of labor and the assignment of ministers. The Eldership convened at Arma, Crawford county, September 18, 1899. W. H. Cross delivered the Opening Sermon. J. V. Whisler was chosen President and Treasurer, and L. C. Barnard, Clerk. Theoretically, at least, every minister without a field of labor was a missionary, whose work consisted in "opening up new points." In constituting the Eldership the names of six ministers and fourteen delegates were enrolled. The published Report of the Stationing Committee shows that the ten charges were well supplied, except Topeka Mission and Phillips county circuit, which were unsupplied. One circuit was in Woods county, Oklahoma, and P. L.

French and W. E. Tuttle were appointed to Colorado. Lizzie Dupree was made a "General Worker among the colored people in Kansas," and T. B. More held the same office among the white people. The ministers living in Colorado, a total of five, were desirous to have an Eldership organized. W. E. Tuttle had formed "the first church of God in the State in the Summer of 1899, consisting of twenty-five members."

20th Kansas Eldership.—The work in Kansas was carried on with approved zeal and energy, under conditions not too favorable. Much of the success achieved was the result of individual energy and an intelligent application of means to desired ends. The Eldership at its session held at New York Valley, Woodson county, which began September 10, 1900, rejoiced when its Committee on Overtures reported that the letters from twenty different points showed that there were "950 members in the bounds of the Kansas Eldership, an increase of 335 in the last two years." There were "twelve houses of worship and twenty-nine preaching places." It was deeply felt that permanent church work was impossible without houses of worship. There were present eleven teaching elders, nine ruling elders and seven delegates. J. V. Whisler, a layman, was elected President; L. C. Barnard, Clerk. There were two accessions to the ministry by Transfer—O. A. Newlin and J. N. Smith—and W. H. Cross received a Transfer to the Illinois Eldership. A thoughtfully written Report on Temperance endorsed the Prohibitory law of the State, and in positive terms "condemned the system called the canteen system" and the exportation of "the vile stuff being sent out from this our Christian land to foreign fields even before the blessed gospel reaches them." A two years' reading course for ministers was adopted. All were required to take this course who had not already done so. Any one failing to do so was to "forfeit his Certificate of Ordination." There were ten circuits, all supplied but the Topeka Missions. One field was in Woods county, Oklahoma, and Clover Meadow, Colorado, was attached to the Ness county circuit, Kansas. P. L. French was designated as General Evangelist for Colorado, and W. T. Turpin for the State of Kansas. The Eldership was blessed in its close, for "the Spirit of the Lord prevailed, and the Eldership closed with a soul-refreshing meeting in which six souls found peace with God, and were added to the church, and four at the altar of mercy seeking salvation."

21st Kansas Eldership.—The Eldership in 1901 was entertained with a lecture by O. A. Newlin, whose enthusiastic reception was more significant than resolutions. The subject was: "Red Hot Temperance Shot and Shell." It was published with the Journal by action of the Eldership. Newlin also delivered the Opening Sermon, from Ezek. xxii. 30. Subject: "God's Gap-fillers." The body convened with the Fairview church, Pratt county, September 30, 1901. Eleven teaching elders and thirteen ruling elders and delegates were present. Officers chosen were: President, J. V. Whisler; A. J. Leonard, Clerk; Treasurer, J. V. Whisler. The Treasurer was directed "to look after the insurance of bethels." At the annual Ministerial Association, prior to the Eldership, the ministers were required to appear for examination in the prescribed Course of Studies. A third year's course was added. One minister, G. E. Dunn, "passed from this stage of action" during the year, and his loss was lamented. As there were "many calls for help," the ministers resolved "to return from this Eldership more determined than ever to carry the word of life to all." The doors were closed against Mrs. M. B. Woodworth, on the ground that she "no longer affiliates with the churches of God," and ministers were "required to see that she does not labor on their fields, or within the bounds of this Eldership." The names of eighteen ministers were on the Roll. There were twelve fields of labor, all supplied except Topeka. While the boundaries of the Eldership had not been changed, one circuit was located partly in Colorado, and Quapau Station was in the Indian Territory. Three of the ministers resided in the Indian Territory; two in Colorado, and one in Oklahoma. The Clerk had announced that "the twenty-first Kansas Eldership of the Churches of God in Kansas and Colorado will convene September 29, 1901."

22nd Kansas Eldership.—The Ministerial Association was practically part of the Eldership session. It began on September 12, 1902, the Opening Sermon of the Eldership having been preached the previous evening, by A. J. Leonard, from Eph. v. 15, 16. The session was held with the church at Central View, Barber county, and opened September 15th. J. V. Whisler was elected President; A. J. Leonard, Clerk; W. H. Sheets, Financial Clerk. A. Miller, State Evangelist, received the "hand of congratulation for the successful work done the past year," and was "requested to give an outline for the conducting of a revival." The Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute received "heartly sanction" and the promise of "a generous support." The Eldership also stated that "the General Eldership voted a fund of $1,862.00 for mission school work in the West on the condition that such school should not become a permanent charge to the General Eldership or any of its Boards." It therefore expressed it as "the sense of the body that the Board of Missions should accept the school, assured that it will require no further financial aid." The spiritual interests of the Eldership were in a reasonable state. There were 19 preaching points, 13 church organizations, 11 houses of worship, 233 conversions, 425 fellowshipped, 133 baptized, $882.00 received for preaching." Other funds were also low, as the total amount was $88.00. Appointments were made to twelve charges, two of them receiving an appropriation from the Board of Missions of the General Eldership.

23rd Kansas Eldership.—The Ministerial Association which preceded the Kansas Eldership in 1903 discussed certain questions appropriate for the Eldership itself. Among these was "Our Mission Work, Home and Foreign," by O. A. Newlin, who had been a delegate to the General Eldership in 1902, and was familiar with the action taken at Findlay, Ohio, by the Convention to organize the new W. G. M. S. The Eldership stood loyally to the action of both the General Eldership and the Convention. The body met with the church at Mulberry, Crawford county, September 28, 1903. On the preceding Sabbath evening the Opening Sermon was preached by P. L. French. The organization was effected by electing J. V. Whisler, President; Myrtle Sheets, Clerk; J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. Eight ministers and twenty delegates were in attendance. What was known as "A Mid-year Preachers' Association" was arranged for, to hold its session at Ft. Scott. The territory of the Eldership was too extensive; the churches too widely scattered, and the means too limited to do the best permanent work. The Eldership was chiefly concerned about these questions, and felt far less interest in subjects frequently discussed and acted upon by ecclesiastical bodies. It seemed oppressed with a sense of the magnitude of the work, and its inability to do it justice. There were twelve charges, located not so far from the four corners of the State, which is 408 miles long, and 208 miles broad, rectangular in shape, and including one circuit in Oklahoma, and points in Colorado.

24th Kansas Eldership.—The confident and sanguine spirit of the Kansas Eldership in 1904 found expression in these words of the Clerk: "The recent session of the Kansas Eldership was without doubt the brightest in the history of the churches of God in Kansas." The principal reason was "the advent of several young men from other Elderships, and the ordination of four more from our own churches." The session was held with the church at Harrison Chapel, Wilson county, with the Opening Sermon on the previous evening, by W. E. Tuttle, from Job ix. 33. The organization was effected on the morning of September 19, 1904, by the election of John Hendricks, Speaker; W. E. Kelly, Clerk; W. H. Sheets, Financial Clerk; J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. Eleven ministers were present out of twenty-six on the Roll, and twenty delegates. One new "church, at Cleo, Oklahoma, was received into the Eldership." The finances were in better condition, $100.00 having been received from the sale of the Bethel in Ness county. But the Eldership was much in arrears to the Contingent and Mission Funds of the General Eldership. Plans were matured "to raise $150.00 during the coming year to liquidate the indebtedness to the General Eldership." Instead of "a delegate from each church" to be entitled to membership in the Eldership, the Constitution was amended so as to read, "a delegate for each fifty members, or fraction thereof." The support of the pastors on the twelve fields of labor was $1,420.12; the church organizations 15, and total membership 575. The delegates to the General Eldership were instructed to invite said body to convene with the church at Ft. Scott, Kansas, in 1909. The counties in the north-eastern and north-western parts of the State were omitted from the report of the Stationing Committee, and were to supply themselves.

25th Kansas Eldership.—In 1905 the Kansas Eldership held its annual session outside of the State, at Bartlesville, Ind. Ter. The phraseology of its Act of Incorporation raised a doubt in the minds of a majority whether its acts were legal, having been taken beyond the boundaries of the State. Accordingly an extraordinary session was called to meet at Ft. Scott, Kansas, December 15, 1905, when one of its first acts, and the main act, was to appoint a committee, consisting of J. V. Whisler, O. A. Newlin and C. H. Berry, to investigate the matter, consult an attorney as to the legality of the business transacted, and report. The conclusion was, "that there is no question as to the legality of all business transacted by the Eldership at Bartlesville, Ind. Ter." The date of the regular session was Monday morning, September 18, 1905. The previous Sunday evening O. A. Newlin preached the Opening Sermon. On Friday and Saturday, September 15th and 16th, the Ministerial Association held its meeting, and again the day preceding the extraordinary session. The officers of the Eldership were: President, J. V. Whisler; Clerk, F. E. Hamlin; Treasurer, J. V. Whisler. Fifteen ministers and nine delegates attended the session. There were fourteen fields of labor, besides "Ft. Scott Institute and General Missionary," O. A. Newlin, and General Worker, A. Miller. The second church, Ft. Scott, and Newlin, were subject to an appropriation by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. An important accession was that of J. W. Boyd, by transfer, who took charge of Bartlesville under the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. The Eldership sought to protect itself against unworthy men who had received Certificates of Ordination by directing that "annual Certificates of Standing" be issued to each minister, and that there be stamped on the Life Certificates the words, "Not good unless accompanied by an Annual Certificate."

26th Kansas Eldership.—A Dormitory had been built for the Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute during the Summer of 1906, which was to be formally dedicated October 9th. To have the Eldership hold its annual session coincident with this event, the date of the session was changed, and the Eldership met at Ft. Scott, Monday morning, October 8, 1906. Seventeen ministers and eighteen delegates were present. On Sunday morning, October 7th, J. W. Boyd delivered the Opening Sermon. The Eldership was organized by the election for President of J. W. Boyd; F. E. Hamlin, Clerk; J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. The dedication of the Dormitory was an Eldership event, and took place on Tuesday, October 9th, at 3 p. m., the services being held in the Chapel of the Institute. O. B. Huston, of Illinois, preached the sermon and made an appeal for funds. Tuesday evening was given to Clara Landes, returned missionary from India, who lectured on India. While every one had the kindest disposition toward Clara Landes personally, the Eldership at all times maintained its loyalty to the General Eldership and conformed to its actions. The actions on temperance were in unison with Kansas sentiment, sometimes a little extreme compared with views eastward. On education the Eldership was progressive, inspired by the enthusiastic spirit of the Principal of Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute, O. A. Newlin. There were fourteen charges, including Bartlesville, Ind. Ter.; two in Ft. Scott, and one in Prowers county, Colo. J. W. Primrose was the State Evangelist, and O. A. Newlin, General Missionary, as well as Principal of Ft. Scott Institute. His motto seemed to be "Perseverance and Victory," and he infused much of his spirit into others. W. W. Richmond and J. W. Primrose earnestly seconded his projects for larger things.

27th Kansas Eldership.—One of the most advanced steps was taken by the Kansas Eldership in 1907, when it appointed one of its ministers a "State Temperance Worker." The Ministerial Association held its meeting on Friday and Saturday before the convening of the Eldership. Temperance agitation was much stimulated by the prospective World's Temperance Centennial Congress, to be held at Saratoga Springs, New York, June 14-30, 1908. Temperance organizations and religious bodies of every name and nature were invited to participate. The session of the Eldership was held at Engle vale, Crawford county, Kansas, beginning Monday, September 16, 1907. The preceding Sunday evening J. W. Primrose delivered the Opening Sermon. On Monday evening the Missionary Sermon was preached by O. A. Newlin. On Wednesday evening the ordinances were observed. John Hendricks was elected President; J. V. Whisler, Clerk; W. H. Charles, Financial Clerk; J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. The attendance was disappointing; but the session was harmonious, without "a ripple to mar the general good feeling." The loyal attitude of the Kansas Eldership toward the General Eldership was appropriately expressed by official action, in view of the meeting of the latter at Ft. Scott in 1909. It "advised the W. G. M. S. of 1890 to accept any reasonable adjustment of the questions involved, even at a sacrifice, in order that peace and harmony might be restored." When the appointments were made to the twelve fields of labor, Ft. Scott station was unsupplied. O. A. Newlin was appointed to the Collegiate Institute. The second church in Ft. Scott was omitted from the list. Besides Bartlesville in Oklahoma, the fields of P. L. French, J. N. Smith and

J. E. Barbour were partly in Oklahoma. Ossaman and Long were appointed to Lamar, Colo. The arrangement suggested the contraction of the occupied territory in the State of Kansas.

28th Kansas Eldership.—Of the twelve charges enrolled in 1908 to constitute the Eldership, six were "not represented," or "not reported." A few others had no teaching elders. The personnel of the Eldership consisted of three pastors; five delegates, one of them a woman; the Principal of the Collegiate Institute, the General Worker, the State Temperance Worker, three local ministers and three members of the W. M. S. Upon balloting for organization J. W. Bloyd was elected President; J. V. Whisler, Clerk; W. H. Charles, Financial Clerk; J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. The session was held at New York Valley, Woodson county, Kansas, September 7 and 8, 1908. There was in the Treasurer's hands a total of $664.87, of which $526.18 belonged to the Widows' Fund. A more systematic "plan for Eldership collections" was to be devised by a committee. While the Eldership "rejoiced over the valuable addition to the body of T. M. Funk and John H. Gross," it recorded with emotions of unfeigned sorrow the fact that "God in his all-wise providence has called our beloved brother, David Keplinger, from our Eldership to the home above." He "was a charter member of the Kansas Eldership." He was a native of Virginia, born September 1, 1823. He died at the home of his son in Kansas, when there on a visit from the Soldiers' Home in California, on November 13, 1907, aged 84 years, 2 months and 13 days. He was ordained by the Ohio Eldership in 1849. Thence he went to Indiana, in which Eldership he was a prominent, active member until he went to Missouri, and thence to Kansas, and later to California. He was a man of great endurance, a self-sacrificing minister, faithful through storm and sunshine. His brethren delighted to honor him. He was a man of guileless humility, the first test of true natural greatness. On temperance the Eldership was more explicit than before, in view of the meeting of the Legislature to act on important liquor legislation. It included Sunday theaters, Sunday baseball and other evils in its protest for public reforms addressed to the Legislature, "making possible the enjoyment of a more sane and modest Sabbath day." Its resolutions were to be "placed in the Topeka Capitol during the session of the Legislature." The Eldership viewed with serious urgency the matter of "having our children taught the distinctive doctrines of the Church," and therefore advised the dissemination of Church literature through the Sunday-schools and in the homes, and the sending of the children to Church of God schools. It also granted the request of the Oklahoma Eldership, to "relinquish its right to that portion of the territory included in the bounds of Oklahoma." Desirous that the work in Ulubaria, India, should be continued, it nevertheless insisted that the laborers there must come into harmony and co-operation with the General Eldership. The W. M. S. of Kansas was commended for its loyalty under the difficulties which surrounded it. There were nine charges, three of them wholly or partly in Oklahoma, with three General Workers and one General Missionary.

29th Kansas Eldership.—Saturday, September 18, 1909, was to be a day for the Ministerial Association to hold its meeting. "Some of the brethren assembled" for that purpose. Preaching services were held on Saturday evening and Sabbath morning, when T. B. More and P. L. French officiated. Charles Manchester had become Principal of Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute, and on Sabbath evening was pressed into service, in the absence of the appointee, to preach the Opening Sermon of the Eldership. On Monday morning, September 20th, at Mulberry, the Eldership was constituted, with ten fields of labor, one of them in Colorado; one pastor and nine "ministers without appointments," nine delegates, two of them women, and three officers of the W. M. S. When the Ministerial Roll was made up at the adjournment, twenty-two names were on it. In addition to the ministers, delegates and officers of the W. M. S., there were also enrolled the laymen who were officers of the Eldership of 1908, and five other members of the W. M. S. Thus constituted, the Eldership chose T. B. More, President; Chas. Manchester, Clerk; W. H. Charles, Financial Clerk; J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. The President favored the women with the three places on the Committee on Temperance, placing thereon Mrs. Valeria Gayhart, Mrs. W. H. Charles and Mrs. Maggie More. Their report not only declared it "an honor to live in the great State of Kansas, because it has taken precedence in enacting laws prohibiting and abolishing the liquor traffic;" but it denounced "theaters, five-cent shows and Sunday baseball, because they desecrate God's holy day and degrade public morals." The management of Ft. Scott Collegiate Institute under C. Manchester received generous endorsement by the Eldership. The work of the General Eldership was strongly approved, and the Eldership "put itself on record as opposed to all divisions in our Missionary Forces," and emphatically sustained the "Final Action" of the General Eldership on this subject. Provision was made for the revision of the Eldership Constitution and By-Laws. The state of religion was not satisfactory. The work did "not come up to the standard that we should like to see." Some churches had gone down. Yet "some good work has been done." There were 116 conversions, 82 accessions, 62 baptisms. Oklahoma Eldership having received the territory south of the State line, yet the appointments as to numbers remained the same, with one in Colorado. The Standing Committee had revised the Course of Studies for the younger ministers, and it now covered a period of three years, and an Entrance Examination, in the common branches.

80th Kansas Eldership.—Nominally some fields in the Kansas Eldership were still large, though a few of them were single churches. Thus in 1910 there was one field designated as "Pratt county and the western part of the Kansas Eldership." One, "Stafford and Edwards counties." One, "Southern Texas." The missionary spirit was deeply rooted in the ministry. They could not be chided with Lowell's thought, that "not failure, but low aim is crime" in their case. Their purposes were lofty and true; but the mountains of difficulties lay athwart their path. When the Eldership convened at Fort Scott, Kansas, August 29, 1910, it had already listened to the Opening Sermon the Sunday evening previous, by T. M. Funk, from I. Cor. i. 10-17. There were present eleven ministers, six delegates, three officers of the W. M. S., and the Financial Secretary. T. B. More was elected President; C. Manchester, Clerk; W. H. Charles, Financial Clerk; J. V. Whisler, Treasurer. In the Treasurer's hands were funds to the credit of the Church Extension Fund, $20.59; the Home Mission Fund, $62.19; the General Mission Fund, $25.75; the Widows' Fund, $644.64; the Contingent, $32.25. The Eldership was jealous of the reputation of its ministers, and when the name of a minister was called for his report, it was referred to a special committee because he had "issued a circular letter, and caused it to be sent to members of the Eldership, calculated to do injury to" another minister of the body. Acknowledging his wrong and asking pardon, his license was granted him. This Eldership knew the value of silence in baseless matters relating to ministerial reputation. "Lay thine hand upon thy mouth" was its motto. They had seen the statue of Harpocrates, in which he, the god of silence, is represented with his fingers pressed upon his lips. The Eldership was beforehand in its action in favor of the enactment of "federal laws to make it a crime to ship liquor into States that have prohibitory laws." It was responsive to every effort to enlarge the Endowment Fund of Findlay College, and heartily approved the measures inaugurated to secure the new endowment of $50,000. It manifested special interest in Fort Scott Institute, which, having no endowment, needed the more the contributions of its friends and collections on Collegiate Institute Day. Loyal it linked these two educational institutions together in commending them to the churches in Kansas, and required "each minister holding a charge to preach at least one sermon on educational lines during the year." Permission was "granted the Fort Scott church to move the bethel to a point nearer the center of the city," but without expense to the Eldership. The results of the year's work were not up to expectations, as the number of conversions was 126; baptisms, 51; accessions, 10.

81st Kansas Eldership.—As per arrangement of the Eldership in 1910, Saturday preceding the Eldership in 1911 was taken up by the Ministerial Association, with "a sermon on Friday night." Saturday evening the W. M. S. held its annual meeting, with a carefully prepared program. On Sunday evening Charles Manchester preached the Eldership Opening Sermon, from Ex. iv. 24-26. The session was held at Sharon, Central View Bethel, Barber county, and the Eldership was constituted on Monday morning, August 28, 1911, when there were present five ministers, four ruling elders, five delegates, the Financial Clerk and one representative of the W. M. S. These elected S. W. Konkel, President; C. Manchester, Clerk; W. H. Charles, Financial Clerk, and also Treasurer. Committees were appointed by the President and Clerk, and the Eldership did its work according to a regular Order of Business. It ordered its dues to the General Eldership to be paid in full, and in other ways gave evidence of a spirit of loyalty and co-operation. The spiritual interests of the Eldership were in fair condition. There were ten organized churches, twelve houses of worship and seventeen preaching places. Conversions, 159; baptized, 69; accessions, 66; churches organized, 2; number of members, 268. The Bethel in Sumner county was authorized to be sold, as it was not being used by the ministers of the Eldership. The efforts of C. Manchester "to secure larger gifts for Fort Scott Collegiate Institute" were "heartily encouraged," and the Institute Day was directed to be observed. The "tireless workers who have succeeded in completing the Carnegie Fund of Findlay College" were commended, and the Eldership "rejoiced with them in the enlarged opportunities awaiting the faithful workers at Findlay." Assessments were made on the churches for various funds, and they were to be "notified by the Clerk two months before the meeting of the next Eldership."

32nd Kansas Eldership.—On Saturday, August 24, 1912, the W. M. S. of the Kansas Eldership held its thirteenth annual session, and the faithful band of women were greatly encouraged in their tireless labors by the commendations of the Eldership. Viola G. Hershey, returned missionary from India, had met with the Society in May, and stimulated it to greater efforts for the foreign work and to extend the work in Kansas. The Opening Sermon of the Eldership was delivered on Sunday, by Chas. Manchester, from Luke v. 4. When the Eldership was constituted it consisted of four ministers, three ruling elders, three delegates, and five officers of the W. M. S. The latter were placed on committees and had the other rights of members. The Committees on Temperance and on the State of Religion were wholly composed of women, and there was one on each of the Committees on Journals, Education, Resolutions and Business. The session was held at New York Valley, Woodson county, Kansas, and began on Monday morning, August 26, 1912. A. J. Leonard was elected President; Chas. Manchester, Clerk; A. H. Shuman, Financial Clerk; W. H. Charles, Treasurer. The State of Religion was not characterized by the Committee; but it gave facts, to wit: Number of appointments, 13; churches, 9; houses of worship, 12; conversions, 99; baptized, 57; accessions, 56; membership, 253. The new church at Gerlane, Kansas, was received, and yet the Committee stated that "we have fewer appointments than last year, and less members converted and baptized." An undertone of solicitude is heard in the words: "We still believe that God is willing to bless earnest and faithful labor." They may have known that other religious bodies working in rural districts had similar experiences. There was much general anxiety in ecclesiastical circles over the twelve hundred country churches in the State which had been abandoned and deserted because of a lack of interest in church work, and other causes. Perhaps ministers shared in the responsibility. Barber county circuit was mentioned by the Committee as having had the most encouraging work during the year. Yet the "circuit was not supplied with a minister" at this Eldership. It was "a work with three churches, all thoroughly alive to the work, and able to pay $500.00 or $600.00 a year," guaranteed. The broader view of National Prohibition was taken by the Eldership, and for this the Eldership declared it "will do all in our power." It heartily endorsed, and rejoiced in the movement to prohibit the shipping of intoxicating liquors into prohibitory States." At the Monday evening sitting, besides acting on a strong report on Education, C. Manchester preached the Annual Ordination Sermon, from John xiv. 15. C. Manchester, A. H. Shuman and W. H. Charles were elected the Standing Committee, Charles being a lay elder. The Stationing Committee were C. Manchester, and T. B. More, ministers, and W. H. Charles, C. M. Hiestand and S. W. Konkel, lay elders. Trustees, J. N. Smith, minister, and W. H. Sheets, J. V. Whisler, R. A. Porter and W. H. Charles, lay elders. The Widows' Fund had increased to $755.68. The Home Mission Fund was $76.06; General Mission Fund, $70.00; Contingent Fund, $49.11; Church Extension Fund, $45.59. The Stationing Committee made appointments to three charges, leaving "Barber county circuit and Crawford county circuit in the hands of the Standing Committee to be supplied." It appointed G. W. Wyatt to Crawford county, and "asked the Board of Missions of the General Eldership to appropriate $200.00 to his support."

XVIII. THE WEST VIRGINIA ELDSERSHIP, NORTH.

1st West Virginia Eldership, North.—That order which is Heaven's first law, and which Milton extols as

“—a glorious law
Seen in those pure and beauteous isles of light
That come and go, as circling months fulfill Their high behest,” never characterized any Eldership more perennially than it did the West Pennsylvania Eldership. And when the time seemed now to have fully come to sever part of its membership and territory from the main body, not only was every thing done orderly, but with a dominant brotherly feeling. Whatever consultations and caucuses may have preceded, the project of organizing a new Eldership was suddenly sprung at the session of the West Pennsylvania Eldership held at New Brighton, Beaver county, Pa., beginning October 5, 1882. On Tuesday afternoon,

Gravel Street Bethel.

October 10th, T. Woods submitted a resolution, declaring it “to be the sense of the body that a new Eldership should be formed, to be known as the West Virginia Eldership.” “North” was not at this time part of the title. It also directed that proper steps be taken to carry this resolution into effect. The resolutions were adopted by a rising vote. A special committee was named, consisting of J. Grimm, T. Woods and A. R. McCahan, to determine the boundaries of the new Eldership, and report in 1883. The Report as then made, at the Eldership held at Union Bethel, Somerset county, Pa., recommended that the territory embrace Greene county, Pa., the State of Virginia except Preston county, and all that part of the State of Ohio belonging to the West Pennsylvania Eldership. The ministers present who had determined to cast their lots with the proposed Eldership were T. Woods, W. R. Craig, W. B. Long, J. S. Marple, N. M. Anderson, J. L. Lucas, H. D. Grimm and J. C. Cunningham. They held a preliminary meeting, elected Standing and Stationing Committees, and “adjourned to meet at Green Valley, Pa.,” on November 16, 1883. When they convened as per adjournment, an Opening Sermon was preached by J. S. Marple, from Jer. iii. 4. The members in attendance were J. S. Marple, W. B. Long, J. C. Cunningham, N. M. Anderson, J. L. Lucas, H. D. Grimm, W. G. Steele, teaching elders. Five teaching elders were absent. Delegates present were N. Vanaman, S. Bartrug, W. H. Rose, E. Dowler, Z. H. Yoder, T. S. Gallatin, G. W. Planks, P. Morris and A. Ryan. W. B. Long was chosen Speaker; J. C. Cunningham, Clerk, and E. Dowler, Treasurer. The Treasurer was required to give bond in the sum of $1,000.00. The Rules of the West Pennsylvania Eldership were adopted, and the collections provided for therein were ordered to be lifted. A committee, consisting of J. C. Cunningham and N. M. Anderson, was named to draft a Petition to the General Eldership, asking for authority to organize the West Virginia Eldership. The Petition was drawn up and reported, and was agreed to. Then the following delegates were elected as bearers of the Petition to the General Eldership to meet in Wooster, Ohio, in May, 1884: W. B. Long and J. C. Cunningham, ministerial delegates; N. Vanaman and E. Dowler, lay delegates. A mission was created in Calhoun county, W. Va.

The Petition to organize the new Eldership having been granted by the General Eldership, the boundaries fixed and the name, style and title determined as per Petition, the newly chartered Eldership was called to meet at Gravel Street, W. Va., October 10, 1884. There was no Opening Sermon; but religious exercises were conducted by R. H. Bolton, of Ohio, General Missionary Secretary. The Eldership was constituted by the Speaker and Clerk of the "temporary organization," and the following enrollment made: Teaching elders—J. C. Cunningham, W. B. Long, N. M. Anderson, S. B. Craft, G. A. Bartlebaugh, J. L. Lucas, W. R. Craig, T. Woods, W. G. Steele, H. D. Grimm and J. R. Wilson. J. S. Marple, absent. Delegates—N. Vanaman, Perry McMann, W. P. Crosier, W. T. Smith, B. Eagan, H. Earnest, H. McCabe, E. Dowler and E. H. Lambes. An election for officers followed, and resulted in the choice of T. Woods, Speaker; N. M. Anderson, First Clerk; W. B. Long, Second Clerk; G. A. Bartlebaugh, Financial Clerk, and E. Dowler, Treasurer. Realizing that "much of the territory within the boundary lines of the Eldership is unoccupied by the Church," the Committee on Missions reported that "our prayer to God is that he may raise up good men to preach the gospel," and recommended the appointment of "a General Evangelist to operate on our unoccupied territory." A missionary meeting was also recommended "to make an effort to secure funds with which to carry on the good work." The Eldership also expressed its hearty sympathy with the mission work of the General Eldership, and urged annual collections for frontier missions. It endorsed the measures adopted by the General Eldership "to plant the standard of the Church in foreign lands." It was voted "to hold a Ministerial Association one day before the annual meeting of the Eldership." The body emphatically "discountenanced the selfishness manifested among our local churches and circults in the selection of preachers," and charged that "there is not as much co-operation as there should be." The Treasurer had received $40.57, and paid out $31.90. A Sabbath-school Convention was decided upon. Anderson, Cunningham and Woods were elected as the Standing Committee. The Stationing Committee made appointments to Wheeling circuit, Dry Ridge, Bellaire (Ohio), Sugar Grove (Pa.), Greene circuit (Pa.), Marshall circuit (W. Va.), Pipe Creek circuit, and Jackson and Kanawha mission. T. Woods was made "Supervising Evangelist." Items in the Financial Secretary's Report: Appointments, 37; organized churches, 23; Bethels, 15; membership, 639; conversions, 228; additions, 197; collected for missions, $23.30; Contingent Fund, $7.00; delegates to G. E., $39.57; Sabbath-schools, 15; scholars, 419; salaries received by ministers, $1,727.72. A committee was appointed to secure a Charter from the West Virginia Legislature.

Thomas Woods, along with W. B. Elliott, was ordained at Benwood, Marshall county, W. Va., on Monday forenoon, October 7, 1877, by the West Pennsylvania Eldership there in session. He attended the session of 1878, but at neither was he appointed to a charge. In 1879 he was appointed to Proctor, Wetzel county, W. Va. He served that charge one year, when he was sent to the "Old Indiana" circuit, Pennsylvania, at the Eldership in 1880. In 1881 he was appointed to Kanawha River circuit, W. Va., which field he served for three years, or until the first session of the West Virginia Eldership, in 1884. He was absent from the Eldership in 1883. It was in 1882, when down in Kanawha county, West Va., that he fully realized the long distance between the extreme southern sections of the Eldership territory and its central and northern parts. This was the main consideration which prompted him to introduce a resolution in favor of a division of the Eldership. Besides, the Church was prospering in West Virginia, and there were preachers enough in that section to make a respectable Eldership. His desire, not to say ambition, was accomplished, when in 1884 his plans were consummated in the organization of the West Virginia Eldership, October 10, 1884, of which he was the presiding officer. He, however, did not remain a member long, for in the Fall of 1886 he asked for, and received, a Transfer to the West Pennsylvania Eldership. He was an efficient minister when in the active work. There was some charming fascination in his ministrations. He was not brilliant, but forceful, and his fervent appeals for righteousness and truth, urged in pathetic and wholesome terms, often met responses in many hearts.

2nd West Virginia Eldership, North.—The West Virginia Eldership, North, had some stormy sailing early in its history. It found it necessary to exercise discipline in the case of several ministers at its second regular session, which convened at Franklin, Ohio, September 2, 1885. There were thirteen ministers in attendance, and six delegates. N. M. Anderson, who has always been an honored leader in the body, was elected Speaker; W. B. Long, First Clerk; T. Woods, Second Clerk, and W. G. Steele, Financial Clerk. The name of one minister "was stricken from the Journal." Charges were preferred against another, which were "settled on conditions" that the accused "acknowledge that he circulated false reports against" his accuser, "which was injurious to his moral standing," and that "it be published" that his accuser "is not guilty of what he was charged." The ministers without charges were required "to pay fifty cents of assessments made on us by the General Eldership." In addition to action against "the great evils of intemperance in the land," the Eldership recommended "the propriety of an organized effort among the preachers and members of every church to bring about a system whereby we as a body may be able to do more for the cause of temperance." A committee was appointed "to wait on the Secretary of State and procure a charter for this body." "Various places for missionary operations" were recommended, "with the request that the Board of Missions of this body devise a plan to procure money by which this noble work may be carried on within the bounds of this Eldership." The mission work of the General Eldership was also strongly endorsed, and each pastor was directed to preach one sermon annually on it "and take up a collection." Assessments on the various fields were made to raise the amounts apportioned to the Eldership by the General Eldership. The fields of labor consisted of two stations—Wheeling and Gravel Street—, eight circuits and four missions. Each pastor was instructed "to collect fifty cents from each member to purchase a tent to hold meetings in."

were not coming in, so that it was difficult to keep missionaries in the field. The condition of the treasury does not disclose this fact, as no report is given at the Eldership which held its annual session at Mt. Carmel, Greene county, Pa., beginning October 1, 1886; but in the actions taken. There was a Committee on Missions, which declared that there was "a great field open within the boundaries of this Eldership which has not as yet been visited by any of our ministers." It also strongly urged pastors to make "special efforts to secure means to replenish the treasury, that the Board of Missions may make appointments and appropriations for mission work." An evening was set apart for a missionary meeting, but only $32.53 was collected. Applicants for license were required to "have a recommendation for religious standing where membership is held, signed by the pastor and ruling elders." For the following year the Standing Committee was granted "power to transfer a minister of good standing in this Eldership to any other Eldership of the Church of God." Intemperance was viewed as the outgrowth of "a dangerous and evil heart, with many heads and many horns," and in highly figurative language the Eldership resolved to "lift up our voice and declared that" its destruction must be accomplished "by the ballot box." Woods, the putative father of the Eldership and President of its first session, took a transfer to the West Pennsylvania Eldership. There were thirteen fields of labor, but three were unsupplied. Wheeling and Gravel Street stations disappeared in the Wheeling circuit. The officers of this Eldership were S. B. Craft, Speaker; T. Woods, Journalizing Clerk; N. M. Anderson, Transcribing Clerk; W. G. Steele, Financial Clerk, and E. Dowler, Treasurer.

4th West Virginia Eldership, North.—For the purpose of distributing official positions as much as possible the West Virginia Eldership enacted a Rule, that "no member shall fill more than two positions at one session of this body." This made quite a difference in the composition of the committees of the session held at "Lower School-house, on Davis Creek, Kanawha county, W. Va.," the Opening Sermon of which was preached on Wednesday evening, September 28, 1887, by W. G. Steele, from 2 Tim. ii. 15. The organization was not effected until September 30th because of the absence of the Clerk, "with the books and papers," when W. G. Steele was chosen Speaker; N. M. Anderson, First Clerk; J. C. Cunningham, Second Clerk; W. C. Leonard, Financial Clerk, and E. Dowler, Treasurer. Fifteen ministers and six delegates were present. The Eldership so positively insisted on ministers of other Elderships presenting transfers before they can serve charges that it approved the action of the Standing Committee in removing D. T. Leach from the circuit assigned him by the Eldership because "he failed to get and hand to us his transfer." After requiring "the young ministers for this Eldership year" to be examined, the Eldership adopted a rule "that all the ministers of this body be placed in the class for examination." Six brethren were licensed to preach, whose ages ranged from thirty-six to forty-seven years. A Ministerial Association was arranged for, to immediately precede the Sunday-school Convention. The total amount for all purposes received by the Treasurer was $89.44. A new committee was appointed to secure a State Charter. There were fifteen fields of labor, three of which were missions.

5th West Virginia Eldership, North.—With ten ministers present, and nine absent, and eight delegates, the fifth West Virginia Eldership, North, met with the church at Woodland, Marshall county, W. Va., September 20, 1888. The preceding evening S. B. Craft delivered the Opening Sermon, from Acts xx. 28. N. M. Anderson was elected Speaker; Geo. E. Komp, First Clerk; I. D. Cousins, Second Clerk; W. G. Steele, Third Clerk. While the report of the committee to secure a State Charter does not indicate whether it was granted, the Eldership proceeded to elect "five trustees to hold the property of the Eldership." The church at Peter's Run was "received into the Eldership." Licenses to exhort were now granted by the Eldership, but there was no formal ordination, as in the case of ministers. The Standing Committee was given power to grant licenses and transfers "the coming year." The large and inviting fields for mission work appealed strongly to the Eldership, and it resolved to "do all we can to extend the borders of the Church of God, and that the missionary money be used where most good can be done." There were fifteen fields of labor; but George E. Komp, appointee to Greenfield and Greenwood, was also General Evangelist.

6th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The death of "a devoted and efficient servant of God," such as was W. G. Steele, of the West Virginia Eldership, North, naturally recalls the death of Paul in contrast with that of Augustus Caesar. The latter died as a play-actor, at the heights of fame, his jeweled hand grasping a bubble; the former "comes to a martyr's death, his manacled hand grasping an Amaranthine crown." Steele had been but nine years in the ministry. He died some time prior to the meeting of the Eldership at Grandview, Putnam county, W. Va., September 20, 1889. On Education the Eldership took the position "that we as an Eldership will make every possible effort to secure a liberal education, knowing that it is impossible to teach without being informed." The General Eldership missionary assessment was apportioned to the fifteen fields of labor, but no apportionments were made for its own funds. The total receipts reported by the Treasurer were only $45.27. A new Treasurer, L. F. Murray, was elected, who during the year was received by transfer from the West Pennsylvania Eldership. The other officers were: Speaker, N. M. Anderson; Geo. E. Komp, First Clerk; I. D. Cousins, Second Clerk, and H. W. Marty, Third Clerk. The Eldership sought to be relieved from assessment for General Eldership Missionary Fund, as there were "open fields around them; the harvest white already, and many are perishing, while earnest, consecrated laborers are few. In order to bear the gospel to the unsaved, financial aid is needed, and must be had, to support the work here." A Rule was adopted, "that when a new point of organization is reported to the Eldership by a preacher or delegate, that it be received or rejected by the Eldership." Another new Rule was one to make "the Stationing Committee a Committee on Salaries, to make an assessment on each circuit, station and mission in this Eldership, in order to the gain of ministers' salaries." Three ministers were required to appear for instructions before the Licensing Committee. One was to receive "instructions in doctrinal matters;" one, "as to the duties of a minister of the gospel, and what is required as a member of the Eldership," and one, to be admonished "to be more careful in his financial dealings and manner of life." Apportionments were made to sixteen circuits and missions.

7th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The Opening Sermon of the West Virginia Eldership, North, delivered on the evening of October 1, 1890, by H. W. Marty, was so well appreciated that it was ordered to be sent to The Advocate office for publication. The Eldership met October 1st, and was organized by electing L. F. Murray, Speaker; Geo. E. Komp, First Clerk; I. D. Cousins, Second Clerk; J. R. Campbell, Financial Clerk, and Jackson Bayles, Treasurer. The session was held at Big Run, Jackson county, W. Va. "A Ministerial Association was ordered to be held in May, in connection with the Sunday-school Convention." The Eldership had a Home Mission Fund, into which "every Church member was solicited to pay at least ten cents annually." Also a Superannuated Fund, and "W. C. Leonard's name was placed on the Superannuated list." As the deeds of many church houses in the Eldership were held by the West Pennsylvania Eldership, said body was requested to turn them over to the Clerk of the West Virginia Eldership. The cause was reported as advancing, as was also indicated by the appointments. There were seventeen circuits, all but two supplied with pastors.

8th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The coincidence of dedication and Eldership gave the session of the West Virginia Eldership of 1891 more than usual interest. The Centennial Bethel, Greene county, Pa., was to be rededicated on Lord's day, October 11th, and the Eldership convened October 7th. On the evening of October 6th Geo. E. Komp preached the Opening Sermon. S. B. Craft was elected Speaker; Geo. E. Komp, Journalizing Clerk, and Clarence J. Marple, Financial Clerk. After the Report of the Treasurer was acted on, Jackson Bayles was re-elected to that office. While nothing of a serious character disturbed the serenity of the session, yet there was publicity on some transactions "doubtless to a greater extent than was fruitful of good." Three young men "were formally ordained to preach the word." The Stationing Committee made seventeen circuits, all of which were supplied with pastors. A General Evangelist and Financial Agent was also appointed, who was "to secure moneys and notes for Eldership purposes."

9th West Virginia Eldership, North.—While the West Virginia Eldership, North, with few exceptions, was a quiet, harmonious body, the session of 1892 had "some rough places;" but they "were made smooth by the Spirit of Christian preferment and brotherly love." The session was held with the church at Gravel street, Benwood, Marshall county, W. Va., beginning October 5th. On the evening of the 4th N. M. Anderson preached the Opening Sermon. An organization was effected by the choice of S. E. Stewart for Speaker; Geo. E. Komp, First Clerk; W. S. Shimp, Second Clerk, and E. Dowler, Treasurer. An amendment to the Constitution provided for a "Vice Chairman," and L. F. Murray was elected. An assessment for missionary and delegate funds was ordered. B. F. Howell, who "came with credentials of ordination from the Baptist Church," received license. The circuits were reduced to fourteen, two of which were unsupplied. There was, however, one General Evangelist, one Evangelist and one General Missionary. All other ministers were "to assist in the work wherever possible, and to open new appointments."

10th West Virginia Eldership, North.—One of the various hindrances to the progress of the work in the West Virginia Eldership was the almost constant transfers of ministers to other Elderships. In 1893 five efficient laborers left for the Ohio and Indiana Elderships, while one was previously transferred by the Standing Committee to West Pennsylvania. The Eldership met at Mt. Taber, Kanawha county, W. Va., October 5, 1893. The Opening Sermon was preached by L. F. Murray. Twenty ministers and six delegates were enrolled. Balloting for officers resulted in the election of S. E. Stewart, Speaker; I. D. Cousins, Journalizing Clerk; W. S. Shimp, Financial Clerk, and B. F. Doyle, Treasurer. The Eldership named a layman for trustee of Findlay College, and "all ministers pledged themselves to work for the interest of the College." During the year death broke the ranks of the ministry by the removal of N. H. Messenger, an "aged man of God," but licensed in 1885. Notwithstanding the loss by transfers and death, the Eldership had enough men, including several valuable accessions of young men, to supply its twenty fields of labor.

11th West Virginia Eldership, North.—Until this year the term "North" had not been an official part of the title of the West Virginia Eldership. But at this session the necessary steps were taken to form an Eldership in the more southern parts of the State, to be known as the "West Virginia Eldership, South," or "The Southern West Virginia Eldership." The question was carefully considered, and L. F. Murray and B. F. Howell were appointed and "authorized to call a session of said Eldership" for the purpose of forming a temporary organization and conducting the business until the meeting of the General Eldership in 1896. The session of the West Virginia Eldership, North, was held at Franklin, Ohio, beginning October 4, 1894. G. C. Thompson delivered the Opening Sermon the previous evening. I. D. Cousins was chosen Speaker, and B. F. Howell, Clerk. Two brethren received exhorters' licenses. The term "local preachers," it was decided, "should be defined to mean an unordained preacher." The possible existence of some unsound views led the Eldership to declare, that "any preacher in this body falling or refusing to preach and practice the doctrine of the Church of God as a whole shall be considered deficient in doctrine, and shall be disfellowshipped at the end of one year." Each pastor was instructed to hold four ordinance meetings a year on his charge, and each church was advised to "hold a weekly prayer-meeting on each Wednesday night." The departure to his final reward of J. C. Wright, and also of ——— McKinney, was recorded. Some "grievances" between two ministers resulted in the withdrawal of S. E. Steward, who had been a prominent and efficient worker in the body. By reason of the organization of the West Virginia Eldership, South, the number of circuits was reduced to nine, all but one supplied with pastors. "All the unoccupied territory within the bounds of the West Virginia Eldership" was given in charge of a General Evangelist.

12th West Virginia Eldership, North.—With rare exceptions the West Virginia Eldership, North, has been a very harmonious body. Even questions provoking disputations and developing antagonistic views were discussed with serenity and disposed of without irritation or chafing. This was exemplified at the session of 1895, held at Maynard Hall, near Blaineville, Belmont county, Ohio, beginning October 2nd. The officers elected were President, I. D. Cousins, who had preached the Opening Sermon on Tuesday evening, from 2 Chron. ix. 18; J. C. Beam, Recording Secretary; W. S. Shimp, Financial Secretary, and B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. There was a good deal of discussion of questions to be acted on by each Annual Eldership. N. M. Anderson had taken part in the discussion of these questions in The Advocate, and he was a leader whom the body readily followed. There were eight ministers present, and when a vote was reached they, with the few lay representatives present, voted unanimously for "Association" in place of "Eldership." Also for "Churches" in place of "Church," and against ordination with the imposition of hands. It also placed the granting of exhorters' licenses in the hands of the local churches. An action tending to promote harmony was adopted under which "no certificate of license be delivered to any who are at variance." The right either to grant or receive transfers of ministers was denied to the Standing Committee. An effort to instruct preachers and churches to hold the ordinance services in private, "none but church and Christian people being permitted to be present, the world to be excluded," failed of adoption. The Eldership observed the ordinances in public on the last evening, and "it was a time long to be remembered by those who were present on account of the deep solemnity that prevailed and the gracious outpouring of the Spirit."

13th West Virginia Eldership, North.—In her tour among the Elderships Clara Landes went to Martin's Ferry, Belmont county, Ohio, where, on October 7, 1896, convened the West Virginia Eldership, North. She not only "entertained a large and appreciative audience on the subject of missions and her prospective work in India;" but also addressed the Eldership on "the urgent necessity of the organization of local missionary societies." The Eldership, however, did not seem to catch her spirit, for it only declared that "the territory is large, extensive and unoccupied, and we lack means to employ missionaries." N. M. Anderson preached the Opening Sermon, from Mark xvi. 15. He was elected President; J. C. Beam, Journalizing Clerk; B. D. Eden, Statistical Clerk, and B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. The Constitution and By-Laws were revised and carefully considered, under the leadership of Anderson. An attempt "to throw ministers loose, giving them privilege of hiring and being hired by churches" was made, under the spirit of unrest abroad, but was not successful. The state of religion was "far below the standard, and ministers of the body were recommended "to make a more vigorous effort to promote the cause of Christ and the upbuilding of his kingdom." The new Constitution provided for an Executive Board, which consisted of W. S. Shimp, J. L. Lucas and R. Vanaman, Jr. A Ministerial Association was to be held in June, the Standing Committee to prepare the program. There were eleven fields of labor, and all were supplied but one. In three instances the pastor was appointed "with discretionary power," which is to be interpreted "with the privilege of refusing to accept his appointment" without subjecting himself to any discipline.

14th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The vein of pessimism may be discerned in some items of business at the Eldership in 1897. The attendance was not large. On account of "deaths, emigration and other causes, many church organizations have gone down." The church property at Metz's Crossing was ordered to be disposed of. And the "Standing Committee was authorized to communicate with an evangelist for the purpose of reviving the work of the churches in general." The session was held at Mt. Carmel, Greene county, Pa., beginning October 6th. J. L. Davis delivered the Opening Sermon. J. L. Lucas was elected President, and W. M. Miller, Vice President; B. D. Eden, Journalizing Clerk; J. C. Beam, Financial Clerk, and B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. On temperance the Eldership was conservative, resolving that "each minister of this Eldership use his influence towards the suppression of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage." To increase the attendance and efficiency of the Ministerial Associations appointed by the Eldership, it was decided ministers not attending them "shall be fined not more than $3.00, nor less than $1.00, unless satisfactory reasons can be given." An easy course of studies for four years was adopted, intended mainly for applicants for license. An earlier date was fixed for the meeting of the Eldership so that pastors could move on to new fields and begin the Winter's work under more favorable conditions.

15th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The West Virginia Eldership, North, kept a record of deaths of lay members, and these at the end of the year were reported by the Committee on Obituaries, with appropriate resolutions. During the year 1897-8 twelve brethren and sisters joined the invisible hosts. The session of the Eldership was held at Windy Gap, Greene county, Pa., beginning on Wednesday morning, September 7, 1898. The previous evening B. D. Eden preached the Opening Sermon. Only four ministers were absent. J. L. Lucas was chosen as President; B. D. Eden, Clerk; J. C. Beam, Financial Clerk, and B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. There was a demand for changes in circuit boundaries, which resulted in the reduction of the number of fields to ten, all supplied with efficient ministers. The Eldership limited itself to the moral phase of the temperance question, recommending ministers and churches "to use their utmost ability in the fear of the Lord to accomplish the overthrow of the saloon system." And "any member of this Eldership violating the law and virtue of temperance shall be brought to account on ten days' notice." Church members refusing to testify, if they have knowledge of such violation, "shall be dealt with as insubordinates." Persons who are "not members shall be used as witnesses who are willing to be qualified before a notary public." To reduce to a better system the finances of the churches, each member is directed "to subscribe to the church council what he or she is willing to pay," and this amount shall not be less than $1.00. This is to "become an assessment, payable in monthly installments." A Widows' Fund was created, for which "each member of the local churches (pastors not excepted) shall pay ten cents annually." The Green Valley (Pa.) church property was authorized to be sold. The Eldership arranged for "a Camp-meeting Association," with W. H. Marple, President, and "a representative from each local church." The state of religion was not satisfactory; "many things are not up to the standard of love and piety." But on the whole, "the cause of Christ is on the increase."

16th West Virginia Eldership, North.—A further rearrangement and consequent reduction in the number of circuits was made in 1899, the number being eight, and one of these unsupplied by request. The session was held at Blainesville, Ohio, and the Opening Sermon was delivered on the evening of September 6th. Choice was made of J. C. Beam for President; B. D. Eden, Clerk. Two ministers were absent. It was a "quiet and orderly" Eldership. One minister was received by Transfer from the West Pennsylvania Eldership. An "applicant for license was Rev. L. C. Kerr, formerly of the Baptist denomination." He was accepted and a license granted. He was regarded as "a man of ability, experience and veracity, who will prove very serviceable in the future." The Life Certificates ordered by the General Eldership were given to the ministers of the Eldership. The session was of shorter duration than usual, and "the Eldership seems to be outgrowing some of the evils which have retarded its progress in the past." The session closed with an ordinance meeting on the last evening.

17th West Virginia Eldership, North.—Two matters developed during the ecclesiastical year 1899 and 1900 which gave the West Virginia Eldership, North, some concern. The most important was the protection of the moral character and standing of ministers, and so of the Eldership. To protect pure and innocent men and bring to light evil deeds of unworthy men was the problem, and the Eldership which convened at Woodland, W. Va., September 6, 1900, gave serious thought to its solution. It concluded to require each pastor "to secure from the elder or elders of each church he serves a certificate of good moral standing before he ends his labors for the year." Then a practice grew up of preachers in charge of fields of labor to give "permits" to lay members to preach, which "documents" began to have the force of licenses. The Eldership not only declared "such documents null and void;" but denied to all the ministers the authority "to issue such licenses, or permits, on penalty of suspension for three months." All the ministers except four were present; two were "dropped," and two applicants for license were received, foreigners, Leo Sovieski and Mary Agnes Sovieski, his wife. J. C. Beam was elected President; W. S. Shimp, Vice President; B. D. Eden, Clerk; J. L. Lucas, Financial Clerk. Beam preached the Opening Sermon on the evening of the 5th. The wisdom of requiring certificates of character was emphasized during the session when it was found necessary to purge the body by disfellowshipping one minister for "intoxication and frequenting a saloon." Advancement in other lines of Church work was planned for, so that on the whole it was a session pervaded with progressive ideas, and in all particulars great "harmony and unity prevailed among all the brethren." There were ten charges, Leo Sovieski being assigned to McMechen, and Mary Agnes Sovieski, to Elm Grove and Blainesville.

18th West Virginia Eldership, North.—Quite a proportion of local church properties in the West Pennsylvania Eldership territory was deeded to said body. When the West Virginia Eldership was chartered and organized in 1884, all its territory belonged to the West Pennsylvania Eldership, and properties therein deeded to said Eldership were to be redeeded to the West Virginia Eldership. But up to the meeting of said body in 1901 these deeds had "not yet been made as agreed upon by the West Pennsylvania Eldership." The matter was agitated somewhat during the year, and then brought up at the session which was held with the church at Mt. Carmel, Greene county, Pa., beginning September 5th. The officers elected were W. S. Shimp, President; N. M. Anderson, Vice President; J. C. Beam, Journalizing Clerk; W. A. Jones, Financial Clerk; B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. On the matter of the deeds for church properties held by the West Pennsylvania Eldership, an appeal was taken to the General Eldership, "to know whether that body will approve of a neglect, or refusal, of the West Pennsylvania Eldership to make those deeds." In the light of the action of the General Eldership and its Constitution it was an apparent contradiction to make such appeal, and then "authorize the churches for the year to employ their own pastors." Perhaps the Eldership "laid hands suddenly" on the foreigner and stranger when it ordained Sovieski, for at this session his "case was submitted to the new Standing Committee, with discretionary power."

19th West Virginia Eldership, North.—As a result of the investigation made by the Standing Committee in the Sovieski case, following the session of 1901, the names of both Leo and Mary Agnes Sovieski "were dropped from the Roll of membership, and their Certificates of Ordination were demanded." The Opening Sermon of the session in 1902 was delivered by S. B. Craft, at Rush Run, Wetzel county, W. Va., on Saturday evening, September 6th. On Monday morning N. M. Anderson was chosen President; W. S. Shimp, Vice President; J. C. Beam, First Clerk; B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. The Eldership decided to grant "provisional licenses for three years before a Life Certificate of Ordination is granted." "The congregational system adopted for 1901 was continued, the churches selecting pastors this year." But it was provided that "churches not having hired preachers within thirty days shall fall into the hands of the Standing Committee." Each pastor was enjoined "to do his utmost to organize a Y. P. S. C. E. in each local church on his charge." The Eldership year was fixed to begin and end with October 1st. The Eldership informed the Treasurer of the General Eldership that it "cannot pay delinquencies, because we do not have the money, and because we have been forgiven." It received assurances at the General Eldership in 1902, on its appeal to said body, that "deeds for church property in this Eldership held by the West Pennsylvania Eldership shall be made on demand." To correct an innovation likely to spread it was resolved "that it is the imperative duty of the local churches of this Eldership to observe the washing of the saints' feet and the Communion in the one and same meeting, and any preacher or local church observing Communion without the washing of the saints' feet, or vice versa, shall be considered guilty of heresy and insubordination, and dealt with accordingly." In granting churches the right to employ their own ministers, they were restricted to members of the West Virginia Eldership. And no minister or evangelist was to be employed "to hold, or assist in, a revival meeting except such as preach the doctrine of the churches of God."

20th West Virginia Eldership, North.—Seventeen members, nine ministers and eight delegates, constituted the twentieth West Virginia Eldership, North. It required two and one-half days to transact the business. The session was held at Mt. Carmel, Greene county, Pa., the members meeting on Saturday, September 19, 1903. The Opening Sermon was delivered on Sabbath morning, by N. M. Anderson. On Monday morning the body was organized by electing B. C. Bartlebaugh President; J. L. Lucas, Vice President; N. M. Anderson, Secretary; N. Vanaman, Treasurer. There was an "Incorporate Board organized" to which property was to revert when a church should become extinct. As to the state of religion, the Committee "discovered room for improvement." While "speaking strongly against intemperance in all its phases," the Committee "included narcotics." The Rule to require "three consecutive years annual license before granting Life Certificates" was made to harmonize with the constitutional provision of "a special course of study for three years." There were ten fields of labor, and on each church an assessment was laid for Contingent, General Mission and Superannuated Funds, aggregating $52.50 for the three Funds.

21st West Virginia Eldership, North.—Going outside the West Virginia Eldership, North, in calling a pastor, the church at McMechen secured the services of W. R. Covert, of the Southern Indiana Eldership. He was received on Transfer when the Eldership convened in 1904. "Preliminary exercises" were held on Saturday evening, September 17, 1904, consisting of an address of welcome and "memorial services in honor of G. O. Thompson, who had formerly been a member of this Eldership, but had received a Transfer to the West Virginia Eldership, South." Three preaching services were held on Lord's day, at which sermons were delivered by W. S. Shimp, N. M. Anderson and B. C. Bartlebaugh, followed in the evening by the observance of the ordinances of God's house. The session was held at Woodland Bethel, Marshall county, W. Va. There were present fifteen ministers and ten delegates. An exceptional action was taken following the organization, which provided that "the entire supervision of the West Virginia Eldership, North, for the coming year be placed in the hands of W. R. Covert and N. M. Anderson, they having the privilege to select the third man to constitute a committee to be known as the Supervising Committee of the West Virginia Eldership, North, which shall have all the power hitherto vested in the Stationing and Standing Committee." The President of the Eldership was N. M. Anderson; Vice President, W. R. Covert; Clerk, J. C. Beam; Financial Clerk, J. C. Marple; Treasurer, N. Vanaman, Jr. During the year an "Elders' Association" had been organized, and it was "given privilege to explain its aims and objects" to the Eldership. It was "organized as an auxiliary body to the Eldership, claiming no jurisdiction or authority, and seeking none; but its object is for the ruling elders to meet together, exchange views on church work, consult and advise one another on the best methods of taking care of those intrusted to their care, and promote spiritual growth, peace and harmony in the churches." On Tuesday noon, September 20th, the Eldership, on a motion by W. R. Covert, "adjourned to meet again the first Tuesday in October, 1904, in an adjourned session of this regular meeting. . . . to finish its work of whatever nature that now remains unfinished." It can be inferred that one purpose of this recess was to give time for the preferring of charges, as it was provided "that all reports and charges must be put in writing and a copy served on the parties complained of eight days before said Eldership time of meeting." When the Eldership reconvened, on October 4th, at McMechen, Marshall county, W. Va., M. S. Newcomer and Mrs. M. B. Newcomer were received as advisory members. A "permanent financial system, which will build up the Eldership's resources and make it to spread its borders by energetic, practical work" was to be formulated by a committee. Work was to be opened at Yorkville and McLainville, Belmont county, Ohio. Pastors were instructed to advise and co-operate with local churches so that the mistake may be avoided of "appointing novices as officers in the local churches." Stringent measures were adopted to suppress "the practise of slandering, villifying and abusing the ministers of the Church of God by officers and members of local churches." A committee to revise the Constitution was created, consisting of W. R. Covert, J. C. Beam and James E. Doyle. This committee reported on October 6th, and the revised Constitution was adopted. The Preamble provided that "all rules and regulations to the contrary of this Constitution are hereby repealed." The "Supervising Committee" had been previously provided for, and was therefore considered by many to have been abolished. But it acted on some questions, thus creating a seriously disturbed condition in the body. The Indiana Assembly was favorably acted upon, and all were urged "to do everything possible to make it a success." The Supervising Committee was instructed to have the Eldership "properly incorporated, so that said Eldership can co-operate, but not be coerced by the General Eldership." The action of the Eldership on the W. G. M. S. question was distinctly adverse to the action of the General Eldership in 1902 in providing for a Convention to be held in June, 1903, to organize a new W. G. M. S., and against this new Society. It claimed that "the acts of the late General Eldership at Idaville, Ind.," and other acts following "led to the division of said W. G. M. S. of 1890, and to legal proceedings, a spirit of strife, etc." The former W. G. M. S. was declared to be "in the right in this dispute and conflict and legal proceedings." These antagonistic resolutions were offered by W. R. Covert, and, revolutionary in character, were adopted. There were fourteen fields of labor, all supplied with pastors.

22nd West Virginia Eldership, North.—That actions of the Eldership of 1904 on vital questions did not express the deliberate judgment of the ministry and churches soon became evident. This was true of the action creating the Supervising Committee, and that concerning the General Eldership's action calling a convention to organize a new W. G. M. S. And while the Supervising Committee did some business before the third member was elected, J. B. Lafferty, of Bellaire, Ohio, these actions were considered illegal by "a number of the brethren, who denied the legality of the Committee, and refused to be governed by it." On April 9, 1905, Albert McMahon, James Doyle and Thomas Sharp, a Committee representing the elders, made strenuous complaint against certain decisions rendered by Covert, Chairman of the Supervising Committee, and for "refusing to call a special session of the West Virginia Eldership to adjust" existing differences. This Committee served notice of an appeal to the General Eldership to convene at Mt. Pleasant, Pa., May 25, 1905, "to hear our grievances." But though matters seemed to have been adjusted at the General Eldership, the dissatisfaction increased, fanned by certain actions of a disquieting character, in the name of the Supervising Committee, and signed by W. R. Covert and J. B. Lafferty. These actions seemed to many members of the Eldership to be prophetic of disaster, and of a mischievous tendency. They had the appearance of a personal and arbitrary character, instead of being an orderly and constitutional method to carry into effect a deliberately adopted policy. Accordingly a Petition was prepared in August, 1905, signed by "officers of the Eldership, ministers of the gospel and delegates of the Eldership of 1904, twelve in number," and addressed to "the President of the Eldership and Secretary of the Supervising Committee," requesting him "to call an extra and special session of said Eldership, to meet at Gravel Street, McMechen, W. Va., on Wednesday, August 30, 1905, at 9 a. m." The Constitution required the officers of the Eldership and the Standing Committee to call an extra session. But "the powers of the Standing Committee were merged in the Supervising Committee, which action was repealed, and the only remedy was a Petition, which a majority of the Eldership of 1904 presented to the President." The President was N. M. Anderson who, if he had faults of judgment, was universally esteemed as an honest man; whose integrity of purpose had never been questioned. His services in this crisis of the Eldership's history in conducting the policy of the body were characterized with rare discretion, skill and knowledge, and every act revealed a sense of dignity and duty, of high purpose and perfect integrity, which won for him the by-name of "the Grand Old Man." He called the "special and general session" to meet at the time and place specified in the Petition. The Opening Sermon was delivered by N. M. Anderson, on Tuesday evening, from Ps. xcii. 12. Nine ministers and twelve delegates were present. Reorganization was effected by the election of N. M. Anderson, President; W. S. Shimp, Vice President; J. C. Beam, Secretary; B. D. Eden, Financial Secretary and Official Correspondent; B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. Notice was served on the Eldership by W. R. Covert, "declaring the session irregular and illegal." A committee was appointed to call on Covert and "request him to be present and make report of the work done by him during the year as Chairman of the Supervising Committee." This he failed to do. The Eldership then proceeded to act on the special items of business. It "declared null and void what the so-called Supervising Committee had done." It also rescinded the action of the Eldership of 1904 on the W. G. M. S. question, and "endorsed the action of the General Eldership of 1905, and invited the representatives of the new W. G. M. S., organized in 1903, to come into our midst and organize a W. M. S." Having eliminated all the work of the vehement and disturbing revolutionaries, "the Eldership resolved itself into the Annual Meeting." The Articles of the Constitution which proved so obnoxious were stricken out. It absolved those members of the Eldership which the so-called Supervising Committee had put on trial "from all charges and specifications against them." "W. R. Covert, B. C. Bartlebaugh, J. C. Marple and J. L. Davis, members of the West Virginia Eldership, North," were charged with "having treated said Eldership with contempt by not attending the session, and failing to report, without offering an excuse," and "their withdrawal from membership at an early date" was "urgently requested." Appointments were made to eight charges, and McMechen was unsupplied. The Life Certificate of J. C. Marple was "demanded from him, as it was granted to him unconstitutionally." Covert, however, was disposed to contest the actions of this session of the Eldership, and so added greatly to the gravity of the situation, and placed an additional strain upon the already tense relations between the General Eldership and the insubordinate element in several Annual Elderships. He decided to call a session of the Eldership, in connection with B. C. Bartlebaugh, J. L. Davis and J. C. Marple, to meet at Bellaire, Ohio, September 27, 1905, "to organize what they called the real West Virginia Eldership, North." At this meeting "charges of conspiracy were preferred against the ministers who had attended the Eldership at McMechen on August 30, 1905, and after a mock trial they were expelled, together with a number of members of the churches at McMechen, W. Va.; Martin's Ferry, Ohio; Elm Grove and Parkview, W. Va." An appeal was also taken to the Executive Board of the General Eldership, asking said Board to determine which of the two bodies is the real West Virginia Eldership, North. The four ministers at the Bellaire (or Riverview) meeting were appointed respectively to McMechen, Elm Grove, Blainesville and Woodland, and Moundsville. But with the "exception of Bellaire and Georgetown, Ohio, the churches all showed a disposition to remain loyal to the Eldership which met at McMechen, August 30, 1905."

pulpit of the McMechen church by applying to Judge Harvey for an injunction against the officials of the church. The judge refused, and the matter was then taken to the Supreme Court, Judge Henry Brannon presiding. But this Court affirmed the action of the lower court. The real question at issue was as to which of the two Elderships is the legally constituted body. The Standing Committee had also investigated a number of charges against Covert, B. C. Bartlebaugh, J. L. Davis, J. C. Marple and S. M. Parry, and "found them guilty as charged." These were "suspended from the ministry until the next annual or extra, called session," with a recommendation "that the Eldership expel them from the body." Meanwhile the interference of the Executive Board of the General Eldership was invoked, which on March 27, 1906, "decided that the meeting of August 30, 1905, was the constitutional West Virginia Eldership, North," and "sustained all its actions, including those of its Boards and Committees." From this ruling of the Executive Board an Appeal was taken by Covert to the General Eldership to meet in 1909. The General Eldership approved the action of the Executive Board, and so confirmed all the actions of the West Virginia Eldership, North. Several other lawsuits were instituted by Covert at later dates, but they have proved futile. The storm had spent itself, and in comparative peace and harmony the twenty-third annual session was held at Rush Run Bethel, Wetsel county, W. Va., beginning Wednesday evening, September 5, 1906. The preceding evening N. M. Anderson preached the Opening Sermon. The officers chosen were, President, N. M. Anderson; W. S. Shimp, Vice President; J. C. Beam, Secretary; Frank Marple, Financial Secretary; B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. Nine ministers attended the session. So absorbed was the Eldership in the local difficulties growing out of the schism and the disaffection of a few churches that its resolutions touching the publications of the General Eldership, Findlay College and other public questions became subordinate. But an intense spirit of loyalty permeated these and other actions. Covert, in a letter dated June 21, 1906, asked for a transfer to the Indiana Eldership, thereby, as he stated, "cutting off my right to appeal;" yet this request was refused by the Standing Committee, and its action approved by the Eldership, on the ground that "it would interfere with the previous action of the Standing Committee, October 23, 1905; the action of the Special Session of December 4, 1905, and the actions of the Executive Board, March 27, 1906, and June 7, 1906." The Eldership was ready to receive back into its fellowship any churches which had been alienated. And when the church at Georgetown sent a delegate with "a petition signed by the elders and fifteen members, being a majority, praying for admission," the Eldership accepted the delegate and "received the church at Georgetown into fellowship."

24th West Virginia Eldership, North.—Perhaps even of a religious body, by paraphrase, the sentiment of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem may be true:

"Through strife the slumbering soul awakes."

It is sometimes by bounds and leaps, but more generally and naturally by orderly development, that we get away from the wheel of routine, the weight of custom and of duty, or the fabricated net of established relations. So in West Virginia, North, the Eldership at its session held at Elm Grove, W. Va., beginning September 27, 1907, agreed to a number of important actions, some "in a direction in which nothing had been done before." The "field here is a most promising one." "Prosperous towns all around us are ripe unto harvest." An entirely new Constitution was ordered to be drafted, which was expected to form a co-operative, working basis. The appointment of a Missionary Agent was the result of an awakened interest in missions. Eight ministers attended the session, including a valuable accession from Ohio in the person of Z. H. Yoder. And one received license. Officers elected were N. M. Anderson, President; W. S. Shimp, Vice President; Z. H. Yoder, Secretary; W. A. Jones, Financial Secretary; B. F. Coyle, Treasurer. The General Eldership and its Boards were heartily endorsed in all their actions with reference to the W. G. M. S. contentions. The teaching of the generally accepted doctrines of the Church received considerable attention, and ministers were directed to enforce the "discipline," to "teach" and "instruct" in all doctrine with God-given authority. The delegates were "instructed to carry these important actions of the Eldership to the local churches." The observance of Children's College Day by all the churches was recommended. There were eight fields of labor, one of them unsupplied, and Moundsville Mission placed under the supervision of the Standing Committee. The Eldership closed with an Ordinance Meeting, when "a plain, practical, forceful sermon" was delivered by N. M. Anderson.

25th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The session of the West Virginia Eldership, North, in 1908, had a reassuring beginning. W. W. Anderson, of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, was present with a view of serving a charge. He preached "a most spiritual sermon on Saturday night" before the Eldership session began. N. M. Anderson delivered the Opening Sermon on Sunday morning, and Z. H. Yoder preached the Ordinance Sermon on Sunday evening. The Eldership convened for business at Mt. Carmel, Greene county, Pa., Monday morning, September 28, 1907, when N. M. Anderson was elected President; Z. H. Yoder, Secretary; W. H. Pierson, Financial Secretary; S. H. Earnest, Treasurer. Nearly one whole day was taken up in most careful and unbiased discussion of the new Constitution, guided by the experience of the preceding three years. The territory of the Eldership was defined as embracing all of West Virginia north of the Little Kanawha River except Preston county, which belongs to the Maryland Eldership; also Greene county, Pa., and Monroe, Belmont and Jefferson counties, Ohio. Appeals were recognized "from the lowest to the highest court among us." Each local church was entitled to "one delegate for every twenty-five active members," but each church had a right to one delegate. These delegates had equal rights in the transaction of business. Besides the usual powers of Standing Committees, that of this Eldership "shall be the Board of Missions." Two ministers and three delegates were to be elected to constitute the Stationing Committee. An Executive Board of one minister and two delegates, neither an officer of the Eldership, was to be elected, which was a court to try officers of the Eldership. Its members could only be tried by an extra session of the Eldership, which was to be called by the President upon petition of a majority of the members of the last annual meeting. For three years an applicant for license was to receive an annual license before a Life Certificate of Ordination could be granted. A Course of Studies was prescribed. Nine regular Funds were provided for. This Eldership had some very commendable features. The churches were well represented. The spirituality indicated a decided improvement. There was an increase in funds, better salaries for ministers, an increase in the number of conversions, baptized and received into fellowship. Missionary possibilities were most encouraging. Nine fields of labor were supplied with pastors, and N. M. Anderson was named as the General Worker.

26th West Virginia Eldership, North.—At the General Eldership in 1909 the West Virginia Eldership, North, was unanimously sustained in its actions relative to the so-called "West Virginia Eldership, North, Incorporated." At its session in the Fall it expressed its gratification by adopting "resolutions in support of, and expressing loyalty to, all the interests of the General Eldership." It also elected a "Missionary Correspondent and Organizer." There was rejoicing over results reported and prospects portrayed, especially when at the Ordination services two bright and promising young men, Loring Howell, of Elm Grove church, and William Shaw, of McMechen church, were ordained to the gospel ministry. The session was held at Elm Grove, Ohio county, West Virginia, beginning Monday morning, September 27, 1909. On Saturday a session of the Ministerial Association was held, when "some live questions pertaining to the Master's work were discussed," including "the needs of the various fields of labor and the best methods to supply them." On Sunday morning N. M. Anderson preached the Opening Sermon, on the theme:—"The Kingdom of Christ." Ten ministers and eighteen delegates were present at the organization on Monday morning, when N. M. Anderson was elected President; J. C. Beam, Vice President; E. W. Moyer, Stated Clerk; S. H. Earnest, Treasurer. Conditions generally were satisfactory. The pastors on the nine fields of labor had received $2,351. There were 443 conversions; 182 baptized, and 293 accessions. Considering the fact that there are about 250,000 church buildings in the United States, with a seating capacity of over 50,000,000, the number of bethels and church membership in the West Virginia Eldership, North, was insignificant. There were four bethels in Greene county, Pa.; in West Virginia, eight, and in Ohio, six. The total membership was about 700.

27th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The period of contention had ended, and pleasant and harmonious sessions were being enjoyed. Under such auspices the twenty-seventh annual meeting of the West Virginia Eldership, North, was held with the church in Deep Valley, Greene county, Pa., beginning Monday morning, September 19, 1910. There were present nine ministers and fifteen delegates.

Balloting for officers resulted in the choice of N. M. Anderson for President; W. W. Anderson, Vice President; E. W. Moyer, Stated Clerk. A new movement to secure Articles of Incorporation was started, by the election of trustees who could serve as incorporators. J. C. Beam, D. E. Doughty and B. F. Coyle, Ohio; W. H. Marple, Ohio, and George Main, of Pennsylvania, were chosen. A majority living in Ohio, Articles of Incorporation could be secured from the Ohio State Department. A decided step forward was taken in creating a Mission Fund, to carry on missionary work in the territory of the Eldership in the future. From the different fields during the year there were reported 459 conversions, 149 baptized, 181 additions, and an increase of $814.00 in the salaries of ministers. The ten fields of labor were supplied with pastors, and four ministers were named as General Workers.

28th West Virginia Eldership, North.—On top of the hills of Wetzel county, four miles from the village of Proctor, at a point called Highland, where Meshach Yoho had recently built a new Bethel, the West Virginia Eldership held its twenty-eighth annual session. It began on Monday morning, September 25, 1911. On Sunday morning previous W. W. Anderson preached the Opening Sermon. Theme: "Pentecostal Baptism." Text: Acts ii. 1-4. Ten ministers were in attendance, and fourteen delegates. They elected E. W. Moyer President; W. W. Anderson, Vice President; Loring Howell, Clerk; W. W. Anderson, D. E. Doughty and Z. H. Yoder, Standing Committee; W. W. Anderson, Z. H. Yoder, Geo. Main, G. C. West and O. L. Blake, Stationing Committee. The only woman who was a member was Sister E. J. Miller, a delegate. The session consisted of five sittings, adjourning on Wednesday at 11 o'clock a. m. No actions of a special character were taken, outside of those relating to the permanent interests of the body, the publications of the General Eldership, missions and education. There were ten charges, each one supplied with a good pastor. Several of them were stations, not all of which could give a pastor a living support. A fine spirit pervaded the Eldership.

29th West Virginia Eldership, North.—The want of permanency of the ministry of the West Virginia Eldership was always a serious impediment to substantial progress. From the date of its organization it experienced this evil. Prominent workers would come into the body, serve a charge or two, and then leave. The Eldership was always ready to receive these men, as it needed their efficient services; but it could not prevent the sentiment that the evil was hardly overbalanced by the good when they failed permanently to identify themselves with the body and its interests. The reaction hurt the growth of the churches which they served, and the whole Eldership has suffered. A minister must live with the people he is to serve most efficiently, and participate in all their problems of government and general improvement, if the benefit of his labors is to be most beneficent. Hence the Eldership in 1912 was saddened when two ministers, who had labored for several years with good success, requested their transfers. The Eldership "was reluctant to grant them, because of their ministerial ability and high standing among us." And the prayer was, that "the Lord of the harvest will send us such men as are needed." The session was held at Long Run, Greene county, Pa., where, on September 15, 1912, the Opening Sermon was preached by E. W. Moyer, from Gal. v. 17. On the following Monday morning the Eldership was organized by the election of N. M. Anderson, President; D. E. Doughty, Vice President; J. C. Beam, Clerk. Responding to the call of the W. G. M. S., the Eldership directed "each minister having a charge to ask for a freewill offering for our foreign work, during the month of April." Earnestly insistent on extending its work, the Eldership required "more aggressive efforts to open up new places, and take advantage of opportunities where churches might be established." The Eldership was not disposed to minify its faults, nor to magnify its virtues, and so had reached the true basis of measurement. The liquor traffic was "condemned, declaring it to be sinful, and that it should not be tolerated by the children of God." It assured "those in authority at Findlay College and Fort Scott Collegiate Institute of its faith and confidence in the management of these institutions." One minister of the "so-called Bellaire Eldership" requested "restoration and fellowship with" the Eldership. For reasons which aggravated the first offense against the body by said minister and others with whom he fraternized, the Eldership decided to "ignore, or repudiate, those men, and refuse to entertain any application, motion, or disposition to restore them." Nine fields of labor were supplied with pastors, one remaining unsupplied, and four ministers were named as General Workers.

XIX. THE OREGON AND WASHINGTON ELDSHIP.

The earliest immigrants of Church of God families into Oregon and Washington, sustained by those of following years, united in testimony to the splendid resources, the mild and equable climate, the agricultural possibilities and the educational and other facilities of these Pacific Coast States. The western parts of the country were unsurpassed in climate. Roses bloom in Seattle in December, pansies in Walla Walla in January, peaches blossom in Olympia in February, and snow banks on the mountains are frequently within sight of each place in August. The climate between the coast and the Cascade Mountains is like one produced by adding the mildness of Virginia to the moisture of England. These conditions appealed to ministers, so that when the religious conditions were represented to be of such a character as to make these States inviting fields of labor, a disproportionate number of teaching elders of the Church were induced to remove to the Pacific. Yet when the first church of God was organized in either State, there were in Oregon over 8,000 Methodists, about 4,000 Baptists, 3,700 Presbyterians, 1,600 Episcopalians, 1,500 Congregationalists and a Catholic population of 17,000. When the first Eldership was organized there were at least six ordained ministers in the two States which responded to the call. They met "at Fir Grove school-house, School District No. 75, Washington county, Oregon, on Saturday, May 9, 1891." These six ministers were present: J. F. Schoch, Illinois Eldership; S. S. Sheldon, Kansas Eldership; G. W. Kemp, S. A. Mann and R. A. Slyter, of the Nebraska Eldership, and J. W. Force, of the Michigan Eldership. Four ruling elders were enrolled, one of them, J. Garrigus, being the Clerk, with J. F. Schoch, Speaker. The boundaries of the new Eldership were to be the boundaries of the State of Oregon; but "they agreed to give the brethren of Washington and Idaho 'a home with them' until such time as Elderships may be organized within their territories." They also elected a Treasurer, G. W. Kemp, and instituted measures "to raise some funds for the use of the Eldership." A Ministerial Association was agreed to be held, to hold its meetings the day previous to the Eldership sessions. The Eldership at once placed itself on record in favor of "the total abolition of the traffic in strong drink." The appointments made were: General Worker, J. F. Schoch; West Portland and adjacent territory, R. A. Slyter; Yamhill and Washington counties, J. W. Force and G. W. Kemp; Clark county, Wash., S. S. Sheldon and S. A. Mann. It was anticipated that "these brethren can do a noble work for God and the Church in Oregon." The territory which was to be the field of operation by these ministers lies in the north-western section of Oregon and the south-western section of Washington, on both sides of the Columbia River, and from twenty to sixty miles from the Pacific.

The Speaker of the first Eldership was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born near Middletown, Dauphin county, August 14, 1828. He was converted on February 4, 1843; was baptized soon after, and united with the church at Middletown. With a limited education, though impressed that he ought to enter the ministry, he deferred the matter, meanwhile studying the Bible and some borrowed theological books. He emigrated to Illinois in the Spring of 1854, but soon returned again for a short time to Middletown. While East he began preaching in York county, organizing a church at York Haven. In reporting his labors he also stated that he was "going West shortly." This he did, and in the Fall of 1855 he attended the Illinois Eldership, held at West Bureau, or Enon, Bureau county, where he received his first license to preach. He served different appointments until the War of the Rebellion, when he entered the service of the U. S. Christian Commission. Upon his return he again served as a pastor. On three different occasions he was a delegate to the General Eldership. He is one of the very few ministers of the churches of God who have made a visit to the Holy Land. After his return he wrote "From the Hudson to the Jordan," giving not only an account of his travels, but most interesting descriptions of the many historical places which he visited. On December 23, 1912, looking back over a well spent life, and with a clear conscience, he wrote: "I am now in my eighty-fifth year. I realize that my days are passing away swiftly. I am satisfied that the Lord will abide with me always, even to the end of life's journey."

2nd Oregon and Washington Eldership.—To have the Eldership's annual session come in the Fall, the second meeting was fixed within six months of the first. During this time two ministers were at work on their fields in both States, and reported good openings. The second session was held at Fir Grove, Washington county, Oregon, and began October 15, 1891. The Ministerial Association preceded it, and was attended by all the ministers but one. The Opening Sermon was delivered by J. F. Schoch. Text: II. Tim. ii. 15. Theme: "The Minister's Work—Study." It was published in full in The Advocate, by direction of the Eldership. R. A. Slyter was elected Speaker; S. S. Sheldon, Clerk, and G. W. Kemp, Treasurer. The Treasurer "reported Eldership funds, $5.05; Mission funds, $8.00." Two Societies were organized, viz.: A Superannuated and Widows' Fund Society, and a Missionary Society. So sanguine of success were some of the ministers that they "expected in a few years to send missionaries, instead of asking missionaries to be sent to them." J. F. Schoch was the General Missionary appointed by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. Provision was made to have a Constitution and By-Laws drafted for the Eldership. The boundaries were enlarged so as "to embrace all of the States of Oregon and Washington." In addition to declaring "opposition to the manufacture and sale of intoxicants as a beverage," the Eldership resolved "that the use of tobacco in any form is a filthy habit, especially very degrading for any minister of the gospel." Without specifying the object, each minister was instructed "to take up a collection twice in each year at each one of his appointments." Appointments were made to four circuits, two of them in Clark county, Wash.; one in Yamhill and Washington counties, Oregon, and one in Marion county, Oregon.

3rd Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The first defection in the ranks of the ministry of the Oregon and Washington Eldership occurred during the year 1891-2, when S. A. Mann "irregularly left us, and united with another body." His "name was stricken from the Roll" when the Eldership session was held at La Center, Wash., beginning September 30, 1892; but he subsequently returned to the Church and Eldership. The Opening Sermon was preached by R. A. Slyter, from Acts xvi. 9. Three new names were added to the list of teaching elders. A committee was appointed "to secure an Act of Incorporation" of the Eldership, after adopting the Constitution and By-Laws. To meet the expenses, the committee was authorized "to obtain a loan from the Eldership funds," and "in refunding the money that may be loaned from the Widows' Fund, for every $2.00 taken out $2.50 shall be paid in." The action of the World's Fair Managers in closing the Columbian Exposition on the Lord's day "was heartily endorsed." Five fields of labor were mapped out, to which six ministers were assigned. Two of these were Salem Mission, and Woodburn Mission. R. A. Slyter was appointed "General Worker, with the understanding that the Eldership help to support him." The officers of the Eldership were J. F. Schoch, Speaker; R. A. Slyter and S. S. Sheldon, Clerks, and G. W. Kemp, Treasurer. Kemp was elected delegate to the General Eldership to meet at Findlay, Ohio, in June, 1893.

4th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—There had been no authority given for the organization of the Oregon and Washington Eldership. The General Eldership alone has power to grant charters to new Elderships. At its session held at Findlay, Ohio, in 1893, the Committee on Boundaries, without any reference to this irregularity, recommended that a "Charter be granted under the name, style and title of the Oregon and Washington Eldership of the Church of God, to include the boundaries of said States." Thus habilitated, the Eldership assembled at Salem, Oregon, October 19, 1893, when the Opening Sermon was preached by J. F. Schoch. Of the nine teaching elders of the body, eight were present, three ruling elders and one sister as a delegate. S. S. Sheldon was chosen Speaker; R. A. Slyter, Journalizing Clerk; C. H. Hale, Transcribing Clerk, and G. W. Kemp, Treasurer. An Act of Incorporation had been "secured in the Oregon and Washington State Departments." The total of the Funds was $21.16. Four brethren were recommended for licenses, which were granted. The sisters were directed "to organize a Home and Foreign Missionary Society," which was done, the "Society to meet with the Eldership." While the work was prospering, there were many places which, for lack of funds, could not be supplied. "Some churches are without pastors." On the questions handed down by the General Eldership, these actions were taken, to wit: "The Eldership does not favor a change of 'name, style and title' of the annual Elderships." "It does not favor a license for life." "Ordination by the laying on of hands" was postponed one year. The organization of a Sabbath-school by every church was advised. The circuits were rearranged so as to make four, on three of which there were assistants to the regular pastor, and Buckley and Nooksack was added as a circuit. R. A. Slyter was appointed General Worker, and J. F. Schoch, General Evangelist.

5th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—As in some other Elderships, there was some instability on the part of ministers. The names of two "were dropped from the Roll" in 1894. The session was also not so largely attended. It was held at La Center, Wash., beginning September 13, 1894. S. S. Sheldon delivered the Opening Sermon, from I. Sam. xv. 22. J. W. Force was elected Speaker; J. F. Schoch, Clerk, and S. S. Sheldon, Treasurer. Under the Act of Incorporation the election of trustees was also required, and at this session Jephtha Garrigus was elected a member of the Board. The Eldership lamented its limited financial ability, as much more could be accomplished if it possessed the means to support the ministers and build houses of worship. Conversions and accessions were reported, and two new churches had been organized during the year. A Contingent Fund was provided for. The license of one minister was "placed in the hands of the Standing Committee, with the understanding that when he agrees to desist from preaching the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, both in public and private places, he shall receive it." Ministers were required "to preach at least one sermon a year on the suppression and total destruction of the rum power." The assessment on the Eldership by the General Eldership was ordered to be paid. There were seven appointments, one of them "to be cared for by the General Missionary until supplied." Local ministers were "to aid those in charge of appointments and to open new places for Church work."

6th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—In 1894 the license of one minister was withheld for preaching the unconscious state of the dead. He complied with the condition before the Standing Committee, and so in 1895 his name appears, his report was made and his license was renewed. The session in 1895 was held with the church at Goble, Oregon, beginning October 3rd. The Opening Sermon was preached the previous evening, by J. W. Force, from John xxi. 3. The officers chosen were President, J. F. Schoch; George M. Fravery, Clerk. The Eldership was gratified and encouraged by the presence and addresses of Mrs. C. M. Ritchie, bearing the greetings of the Illinois Eldership. As a result of her presence, the Eldership "urged the ministers of the Oregon and Washington Eldership to encourage the organization of Woman's Missionary societies in all the churches." It also favored the organization of Christian Endeavor societies. When the field of labor in Los Angeles county, Cal., was under consideration, the Eldership decided "that the State of California be added to the Oregon and Washington Eldership," notwithstanding boundaries are fixed by the General Eldership. The Eldership voted for the term "Eldership," and not "Association" in the titles of the Elderships. The question of ordination by the laying on of hands was discussed with ability and at length, when the proposition was adopted, "that the Scriptures teach the setting apart of ministers by the laying on of hands," only one dissenting vote. The religious condition of the churches was considered fairly prosperous. "A number of churches have been organized the past year; a goodly number have been converted, baptized and added to the churches, and several ministers have been ordained." A declaration in favor of prohibition was adopted. Stringent enforcement of the Rules is seen in that the Eldership referred the case of one minister to the Standing Committee because "he left for his home without permission." There were nine circuits, one being the California Mission. Also one General Missionary.

7th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—At the first meeting of the Standing Committee after the Eldership of 1895, on December 16, 1895, the name of the Eldership appears as the "Oregon, Washington and California Eldership." The minister cited to appear before the Committee for leaving the Eldership for his home without permission "made acknowledgment, which the Committee accepted." Though the General Eldership did not change the title of the Oregon and Washington Eldership at its session in May, 1896, it was called to meet by the Clerk October 15, 1896, as the "Oregon, Washington and California Eldership." The place of meeting was Thatcher, Washington county, Oregon. Tuesday and Wednesday preceding the Eldership the Ministerial Association held its annual meeting. The Opening Sermon of the Eldership was preached by J. F. Schoch, from I. Tim. iv. 6. G. W. Kemp was Speaker; R. A. Slyter, Clerk. Five teaching elders were present, and eleven were absent. The inspiring addresses of Bro. S. and Sister C. M. Ritchie were much appreciated, and through them the fraternal greetings of the Illinois Eldership were brought to the brethren on the Pacific. Mrs. Ritchie also conducted a very interesting missionary meeting on Sunday evening. One of the licentiates was Sister M. Madill, who, with G. W. Kemp, was appointed to Salem and Dumsville. There was German and French preaching, also, at Salem, by L. P. Lardon.

8th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—A meeting of the Ministerial Association preceded the annual Eldership in 1897, with an Address of Welcome, and a Lecture by R. A. Slyter on Tuesday evening, and sittings on Wednesday. On Wednesday evening, October 6th, the Opening Sermon was preached by J. W. Force, from Heb. xiii. 1. The place of meeting was Salem. Seven of the fifteen ministers were in attendance, and three delegates. J. W. Force was elected President, and J. F. Schoch, Clerk. The Eldership held memorial services on Sabbath morning in memory of S. S. Sheldon, when J. F. Schoch delivered a special sermon on the character and labors of this worthy minister. It was customary for the churches, as well as the ministers, to make annual reports, and in 1897 every church in the Eldership reported. S. Ritchie and Mrs. C. M. Ritchie, of Illinois, bore the greetings of the Illinois and Iowa Elderships to the Oregon and Washington Eldership, and the Eldership "profited by their counsels." Everything was encouraging all over the Eldership, and the "Church could see a bright day ahead in the capital of this grand State" (Salem). Yet there were clouds on the horizon, for the names of four of the ministers were dropped from the Roll. Other conditions induced the Eldership to name "the first Sunday in December as a day for fasting and prayer for greater success in Church work, and that the Holy Spirit will accompany the work in great power." Going further than usual, the Eldership "pledged itself to vote and pray for a prohibitory liquor law for our State, and for all the States of this glorious Union." The lack of houses of worship was deplored, as it was difficult otherwise to maintain church organizations. A more earnest, careful and energetic teaching of the doctrines of the Church was recommended. Ministers were instructed to organize Woman's Missionary societies in the churches. With the English and French churches in Salem, each with its own pastor, there were ten charges. R. A. Slyter was General Evangelist.

9th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The usual complaint of "too limited finances" was echoed from the Oregon and Washington Eldership. On this account the Eldership finances were inadequate, houses of worship could not be built, ministers could not be paid a living support, and no Church extension work could be undertaken. These facts were forcibly stated at the Eldership held at Goble, Columbia county, Oregon, beginning October 27, 1898. Want of means reduced the attendance of ministers and delegates, as only six of the thirteen ministers were present, two of the four exhorters and one delegate. To increase the missionary funds the first Sabbath in December was "set apart as a missionary day, to pray the Lord of the harvest to open the way and send forth laborers into the field." The President was J. F. Schoch, and D. F. Batson, Clerk, with J. C. Garrigus, Treasurer. The two licentiates "were ordained by the laying on of hands." It was enacted that "no minister be allowed to go upon another's work to preach or make collections, except by consent of the pastor and church, or by authority of the General Eldership." The authority of the latter body was recognized as paramount, and besides, its deliverances on nearly all subjects were accepted as final. Hence, on the matter of "disorderly persons who sometimes seek to avoid an investigation, or trial, by resigning their membership," the action of the General Eldership in 1848 was quoted and "sustained," and the entire resolution spread on the Minutes. This directs that such "disorderly steps and proceedings" be ignored, and that all such "persons be held amenable for their conduct, whether in the Eldership or the local church, until they come forward, ask for, and obtain, a regular and honorable dismissal." There were twelve fields of labor, including the French and English churches in Salem, the Jackson county Mission, Ore., and the work in Indio and Southern California, to which three ministers were assigned.

10th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The Minutes continue to use the title, "The Oregon, Washington and California Eldership." This covered an area by air lines of about 1,200 miles North and South, and from 195 to 350 miles East and West. If this were the only question, then a division of the territory into not less than three Elderships would be justified. This is given as the reason for the action in 1899, under which a separate Eldership was authorized to be formed in Washington "when the churches in Washington can organize with six ordained ministers." The organization was to be "subject to the approval of the General Eldership." The Eldership comprising the three States convened at Fir Grove, Oregon, October 12, 1899. On the previous evening J. F. Schoch preached the Opening Sermon. J. Garrigus was elected President; D. F. Batson, Clerk, and J. C. Garrigus, Treasurer. The Life Certificates adopted by the General Eldership were issued to the ministers, but emphasis was laid on the provision that their surrender can be demanded. Special efforts were required to be made by ministers and churches to "secure missionary money in the month of November, and also to replenish the Contingent Fund." There were sixteen ordained ministers in the Eldership, and two exhorters. There were eleven fields of labor, two of them in California, and a General Evangelist for California. The brethren in Washington, availing themselves of the permission granted to organize an Eldership in that State, were called to meet for that purpose in the Union Bethel, Mountain View, Wash., May 25, 1900. On the evening of the 24th J. F. Schoch preached the Opening Sermon, from II. Tim. iv. 4, 5. Schoch was elected President, and A. H. Dunlap, Clerk. The required number of six ministers were enrolled. The sessions were harmonious and peaceful. Provision was made to supply the circuits in Washington, with Mary E. B. Buckbee as general worker in the State.

11th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The Washington Eldership seems to have wandered into "Death Valley." In May, 1900, it held its first session, and adjourned "to meet at Nooksackh, Whatcom county, Wash., before full moon in October, 1900." On September 26th an announcement of the session was made, "the meeting to be held at Mountain Bethel, Whatcom county, Wash., October 10, 1900, the Opening Sermon to be preached by J. F. Schoch." Nothing has since been published concerning it. But "the Oregon, Washington and California Eldership met at Aumsville, Oregon, October 4, 1900, and was constituted by J. Garrigus, Chairman, and John Boor, Clerk. An organization was effected by the choice of J. W. Force, Speaker; John Boor, Clerk. The Eldership expressed its desire for a change in form and reduction in price of The Advocate. It gratefully accepted the appointment of A. Wilson by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, and permitted him "to labor wherever he feels inclined." The ministers were required "to collect from each member at least one dollar per year," to go into "the treasury to be used as the Eldership may direct." Also to "lift collections every quarter for the Superannuated and Widows' Fund." There were eleven fields of labor, of which two were in California and three in Washington. E. E. Cory was named as General Evangelist in California.

12th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—Conditions existed in the Pacific Coast Eldership which demanded investigation. The Eldership appointed a committee for this purpose, and the second day's morning sitting was set apart for the work. While the entire sitting was "devoted to singing and prayer, the committee was investigating matters on the outside." The Eldership had convened on Thursday morning, October 24, 1901, at Salem, Oregon. On Wednesday evening J. W. Force delivered the Opening Sermon. The election for Speaker resulted in the choice of J. Garrigus, and for Clerk of John Boor. Force was elected a trustee of the Eldership. Francis A. Sharp, H. D. McIntyre and J. A. Swanson, licensed by other Elderships, were "voted members of the Eldership." McIntyre was "recommended to the Board of Missions to do mission work in Washington, and Sharp and Swanson were given appointments, of which there were seven.

13th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—This Eldership was one of the first to "organize an Eldership Woman's Missionary Society to co-operate with the W. G. M. S. to be organized in June, 1903, at Findlay, Ohio, as per arrangements made by the General Eldership at Idaville, Indiana, in June, 1902." A. Wilson led off in the matter, and the action was unanimous. The session was held with the church at Buckley, Washington, beginning with the Opening Sermon on Wednesday evening, October 14, 1902, by J. Garrigus. The Ministerial Association occupied the previous day. Garrigus was elected President, and John Boor, Clerk. One member, Francis A. Sharp, had died during the year, and the Eldership "deeply mourned the loss of our beloved brother." The report on Temperance was of a most specific character, and severe in terms. It declared that "intemperance is the blighting curse of the country, the cause of at least ninety per cent. of the crimes of the whole country;" that "this monster evil is the product of the Republican and Democratic parties, which have dominated the politics of the country for forty years, and have used the whiskey power in order to carry the election from time to time, and have concealed the real needs of the country from the people." Hence the Eldership expressed "the opinion that every loyal man, every lover of home and country, should resolutely turn away from these parties, and under no circumstances cast his vote for a candidate for any office who will not pledge himself unconditionally to support the prohibition cause." There were seven regular fields of labor, all supplied with pastors, and R. A. Slyter was appointed General Worker, and "to visit Spokane Mission."

14th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The churches of God in one Eldership in Pennsylvania received nearly all their earliest preaching in German. In several Elderships it was originally nearly half in German and half in English. From Ohio westward German was the exception, there being no German preaching in the south-western Elderships. In later years West Pennsylvania Eldership had one or two ministers who preached in a Slavish dialect. In the Oregon and Washington Eldership there was preaching in French, German and English, at Salem, Oregon, there being at this time organizations composed of members speaking these three languages. L. T. Lardon, in 1903, was appointed pastor of "the French and German church at Salem, and to preach in English wherever called upon." The Eldership convened at Fir Grove, Oregon, October 2, 1903, the Opening Sermon having been preached the previous evening by A. Wilson. The officers were G. F. Shoch, President; D. F. Batson, Clerk. Ten appointments were made, and the English church at Salem, Oregon, was unsupplied. Indio, Cal., was the only charge in that State. J. Garrigus was appointed General Worker in Oregon, and H. D. McIntyre, "Missionary to North Washington, with recommendation to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership for support until his successor be sent from the East."

15th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—An Act of Incorporation was secured during the year 1903-4, the State lines of Oregon, Washington and California being the boundaries. Three trustees, J. Garrigus, J. W. Force and E. Porter, were named as the trustees of the Eldership. This action was ratified by the Eldership which convened with the church at Salem, Oregon, on Thursday morning, September 29, 1904. The previous evening the Opening Sermon was preached "in the African church, by J. F. Schoch." The Bethel of the church of God had been locked against the Eldership, as the church had seceded; but relented in so far as to open the house on Thursday morning for the session of the Eldership. After organization by the election of J. F. Schoch, President, and J. C. Garrigus, Clerk, the troubles at the Salem church were taken up. The Eldership commended "the action of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership in withholding aid from the Oregon and Washington Eldership until the trouble be settled." Then a "Board of Arbitration was chosen to settle the trouble, consisting of J. Boor, J. Garrigus and Jesse Huddle. By mutual withdrawals of charges by A. Wilson and by the Standing Committee, and the exercise of "a spirit of forgiveness manifested by each to all of the parties concerned," unity and peace were restored, and "the seceded church of God at Salem was reinstated to its former relations with the Eldership." There were ten fields of labor, and A. Wilson was appointed Evangelist, "with a recommendation to the Board of Missions for new territory." The Board was also asked "to send a missionary to this Eldership and support him until the work is self-supporting."

16th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—Sanguine expectations of success in its work on the "Pacific Slope" characterized the Eldership when it convened in 1905. There were some local troubles unadjusted, but there was a spirit of unity and co-operation prevalent. The session was held at Buckley, Washington, and opened on Thursday, October 5th. On Wednesday evening J. F. Schoch delivered the Opening Sermon. When the Roll was completed there were on it the names of nine teaching elders present, one a woman, and six absent; also two ruling elders and one delegate, a woman. The ballot resulted in the election of J. F. Schoch, Speaker; J. Garrigus, Clerk; J. C. Garrigus, Treasurer. In general terms it was affirmed that "men will not endure sound doctrine; that they have become largely a pleasure-loving people more than lovers of God, and that among the professed Christians the religion of Christ has reached such a low ebb that we look with alarm upon the future of the cause of God." The Church, therefore, "must educate;" but this must be "a thorough scriptural education," which is "the best that is possible to man in this world of sin and infidelity." Two candidates for the ministry were ordained, both of which were assigned to charges. The Eldership expressed appreciation of A. H. Long's donation of a lot of tracts, with which in 1905 he favored all the Annual Elderships. The temperance sentiment was clear and strong, but not fanatical. The body believed "intemperance to be the greatest evil we as a Nation have to contend with," and so "every Christian should do all that lies in his power to destroy it. Then let us vote as we pray, and we know that God will bring about the great reform." It linked tobacco with intemperance, and counseled abstinence, that ministers especially may be pure and clean. The two women members of the Eldership were on this Committee. An important action of the Eldership in 1903 was rescinded as having been secured by "conspiracy against" a prominent member of the Eldership. The rescinding resolution of "the work done at the said Fir Grove Eldership in 1903," which "created much harm at home and abroad," carried with it "the whole work done at said Fir Grove Eldership in 1903, except the report of the Treasurer, together with the receipt and disbursement of the finances." The beginning of more serious trouble may date from the facts thus entered on the Journal. J. C. Garrigus was appointed General Missionary; J. Garrigus was the Missionary in northern Oregon, and E. Porter missionary in Pierce county, Wash. In addition to these there were six fields of labor. California was not on the list.

17th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—It was published in November, 1905, that at the Eldership held a month before "the waters became a little rough, but were soon quieted by the overruling of the better spirit;" yet the session of 1906 witnessed more troubled waters. Some actions of 1904 and 1905 were rescinded, including the rescinding action of 1905. The property at Salem, which, contrary to the action of the Eldership, was deeded to the Executive Board of the General Eldership, was also a subject of contention. The redeeding of said property to the Oregon, Washington and California Eldership was urged upon the Executive Board. The session was held in the Bethel at Salem, Oregon, and began October 4, 1906. On the evening of October 3rd, J. W. Force delivered the Opening Sermon. There were present six teaching elders, two ruling elders and two delegates, women. A peculiar condition existed, which the Eldership sought to correct. In 1900 the Board of Missions of the General Eldership sent A. Wilson, Nebraska Eldership, as missionary to the Pacific Coast. He held "his transfer until September 30, 1904;" but "no action was taken on it at that time," yet he acted as a member of the body, and it had physical possession of his Transfer. It now decided to "refuse to accept his Transfer," but to "return said Transfer to him in Nebraska," and rescinded "all actions which the former sessions have taken in regard to A. Wilson's license and Transfer." There were some men of strong wills, forceful personalities and inherent self-reliance in the Eldership. Milton spoke a good word to these: "Those who best bear Christ's mild yoke, they serve him best." The ministers were counseled to do their duty in leading the churches to help to "crush out the great evil of intemperance." The hope was also expressed that "the evil of the use of tobacco be suppressed, and that it may cease in the churches of God, especially in the pulpit." Indio, Cal., again appears on the list of appointments, with eight other fields in Oregon and Washington, two of them missions. Besides, J. Garrigus was Eldership Missionary, and Wm. Adams, State Evangelist.

18th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The divisive forces operative in 1905-6 sundered the Oregon and Washington Eldership in 1907. Each section claimed to be the Oregon, Washington and California Eldership, and as such met at two different places, organized and transacted business. The session of the first was held at Salem, Oregon, and began September 5, 1907. It enrolled as present eight teaching elders, two of them women, seven ruling elders and two delegates, both women. R. A. Slyter was chosen Speaker; John Boor, Clerk. It at once took as "unfinished business" an action adopted by "a small minority of the members of the Eldership convened at Salem last October," and resolved that "said meeting was illegal, and the work done by the same is null and void." Others viewed these actions as hasty, believing that where there is real regret at a deplorable state in the relations of a body of people there should be time given for the exercise of a more calm balance of judgment, a thoroughly candid searching of the very springs of right action. The Eldership declared that "the only consistent plan to pursue on the Missionary question is to stand together and affiliate with the General Eldership W. G. M. S. of 1903. It was in full sympathy with all the interests and institutions of the general body. Charges were preferred by A. Wilson against J. Garrigus and J. C. Garrigus for "joining in a conspiracy headed by H. D. McIntyre in 1903," and other wrong acts in 1904, 1905 and 1906. These "charges and specifications were sustained without a dissenting voice," the accused not being present. Their names were ordered "stricken from the Roll of the Eldership," and the Certificates of Ordination recalled. The Eldership organized a Woman's Missionary Society, in line with its action on the W. G. M. S. question. The appointments numbered ten, with pastors for all of them. Three of them were called "missions." Two charges were in California. Florence Boyd was named as General Worker; William Adams Eldership Evangelist, and Libbie Wilson one of the pastors of "Salem, Aumsville and surroundings."

A month later, October 3, 1907, another Oregon, Washington and California Eldership met with the church at Fir Grove, Oregon, which claimed to be the body chartered by the General Eldership. Nine ministers reported by J. Garrigus as present; three reported by letter; four "failed to report, and their names were dropped from the Roll." Five ruling elders were present, and one delegate. The Opening Sermon was preached on the evening of October 2nd. D. F. Batson was elected President; J. Garrigus, Clerk; J. C. Garrigus, Treasurer. The Eldership "was a unit on every question." It claimed that "the Eldership which met at Salem, Oregon, the 5th day of September, 1907, purporting to be the Oregon, Washington and California Eldership, met contrary to the Constitution of said Eldership," and therefore this body in session at Fir Grove, Oregon, is "the Oregon, Washington and California Eldership." As such it "condemned the actions taken at Salem by the said so-called Eldership." The action taken by the Commission to settle the differences between the two W. G. M. Societies was "acquiesced in," and the body agreed to "support the General Eldership in the Mission work." Appointments were made to seven fields. Five of the ministers were appointed by both Elderships. To many conditions were portentous of grave disaster to the cause on the coast, as it looked as though peace had "fled like the night at dawn."

19th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—Three important Special Notices were published simultaneously in August, 1908. One called a meeting of the Oregon, Washington and California Eldership at Salem, Oregon, October 1, 1908. This was signed by A. Wilson, R. A. Slyter and S. S. Kilmer, Standing Committee.

The second called a meeting of the Eldership under the same title to be held at Buckley, Wash., on the same date. This was signed by J. Garrigus, Stated Clerk. It was also endorsed by J. Garrigus, J. W. Force and E. Porter, Trustees. The third was a notice "to all parties concerned. . . . that a petition will be presented to the next meeting of the General Eldership to change the boundary lines and divide the territory" and make two Elderships in the three States. This could be a solution of the trouble, if personal, and bring out again the stars which were hid. The Salem Eldership convened as per announcement, October 1, 1908. The preceding evening R. A. Slyter preached the Opening Sermon. There were nine teaching elders present, seven ruling elders and one delegate. Six were marked absent. Three of those present were women. R. A. Slyter was chosen President; S. S. Kilmer, Clerk. The deeding of "the church property at Salem to the Board of Incorporation of the General Eldership in order to avoid litigation and trouble" was approved; but the redeeding of it to the trustees of the church at Salem was requested. The Eldership also renewed its expression of fealty to the General Body and its Boards, together with the W. G. M. S. of 1903. Delegates to the General Eldership in 1909 were elected, but without instructions relative to a division of the territory. Appointments were made to nine charges, with two General Workers.

On the same date the other body under the same name convened at Buckley, Washington, where D. F. Batson preached the Opening Sermon. It was a spiritual meeting, with "peace and love prevailing throughout all the" sittings. It closed with an ordinance meeting, and there were two conversions before the meeting closed. There were present seven teaching elders, and four reported by letter; also one ruling elder. D. F. Batson was elected President; J. Garrigus, Clerk; J. C. Garrigus, Treasurer. A delegate to the General Eldership was elected. "The cause of religion is on the advance in our Eldership" was the conclusion of the Committee on State of Religion. In "hearty sympathy with the temperance work all over the world," the Eldership "requested the ministers to preach at least one sermon at each appointment on the subject during the year. Nine appointments were made, with one General Missionary. Six ministers were appointed by both Elderships. Both Elderships adjourned to meet at different points in 1909. The division was hurtful to Church interests on the Pacific, and it seemed as if the great business should be to find the undiscovered land of union and peace in these unpromising places of which Christian souls are sick and tired! Is it not, this ideal country, in our own dispositions, "wherever may be the garden of the Hesperides?"

20th Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The General Eldership in 1909 enrolled A. Wilson and J. Garrigus, representing the two Elderships on the Pacific Coast, after the Judiciary Committee had made an investigation of the differences between the two parties. It recognized "the Eldership as chartered by the General Eldership, composed of all ordained ministers of both factions and other members, as provided for by the Constitution." It then directed said Eldership to meet and be constituted according to this action, "on the first Thursday in October, 1909, at Salem, Oregon, and that all previous troubles and difficulties shall receive no further recognition." It also directed how the Eldership should be constituted, and who should preach the Opening Sermon. In September this action was published without signature, and it was added: "The brethren of the Eldership should govern themselves accordingly." To those not so fully conversant with the underlying causes of the division it seemed as though the sun of harmony were breaking through the clouds of strife. "The Eldership met at Salem, Oregon, October 7, 1909, according to order of the Judiciary Committee of the General Eldership." Fourteen ministers were present, and seven ruling elders. D. I. Batson was appointed Chairman pro tem., and R. A. Slyter, Secretary, after which the permanent organization was effected by the election of R. A. Slyter, President; S. S. Kilmer, Clerk. This ended the business of the united body, as was claimed, because these two officials had been members of the one Eldership, and their election revealed a sinister or corrupt purpose. "At this juncture" seven ministers "arose and left the room, and went to another part of the city and organized what they called the Free Church of God." Efforts subsequently made to reunite the parties have failed of success. The brethren which did not leave "the room" proceeded with the business. They gave their "unqualified support to the General Eldership in the final action" which it took, "relative to our foreign and home missionary work, placing all missionary interests under the government and control of the W. G. M. S. of 1903." It deemed it "a matter of Christian loyalty to patronize and support" the Church literature. The "names of those brethren who went out from us," declared the Eldership, "ignored the authority of the Eldership, and also that of the General Eldership," "therefore their names be dropped from the Ministerial Roll, and they be required to return their Certificates of Ordination." There were four charges to which pastors were specifically assigned; but Florence Boyd was to labor "wherever opportunity affords;" R. A. Slyter, General Worker, and to look after church property at Thatcher; and W. Adams, Evangelist in southern Oregon, including Polk, Yamhill and Washington counties.

21st Oregon and Washington Eldership.—The church at Payette, Idaho, made overtures to be received into the Oregon and Washington Eldership; but adverse action was taken until "they get their trouble settled." There were other reasons also, and so the Clerk was authorized "to write to the church at Payette and explain the cause of our taking the above action." The session was held at Squamish Harbor, Wash., and opened on Thursday, August 18, 1910. On the previous evening W. Adams delivered the Opening Sermon. During Wednesday, the 17th, the Ministerial Association held its session. Eight ministers attended the Eldership, and three delegates. R. A. Slyter was elected President; S. S. Kilmer, Clerk. The Eldership claimed to be "conscientious in the belief that God has given a plain revelation of his will relative to the churches of God;" it charged that "there are those who assume our name, and are openly opposing us and hindering us in our work, and some of this class are members of Elderships," and hence it declared "that no Eldership should assign a work to a preacher who is not loyal to the Eldership and all its Boards." The significance of this action is veiled, and may have been "action" to be explained to the Payette church. The Board of Missions was solicited to appoint a missionary in the State of Idaho, with headquarters at Payette, and one in Oregon, with headquarters at Salem. The ground for this request was "the pressing needs of the few churches" in the States named. The condition of the work is revealed in the Report of the Stationing Committee: "Florence Boyd to the church at Airlie and wherever opportunity presents itself. W. E. Couch, Squamish Harbor and surroundings; A. Wilson to preach wherever he chooses; J. L. McClanahan to look up the brethren in Douglass county, Washington, and build up a church work there; W. Adams to all the territory between Tacoma, Wash., and the Columbia River." A. Wilson, a well-preserved man, and leader in this Eldership, entered the ministry in 1861, in Iowa. He was now in his 77th year.

22nd Oregon and Washington Eldership.—There was considerable rejoicing over conditions in the Oregon and Washington Eldership in 1911. "The spirit of the Master was with us." "There was love from the first to the last of the meeting." "The prospect is brighter for the future." "One of the brethren who went out from us at Salem, two years ago, came back to the Eldership." "We received the Certificates of" two "from the Free Church, and gave a license to one, so that we are four stronger than we were." Thus the Eldership almost felt to say that "the face of the sky was never so free and so fair." The Eldership convened with the church at Squamish Harbor, near Shine, Wash., October 5, 1911. The previous evening R. A. Slyter preached the Opening Sermon. He was elected President; S. S. Kilmer, Clerk; H. Wood, Treasurer. The efforts to adjust the troubles in Oregon and Washington, made by the Executive Board of the General Eldership through a Commission of which A. C. Garner was Chairman, were reciprocated by the Eldership. It elected a committee to confer with said Commission. It also requested that the territory of the Eldership be divided, making the State line between Oregon and Washington the boundary line. "A faithful man of God" ended his career when "the sudden rending of the veil of clay" released the spirit of W. E. Couch. His ministerial life was brief, as he was ordained by the Oregon and Washington Eldership in 1908. He was a faithful laborer.

23rd Oregon and Washington Eldership.—As the Commission appointed to restore unity and harmony between the divided forces in Oregon and Washington did not possess authority to divide the territory into two Elderships, a petition to that effect was agreed upon in 1912 addressed to the General Eldership in 1913. This was done at the session of the Eldership which was held at Salem, Oregon, beginning October 3rd. On the evening of October 2nd J. C. Caswell delivered the Opening Sermon. S. P. Cresson was chosen President; W. H. Wilson, Clerk; J. H. Boyd, Treasurer. There were echoes of the troubles which resulted in the division of the Eldership. The General Eldership was "appealed to to use its influence to recover the money lost by this Eldership when the Church was divided." And "A. Wilson was appointed a Committee of One to secure the money in the hands of the Treasurer at the time of the organization of the Free Church of God." Lengthy resolutions were adopted, "censuring our Chief Executive for appointing Roman Catholics to high positions in our Government." And yet it was conceded, that the man who was destined to leave the White House and the one selected to take his place and assume the awful responsibilities of the national Executive were of the best type of Americans. They think and act in terms of a pure and disinterested patriotism. The license system was vigorously denounced, while the Governor of the State was complimented because of his strenuous efforts and persistent crusade against vice of every description. Leaving Salem, Oregon, to be supplied by the Standing Committee, and naming A. Wilson as Eldership Missionary, the Eldership made appointments to four fields of labor. R. A. Slyter was appointed General Worker, and F. Boyd and J. C. Caswell to labor "where opportunity offers." While the session was "characterized by a feeling of peace and harmony," the facts fail to reveal a hopeful condition of the work.

XX. THE OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY ELDERSHIP.

1st Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—The gratifying compensation of the largely fruitless labors, hardships and trials of B. Ober and E. Marple, the first missionaries to Texas, was always found by them in the extension of their mission northward. Marple states, that "from the Texas mission field the first churches of God were planted in Arkansas, and thence into Missouri, and Indian Territory, and Oklahoma, which is now the Oklahoma Eldership." And Ober says: "The first preaching that was done by any minister of the Church of God in our part of Oklahoma [Custer county] was by me. The next minister that preached here was E. Marple; and the next, G. T. Bell, who organized some churches at some of my appointments." But the Kansas Eldership began work in the northern parts of Oklahoma. A strip of 50 miles south of the State line was included in the territory of the Kansas Eldership. The Oklahoma territory includes now the two Territories of Oklahoma and Indian, as the State of Oklahoma, being bounded on the east by Missouri and Arkansas, on the south by Texas, on the west by Texas and New Mexico, and on the north by Kansas. However, neither of these three ministers was a member of the first Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership, which was called to meet at Lone Oak, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., November 16, 1892. As this is near Sallisaw Station, it was in what then was known as District 11, in the eastern-central part of the Territory. The call for this "first Annual Eldership of the Church of God in the Indian Territory" was issued by E. M. Kirkpatrick, "General Missionary in the Cherokee Nation." Five ministers were present, viz: J. W. Brown, J. D. Shoemake, E. M. Kirkpatrick, R. D. Duncan and D. H. Hale. Also D. Jefferies and Geo. W. Kirk, "deacons and delegates." Shoemake was made temporary Chairman, and Brown, temporary Clerk. An election for permanent officers resulted in the choice of E. M. Kirkpatrick, Speaker; J. W. Brown, Clerk, and J. C. Caswell, Treasurer. Kirkpatrick delivered "the introductory sermon" after the organization. He was also elected delegate to the General Eldership in 1893, and Caswell, alternate. There were three fields of labor, with appointees as follows: Honey Hill, Sallisaw, Hanson and Breedlove, R. D. Duncan; Schinn School-house, Standing Rock, Mt. Nebo, Shoemake School-house and Mountain Grove, J. D. Shoemake, with J. F. Summitt as Assistant; Camp Creek, Mt. Zion, Muldrow and Little Lees Creek, D. H. Hale. J. W. Riddle was received as a member of the Eldership. Each minister was required to collect and pay to the Treasurer the sum of $5.00 per annum; also twenty-five cents from each member for an Eldership fund. A Constitution and By-Laws were drafted and adopted. The Standing Committee of the Texas, Arkansas and Indian Territory Eldership being informed of the organization of the new Eldership relinquished its claim, January 17, 1893, to the Indian Territory, and declared that thereafter its title would be "The Texas and Arkansas Eldership of the Church of God."

E. M. Kirkpatrick.

E. M. Kirkpatrick, Speaker of the first Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership, was first licensed by the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, in 1884. He was then a member of the church at Happy Hollow, Ind. Ter., and was enrolled among the "ruling elders and delegates." That he was a man of more than common powers and culture is indicated by his title as "Professor," and also by the prominent positions which he filled and the active part he took in the deliberations. He was elected Secretary of the Eldership, and was Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions. He did not take an appointment in 1884; but in 1885 he was appointed to Lee's Creek circuit, including his home church. He was made a member of the Standing Committee, and was appointed to preach one of the 11 a. m. sermons during the session. In 1886 and 1887 he was in the active work. At the Eldership in 1888 he preached the Opening Sermon, and was chosen President of the Eldership, and again in 1890. He was not only a "rising man," but a leader in his Eldership, having natural talents for leadership. In 1891 he was again elected President, and also in 1892. And a little later the Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership was convened to hold its first session, he was the logical choice for President. He gave good satisfaction in this official position, and was a worthy and able representative of his Eldership.

2nd Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—At the General Eldership in June, 1893, the Report of the Committee on Boundaries was adopted, which stated, that "brethren of Texas and Indian Territory have organized themselves into an Eldership, and ask that they be recognized as a separate Eldership to be known as the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Eldership," and recommended that "this request be granted, and that the boundaries of this Eldership be the boundary lines of Indian and Oklahoma Territories." Having thus acquired a constitutional and legal status, the Eldership was called to meet at Mt. Nebo, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., September 26, 1893. J. C. Caswell preached the Opening Sermon. The officers chosen were R. D. Duncan, President; J. D. Shoemake, Clerk, and J. C. Caswell, Treasurer. The question of the continuance of licenses was discussed, and the decision reached was that "all ministers holding licenses under the Eldership be recognized good until called in question by disorderly conduct." Presumably for this reason, at the next sitting the license of one minister was "discontinued and his name dropped from the Roll." Eight ministers reported, and fifteen churches. It was voted as "the opinion of this body, that the scriptural mode of ordination is by prayer and the laying on of hands." There were six circuits, to each of which one minister was assigned.

3rd Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—There had been no formal deliverance on the question of the right of deacons to membership in the Eldership; but such right had sometimes been conceded, putting them on an equality with ruling elders. None was enrolled in 1894, when, on October 25th, the Eldership was constituted at Mt. Zion, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter. After electing E. M. Kirkpatrick, President; C. H. Ballinger, Clerk, and C. Brundage, Assistant Clerk, J. W. Riddle delivered the Introductory Sermon at 11 a. m., from II. Tim. iii. 1. Six teaching elders were present, three ruling elders and one delegate. A sermon was preached each morning at 11 o'clock, and in the evening. The President appointed all committees, including the Stationing and the Standing Committees. Reports of churches were received and carefully considered, with appropriate action. There was "some confusion within the bounds of the Eldership relative to the purpose or design of baptism," when the Eldership declared its unanimous view to be, "that water baptism is not in order to the remission of sins, but because of the remission of sins, and that no one has a right to participate in baptism, only those who have been regenerated and born of the Spirit." The agitation in print of "the right of sinners to pray" had also been taken up by some of the churches, and so the Eldership expressed its conviction, "that the duty of prayer is with the children of God; but the privilege of prayer is extended to any person, and that the whole world is the subject of the church's prayers." The Stationing Committee made appointments to six circuits, naming eleven churches.

4th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—The fourth Annual Eldership in Oklahoma and Indian Territory was anticipated as "a meeting of importance." It was held with the church at Elm Grove, on the Arkansas river, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., and began September 4, 1895. R. D. Duncan preached the Introductory Sermon. The forecast touching the special importance of the session did not produce the desired results, for only eight of the twenty-one ministers were present, with four ruling elders and four deacons. An election for officers resulted in the choice of J. C. Caswell, President; J. D. Shoemaker, Vice President; C. H. Mathews, Clerk, and J. M. Benson, Assistant Clerk. To secure funds, each pastor was required to collect the sum of $5.00. Churches were all to report annually to the Eldership, giving spiritual condition, number of members and financial ability. Eleven reported this year. There were eight fields of labor, all supplied with pastors. Other ministers were admonished to be active missionaries, "working their own fields of labor." A Board of Incorporation was appointed by the Standing Committee, and property interests were referred to it. One of the first churches organized in the Indian Territory had become extinct, the one at Sallisaw, Flint District, and the Board of Incorporation was "authorized to sell said house, and turn over the proceeds to the Treasurer of the Eldership."

5th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—The importance of protecting the moral character of a religious body by holding its members amenable for their official and moral conduct is everywhere recognized. But so do the members need protection against false accusations and hasty official action. In not a few instances has this principle been overlooked. In March, 1896, the Standing Committee of the Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership declared the license of one of the most prominent and able ministers of the body "null and void, until he exonerates himself before the Standing Committee." When the Eldership convened the case was recommitted to the Committee, which upon investigation "found the brother not guilty." The session was held at Standing Rock, Cherokee Nation, Canadian District, September 15, 1896. E. M. Kirkpatrick delivered the Opening Sermon. The membership consisted of nine teaching elders, seven ruling elders, five deacons and five delegates. The work had prospered, so that the Eldership received nine churches. These were located in the Choctaw, the Creek and the Cherokee Nations. E. M. Kirkpatrick, delegate to the General Eldership in May, 1896, gave his report, "which was highly endorsed by the Eldership." He was the President of the Eldership; K. A. Wallace, Assistant; C. H. Mathews, Clerk, and J. W. Brown, Assistant, and J. D. Shoemaker, Treasurer. The Eldership deemed it advisable to have two Standing Committees—one for Oklahoma, and one for Indian Territory. Relatively weak and poor, the Eldership felt under obligation to pay its assessments to the General Eldership, and immediate steps were determined upon for that purpose. The territory was divided into nine circuits, and to each a minister was assigned, while seven ministers "were allowed to choose their own fields of labor."

6th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—A Board of Incorporation was appointed in 1894, but the Eldership had not been incorporated, so that it had no legal status. Hence, in 1897, the Standing Committee for Oklahoma was "authorized to draft Articles of Incorporation, and also to act in the capacity of a Board of Incorporation." The Eldership held its session with the church at Star Schoolhouse, Lincoln county, Oklahoma, beginning October 6, 1897. Twelve ministers were enrolled, and five more were received on Transfer, and a Free Baptist minister was licensed. J. D. Shoemaker was elected President; C. Brundage, Vice President; J. W. Brown, Clerk, and J. R. Montgomery, Assistant. At 11 o'clock a. m., each day the Eldership adjourned to listen to a sermon. The eight fields of labor had seventeen preaching points indicated by the Stationing Committee. Church extension work was to be zealously pushed by all the ministers, and ministers unassigned were advised to select fields of labor and devote their time to building them up. In addition two evangelists were appointed, one for the Indian Territory and one for Oklahoma. Four things were specifically enjoined on the ministers: First. To teach total abstinence from the use of ardent spirits as a beverage. Second. To follow the teachings of the Apostles strictly in all their preaching and organizing churches. Third. To use their influence to circulate The Church Advocate and other literature of the Church. Fourth. To strive more extensively to co-operate with each other, and each one to teach the necessity of supporting the ministry. Though the funds were very limited, the Treasurer, J. D. Shoemake, who was re-elected, gave a careful account of moneys received and disbursed.

7th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—It would seem next to incredible that at so early a period in the history of an Eldership any part of it should become so corrupt as to need special "cleansing." Something to this effect was implied in the resolution of 1897—strictly to follow the teaching of the Apostles. Yet this might anticipate. But when a year later three ministers of experience and ability were appointed "with special instructions that they cleanse the work in Oklahoma," it is more than an implication that conditions were serious. This action was taken at the session held in the Missionary Baptist house of worship, at Sallisaw, District No. 11, Indian Territory, which began November 23, 1898. The membership present was small, there being present four ministers, three elders, one deacon and one delegate. The spirit of non-co-operation, non-organization and independence had so affected the work in Oklahoma that that part of the territory was not represented, and when the Stationing Committee reported it only supplied the fields in the Indian Territory—four circuits. J. H. Crumitt was chosen President; E. M. Kirkpatrick, Clerk, and J. D. Shoemake, Treasurer. The license of one minister was "revoked," and one name added to the Ministerial Roll. The need of a missionary well enough supported to devote all his time to the work was voiced in an action asking the General Eldership Board of Missions to appoint E. M. Kirkpatrick missionary to the Indian Territory, with an appropriation of $400.00. The matter of organizing Woman's Missionary societies was favorably considered.

8th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—Only surface indications of the work of "cleansing" the Oklahoma part of the Eldership were given to the public. A better and more sanguine spirit was realized in 1899, when the Eldership met at Shady Grove, Sans Bois county, Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory, October 18th. There was well-sustained interest to the close of the session, when the ministers returned to their homes and fields of labor much revived. The dual Standing Committees were continued, without any special instructions. The officers were J. D. Shoemake, President and Treasurer, and C. W. Ballinger, Clerk. The Life Certificates adopted by the General Eldership were issued to the ministers. The earnest labors of the ministers and churches during the year 1898-9 bore a good measure of fruit. The Stationing Committee, supplemented by the acts of the Oklahoma Standing Committee, created and supplied ten fields of labor.

9th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—A disposition to co-operate loyally with the General Eldership always characterized the ministry of the Oklahoma and Indian Territory. This sentiment was strengthened by the interest which the higher body manifested in the success and enlargement of the work in this fertile territory. Interests being mutual, co-operation was natural. This was again manifested at the session held at Salt Creek School-house, near Stroud, Oklahoma, beginning September 4, 1900. The Opening Sermon was preached by J. C. Caswell, from Matt. xvi. 18, who was elected Chairman. The other officers were G. T. Bell, Assistant Chairman; C. H. Ballinger, Clerk; J. A. Montgomery, Assistant Clerk. A new Constitution and By-Laws were adopted. Funds of all kinds were very limited, yet the Treasurer, J. D. Shoemake, made a report, and was re-elected. The Clerk was to ascertain the indebtedness of the Eldership, notify the pastors, who were to inform the deacons, whose duty it was made "to collect said amount and turn the same over to the Eldership Treasurer, who was to turn all such money over to the Treasurer of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership." J. D. Shoemake was recommended to the General Eldership Board of Missions as Missionary in Oklahoma. Four of the oldest ministers of the body received the Life Certificates of Ordination. "Charges for preaching heresy, and some other things" were preferred against one minister, and his "license was revoked and his name dropped from the Roll." A Standing Committee was appointed for Oklahoma, and one for the Indian Territory "to transact business until the meeting of the next Eldership." There were nine fields of labor, the largest having four appointments. There were fine opportunities for enlargement, so that each minister unassigned was advised "to select his own field of labor." But no support was provided for.

10th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—A fair measure of success followed the Eldership of 1900. At least three new churches were ready "to come under the protection of the Eldership and be received" in 1901. One was located at Duck Creek school-house, near Mounds, Creek Nation, Ind. Ter.; one at Fair View, Okla. Ter., and one at Harmony Grove, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter. These were received by the Eldership during its annual session held at Bethel School-house (originally Valley Grove), near Shaunee, Oklahoma, beginning September 3, 1901. The Eldership remained in session until Friday evening, September 6th. G. T. Bell was elected Speaker; C. H. Ballinger, Clerk; D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. Three annual collections were ordered at each church, one being for the General Eldership Missionary Fund. The ministers were required to bring in each year "a written report to the Eldership of all moneys received for salary during the Eldership year." A Board of Missions was authorized. B. Ober, the oldest member of the Eldership, was incessant in his demands that the Eldership be faithful to all its obligations. "We are not worthy to be called an Eldership," he said, "if we pay no attention to the financial department of the Church." In addition to the appointment of J. D. Shoemaker as Missionary in the Indian Territory, there were five other ministers assigned to fields of labor.

11th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—C. Brundage, a member of the Eldership, had located in Manitoba, Dominion of Canada, at Swan River; but had forfeited his license. He availed himself of the session of 1902 to "ask pardon and requested to be restored, which was granted." The session was held with the church at Harmony Grove School-house, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., beginning September 16, 1902. The previous evening E. M. Kirkpatrick delivered the Opening Sermon, from Acts xx. 28. The officials of the Eldership were: Speaker, S. B. Moore; Clerk, C. H. Ballinger; Treasurer, D. J. Philbin. Dissatisfied with the boundary line between the Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership and the Kansas Eldership, the General Eldership was by unanimous vote requested to rescind its action taken in June, 1902. This action was prompted by a request from E. M. Hickman for a Transfer for himself and the church at Glade school-house, of which he was pastor, to the Kansas Eldership. Earnest action was taken on the subject of mission work. Each minister was required "to teach and do all he can to get up an interest in this work, and to show the brethren the necessity of such work, and the good there is done through such work, and to urge them to give to the support of this work." J. W. Burns, of the Arkansas Eldership, had labored in the Choctaw Nation, and organized two churches, which were received, and his Transfer accepted. C. H. Ballinger was recommended to the General Board of Missions as missionary in south-eastern Oklahoma, and L. Teel, for the Indian Territory. The church at Leedy, Okla., organized by H. W. Allen, was received into the Eldership. O. A. Newlin was present in the interest of Ft. Scott Institute, Ft. Scott, Kansas. The Eldership seal had been purchased, and every Certificate of Ordination was to have it affixed to make it valid. There were four circuits.

12th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—The Eldership year 1902-3 was one of special activity of an official character. The Indian Territory Standing Committee, on October 25, 1902, met at South Bethel, near Bragg, Ind. Ter., and after rearranging part of the work of the Stationing Committee, acted on the question of "purchasing a tabernacle for holding meetings." A favorable decision was reached, and it was ordered that funds be raised and a tabernacle bought for use in the Indian Territory. Cash was at once raised to the amount of $43.00. The matter was placed in the hands of E. M. Kirkpatrick and George Kirk. The Speaker of "the Eldership of the Indian Territory called the general body together to transact some special business, on February 14, 1903, at Harmony Grove School-house, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., as the Standing Committee is unorganized." The main business transacted related to charges against one of the members of the Standing Committee, and against another minister by the Committee. Investigation in the former case resulted in "no charges being preferred." In the latter, being guilty of "falsehood and disorderly walk," the "Certificate of Ordination was called in." The regular session was held with the church at Martin's Schoolhouse, Choctaw Nation, Ind. Ter., and opened on Tuesday, September 1, 1903. The Annual Sermon was delivered by F. C. Buchanan, after which S. B. Moore was elected President; C. H. Ballinger, Clerk; D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. Not only did the Eldership ratify the action taken in calling in the Certificate of Ordination of F. N. Nedean, by the extra meeting of the Indian Territory part of the Eldership on February 14th; but it sustained charges of heretical teaching against J. W. Gilbert, and withheld his license. The usual two Standing Committees were appointed, one for Oklahoma, and one for Indian Territory. Richard Martin, after being granted a Certificate of Ordination, was "elected by the Eldership to look after its church property lying in the bounds of the Eldership." If ministers failed to collect assessments, "they shall pay said assessments at their own expense."

13th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—A belated discussion of Eldership titles occurred at the session of the Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership in 1904. It had been debated before, but was brought up again in anticipation of "being an issue at the General Eldership in 1905." It was resolved that "we consider the term 'Eldership' a biblical term," and so the "delegates to the next General Eldership were recommended to cast their votes for the time-honored title 'Eldership.'" The Eldership convened with the church at South Bethel, three miles south of Braggs, Cherokee Nation, Ind. Ter., on Tuesday, September 20, 1904. It was the largest of the thirteen annual sessions, with the "best prospects ever witnessed." The Opening Sermon was delivered by C. H. Ballinger, who was elected Clerk, and J. W. Burns, President, and D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. Three newly-organized churches in Oklahoma, and two in the Indian Territory "were received and recognized by the Eldership." Some confusion again arose over the artificial boundary line between this Eldership and that of Kansas, as the church at Fairview, of which F. C. Buchanan was pastor, "after investigation was found to be in the bounds of the Kansas Eldership." Ft. Scott Institute was represented at the session by W. E. Kelly, and was endorsed, with Findlay College, in forcible resolutions. Three missionaries had been partly supported in the territory of this Eldership by the General Board of Missions. There were ten fields of labor, all supplied with ministers of whose capacity and earnestness, their high character and trustworthiness the Eldership had no doubt. In various sections there was a decided sentiment in favor of the churches of God as a body.

14th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—As the territory of the Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership was very large, the attendance at the annual sessions was comparatively small. For the same reason the work was so divided that the sessions were much like the joint meetings of two bodies. And the business between sessions was transacted by two Standing Committees. In 1905 the Eldership met near the center of the territory, at Fairview, Pottawatomie county, October 12th, J. W. Burns having preached the Opening Sermon the previous evening. The officers elected were H. W. Allen, President; C. H. Ballinger, Clerk; D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. Two Standing Committees were elected, one for Oklahoma, and one for the Indian Territory. The financial question was one of the most difficult that the Eldership had to handle. After a dispassionate consideration of it, it was decided that two of the ministers should be "selected to travel and talk and work up the interest of finance in this Eldership." H. W. Allen was chosen for Oklahoma, and C. H. Ballinger, for the Indian Territory. Each of them, however, had also a charge. The "names of two ministers were dropped from the Ministerial Roll" because they failed to report. Three ministers were placed on the Superannuated list. E. Marple, who lived within the territory of the Eldership, but was a member of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, was present and rendered service which was heartily appreciated. There was much interest in the sittings, and the ministers "were revived and encouraged." There were nine fields of labor, to four of which the Board of Missions of the General Eldership had either appointed men, or was asked to assist in their support.

15th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—Occasionally an Eldership would do things in violation of the General Eldership Constitution, because the provisions of said instrument were overlooked. This was the case in 1906 when the title of the Eldership was changed to read "Oklahoma Eldership of the Churches of God." But on information, the action was treated as of no effect. The Eldership convened at Sunshine, Dewey county, Okla., August 30th. H. W. Allen preached the Opening Sermon. He was re-elected President; J. W. Burns, Clerk; J. D. Philbin, Treasurer. There were present seven teaching elders, four ruling elders, five deacons and five delegates, all full members. Three new "churches were received into the Eldership." The names of five ministers were "dropped from the Ministerial Roll" because they failed to report; but they could be "reinstated as the Constitution and By-Laws provide." The Financial Agent for Oklahoma, appointed the previous year, made "an encouraging report," and J. H. Cummings was elected for the ensuing year. Upon recommendation of the Committee on Missions, the Eldership proceeded to organize a Woman's Missionary Society by electing Martha L. Hickman, President; Hannah McGrew, Vice President; Bulah Carter, Secretary; Mary Allen, Treasurer, and Martha L. Hickman, General Organizer. Provision was made by an amendment to the Constitution for one Standing Committee of five members. The territory for mission work was divided into Eastern, Central and Western Oklahoma mission fields. Besides these, but two other appointments were made, and "all churches unsupplied to apply to the Standing Committee."

16th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—Providence favored the Eldership as to the health and lives of its ministers. But during the year 1906-7, one of the faithful and zealous workers verified Richter's thought: "What withers on earth blooms again is heaven." J. F. Summit, ordained by the Texas and Arkansas Eldership in 1891, was appointed to a charge, with J. D. Shoemaker, at the first Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership, in 1892. During these twenty-five years he lived in the esteem and affection of his fellow-ministers. And in their bereavement their trust in God prevented the thought why "the skies should have such a surplusage of virtue, and the earth a deficit." Yet they mourned the loss of so much that was virtuous and noble. Thus in somber mood the Eldership convened with the church at Garden Grove, near the line between Pottawatomie and Lincoln counties, Okla., Thursday morning, October 17, 1907. On the previous evening H. W. Allen delivered the Opening Sermon. The organization was effected by the election of the venerable B. Ober, President; J. W. Burns, Clerk; D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. Thirteen ministers were enrolled. Anticipating the admission of the two Territories as one State in the Union, the boundary lines of the new State were declared "to be the boundary lines of this Eldership." To provide for a Superannuated Ministers' and Widows' "Fund each minister was required to pay $1.00 annually and take one collection annually" for said Fund. Each member of the churches was requested to pay 25 cents annually as a Home Mission Fund.

17th Oklahoma and Indian Territory Eldership.—On Saturday evening before the convening of the Eldership in 1908, the Eldership had directed that the session of the Ministerial Association should begin. This gave the Sabbath for preaching and three days for the discussion of topics on the program. The place selected was Palestine, Pittsburg county, Okla., September 3, 1908. The previous evening B. Ober delivered the Opening Sermon. Nine teaching elders, five ruling elders and one deacon were enrolled as members. Four new churches were reported and placed on the Roll. The reports indicated that the Church of God in the State "is growing in strength and favor." To secure the co-operation of "the churches on the fifty-mile strip of Oklahoma which is part of the Kansas Eldership, and to confer with the Kansas Eldership with a view of obtaining the territory, which was once a part of this Eldership," C. H. Ballinger was elected the representative of the Eldership to visit the said churches and the Kansas Eldership. The mission work in the Eldership was in good condition. Moderate in sentiment relative to the cause of temperance, the Eldership declared it to be "the duty of every Christian to abstain from intoxicating drinks, and to teach others by word and action to abstain from all drunkenness." A "helping hand" was to be given "to destroy and drive out the curse of intemperance from our midst." A memorial was also addressed to the Governor endorsing the efforts making to suppress the sale of intoxicants. The W. G. M. S. of 1903 was approved, "with the prayer that all antagonism between contending parties may be put down." Leaving the "mission fields to the missionaries as appointed by the General Board of Missions," the Eldership appointed pastors to six other fields. Change of name and boundaries was referred to the General Eldership in 1909.

18th Oklahoma Eldership.—The petition for change of name and boundaries addressed to the General Eldership having been granted, the body met in 1909 as the Oklahoma Eldership, with its boundaries coterminous with those of the State. This action brought into the Eldership by transfer from the Kansas Eldership J. W. Bloyd and F. C. Melson. The session was held at Fair View, Pottawatomie county, Okla., and began September 25, 1909. The Eldership was organized by the election of J. W. Burns, President; C. H. Ballinger, Clerk; D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. After the organization the Opening Sermon was preached by H. W. Allen, from John xix. 30. Appreciating the work done within the boundaries of the Oklahoma Eldership by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, it was declared that the "missionary interests are in a healthy condition," and "the various churches were recommended to urge the interests of the W. M. S. and effect organizations as soon as possible." All ministers were required to make quarterly reports to the Chairman of the Standing Committee. "The churches were required at once to report the number of members they have on the Roll." Appointments were made to six charges.

19th Oklahoma Eldership.—A Constitution with some new provisions was prepared and adopted at the session in 1910. The title of the body is the Oklahoma Eldership. The boundaries are the geographical territory of the State. The membership to consist of all ministers having a license from the Oklahoma Eldership, together with all the ruling elders of the respective churches of the Eldership, one elder for the first ten members or fraction thereof, two for 20 or between 15 and 20; also an equal number of lay delegates, all of which are to have equal rights in the transaction of the business of the Eldership. An annual meeting is to be held on "Wednesday on or before the full moon in the month selected by the Eldership, and the Opening Sermon shall be preached immediately after the organization." Three members constitute the Standing Committee. A Board of Trustees, a Board of Missions, a Stationing Committee and a Judiciary Committee were provided for. Under this Constitution the Eldership convened with the church at Mount Pleasant, Major county, Wednesday morning, October 12, 1910. After devotional services, E. M. Hickman was elected President; C. H. Ballinger, Clerk; D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. The Opening Sermon was then delivered by J. R. Montgomery. The presence of C. Manchester, Principal of Fort Scott Collegiate Institute, was sincerely appreciated. Collegiate Institute Day was approved. The Eldership also "rejoiced in the progress made in securing funds to meet the Carnegie proposition, and pledged co-operation with President Brown in this important work." The Eldership lamented "the disposition in many places to compromise our spirituality for a form of godliness." It declared that it "will cling to the old-time religion, genuine salvation." That there has been too much yielding to compromise, and that the Eldership will insist that the ministers "preach the doctrine more fully, leaving none in doubt as to where we stand." They would not appeal to the passions and the pride of men, but to the reason. There was some implication of criticism in the expressed belief that the Board of Missions should give "a more liberal support to a good man in a limited field, rather than small appropriations over a widely extended field." There were now thirteen fields, but two were not supplied. A. J. Hill was the General Evangelist.

20th Oklahoma Eldership.—A well-attended Eldership session was held in 1911, and one of special interest, to which several things contributed. It was held with the church at Bartlesville, Okla., the largest church in the largest town in which there was a church of God organization, and located in the fifty-mile strip which had been part of the Kansas Eldership territory. The date of the opening of the session was October 4, 1911. C. Manchester, Fort Scott Collegiate Institute, Kans., gave valuable assistance in the negotiations with T. C. Ferguson, pastor of a Free-Will Baptist church, who was present to make overtures looking toward union of the churches of God and the Free-Will Baptist churches in Oklahoma. A. J. Hill, J. D. Henson and J. W. Bloyd were the committee to which the proposition was submitted, and Manchester was requested to serve with this Committee. The scope of the negotiations was widened so as to include the churches in "Texas and the West." The conclusion reached with Ferguson was to "recommend that everything be done that can be done to bring the two bodies into closer relationship; that the time has [not] come for organic union, but that they ought to work more together in the future than they have in the past, hoping and praying that this will lead in the near future to the organic union of the two bodies." It was further decided that Manchester should attend "the Free-Will Baptist Association that meets Thursday before the third Sunday in October, near Liberal, Mo., and that this Eldership send a corresponding messenger to attend the Free-Will Baptist Convention that meets at Bruceville, Texas, Thursday before the fourth Sunday in November." A free exchange of preachers and members between the two bodies was to be encouraged. Manchester was also authorized to represent the Eldership at the Free-Will Baptist Convention at Bruceville, Texas. There were at this time twenty-three names on the Oklahoma Eldership Roll of Ministers, and thirty-one on the Roll of the Free-Will Baptist Roll. Fourteen ministers attended the Eldership, two ruling elders and seven delegates, three of which were women. The President was H. W. Allen; Clerk, J. W. Burnes; Financial Clerk, J. D. Henson; Treasurer, D. J. Philbin. The Constitution was changed so as to provide that "the Eldership meet on Sunday on or before full moon in the month selected by the Eldership," the Opening Sermon to be delivered at 11 a. m., and the business session to begin the Monday following, at 9 a. m. The total amount received by the Treasurer was $63.20. The state of religion was reported to be "good, as there seems to have been a veritable wave sweeping over the country during the past year." One sermon a year was recommended to be preached by the ministers on total abstinence from all alcoholic liquors as a beverage. And the assistance of the body was promised "the officers of the State in the discharge of their duty in executing the laws and Constitution of our State in reference to the whisky traffic." The Eldership was grief-stricken at the sudden death of B. Ober, aged nearly 88 years. His death had occurred September 26, 1911, eight days before the Eldership convened. Born in Pennsylvania in 1823, he began his ministerial labors when about twenty-two years of age. During the last six months of his life he had preached eighty-seven sermons, preaching his last sermon two days prior to his going to the other side of the river.

21st Oklahoma Eldership.—The proposition submitted in 1911, to "amend the Constitution so as to provide that the deacons be members of this Eldership by virtue of their office," had been deferred until the Eldership in 1912. But in 1912 it "was referred, without prejudice on either side, to the General Eldership of 1913, for said Eldership to define our rights regarding said question." As per action in 1911, the Eldership convened with the church at Russellville, on Sabbath, July 21, 1912, and listened to the Opening Sermon by H. W. Allen. On Monday morning Allen was elected President; J. W. Burnes, Clerk; D. J. Philbin, Treasurer. It was one of the most harmonious sessions many of the members had ever attended, making a most favorable impression on members of other religious bodies which were present. The various publications of the General Eldership were commended, as was the work of W. G. M. S. of the same. Incisive resolutions were adopted relative to the Roman Catholic Church, calling it "a formidable monster," and declaring that it "would thwart governments and destroy our public school system." It believed "it is time our State should demand that all Convent schools and secret institutions of the Catholic Church should be thrown open to inspection by a board appointed by the Governor at least once a year." The Mormon Church the Eldership believed to be "equally as detrimental to our free government, and a stigma on the cause of Christ." The Standing Committee consisted of J. D. Henson, J. W. Burnes and H. W. Allen. The Eldership Tabernacle was placed in charge of A. J. Hill, who was re-elected State Evangelist. Five ministers were appointed by the General Eldership Board of Missions, and endorsed by the Oklahoma Eldership. J. D. Henson was also appointed State Evangelist, and eleven other ministers were assigned to charges.

XXI. THE WEST VIRGINIA ELDERSHIP, SOUTH.

As early as 1885, when the work was in its incipency in the territory later included in the West Virginia Eldership, South, the distance to the annual sessions of the West Virginia Eldership, North, was often so great as to hinder these ministers and delegates from attending, and a disposition was manifested to organize another Eldership. Mission work had been begun there by W. J. Davis, then of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, who succeeded in organizing one church in Roane county, one in Putnam county and several in Jackson county. He was succeeded by L. F. Murray, who also had considerable success. Then came T. Woods, under whose labors the work was extended into Fayette, Raleigh, Summers and Kanawha counties, embracing altogether a succession of counties from Jackson, on the Ohio River, to Summers, near the boundary line of Virginia. Churches were organized in all these counties, and men were being called into the ministry who were still less disposed to travel as far as 200 miles to an Annual Eldership. It was hence determined to make an effort to organize a new Eldership. To do this in an orderly manner the matter was brought before the West Virginia Eldership, North, as its session held at Bellaire, Ohio, 1894. Said body agreed to divide the territory until the meeting of the General Eldership in 1896. The titles of the two Elderships were to be respectively the Northern, and the Southern, West Virginia Eldership. The ministers laboring or living in the territory of the new Eldership were to become members thereof, if they so desired. The territory of the proposed Eldership was defined to consist of all of West Virginia south of the little Kanawha River, whose confluence with the Ohio River is at Parkersburg. Fourteen ordained ministers of the Church of God were at this time laboring or living within the territory of this Eldership.

As agreed upon, the new organization was to be "a temporary" one "until they were chartered by the next Eldership." Nevertheless, it exercised all the functions and assumed all the powers of a duly authorized Eldership. The first meeting was held in the Grandview Bethel, Putnam county, beginning October 26, 1894. The following ministers were present: J. M. Allen, B. F. Cash, G. R. Felure, B. F. Howell, W. C. Leonard, H. W. Marty, J. F. McDorman, L. F. Murray, R. L. Workman and G. M. Virgin. Living in the territory, but absent, were B. H. Bernam, W. H. Browder, G. Silman and L. C. Tyree. The delegates were W. Y. Matthews, R. Coalman, W. A. Higgabotham, J. A. Higgabotham, L. W. Matthews, Joseph Murray, Thomas Cooper, S. L. Falls, E. B. Bralham and E. Haning. An organization was effected by the election of L. F. Murray, President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. C.

L. F. Murray.

Leonard, Financial Clerk, and R. Coalman, Treasurer. The Opening Sermon was preached by J. M. Allen, from Ps. xlviii. 12, 13. Only the usual routine business was transacted. A splendid spirit pervaded the body, and "love and harmony prevailed throughout the entire meeting." The ministers were sanguine, and "full of zeal and courage, and went to the fields assigned them with bright prospects of doing much good." The territory was large, and the work was hard; but the horizon was luminous.

L. F. Murray, first Speaker, or President, of the West Virginia Eldership, South, was a native of Westmoreland county, Pa., where he was born September 27, 1847. He was inured in early life to physical hardships and toil, receiving but the rudiments of an English education. He was susceptible to religious influences, though it was not until the Spring of 1877 that he united with the Church of God, becoming a member of the church at Long Run, Greene county, Pa. His convictions that he was to become a herald of the gospel of the Son of man were almost simultaneous with his conversion, for in October of the same year, when the West Pennsylvania Eldership held its annual session at Center Bethel (Alverton), he was an applicant for license. His application was favorably considered; a license was voted him, and he was formally ordained by John Hickernell. His call meant work. He asked for a charge. He was adapted to the mission field. And though, not like Fletcher, who rejected the Parish of Durham, saying, "There is too much money, and too little labor," Murray was to spend his early life in the ministry on fields where work abounded, and pay was limited. His first field to which he was assigned at the Eldership which ordained him was the Greene County Mission, Pa., including Waynesburg, Dotysburg and Rough's Creek. The next year he was sent to the West Virginia Mission, including the three counties of Jackson, Roane and Putnam. Thence after two years he was appointed to Marshall county, W. Va., which he served two years. From there he was removed to Venango county, Pa., in the Congress Hill region. In 1884 he was elected one of the lay delegates to the Wooster General Eldership. After serving this field two years he spent one year on the Harmony circuit, Pa., and then was appointed to West Newton, Westmoreland county, Pa., where he was pastor in 1887 when the General Eldership held its session there. After serving this station two years he requested a Transfer to the West Virginia Eldership, and removed to Jackson county, W. Va., where he spent ten years, and in 1890 he was President of the Eldership, and Treasurer in 1891, as well as a member of the Standing Committee. Knowing his zeal as a missionary and his executive ability, the Eldership gave him charge of all the churches south of the Kanawha River. This position he held until the organization of the West Virginia Eldership, South. In addition to being the President of the Eldership, he was also Chairman of the Standing Committee. He was a member of the first delegation sent by this Eldership to the General Eldership. He filled well every office of trust and power, and had the confidence of those who honored him.

2nd West Virginia Eldership, South.—Every prospect for the progress of the new Eldership was auspicious. The majority of the ministers were men of experience; the territory was not too large for efficient co-operative work; the doctrines of the church were favorably received, and the class of people among whom the ministers labored were easily within the reach of a humble, devout and self-denying ministry. The year following the first Eldership was rewarded with a good measure of success. As the General Eldership which was to grant the new Eldership a charter did not meet until 1896, the body was as yet not fully habilitated when it convened in its second annual session at Liberty, Putnam county, September 19, 1895. The membership consisted of eleven ministers, eleven delegates and one exhorter. Five ministers and one exhorter were absent. An organization was effected by the election of W. C. Leonard, Speaker; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk, and R. Coalman, Treasurer. It also made choice of its first delegates to the General Eldership, to meet at Harrisburg, Pa., in May, 1896, to ask admission into the union of Elderships as represented in said body. These were L. F. Murray, with B. H. Berman as alternate. Quite an interest developed in the discussion of questions to be acted upon by the General Eldership. The decision was unanimous against a change in the "name, style and title" of Elderships. On the question of Life Certificates there were thirteen affirmative votes, and four negative. The matter of a General Eldership Fund out of which to pay the expenses of all delegates appealed strongly to the weaker Elderships, and those farthest remote from the stronger churches with which said body generally met. And so on this proposition the vote was sixteen ayes, and one nay. The meager salaries received by the pastors is indicated by the "financial system" which was adopted. This provided "that all ministers receiving $50.00 or more as salary shall collect an amount of missionary money equal to four per cent. Those receiving less than $50.00 salary shall collect for missions an amount equal to four per cent. of $50.00." The number of fields of labor was eleven, with forty preaching places. Three of the ministers were appointed "General Evangelists, and to have missionary privileges," the latter right being also granted to two of the pastors.

3rd West Virginia Eldership, South.—The prejudice against Constitutions had passed before the West Virginia Eldership, South, was organized. At its first session it adopted, with slight modifications, the Constitution of the West Virginia Eldership, North, as its organic law, pending action by the General Eldership. At the session in 1896 a committee was appointed to "draft Rules of Order." The Eldership held its third session at Philo, beginning September 10, 1896. On the evening of the 9th B. H. Bernam preached the Opening Sermon. There were present eleven ministers, one exhorter and seven delegates. L. F. Murray was elected President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. C. Leonard, Financial Clerk. While the religious condition was considered "encouraging, and the cause advanced during the year beyond our expectations;" yet there was this discordant note, that four of the ministers had united with other Churches, and the names of two others "were dropped from the Roll." On temperance the action taken was temperate, "strictly instructing our ministers to teach against intemperance, and to use their influence against the use of intoxicating spirits as a beverage." The Standing Committee was "impowered to receive ministers and their licenses from other Churches, and grant them licenses from this body." "The thorough education of our ministers" was recommended, "especially on the teaching of the Apostles as found in the Scriptures." As a help to this end it was determined to "hold a Ministerial Association every three months." Ministers on "entering their fields of labor" were directed to "enter into contracts with the church councils," which contracts were to be "filed with the Standing Committee within sixty days after the adjournment of the Eldership." If any ministers fail to do so "the Standing Committee shall declare the work vacant." The number of circuits was ten.

4th West Virginia Eldership, South.—The coincidence of a dedication and an Eldership has not been infrequent. The church at Liberty, Putnam county, built a bethel during the Summer of 1897. The Eldership in 1896 voted to hold its annual session at said place, to begin August 26, 1897. The church arranged for the dedication of its new house of worship on August 29th, when T. Woods officiated. The Opening Sermon of the Eldership was delivered on the evening of the 25th, by J. M. Allen. Only four of the sixteen ministers were absent, and eleven delegates were present. The Eldership elected L. F. Murray, Speaker; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. C. Leonard, Financial Clerk, and R. Coalman, Treasurer. A Constitution for a Woman's Missionary Society was prepared by the Standing Committee and approved by the Eldership. "No member of the Eldership" shall "be allowed to use any one's name to speak disrespectfully of them," was one of the moral laws affirmed. A course of studies of four years was to be prepared "to be pursued by the older ministers, and to pass an examination yearly." And "all the young ministers, and those about to enter the ministry, should take a course of study at Barkeyville Academy, and if possible one at Findlay College." Committees to make the annual examinations in 1898 were appointed. Of the eleven fields of labor, four were missions. W. C. Leonard was appointed General Evangelist. Fourteen years prior to the session of this Eldership T. Woods "was the only minister of the Church of God in that county," over which fourteen ministers were appointed as pastors in 1897.

5th West Virginia Eldership, South.—"Pleasant View Bethel" and "Hills Valley Bethel," six miles west of St. Albans, Kanawha county, may be identical. Both names are used for the place where the West Virginia Eldership, South, held its annual session in 1898. The Opening Sermon was delivered on the evening of August 29th, by G. Silman. Eleven teaching elders were present, and four were absent, and four delegates were present. The number of ministers has remained practically stationary, notwithstanding the licensing of some every year, and no deaths. The "dropping" of ministers for various reasons is the stereotype way of accounting for this fact. It is a fact, too, which must have an undesirable influence on the body, and on the churches it represents. Two were "dropped" in 1898, one because "he has united with another body," and one for "not complying with the Rules of Order." Upon reorganizing the Eldership W. C. Leonard was elected Speaker; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk. The state of religion was reported to be "good, and the prospects for the future bright;" nevertheless, two church properties were placed in the hands of R. L. Workman as agent, "to look after them." Nor were the "borders of the Eldership extended as speedily as the demand for Church of God preaching." It is quite suggestive that the Eldership deemed it necessary to prescribe ten Rules, or "By-Laws, to govern and regulate" the conduct of "evangelists and pastors." To increase the efficiency of pastors, and to make their work less onerous, a rearrangement of the circuits was made the duty of the Stationing Committee. Inviting fields were thus also to become subject to cultivation. The number of fields was thus reduced to eight, two of them missions. L. F. Murray was granted a Transfer to the Maryland and Virginia Eldership, and I. D. Cousins, to the West Virginia Eldership, North. "The word 'exhorter' was stricken out of the form of local license, and the words 'local preacher' were substituted."

6th West Virginia Eldership, South.—The Eldership had felt the need of permanent Rules, and so in 1899 considerable time was spent in considering and adopting By-Laws. It was an opportune time, too, for all the ministers were in attendance except one. The meeting was held at Mt. Tabor Bethel, Kanawha county, where the Opening Sermon was preached on Tuesday evening, August 29, 1899, by G. Silman. Thirteen ministers were present when the Eldership was organized on the following morning. G. E. Edwards was elected President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk; W. C. Leonard, Treasurer. The Eldership was composed entirely of ministers. Not much progress was made, the reasons assigned being the smallness of the churches, and their poverty, so that "our preachers have to make nearly all their support by some other callings." Mt. Tabor church was "taking the lead in paying its preachers," having paid $70.00 the past year. Hence the fields of labor were often small, a single church, so as to make it easier for the pastors. There were nine fields of labor, with fourteen appointments. During the year the professions numbered 87; baptized, 24; fellowshipped, 66; total membership, 269. The ordinances were greatly neglected, as only four were reported. The salaries of the ministers were $347.16. There were nine Sunday-schools reported.

7th West Virginia Eldership, South.—A rather tantalizing dearth of information characterizes many of the sessions of the West Virginia Eldership, South. G. M. Virgin's case had been referred to the Standing Committee without recording the reasons. The Committee "in a resolution denounced his former course;" but because "he wished to withdraw from the Eldership, no further action was taken than to grant his withdrawal." The reason for his withdrawal was a change of views on the deity of Christ. The Eldership convened at Grandview Bethel, Putnam county, W. Va., August 30, 1900. The Opening Sermon was delivered the previous evening by G. Silman. Reorganization was effected by the election of G. E. Edwards, President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk; W. Y. Matthews, Treasurer. There were four fields of labor with ten appointments: The Grandview circuit, Kanawha circuit, Liberty circuit, Jackson circuit, and Raleigh Fayette county mission, the last unsupplied. R. T. Ellis was appointed Eldership Evangelist, and all "the rest to have missionary privileges."

8th West Virginia Eldership, South.—There seemed some doubt in 1901 whether it would be wise to continue the West Virginia Eldership, South. The question was, therefore, discussed. When it was decided affirmatively it was natural to take up the following: "What steps should be taken to advance the cause of this Eldership?" Two other practical questions received special attention, viz.: "Should we organize C. E. Societies?" "Should we organize missionary societies?" The session of the Eldership was held at Joe's Run, Jackson county, W. Va., beginning August 29, 1901. On the previous evening H. W. Marty delivered the Opening Sermon. There were only three ministers present, and eight absent; but three delegates were enrolled. W. C. Leonard was chosen President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; T. M. Pearsall, Financial Clerk; W. Y. Matthews, Treasurer. Questions which frequently consumed much time in their discussion were made topics for consideration at the Ministerial Association. If subsequently brought before the Eldership for a decision little time was consumed in debate. There were two mission fields and four circuits, all supplied with pastors but one of the circuits. There were only 168 sermons preached during the year, and the salaries of the ministers amounted to $60.95; missionary money, $23.05. G. C. Thompson was appointed General Missionary.

9th West Virginia Eldership, South.—On the evening of September 3, 1902, at Grandview, Putnam county, W. Va., the West Virginia Eldership, South, convened to listen to the annual Opening Sermon, delivered by R. L. Workman. The following morning twelve ministers and two delegates were enrolled as present. They made choice of B. F. Cash for President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk; W. Y. Matthews, Treasurer. There were discussions which developed differences of opinions, "but no ill-feeling was manifested toward each other." Perhaps they had the virtue embalmed in the saying, that "it takes more courage for a man to admit that he is wrong, than to insist that he is right." Nothing was more fruitful of acrimonious debate as the question which at this time was somewhat epidemic: The wisdom of having Stationing Committees. The General Eldership gave a favorable opinion later; but that body is conservative, and allows much latitude for discussion. "After a lengthy discussion, a resolution was passed that the churches employ their own pastors this year, on the congregational plan." There were owned by the churches three houses of worship and one-fourth interest in two others. Though it was thought the year 1901-2 "was not as prosperous as it should have been," there was an increase in the number of sermons preached, the aggregate salaries paid and the amount of missionary money received. No reasons are given why there were only five protracted meetings held, and one ordinance meeting, or why the number of professions was only eight, and baptized one.

10th West Virginia Eldership, South.—By implication, the congregational system was abandoned after one year's trial: "The Stationing Committee in 1903 made but few changes from last year's work." The strength of the Eldership is seen in the fact that there was no field of labor "which could support a preacher so that he can put in all of his time on his charge." This was the terrible handicap to the work. While in 1902-3 the ministers preached 188 sermons, they held only five protracted meetings, three ordinance meetings and baptized four. For their labors they received $92.00. The session of the Eldership was held at Pleasant View, Putnam county, August 5, 1903, when the Opening Sermon was preached by W. H. Browder, from II. Tim. iv. 2. Theme: "Preach the Word." Six ministers out of the twelve were present, and three delegates. George E. Edwards was chosen President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk; G. Silman, Treasurer. During the year W. M. Miller departed to the Father's house, and his loss was lamented as that of a true servant of the Master, faithful and loyal to the Church. The observance of two ordinances at the close of the session was a special feature.

11th West Virginia Eldership, South.—The West Virginia Eldership, South, experienced that inward states of its members affect outward relations. Thus lives which should be in unison, like Hamlet's, become as "sweet bells out of tune" when sorrow, jealousy or other passions are allowed to remain within. Or the reverse, as where the devout spirit of service to the blessed Lord dominates every power of the soul and becomes the meeting-ground of opposing views, where they fuse, lose their opposition; and become one prevailing force. In a measure this was realized when on October 13, 1904, the Eldership assembled at Sugar Grove, Kanawha county. The previous evening the Opening Sermon was preached by H. W. Marty. The officers elected were: President, G. E. Edwards; Clerk, H. W. Marty; Financial Secretary, W. H. Browder; Treasurer, R. L. Workman. These were all ministers, of whom eight were enrolled, one being absent, and five delegates. For better supervision of the work of the pastors it was determined that the President of the Eldership should "visit each circuit every three months, and assist in revival work." There were five protracted meetings held, with 53 conversions, 30 fellowshiped and twenty-one baptized; 175 sermons were preached, and the salaries amounted to $176.60. While two "promising young men were ordained to preach," it "pleased God in a wise dispensation of his providence to remove R. T. Ellis and G. C. Thompson." This was a "sad bereavement; but there is no death to the Christian, but only the changing of his dwelling place." Ellis had been ordained in 1895, by the West Virginia Eldership, South; Thompson, by the West Pennsylvania Eldership, in 1872. "Nature has sentenced" all to death, as Socrates said to him who told him, "The thirty tyrants have sentenced thee to death." But for the true believer there is no death; it is transition.

12th West Virginia Eldership, South.—The observance of the ordinances the last night of the Eldership was usually a service greatly blessed to those who remained to participate. The first evening had other advantages. But the Eldership in 1905 listened to a sermon on Tuesday evening on the ordinances by H. W. Marty, "after which they were observed, which was indeed a blessed season." This was followed "by the ordination charge," and one was ordained to the ministry. The ministers and delegates gathered for the session on Saturday evening, September 3, 1905, at Mt. Tabor, Kanawha county. On Sunday morning G. Silman preached the Opening Sermon. On Monday morning the session began, with six ministers present, four absent; three delegates present. The following officers were elected: B. F. Cash, President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk; R. L. Workman, Treasurer. Two were licensed, or ordained, and four received "local license." There was an increase in funds, as the salaries of ministers aggregated $305.65, and the missionary money reported was $20.00. While 77 made a profession, only 23 were baptized and 37 fellowshiped.

13th West Virginia Eldership, South.—The Clerk of the Eldership in 1906 reported the "work in a prosperous condition." A few items confirm this. There were five Sunday-schools reported; 254 conversions, 114 baptized, 143 fellowshipped, and 6 were licensed to preach. The session was held at Philo (Philoah), in Putnam county, August 29, 1906, when, at 7.30 p. m., B. F. Cash preached the Opening Sermon. There were eight fields of labor, to one of which two pastors were assigned. Nine ministers and four delegates constituted the Eldership. Four ministers were absent. They elected B. F. Cash, President; L. A. Landers, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Secretary; R. L. Workman, Treasurer. With fifteen appointments, there were only five ordinance meetings. While "the shadows were falling longer" for many of the ministers who were such faithful watchmen, there was an evident lack in doctrinal teaching and in the observance of the ordinances. The records show little interest in the more general questions on which religious bodies generally expressed themselves. Eighteen ministers were "dropped from the Roll from 1901 to 1907." "Many of these went to the denominations." The effect of so many defections had a perceptible influence on the work.

14th West Virginia Eldership, South.—The West Virginia Eldership always emphasized the preaching during its sessions. And quite frequently conversions were reported. The younger men found this more natural, being less interested in, because less acquainted with, the business which required attention. They find themselves most kindled, quickened and stirred by the humanity which environs them. The reports call attention to the spiritual, as in 1907, when an item is conspicuous that "the preaching was spiritual. Christians praised God, and sinners asked for the prayers of the church." The session was held at the Pleasant View Bethel, Putnam county, where on Wednesday evening, September 18, 1907, the members heard the Opening Sermon, preached by B. F. Cash. Ten ministers were in attendance, and one "local preacher," eight being absent; also four delegates. During the year the Standing Committee had licensed two, but at this session the power to grant licenses was taken from said Committee. The officers of the session were: President, B. F. Cash; Clerk, H. W. Marty; Financial Clerk, W. H. Browder; Treasurer, R. L. Workman. A Board of Missions was created, and measures were considered to start a church building Fund, as there were only two bethels in the territory of the Eldership. There were eight fields of labor, all supplied with pastors. Twenty-one preaching points are named on the different charges. The membership was 262; the number of sermons preached, 548; aggregate salaries, $344.34; conversions, 74; baptized, 68; fellowshipped, 92; Sabbath-schools, 13. The Eldership developed more interest in Sabbath-school work and in the preaching of the common faith.

15th West Virginia Eldership, South.—There was inconstancy in a variety of items in the reported proceedings of the West Virginia Eldership, South. Was it inherent in the character of the people of a section long slave-holding territory, or was it in the Eldership itself? It is seen in the records of 1908. The body convened at New Richmond, Putnam county, Thursday, 8.30 a. m., September 10, 1908, having listened the previous evening to the Opening Sermon, preached by R. F. Bays. Interest in the work of the Eldership is indicated by the attendance of twelve of the fourteen ministers, and five delegates. But the names of four were dropped, and one had died—A. Lambert. He was ordained at the Eldership in 1907, and thus early went to that land where "all that we have willed, or hoped, or dreamed of good shall exist." The number of conversions the preceding year was 127; baptized, 50; sermons preached, 761; ordinance meetings, 7; total salaries, $208.23; Building Fund, $17.53; missionary money collected, $38.21. The officers of the Eldership were: President, R. F. Bays; Clerk, H. W. Marty; Financial Clerk, W. H. Browder; Treasurer, R. L. Workman. While the ministers manifested an interest in the publications of the General Eldership, few besides them patronized them. Resolutions commending Findlay College were adopted, and all the interests of the general body were approved.

16th West Virginia Eldership, South.—The official announcement of the meeting of the Eldership in 1909 was that it "will convene in the bethel at Philo (Philoah), Putnam county, on Thursday before the fourth Sunday in August, 1909. This was August 22nd. But the Clerk of the Eldership gives the date as August 8, 1909. There were present eleven ministers and seven delegates. Three ministers were absent, one was dropped from the Roll and one had died, the President of the Eldership in 1908, R. F. Bays. He was ordained in 1904. The ministerial life-battle with him was short; but there was a victory-note above its clamor, and to him that overcometh there is "the morning star." L. A. Landers was chosen President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; W. H. Browder, Financial Clerk; R. L. Workman, Treasurer. No layman was elected an officer, nor a member of the Standing Committee or Board of Missions. The number of conversions during the year was 128; fellowshipped, 108; baptized, 48; sermons preached, 726; total salaries, $356.20; membership, 368; receipts for Building Fund, $27.75; Missionary Fund, $38.56. The territory was divided into eight circuits, two of which were left to be supplied by the Board of Missions. At the Ministerial Association among the questions discussed were "The duties and Responsibilities of a Pastor," "Necessity of the Spirit-filled Life," "Does our Financial System in regard to Eldership and Missionary Funds correspond to the Teachings of the Bible?"

17th West Virginia Eldership, South.—Conditions in the West Virginia Eldership, South, seemed so improved that at the close of the session of 1910 the ministers were "encouraged to do more the coming year," and parted in confident hope of success. The session was held at Bays' Chapel, Kanawha county, and began Thursday morning, September 15, 1910, the Opening Sermon having been preached the previous evening by H. W. Marty. Nine ministers were present, and four absent; also four delegates. While the total salaries had fallen to $320.48, and the reported membership to 169, 31 were received into fellowship; there were now five Bethels and a quarter interest in a sixth, valued at $3,150.00. Sunday-schools were held at ten points. The organization was effected by the election for President of B. F. Cash; Clerk, H. W. Marty; Financial Clerk, W. H. Browder; Treasurer, L. A. Landers. There was positive action taken on education, not only by recommending Findlay College and Fort Scott Collegiate Institute; but by a declaration "that in this progressive age we see the need of an educated ministry, and seeing our deficiency as an Eldership, we would urge the brethren to make every possible effort to better qualify themselves for their work." The observance of Advocate Day was strongly recommended. There were seven fields of labor, on which seventeen preaching points were named by the Stationing Committee.

18th West Virginia Eldership, South.—Memories of the first West Virginia Eldership, South, were cherished, as the body met at the place for holding the session in 1911. They were not like Themistocles, who when Simonides offered to teach him the art of memory, replied, "Ah! rather teach me the art of forgetting, for I often remember what I would not, and can not forget what I would." The session was held with the church at Grandview, Putnam county, one of the first churches of God organized within the bounds of the West Virginia Eldership, South, and the first in the great Kanawha Valley. It was organized by W. J. Davis in February, 1877. Here also, in October, 1894, the West Virginia Eldership, South, was constituted. Grandview is in Putnam county. The date of this Eldership was August 31, 1911. The previous evening the rain prevented the services, at which time B. F. Cash was to preach the Opening Sermon. Eleven teaching elders were present, and six delegates; six ministers absent. L. A. Landers was elected President; H. W. Marty, Clerk; R. L. Workman, Financial Clerk; L. A. Landers, Treasurer. Clear and strong resolutions were adopted, commending the Church literature and the institutions of learning. When the Stationing Committee made its Report, it made an assessment on each point named on the six fields of labor, from $50.00 up to $180.00, and aggregating $615.00, presumably the salaries of the pastors; but if so, not much over one-half of that amount had been paid the year then closing. There were now eleven Sabbath-schools. The ministers had preached 644 sermons during the year; there were 131 conversions, 40 baptized and 75 fellowshipped; total membership, 211. Apparently these self-denying ministers had the task of Sisyphus, to roll to the top of a steep hill a huge stone that always rolled down again. Or else the statistics are incorrect.

19th West Virginia Eldership, South.—At least on temperance as a civic issue the West Virginia Eldership, South, was ready to take definitive action. The amendment of the State Constitution to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicants was to be voted on in the Fall. It created quite a degree of interest in the churches and among the ministers, and the discussion at the Eldership consumed much time. The Eldership met in one of the most southern counties in which its ministers were laboring, some 50 miles from the boundary line between Virginia and West Virginia, at a point called Powellton, Fayette county, on August 22, 1912. The evening before H. W. Marty preached the Opening Sermon.

There were present eight ministers and five delegates. Three ministers were absent, and five "were absent and dropped." Balloting resulted in the choice for President of R. L. Workman; Clerk, H. W. Marty; Financial Clerk, G. A. Hartwell; Treasurer, G. W. Good. The members of the Standing Committee were W. H. Browder, H. W. Marty and J. W. Martin. The number of charges to which pastors were assigned was seven, with nineteen preaching points. The number of protracted meetings held was 15; conversions, 321; fellowshipped, 142; baptized, 104; ordinance meetings, 11; Sabbath-schools, 13; total membership, 344; sermons preached, 676; aggregate salaries, $231.80; missionary money collected, $30.20; Church Extension funds, $3.80. The ministers thus laboring in the midst of untoward conditions must have lives of glad freedom which have no fears to taunt and no defeat to dread. They trust him who is their Ruler and Guide, doing their duty with hopeful assurance that joy, and not sorrow, is the final plan of the Almighty.

XXII. THE ARKANSAS ELDERSHIP (COLORED).

1st Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—There existed one exclusive reason for the organization into a distinct Eldership of the churches and ministers of the negro race in the State of Arkansas. They were organized into churches and converted under the labors, and licensed by ministers of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, and from the beginning had been a part of said Eldership. But this physical contiguity was not union. They could not amalgamate, merge or coalesce. The inherited, ineradicable antipathy of the two races, intensified by social conditions, made a division inevitable. It had virtually existed before, and was in part recognized by the appointment of a Standing Committee from year to year to look after the interests of the colored churches and ministers. But the division was actualized in 1894, when ten ministers assembled at Zeaney Chapel, McClone Bottom, Logan county, October 17, 1894, and organized an Eldership. These men were A. C. Crowley, Matt. Bonds, M. Perkins, R. T. Ellingberg, W. Washington, S. A. Wilkins, Webster Symbo, J. Johnson, William Smith and Washington Treavor. They elected A. C. Crowley, Speaker, and M. Perkins, Clerk. The Introductory Sermon was preached by A. C. Crowley in the evening of the first day's sittings, under appointment by the Committee on Public Worship, one of the nine committees named by him as Speaker. There were seven fields of labor, to which eight of the preachers were assigned, and "Rev. A. C. Crowley, S. D. D.," was designated as "Speaker and General Missionary and Manager of the colored part of the Church of God." The Committee on Church Literature declared "that the Bible be, and is, the literature of the Church of God." The Committee on Education affirmed "that education, religion and honesty be, and are, the motto of this fraternity forever, and we request all our people in the Church of God to educate their children according to our motto." In March, 1896, Crowley asked "the consent of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership to write a memorial, or application, to the General Eldership for a Charter for our Eldership." But the Texas and Arkansas Eldership suspended Crowley, and declared he "was not in good and regular standing." The Eldership organized by him was repudiated, and at the session of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership in 1896, application was made "to send a committee to organize the colored ministers and churches into an Eldership." This petition was granted, and J. M. Heward and J. J. Stewart were named as the committee. This action Crowley resented publicly; but as he had been expelled, the churches and ministers nearly all deserted him, and refused to recognize his authority. The General Eldership in 1896 authorized the organization of "The Arkansas Eldership of the Churches of God (Colored)." Crowley, however, was persistent, and being a man of some culture and strong personality, kept a few of his followers together for several years. He held his Eldership at Mt. Nebo, in 1895, and Zeaney Chapel in October, 1896.

Not recognizing Crowley's schismatic course, the colored ministers, deacons and delegates who were loyal to the legally constituted authorities met at Zeaney's Chapel, Logan county, Ark., November 11, 1896, to organize an Eldership under the authority of the General Eldership. Those present were: Ministers—Matt. Bonds, Webster Symbo, Thomas Lewis, R. T. Ellingberg and E. D. DeGraftenreed. Delegates—J. D. DeGraftenreed, Walker Stokes, L. Batson and E. W. Webb.

Deacons—Jeff. D. DeGraftenreed and R. W. Smyers. Organization was effected by the election of Matt. Bonds, Speaker, and Thomas Lewis, Assistant; R. T. Ellingberg, Clerk, and L. Batson, Assistant, and L. Batson, Treasurer. This organization has been considered the first Eldership, and the official enumeration begins here. It was organized by the committee of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, under the Charter granted by the General Eldership. The session was held in a log cabin, 16x16 feet. The Constitution and Rules of Order of the East Pennsylvania Eldership were adopted. In addition to the action of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership in disfellowshipping Crowley, this Eldership also "withdrew fellowship" from him. The state of religion among the churches represented was "prosperous, and the lookout good in every respect." And the committee closed its report with this ejaculation: "Hallelujah is in every heart since we have been set free from imposterism!" The body declared: "We are now set apart by the order of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership in a lawful way, and in a lawful assembly, by the committee appointed by the Eldership." Matt. Bonds was "recommended to the General Board for our missionary." The use of Church of God literature was insisted upon.

2nd Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The legal and orderly organization of the new Eldership did not at once put an end to contention and strife. The colored race, however, has always yielded readily to higher authority. But in this case authority above both Elderships in Arkansas was necessary to bring order out of confusion. To this end the Executive Board of the General Eldership decided to send its President, the cautious and conciliatory R. L. Byrnes, on an official visit to Arkansas. He carried with him the official Charter of the Colored Eldership, under date of June 18, 1897. After "visiting the white brethren of the Texas and Arkansas Eldership, in order to decide a question, he also had the colored brethren meet with them." At the close of this conference Byrnes decided that "the Eldership of which Matt. Bonds is the Speaker, is the only legally constituted and recognized Eldership (colored) in the State." This put an end to the machinations of Crowley, and brought peace and harmony where there was discord and dissension. Under these favorable auspices the Eldership convened at Mt. Nebo, Ark., November 4, 1897, when Matt. Bonds delivered the Opening Sermon. An organization was effected by the choice of R. T. Ellingberg, Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; M. Perkins, Financial Clerk, and E. D. DeGraftenreed, Treasurer. There were eleven teaching elders in the body, two having been added at this session. Each minister was required to pay fifty cents into the Mission Fund. Money was needed to begin work in Oklahoma, which the Eldership resolved to do after carefully considering the subject. And each preacher was required "to go on his field as a missionary and work in the cause of the Master like soldiers of the cross."

3rd Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The predominance of the spiritual element in the Arkansas Eldership (colored) is seen in the order for religious services and a sermon at 11 o'clock each day, and in the evening. With a few alterations the Eldership acted under the Constitution and Rules of Order of the West Pennsylvania Eldership. The session was held at Zeane's Chapel, beginning November 10, 1898. The Opening Sermon was delivered by the Speaker of the former Eldership, R. T. Ellingberg. He was re-elected Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk, and M. Perkins, Treasurer. At 11 o'clock the Eldership adjourned to listen to a sermon on Rev. xii. 17, by J. D. DeGraftenreed. The old Methodist style prevailed, and at least two spoke at these and the evening services. Religious fervor was often developed to a high degree and unconverted persons were saved. There were five fields of labor, all in Arkansas, and to each a pastor was assigned. Matt. Bonds was continued as General Missionary. "A strange resolution was discussed and adopted," is the Clerk's way of introducing the following: "No minister of this Eldership shall be allowed to hold a License, or Certificate of Ordination who drinks or uses intoxicating drinks." The number of ministers was eight.

4th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—This Eldership, while its "Journal is faithfully made out in our ledger," never trespassed much on the space allowed in The Advocate for official matter. Besides, its business was limited, and lengthy resolutions rare. In 1899 only routine business was transacted. The session was held with the Mt. Nebo church, Greenwood P. O., Sebastian county, Ark., and began October 25th. The Opening Sermon was preached by R. T. Ellingberg. Balloting for officers resulted in the election of Matt. Bonds, Speaker; R. T. Ellingberg, Clerk; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Treasurer and Financial Clerk. During the year, on April 5, 1899, S. A. Wilkins was suddenly discharged from the ranks of the church militant, to join the church triumphant. "He was an excellent preacher." The name, style and title of the Eldership had been changed to "The Arkansas Eldership of the Churches of God." The Life Certificates, according to action of the General Eldership, were also adopted. The Eldership was desirous to have a delegate at the General Eldership in 1899, and J. D. DeGraftenreed was elected at a "called session." Limited finances made it impossible for him to be present. In no Eldership did the pastors labor with such insufficient support.

5th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The churches and ministers in the Arkansas Eldership (Colored) labored under serious impediments. They were few in number, poor and scattered, and worshiped in school-houses belonging to the white people, in groves and arbors, and in private houses. Mrs. Eliza B. Dupree, Topeka, Kansas, attended the Eldership in 1900, and was appointed missionary, at an "allowance of $75.00 a year for her services." The session was held at Zeaney's Chapel, 5 miles north of Paris, Logan county, Arkansas, and began November 13th. The following officers were elected: E. D. DeGraftenreed, Speaker; R. T. Ellingsberg, Clerk; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Journalizing Clerk; Alexander Calwell, Treasurer. The Eldership had been taught that the Communion should be observed before the washing of the saints' feet. Otherwise it was claimed it was "altogether one in doctrine with the General Eldership." It desired said body "to grant us leave to wash feet after Supper." But it was submitted to the higher body, adding: "If not, we have to be subject to the body." The work was being extended into the Indian Territory. Mrs. Dupree in her capacity as missionary preached at Sparrow, Pannamo and other points. She "was fellowshiped into the Arkansas Eldership (Colored), and her Certificate of Ordination granted her by the Kansas Eldership (White) was endorsed." "A strong resolution was adopted in regard to the spread of the gospel and the organizing of churches of God." Nine ministers were enrolled at this Eldership.

6th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—By 1901 the work in the Indian Territory had so far been successful that a circuit could be organized. The Eldership, hence, desired that its boundaries should be extended so as to embrace its work in the Territory. Two churches had been organized and "were received and entered on the Roll." The Eldership convened in the A. M. E. stone building, Mt. Nebo, Sebastian county, Ark., November 14, 1901. The officers elected were: Matt. Bonds, Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; R. T. Ellingsberg, Financial Clerk; M. Perkins, Treasurer. The preaching of the Opening Sermon, by E. D. DeGraftenreed, on account "of a hindering cause the previous evening," followed the organization. Text: Matt. v. 14. While the churches were willing to have a woman hold revival services, the church at Zeaney's Chapel "rejected Mrs. Dupree as pastor on the ground of being a woman." And the Standing Committee took action that "she shall not be pastor of any of the churches on the same ground." The total amount of funds received by the Eldership amounted to $33.05. Ten ministers were enrolled, two of them women—Mrs. Dupree, of Topeka, Kans., and Mary Raban, of Kansas City, Mo. Five others had their post-office addresses in the Indian Territory, and three in Arkansas. J. D. DeGraftenreed was appointed missionary; Matt. Bonds was named to the General Board of Missions for appointment as missionary, and three others were assigned to fields of labor. The ministers were forbidden "to hold office in the church until they have paid, or secured, their Eldership dues."

7th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The work in the Indian Territory was making encouraging progress under the labors of Matt. Bonds, so that the General Eldership was memorialized to extend the boundaries of the Arkansas Eldership so as to include at least a part of the Territory. This was approved by the General Board of Missions. In 1902, at the Eldership which convened with the church at Zeaney's Chapel, Logan county, Ark., November 11th, two ministers were appointed to fields in the Indian Territory, and four in Arkansas. The Opening Sermon was delivered by W. A. Daniels, R. T. Ellingsberg was chosen Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; E. D. DeGraftenreed, Financial Clerk; W. A. Daniels, Treasurer. Ten ministers attended the session. The Eldership made a special effort to secure the money to pay its assessment to the General Eldership. With its limited means the Eldership could do little mission work, but Matt. Bonds was continued as missionary for the whole territory, and recommended for additional support to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. Other ministers in addition to the six assigned to charges were to "receive appointments from the Standing Committee."

8th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The missionary spirit was further stimulated during the year, so that there was renewed enthusiasm when the Eldership convened in 1903. There "was an increase in membership this year of twenty-eight." At the Eldership "visitors from all denominations were present at the session," which was held with the church at Spiro, Indian Territory, beginning on November 4th, and continuing to the 9th. One minister was received from the A. M. E. Church, and one from the Missionary Baptist Church. "The Eldership stirred up the little village." Each church was represented by a delegate. R. T. Ellingberg delivered the Opening Sermon. Nine teaching elders were present. Ellingberg was elected Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; W. A. Daniels, Treasurer. A Woman's Missionary Society was organized, and "arrangements were made to help to support a missionary." The question: "Does the New Testament give a woman the right to preach the gospel?" with other "ministerial subjects," was "discussed and made very clear." Minnie Smyles received license to preach. Four appointments were made, two in Arkansas and two in the Indian Territory, while the "other ministers were left in the hands of the Standing Committee."

9th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The excellent and hopeful mood of the Arkansas Eldership persisted through the year. And while the session of 1904 "was smaller in numbers than ever, its work seemed stronger." The meeting was held with the church at Mt. Nebo, Sebastian county, Ark., and began November 7th. R. T. Ellingberg preached the Opening Sermon, after which the officers were chosen, as follows: R. T. Ellingberg, Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; Alexander Calwell, Treasurer. Some time was spent in discussing these two questions: "Who are proper subjects for baptism?" "What relation does baptism sustain to conversion?" A Missionary Fund was created "to help our missionary in his labors in the mission work." Every minister present also "vowed to pay to the Eldership for mission work from $2.50 up to $10.00." S. P. Peters was the choice of the Eldership for appointment as missionary by the General Board of Missions. Four fields of labor were supplied with pastors; others having "failed to report, were left subject to the action of the Standing Committee."

10th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—Without fixed Rules for its governance, the Eldership in 1905 "adopted those of the East Pennsylvania Eldership for the guide of the session of the Eldership." The meeting was held at Mt. Nebo, Sebastian county, Ark., November 8, 1905. In the morning the Opening Sermon was preached. At the afternoon sitting E. D. DeGraftenreed was chosen Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; Alexander Calwell, Treasurer. It was provided that the Standing Committee, consisting of R. T. Ellingberg, J. D. DeGraftenreed and S. P. Peters, "write up a Constitution and By-Laws, and Rules for the government of the Eldership," and have it printed in pamphlet form. S. P. Peters was recommended to the Board of Missions to be appointed missionary in Arkansas. The ministers numbered nineteen, three of which "failed to send in any report." As State missionary, S. P. Peters received "a small appropriation." He preached an Ordination Sermon on Sunday evening. A Ministerial Association was provided for, and an organization effected, a meeting to be called by the Chairman in August, 1906. The "Eldership had a lovely time, and did its business very liberately."

11th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The ministers being required to "take and pay for The Advocate, for the purpose of keeping in touch with the religious work throughout the bounds of the different Elderships and the General Eldership," seemed to produce one immediate effect: This session was enlivened with discussions on a greater variety of subjects than usual. The session was held at Spiro, Indian Territory, beginning November 7, 1906. T. J. Lewis was elected Speaker; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; E. D. DeGraftenreed, Treasurer. Not so precipitate in granting licenses, after examining three applicants it granted license to one and referred the others to the Standing Committee for further examination. One was a woman. Most of its indebtedness to the General Eldership was paid, and it made "an effort to settle in full at an early date." Also to "raise $50.00 by March 1, 1907, to meet all current and general expenses." The divorce question and the evils of divorces were discussed. Also the temperance question. It resolved "to fast and pray on certain occasions, as Jesus taught his disciples." The subject of rebaptism came up in this form: "Is it scriptural to rebaptize any one coming from any sectarian Church and uniting with the Church of God if he or she had been baptized, or immersed?" There was some lack of stability among ministers, as two of them serving charges "left the bounds of the Eldership without notification." And two licensed women followed their example.

12th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—The finances of the Eldership improved following actions taken in 1906. With the collections sent in, with those lifted at the session, they "gathered enough to settle all current and general expenses." In answer to a letter from M. K. Smith, Treasurer of the General Eldership, "an order was drawn on the Eldership Treasurer to settle all dues to the Mission Board." These conditions gave a hopeful spirit to the Eldership which convened with the church at Zeaney's Chapel, Logan county, Ark., on Wednesday, October 23, 1907, and on said evening R. T. Ellingberg preached the Opening Sermon. Subject: "Teach us to pray." S. P. Peters was elected Speaker on Thursday morning; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; T. J. Lewis, Treasurer. Eight preachers were absent, "but sent in their reports, with their prayers and alms." If there were discussions, "peace and harmony prevailed all through the sessions." "How to study the Bible," was under discussion. Also, "How to be a successful pastor." Two of the five charges to which the Eldership assigned preachers were in Oklahoma (Indian Territory); but some fields were left in the hands of the Standing Committee. Studies for the first year's course were adopted.

13th Arkansas Eldership (Colored).—There was an interchange of the names Indian Territory and Oklahoma pending the Statehood question before the people and in Congress. The Eldership meeting in 1908 was published to be held at Spiro, Oklahoma, while the Clerk reported that it was held at Spiro, Indian Territory. Spiro was located in the Indian Territory, which became part of the State of Oklahoma. The session began Monday, November 10, 1908. On the preceding Sunday evening the Opening Sermon was preached by S. P. Peters. The Eldership had taken the name of the Arkansas and Indian Territory Eldership, but with the admission of the two Territories into the Union under the name Oklahoma, it petitioned the General Eldership to change its title to the "Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership (Colored)." R. T. Ellingberg was elected President; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk and Treasurer. For legal reasons Certificates of Ordination were required to be recorded. The names of two ministers were dropped, because "they departed from the faith." More attention was given to mission work, and it was decided to appoint S. P. Peters general missionary, "to enter the field January 1, 1909, and to be supported by this Eldership."

14th Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership (Colored).—A small number attended the fourteenth session of the Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership, "owing to the high waters" and other causes. The few present "transacted all the business in the usual way," leaving certain matters in the hands of the Standing Committee. The meeting was held with the church at Spiro, Okla., beginning with the Opening Sermon on the evening of November 16, 1909, by R. T. Ellingberg. An organization was effected by electing S. P. Peters, President; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; R. T. Ellingberg, Treasurer. "A grand time was witnessed," as the members enjoyed the preaching and singing and praying as much as, or more than, the business transactions. Mission work was uppermost, and T. J. Lewis, while appointed to serve Spiro, was also elected missionary, and "recommended to the General Board of Missions for appointment as missionary." "Two other mission points were to be supplied with preachers by the Standing Committee." Absent members, or those who failed to report, were instructed to report to the Standing Committee, whose first meeting was to be held at Spiro, Okla., "on Saturday before the second Lord's day in January, 1910." Dues for the Eldership were also then to be collected, as a better system of raising funds was being enforced.

15th Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership (Colored).—There was more of a missionary spirit kindled by the active work done on mission fields than by speeches and resolutions. At the session of 1910 the need of "more missionaries all the time to spread the doctrine" was a prominent thought. The Eldership convened with the church at Spiro, Okla., November 16, 1910, when in the evening S. P. Peters preached the Opening Sermon, from John III. 16. Seven ministers were present. A minister of the A. M. E. Church for forty years, Vincent Morgan, was received and granted a Certificate of Ordination. Another one who "had departed from the faith, John Watson, but returned, and also received license. The officers elected were E. D. DeGraftenreed, President; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk;

R. T. Ellingberg, Treasurer. The Eldership "elected Ellingberg missionary for the mission fields, and promised to stand by him and aid him in the work for the Master." Six other ministers were "assigned to do mission work in Oklahoma and Arkansas—S. P. Peters, T. J. Lewis, Alexander Calwell, J. W. Watson, E. D. DeGraftenreed and Vincent Morgan." The Eldership appointed pastors to two fields, leaving the others to be supplied by the Standing Committee. The ministers remained at Spiro over Sabbath, and had preaching three times during the day, and Sabbath-school at 9 a. m.

16th Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership (Colored).—The Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership having finally adopted the Constitution of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, in so far as applicable, now worked under its provisions. It convened with the church at Mt. Nebo, Sebastian county, Ark., on Wednesday, November 15, 1911. On the previous evening E. D. DeGraftenreed preached the Opening Sermon. J. H. Blanchard, "a minister of the Missionary Baptist Church, was granted a Certificate of Ordination," and was appointed to a charge. E. D. DeGraftenreed was elected President; J. D. DeGraftenreed, Clerk; J. A. Narman, Treasurer. The work generally was in good condition. G. W. Harris was appointed "missionary for the Eldership." Two ministers were assigned to circuits, with four preaching points. It was decided that "the other ministers were to visit other places and mission points," as the Eldership "believed the best way to build up and establish the churches of God within its bounds is for each preacher to labor in a new field." On Sabbath evening, after a sermon on the Ordinances, two of them were observed, and thus closed "a delightful session." S. P. Peters had ended his noble warfare since the session of 1910. He had been a devoted, faithful member of the Eldership since 1903, and his brethren eulogized his character as they "bowed in submission to the Lord who doeth all things well."

17th Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership (Colored).—Organized work was now the order. A Woman's Missionary Society was formed in October, 1911, with a view of co-operating with the W. G. M. S. There were two local societies, with 37 members. The declared object was "to stimulate Christian giving, to help missions, and to aid the Eldership in missionary work." A Christian Endeavor organization was also effected on April 18, 1912, with 40 members enrolled. So encouraged was the minister who preached the Opening Sermon, Tuesday evening, November 12, 1912, at Spiro, Okla., that he selected for his text the words: "Praise Ye the Lord." The preacher was E. D. DeGraftenreed. The body was organized by the election of J. D. DeGraftenreed, President; A. C. Hull, Stated Clerk; J. H. Blanchard, Transcribing Clerk; W. H. Allen, Treasurer. J. H. Blanchard, W. M. Bates and R. T. Ellinberg were elected members of the Standing Committee. Twelve ministers were enrolled. "G. W. Harris was endorsed as missionary," and appointments were made to four fields of labor, two in Arkansas and two in Oklahoma. The Eldership advised the ministers and members of the churches "to donate as liberally as possible toward the support of G. W. Harris, missionary." Each minister of the Eldership was instructed "to use every means of grace, and work and pray the coming year, that more souls may be saved, and more churches of God may be established within the bounds of the Eldership." The Temperance question was discussed, and advanced positions were taken against the liquor traffic. If in some degree hope was often disappointed, to each of these God-fearing, faith-inspired ministers, few in number, "failure was a schoolmaster of the soul, teaching

'Fearless and unperplexed
When I wage battle next
What weapons to select, what armor to indue.'"

XXIII. THE COLORADO ELDERSHIP.

Colorado is popularly known as the "Centennial State," from the date of its admission into the Union, 1876. It is a mountainous State, two-thirds of its area being mountain ranges. It has unusual attractions, having a salubrious climate, and its mountain ranges being noted for their wild beauty, and picturesque parks which they enclose, making the State "the wonderland of the American continent." Its mineral wealth is enormous, while its attractions for the agriculturist are inferior. The eastern section belongs to what earlier was known as "the great American Desert." It was, hence, not a State toward which eastern Church of God families would look as desirable for emigration. Among the first families of the Church to emigrate thither were health-seekers, who learned of the country as possessing a tonic, invigorating atmosphere, where they could recuperate their wasted energies, if not improve their conditions financially and religiously. One minister from the Maine Eldership emigrated thither; one from Ohio, two from Iowa, and several from eastern Kansas. Besides, in 1896 the Ohio Eldership licensed W. B. Bowen, of Colorado. These ministers at once began to preach the doctrines of the Church. It was a "field ripe unto the harvest," and the seed sown brought forth fruit. Several churches were organized, the one at Lamar claiming to be the first. With several churches and half a dozen ministers in the State; with prospects of success very encouraging, and with a vast stretch of unoccupied and largely uninhabited territory between the Colorado brethren and the churches in Kansas, the desire was natural, as expressed by one of the ministers, that "we want an Eldership in Colorado." Accordingly by concerted action "a number of representative members of the Church of God met in session for the purpose of organizing an Eldership of the churches of God in the State of Colorado, to be known as the Eldership of the churches of God in the State of Colorado." With no respect for historical data, the place of this meeting is not given. The date is Feb. 14, 1898. The ministers in attendance were Gardner Swan, who "opened the session by reading a portion of Scripture, followed by prayer; J. R. Hodges, T. J. Loose, J. N. Smith, John Smith, Alonzo Beavers, P. L. French and W. B. Bowen. Besides these I. H. Greene was laboring in the State, and was represented by letter, and W. D. Greene received license. J. R. Hodges was chosen Speaker, and T. J. Loose, Clerk. The Constitution and Rules of Order of the East Pennsylvania Eldership were adopted as the organic law of the new Eldership. Licenses were granted to the ministers present and to I. H. Greene. I. H. Greene and W. D. Greene were appointed to the "North Colorado work," and Gardner Swan to the "Morgan county work." J. N. Smith was made General Evangelist, "to open up new points in the State of Colorado." A Standing Committee was elected consisting of J. N. Smith, Gardner Swan and I. H. Greene. A called session was agreed upon, to be held in June, 1898. The approval of the work of this meeting by the General Eldership was requested. Instead, however, the Kansas Eldership annexed Colorado, and most of the ministers of the Colorado Eldership joined the Kansas Eldership, thus ending what appeared a promising enterprise.

DIVISION III.

HISTORY OF THE GENERAL ELDERSHIP.

It was an immense step from the form of Church government by presbyteries or elderships as taught by Winebrenner in 1829, in his "Brief Scriptural View of the Church of God," and the more elaborate form as found in the Annual Elderships and the General Eldership. In 1829 Winebrenner acknowledged no governing power of the church above the "presbytery, or eldership, of a local church." For he states that "a presbytery, or eldership, simply signifies the elders, or presbyters, of an individual church." It is, this presbytery, through the local church, as he then taught, which governs and ordains ministers, and which is subject to no other authority, and to no rules or regulations not found in the Scriptures. By what process of reasoning he came to approve and advocate the larger ruling bodies, or judicatories, with all their varied powers, as seen in the Annual Elderships, and now to be vested in a General Eldership, will never be known. He was somewhat secretive, believing perhaps with Eggleston, that "secretive men are good diplomatists." While he doubtless developed the thought and plan of a General Eldership in his mind, there is nothing in evidence that the least degree of publicity was given to it before Winebrenner proposed it at the session of the Ohio Eldership, on Thursday afternoon, October 17, 1844, when quietly a resolution was adopted, declaring "that this Eldership will agree to co-operate with the East and West Pennsylvania Elderships to create a General Eldership for the transaction of all business of a general nature." The East Pennsylvania Eldership was given the right "to name the time and place of holding said General Eldership." Six delegates were at once elected. From the Ohio Eldership Winebrenner went to the West Pennsylvania Eldership, at Bethany, Westmoreland county. He was made a member of the body. During the first sitting of the Eldership he was, on motion, granted "leave to bring before this body certain resolutions passed by the Ohio Eldership." A resolution was thereupon passed, declaring "that this Eldership agree to co-operate with the Ohio and East Pennsylvania Elderships in calling and holding a General Eldership, to transact business of a general nature." Upon Winebrenner's motion two teaching and two ruling elders were elected by ballot "to represent this body in the General Eldership." A resolution was also adopted, that the East Pennsylvania Eldership shall appoint the time and place for holding the General Eldership. Winebrenner then returned home to attend his own Eldership, which convened at Linglestown, Dauphin county, November 13th. During the first morning sitting, under "new items of business of a general character," "Winebrenner brought before this Eldership the actions of the Ohio and West Pennsylvania Elderships touching the propriety of holding a General Eldership for the transaction of business of a general character." Three resolutions followed: to agree to hold a General Eldership, to proceed immediately to elect delegates, and naming Pittsburg as the place, and May 25, 1845, as the time, for the convening of the delegates to organize the proposed General Eldership. Remarkably little was published concerning this new movement in advance of the meeting. And after the General Eldership had become a fact, and it had done its work, no report of any character appeared in The Gospel Publisher. The only reference thereto was an announcement on June 18th "that we intend as soon as practicable to publish the Journal of the proceedings of the General Eldership in pamphlet form," and on June 25th, that "the Journal is now ready for delivery." Then in the issue of July 2, 1845, when the Editor discussed the "Relief Project," "to relieve the Printing Establishment from its present embarrassed condition," when he refers to "the Journal of the General Eldership." On August 13th, a disappointed patron of the paper published "severe charges" against the Editor of the General Eldership on account of the non-publication of the Journal in The Gospel Publisher. He states that since the session of the General Eldership, no doubt a majority of the brethren have been waiting with anxiety and solicitude to see or hear what it has done. He insists that as "it is deeply interesting to every member of the Church, it should be placed within the reach of all." The printing of the Journal in pamphlet form he considered "an imposition attempted to be practised on the Church." He considered this course a "violation of an implied contract with the patrons of the paper."

The delegates to organize the first General Eldership "met at Pittsburg, Pa., on Monday, May 26, 1845." Whether there was an Opening Sermon is not recorded. Nor is the place of meeting anywhere more definitely indicated. Nowhere is this item on record, interesting as it evidently is, and the more so as there was no house of worship in Pittsburg the property of the church. But it was known that Hickernell had been preaching in a fire engine house, and at the home of "Father George W. Gray." But in 1890 this lost item concerning the General Eldership of 1845 was supplied in the obituary of "Father Gray." A Hall had been engaged in which to hold the session of the Eldership. But as the Hall had been previously engaged for part of that week by another party, the General Eldership adjourned to the private house of "Father Gray," and the sittings were then "held under their roof."

The delegates who attended the first General Eldership were as follows:

East Pennsylvania Eldership—J. Winebrenner, David Kyle, E. H. Thomas and George McCartney, teaching elders. John S. Gable and Wm. Hinney, ruling elders.

West Pennsylvania Eldership—Joseph A. Dobson and John Hickernell, teaching elders. John Farmer and Abraham Sherrick, ruling elders.

Ohio Eldership—Thomas Hickernell and Archibald Megrew, teaching elders. Total present: Eight teaching elders and four ruling elders, three of which were substitutes. There were eight absentees. These members of the first General Eldership were all originally East Pennsylvania men. Other ministers of the Church of God who were present at the first General Eldership, but not delegates, were Jacob Myers, Daniel Wertz and Emanuel Logue. When the Eldership was constituted by John Hickernell and E. H. Thomas, it was organized by the election of "Bishop John Winebrenner, Speaker; Bishop George McCartney, First Clerk, and Bishop Edward West, Second Clerk." But West, by special request, was excused from serving, and "Elder Thomas Hickernell being the next highest, was appointed in his stead." After appointing a Committee on Arrangements and a Committee on Order of Business, the Eldership adjourned "to meet at 8 o'clock to-morrow morning." On the Committee on Order of Business were Winebrenner, Megrew and Dobson. "As the best method of bringing forward and disposing of the business of this meeting," said Committee reported in favor of appointing nine committees: On Constitution, Journals, Overtures, Publications, Resolutions, State of Religion, Education, Boundaries and Finance. After the appointment of these nine committees the Eldership adjourned until afternoon. When the Eldership re-convened the Committee on Constitution reported the draft of a Constitution, which was at once read and its consideration Article by Article begun. Articles I. to V. inclusive were amended and adopted, when the Eldership adjourned until Wednesday morning. At this session two resolutions on Slavery and one on the deeding of meeting-houses were read and referred to the Committee on Resolutions. The remainder of the sitting and the afternoon sitting were devoted to the consideration and amendment of the Constitution, and also the sitting of Thursday morning. When this work was finished near noon on Thursday, the Eldership proceeded to "organize according to the Constitution," by electing John Winebrenner, Speaker; John S. Gable, Treasurer; George McCartney, Journalizing Clerk, and Edward West, Transcribing Clerk. However West was again excused, and E. H. Thomas, "the next highest on the list of suffrages was appointed in his place." The Constitution was formally signed by all the members of the Eldership enrolled. It consists of thirty Articles, the provisions of which are as follows:

Art. I. States that the General Eldership shall consist of delegates from all the Annual Elderships which are or may be formed within the geographical territory of North America; the ratio to be one teaching elder for every ten, together with an equal number of ruling elders. This shall be the ratio for the first ten years, after which it may be changed.

Art. II. This Article provides for triennial meetings during the first twenty years, and every five years thereafter.

Art. III. Provides for religious worship at the opening of each session, and fixes a quorum at two-thirds of the members in attendance.

Art. IV. The Speaker of the preceding Eldership shall open the first sitting; in his absence the oldest minister present. Then two persons, appointed by acclamation, shall constitute the Eldership, after which there shall be elected a Speaker, a Treasurer, and two Clerks, viz.: a Journalizing and a Transcribing Clerk. They are to hold their offices until the next meeting of the Eldership.

Art. V. Prescribes the duties of the Speaker.

Art. VI. Fixes the duties of the Treasurer.

Art. VII. Defines the duties of the Journalizing Clerk.

Art. VIII. States what the Transcribing Clerk is to do.

Art. IX. Gives to the General Eldership the ownership and control of all the public, joint and common property of the body.

Art. X. Places all publications for general use under the direction of the General Eldership.

Art. XI. Vests in the General Eldership the exclusive right and duty to elect the editors of all newspapers and periodicals; also to elect a Publishing Committee, a Board of Directors of the Printing Establishment and Book Concern, and all other agents necessary to carry out the true principles of co-operation.

Art. XII. Provides for a pro rata division of all public property among all the Annual Elderships.

Art. XIII. All orders from Annual Elderships for their share of the public funds must be signed by a majority of their respective Standing Committees.

Art. XIV. Gives to the General Eldership the exclusive right of fixing the boundary lines of all Annual Elderships.

Art. XV. Prescribes the way in which difficulties arising between the members of two or more Annual Elderships shall be adjusted.

Art. XVI. Relates to controversies and disputes between members of the several Annual Elderships, and prescribes the method of settlement.

XVII. Makes it obligatory on every person desiring to be an accredited minister in the Church of God to have a regular license, which is to be annually renewed by the Eldership of which he is a member.

Art. XVIII. Denies the right of any Eldership to receive an expelled minister of another Eldership.

Art. XIX. Provides for transfer.

Art. XX. Fixes five years as the period during which a minister can not be a delegate to the General Eldership, except in new Elderships, or where it is unavoidable.

Art. XXI. Gives the General Eldership power to employ missionaries or agents whether they are members of an Annual Eldership or not.

Art. XXII. Requires all persons in the employ of the General Eldership to have credentials of their appointment, and holds them accountable to the officers of the General Eldership, or if members of Annual Elderships, for their moral and religious characters they are amenable to their Elderships.

Art. XXIII. to Art. XXIX. are Parliamentary Rules.

Art. XXX. Provides for amendments to the Constitution. The Committee which drafted this Constitution was composed of Winebrenner, Thomas, Hickernell and Dobson, and the presumption is reasonable that it was the work of Winebrenner. It does not appear to what extent, or in what particulars, the first draft as reported by the Committee was amended. It was the first Constitution adopted, as neither of the three Annual Elderships had as yet an organic law.

When the matter of electing an Editor for The Gospel Publisher came up, it was referred to a Committee to receive proposals. James Mackey and George McCartney submitted proposals. The first ballot resulted in a tie. The matter was then deferred until Friday morning, when McCartney was duly elected. An action was taken to secure voluntary contributions "to liquidate the claims against the Printing Establishment." Provision was made to issue "The Gospel Publisher semi-monthly, at $1.00 per volume in advance." The "Hymn Book new use" was "for the present recommended to the churches." Two thousand copies of the Journal were ordered printed in pamphlet form. A "General Book Concern" was favorably recommended. A series of resolutions reported by the Committee on Resolutions was adopted, to wit: Urging "the Bible cause as being emphatically the cause of God;" "heartily and zealously recommending the avoidance of the desecration, by the brethren of the Church of God, of the Sabbath, by traveling, feasting, sleeping, working, worldly conversation, etc.;" declaring that "it is the unequivocal and decided opinion of this General Eldership of the Church of God, that the system of involuntary Slavery . . . . is a flagrant violation of the natural and unalienable and most precious rights of man, and utterly inconsistent with the spirit, laws and profession of the Christian religion;" "cautioning our brethren of the Church of God against supporting and countenancing, either directly or indirectly, the said iniquitous institution of involuntary slavery; and should any of our ministers or members ever become guilty of this great and crying sin, we do most earnestly and religiously recommend and advise that all such be excommunicated or cast out of the Church, and denied the right of Christian fellowship amongst us;" expressing its judgment, that "men in every condition in life.....should come forward and sign the pledge of total abstinence, and strive to advance the noble cause of temperance;" urging united effort in the cause of temperance irrespective of creed; expressing sorrow that "there are yet ministers of the gospel who.....refuse to give their views and influence in favor of a cause like that of temperance, which is so closely allied to that of Christianity;" declaring it "inconsistent for professors of Christianity in any way to countenance the traffic in intoxicating drink, and especially to assist the rum-seller to procure a license by signing his petition;" "that we consider the traffic in intoxicating liquor as a drink always sinful and demoralizing in its results, and that no man is entitled to membership in the Church of God who is engaged in it." Also recommending the "deeding of meeting-houses, parsonages, etc., to the elders of the respective churches, to be held by them in trust for the church," and with a provisionary clause under which such property would revert "to the Annual Elderships in the event of the local church becoming extinct." G. U. Harn was "sent to labor in Pittsburg," with an appropriation of $50.00 "out of the funds of the General Eldership." One General Agent was elected for West Pennsylvania Eldership and one for Ohio Eldership "to collect money for the Relief Fund." The Speaker, Treasurer and Clerks were "constituted a Publishing Committee, and are authorized to do all they can towards commencing a Book Concern." The Board of the Printing Establishment was given authority "to locate the Establishment, to appoint the printer or printers, and to have discretionary power and authority to fill any vacancies which may occur, or to change the Editor if any cause should arise." In the Report of the Committee on the State of Religion statistics are given as follows: East Pennsylvania Eldership, 52 ordained ministers; West Pennsylvania Eldership, 15 ordained ministers; Ohio Eldership, 26 preachers. Total, 93 ordained ministers. The number of churches and preaching places about 500, and the whole number of members about 10,000.

A recommendation was adopted appointing "the first Lord's day in August next as a day of solemn fasting and prayer for an increase of able ministers of the New Testament; for the revival of pure religion, and for the general peace and prosperity of the Church."

On the subject of Education its vital importance was affirmed "on a civil and religious point of view," with a recommendation that the families of the Church should "have their children educated to the utmost extent of their ability."

The Eldership adopted a resolution "forming itself into a Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society." A regular Constitution was adopted.

Boundaries were outlined as follows: East Pennsylvania to include the whole of the State of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia east of the Allegheny mountains. West Pennsylvania, that part of Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia west of the Allegheny mountains, with that part of the State of Ohio east of a direct line from Lake Erie to the Ohio river along the line between Columbiana and Stark counties. Ohio, the States of Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, except that part of Ohio contained within the boundaries of the West Pennsylvania Eldership.

The Eldership "adjourned to meet in Pittsburg on the last Lord's day in May, in the year 1848."

It is worthy of observation in connection with the actions of the General Eldership on Slavery and Temperance, that the great anti-slavery reform which started upon "a bolder and wider career soon after 1830," had by 1843 "powerfully stirred the nation, producing strife, bitterness, divisions and mobs." After 1843 the question of slavery entered largely into political action in primary assemblies, in elections and in halls of legislation, while the Churches were at no time exempt from this seriously-disturbing influence. John Tyler's accession to the Presidency, whose term expired in 1845, intensified this spirit by the incipient movements of his administration for the acquisition of Texas and other slave territory in the south-west. While the Committee on the State of Religion reported only a total of 93 ministers of the Church, yet up to the meeting of the General Eldership in 1845 the total number licensed by the three Elderships aggregated 186.

2nd General Eldership.—Apparently a grave crisis confronted the General Eldership when it convened in the Bethel at Martinsburg, Blair county, Pa., on Monday, May 29, 1848. The Eldership in 1845 had adjourned to meet at Pittsburg. The Constitution had been opposed and its provisions disregarded to some extent. T. Hickernell, Indiana Eldership, "appointed to attend the next General Eldership," states that "we could get no delegates appointed to go to the General Eldership, although it was hard plead for. The idea is still held that the Constitution of the General Eldership looks too much like a Discipline; that a link is now formed, and after awhile we will have a chain, and that the resolution passed in reference to the licensing system savors the idea that no minister can be considered an accredited minister without a license from the Eldership, no matter how good his standing and character may be." Yet he was in favor of having "the general system of co-operation kept up." A. Hollema, of the Ohio Eldership, declared that "this instrument [the Constitution of the General Eldership] has produced considerable contention and division." His main objection was that "it is a departure, and a very gross departure, from original principles;" denounced it as "a human invention," and that no "man, nor any set of men have the right, ecclesiastically, to legislate a law for the 'better government of Christ's house, and the declarative glory of God,' as the members of the General Eldership professed to do." No reply was made to these attacks on the Constitution between January 15th and April 15th, when J. H. Hurley, pastor of the Dauphin circuit, Pa., undertook the defense of the Constitution, and made a caustic answer to Hollema's article. Winebrenner simply noticed the change of place for the holding of the General Eldership, from Pittsburg to Martinsburg, with an offer to pay the extra fare to Hickernell, the only delegate west of Pittsburg. Hollema replied to Hurley, concluding with the words: "Our Constitution is from the King himself, and on it we intend to stand, the Lord being our helper. But be it understood that we go for co-operation, only let it be based on principles that are more tolerable." Even after the General Eldership in 1848, the Indiana Eldership declared that "we can not believe or receive any law or Constitution framed by any of our brethren as having any legal authority over this Eldership in the transaction of its business."

At the time appointed the General Eldership convened at Martinsburg. At 9 o'clock of the first day Winebrenner "opened the session with worship." J. Ross and J. Keller constituted the Eldership, "whereupon the following brethren were found and reported as being present, viz.:

East Pennsylvania Eldership—J. Winebrenner, E. H. Thomas, Jacob Flake, Jacob Keller and Joseph Ross, teaching elders. Joseph Brenneman and J. W. Mateer, ruling elders. James Mackey, teaching elder, and J. S. Gable, J. Kister, A. Brenneman and D. Markley, ruling elders, were absent. Wm. Mooney and David Kyle were substituted in place of two of the absentees.

West Pennsylvania Eldership—Jacob Myers and J. M. Klein, teaching elders, and John Tinsman, ruling elder, all absent.

Ohio Eldership—No delegates elected.

Indiana Eldership—Thomas Hickernell, teaching elder, absent. But nine delegates out of possibly twenty-one to which the four Elderships were entitled were present. Hickernell in a communication to the General Eldership, said: "The removal of the General Eldership from Pittsburg to Martinsburg, Blair county, accounts for my non-attendance." "An unexpected circumstance has put it out of my power to meet with you as delegate," was J. S. Gable's reason for being absent. But he suggested that "arrangements be made for at least one General Superintendent in each Eldership." Winebrenner editorially made no reference to the conduct of the Elderships not represented at the session. He simply said: "The meeting, though small, was yet pleasant and profitable." But the West Pennsylvania Eldership at its session in October following required its delegates to give reasons for not being present at the General Eldership. The Eldership itself adopted a resolution in which it spoke of the "feelings of regret and disappointment" on the part of the Eldership and church at Martinsburg over "the great delinquency in a considerable part of the delegates chosen to attend this General Eldership;" that "they have left it to a handful of their brethren to bear the burden and responsibility, and expense of the work which it was their bounden duty to assist in," and urging the Annual Elderships to "call on them to give satisfactory reasons for this failure in what was expected from them."

Upon proceeding to organize the Eldership, Jacob Flake was elected Speaker; Joseph Ross, Treasurer; E. H. Thomas, Journalizing Clerk, and Jacob Keffler, Transcribing Clerk. The usual committees, eight in number, were appointed. The Treasurer's receipts amounted to $45.23. Of this sum $21.00 were paid to G. U. Harn on his salary as missionary to Pittsburg, and $24.23 to Winebrenner "on account of balance due him for publishing the Journal of the General Eldership of 1845." This left a "balance due to the said brethren from the Western Elderships of $38.97."

The revision of the Constitution, Article by Article, was taken up. Amendments were offered and rejected, and "the whole was agreed to, with the addition of the following Article: "The General Eldership shall have the privilege to review the Journals of the Annual Elderships, with power to approve or disapprove the doings of the same, and also to give its advice and instruction in all cases and questions which may at any time be submitted to them for their decision." Provision was made for compiling a Hymn-Book containing five hundred or more hymns, the matter being placed in the hands of a committee of six from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, two from the West Pennsylvania Eldership, two from the Ohio Eldership and one from the Indiana Eldership. Winebrenner was requested to be the publisher. The same Committee was also "requested to compile a Hymn-Book for the use of Sabbath-schools." A committee was created and authorized "to examine the Journal and papers of our late brother, Elder Joseph H. Bamberger, and to prepare any parts of the same for publication." The same Committee was "appointed to collect and compile Biographical Sketches of the first one hundred ministers of the Church of God for publication, and that the Publishing Committee be authorized to publish the same."

The Missionary Society organized in 1845 reported that "there had been no organization of the Societies, and no moneys received, except what came from the East Pennsylvania Eldership [$21.00], and consequently no missionaries were employed by them." Winebrenner offered a resolution, following a preamble which declared that "the law of tithes was a standing ordinance in the theocracy of ancient Israel," and that it "is a reasonable, equitable and righteous law," which resolution commended "to all the churches of God to adopt and enforce the law of tithes, as the minimum rule of duty in supporting the interests of Church and State." This provoked considerable discussion, after which it "was rejected by a vote of seven to two." Flake then offered "a substitute, which was unanimously adopted." This substitute on the duty of giving "to the poor, to support the ministry and to sustain all the interests of the Church and the cause of Christ in proportion as the Lord has prospered them." The resolution recommended this plan to the churches, and asked them to "remember that even in ancient Israel the Lord ordained that one-tenth of their produce should be devoted to sacred purposes, and that under the New Testament we are to devote at least that much, or more, to the cause of our God and Savior." The Committee on Education was directed "to make out and publish a list of a series of books for the use and study of young ministers for four consecutive years, and that they be examined in their studies at each Annual Eldership." The first Friday in October was recommended to the churches to be observed as a day of fasting and prayer. The action of the Ohio Eldership in "setting off, contrary to the Constitution of the General Eldership and our general plan of co-operation an Eldership in Indiana" was disapproved; but the Eldership was recognized, and was empowered "to prescribe its own boundaries, including the various missions in Illinois." The churches and the Annual Elderships were advised "not to sanction the disorderly steps and proceedings," of "persons in the local churches, and several Annual Elderships, taking in hand to dissolve their connection with the bodies to which they belong by a simple act of resignation, without giving any reason for such a course." The Eldership adjourned, after being in session from Monday morning until Tuesday evening, to meet at Pittsburg, Pa., on "the third Lord's day of May, A. D. 1851."

3rd General Eldership.—Winebrenner "left home for Pittsburg, to attend the General Eldership of the Church of God, on Saturday, May 17th, and went as far as Churchtown." He and Sandoe remained there over Lord's day "assisting in holding a two-days' meeting." On Monday morning they were joined by Thomas and McFadden, and the four "set out from there, in a two-horse private vehicle, for Pittsburg." The first day they "went as far as Orrstown and held meeting." They made no stops to hold meetings after leaving Orrstown until they reached Bethany, Westmoreland county, Friday afternoon. There Thomas preached in the evening of May 23rd. On Saturday they journeyed to Pittsburg via West Newton, where they arrived about noon. On Sabbath they "preached in different places both in Pittsburg and Allegheny City." In the issue of The Church Advocate of June 16, 1851, in which appeared the Journal of the Eldership, Winebrenner gave a brief account of doings of the Eldership, and of the return trip of himself and party, in which he says: "This body met and was held at Pittsburg, Pa., according to appointment." But the Journal states that "Agreeably to appointment, this body met in the Disciples' meeting-house, in the city of Allegheny, Pa., on Monday, the 26th of May, 1851." A resolution of thanks was adopted for the use of this meeting-house. However, Winebrenner corrects himself in the same article in which he states that the Eldership "was held in Pittsburg," by stating that "the sessions were held in the Disciples' meeting-house in Allegheny City." The delegates enrolled as present were as follows:

East Pennsylvania—Teaching elders, J. Winebrenner, G. U. Harn, Wm. McFadden, E. H. Thomas. Ruling elder, John Fausnocht.

West Pennsylvania—Teaching elders, John Hickernell, Emanuel Logue.

Ohio—Teaching elders, A. Hollems, Henry Murray. Ruling elder, Samuel Metzler.

Indiana—Teaching elder, Thomas Hickernell. Two teaching elders and six ruling elders from East Pennsylvania were absent; one ruling elder from West Pennsylvania; two from Ohio; Iowa Eldership had appointed none, and the one delegate appointed by Michigan was absent. Total number present was eleven, less than a majority. Thomas Hickernell was elected Speaker; J. S. Gable, Treasurer; E. H. Thomas, Journalizing Clerk, and G. U. Harn, Transcribing Clerk. G. H. Ball, Corresponding Messenger of the Free-Will Baptist Church, was present, and "was received as a full member of this body." A. D. Williams, of the Free-Will Baptist Church, was also present, and was "voted a seat in this body." Winebrenner was appointed "to make a collection of Hymns for the new Hymn-Book, assisted by all the members of the Hymn-Book Committee." Action was taken, declaring the "delegates of the several Annual Elderships be amenable for their official conduct to the several Annual Elderships of which they are members;" "that the General Eldership shall possess no legislative authority in matters of religious faith and practice;" repealing Article XX. of the Constitution, and inserting as a substitute the following: "The Annual Elderships shall be the judges of the qualifications of their ministerial delegates;" and Article XXXI. was "so altered as to read, The General Eldership shall have power to decide and advise in all cases and questions which may at any time be submitted to them for their decision."

The "Missionary Board reported, that having no means, they employed no missionaries." The churches in Athens and Meigs counties, Ohio, were "set off from the West Pennsylvania Eldership, and attached to the Ohio Eldership." "The churches and brotherhood in Illinois" were "advised to erect themselves into a new Eldership." Action was taken looking toward the endowment of one or two professorships in the Free Baptist College at Chester, Geauga county, Ohio. It also recommended that the Committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership which had matured a plan for a College be "retained by this body, and be authorized to open books and solicit subscriptions of shares to the stock of Bethel College." The Eldership declared a matter which "called for humiliation and reform, and to be deeply regretted, that there is great inadequacy of ministerial support, and to consequent secularizing in the holy ministry." It also approved of the efforts being made by "the western brethren to secure a Printing Establishment to be held as the property of the whole Church, . . . . and locate it at Wooster, Ohio." J. Winebrenner and E. H. Thomas were appointed "delegates to the next General Conference of the Free-Will Baptist Church." It also expressed the hope that "the correspondence now commenced may result in a more intimate acquaintance, a firmer friendship, and as far as possible a mutual co-operation." The Eldership adjourned to meet at Wooster, Ohio, the last Lord's day in May, 1854.

4th General Eldership.—The Eldership which met at Wooster, Ohio, in the Disciple meeting-house, on Monday, the 29th day of May, 1854, did so under inspiring conditions. It had "abundant cause to be thankful," wrote Winebrenner, "for success in days past and gone; and never, does it seem to us, did the harvest present itself more invitingly and with prospects for better encouragement. The Church of God, if her ministers and people have a mind and heart to work, will and must triumph, notwithstanding the creed-making and violent opposition around her." It was still slow traveling in the West, as it took delegates from Decatur, Ill., from 4 o'clock p. m., of May 23rd, till 6 o'clock p. m., of the 26th, to reach Wooster, Ohio. When the Eldership was constituted by J. Mackey and John Hickernell, the following delegates were found in attendance:

East Pennsylvania—Jacob Keller, A. Swartz, John Winebrenner, Jesse Haifeigh, E. H. Thomas, J. H. Hurley, G. U. Harn, teaching elders. S. Knisley, J. S. Gable, Christian Forney, Joseph Ross, A. H. Long, James Mackey, Levi Diehl, ruling elders. Some of these were ministers substituted in place of ruling elders.

West Pennsylvania—John Hickernell, E. Logue, John Tinsman, teaching elders. C. Smith, G. Walters, J. Evans, ruling elders.

Ohio—A. Hollems, H. Murray, Jacob Myers, J. M. West, teaching elders. Samuel Metzler, J. Zimmerman, J. P. Winebrenner, Peter Crum, ruling elders.

Indiana—Thomas Hickernell, teaching elder. David Neidig, ruling elder.

Illinois—Jacob M. Klein, teaching elder. Daniel Wertz, ruling elder (a minister).

Iowa and Michigan Elderships were not represented. An election for officers resulted in the choice of James Mackey, Speaker; Joseph Ross, Treasurer; Jesse Haifeigh, Journalizing Clerk, and Jacob Myers, Transcribing Clerk. A Committee on Rules of Order reported a number of Parliamentary Rules. Harn, a very aggressive type of man, at once offered a resolution to amend "the first and seven-teenth Articles of the Constitution. . . . so as to read 'Churches of God,' instead of 'Church of God.'" This "was not agreed to." The proposition to endow professorships in Geauga College, adopted in 1851, was withdrawn. Thomas and Winebrenner gave "their reasons for not attending as delegates the General Conference of the Free-Will Baptist Church," and were excused. The Committee to sell stock of the institution called Bethel College, which the East Pennsylvania Eldership proposed to build, having reported that "no more particular efforts to carry out the object referred to had been made," it was decided to "put forth increased effort to effect the object of establishing of a Seminary or College." It also was recommended to "cordially and properly adopt any plan of co-operation" which the Free-Will Baptist Church might propose. The Academy located at Shippensburg, Pa., was recommended.

A Petition was received from "a Convention of German brethren, held near Orwigsburg, Schuylkill county, Pa., praying for permission to establish a German Eldership." Winebrenner then offered preambles and resolutions "highly approving of their benevolent movement," and that the General Eldership "will most cordially grant them their petition," with these provisions: 1. "That they will identify themselves with this body and co-operate with it in like manner as the English Elderships do." 2. "That they take in and supply for the present, and until this body shall otherwise direct, as far as they can, all the Germans throughout the United States." 3. "That they carry on their operations within the bounds of other Elderships, with the advice and consent of the authorities of such Elderships." Winebrenner and Keller were appointed delegates to assist and advise in the organization of said Eldership.

A. D. Williams, Corresponding Messenger of the General Conference of the Free-Will Baptist Church, sent a communication, which "was highly appreciated." A. Swartz, T. Hickernell and Jacob Myers were appointed Corresponding Messengers to the General Conference of the Free-Will Baptist Church. The resolutions on Slavery adopted in 1845 were re-affirmed, with the statement that "they were understood to teach our uncompromising hostility to slavery at the time of their adoption, and that they still express our unwavering resistance to this institution in any form of its representation." And that "any person sustaining the relation of master and slave is disqualified for membership in the Church of God." A resolution in favor of "ordination with the imposition of hands by one or more of the bishops of the Church of God" was indefinitely postponed, and referred for discussion in The Advocate. The proposed translation of the Scriptures by the American Bible Union was commended, in which "the exact meaning of the inspired text, as it was understood by those who were acquainted with the language of the original Scriptures at the time they were first written, was to be given by corresponding words and phrases, so far as they can be found in the vernacular tongue of those for whom the version is designed." The "great movement of obtaining prohibitory laws in all the States of the Union, in all the nations of the earth, against the sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage," was strongly indorsed, with a pledge "to use all lawful efforts to consummate the same." The location of the new Printing Establishment, when sufficient funds have been obtained, was to be determined "by a majority of the members of the Standing Committees of the several Eldershops." The Board of Publication was directed to publish a Hymn-Book, to be the property of the General Eldership, and providing for the disposal of the net proceeds. The Standing Committees of the different Eldershops were instructed to appoint two persons in each church to secure subscriptions for the new Printing Establishment. Free-will contributions were requested "to aid in the education of Ting-Ing-Kaw, a young Chinaman brought to this country by Bro. James Colder." A Board of Missions was appointed, "consisting of one member from each Eldership represented here." The appointment of two missionaries to Texas was recommended to the Board of Missions.

5th General Eldership.—Conditions in the East Pennsylvania Eldership were of the most irenical character to human eyes when the General Eldership convened in Harrisburg, June 1, 1857. No one could foresee what the next two or three years held in reserve to mar the peace and threaten the unity of the Church. It was happily hid from the men who with hopeful hearts greeted each other in the finest house of worship in the whole territory of the General Eldership. On the typical morning of June 1st Winebrenner called the assembled elders to order, and A. Megrew, of Iowa, led the body in "the usual acts of worship." On motion of Winebrenner, Megrew and D. A. L. Laverty constituted the Eldership, when the following were enrolled, viz.:

East Pennsylvania Eldership—Teaching elders—John Winebrenner, J. H. Hurley, John C. Owens, Abraham Swartz, Edward H. Thomas, Jacob Keller and James Colder. Ruling elders—A. I. Kauffman, K. A. Moore, D. A. L. Laverty, Joseph Ross, John S. Gable, Jacob Miley and David Spencer. Laverty and Ross were teaching elders substituted for ruling elders.

West Pennsylvania Eldership—Teaching elders—A. C. Raysor, John Hickernell and Seth S. Richmond. Ruling elders—None present.

Ohio Eldership—Teaching elders—Lewis Selby, Levi B. Hartman, John S. McKee, Thomas H. Deshird and J. M. West. Ruling elders—None present.

Indiana Eldership—Teaching elder—Thomas Hickernell. Ruling elders—None present.

Illinois Eldership—Teaching elder—Jacob Bear. Ruling elder—George W. Boyer.

Iowa Eldership—Teaching elders—A. Megrew and Henry Murray. Ruling elders—None present.

German Eldership—Teaching elder—Joseph K. Moyer. Ruling elder—Daniel Loudenschleiger.

The organization was effected by the choice of John Winebrenner for Speaker; Joseph Ross, Treasurer; A. C. Raysor, Journalizing Clerk, and D. A. L. Laverty, Transcribing Clerk.

The Eldership proceeded with its business with unusual deliberation, as the first day was taken up with the business of constituting and organizing the body, and the appointment of the regular committees and adoption of the Rules of Order. One hour of the morning sitting of the second day was spent "in free conversation on the state of religion."

The items of purchasing a Printing Establishment; the claims against the old Printing Establishment; the appeal of Hawk, of Iowa, and "the conversation on the state of religion" were placed in the hands of committees of one from each Eldership. The debts of the Old Printing Establishment were an indefinite amount, as the Committee reported, and the claimants were not all known to the Committee. Hence it recommended that a committee, consisting of John S. Gable and George Ross, be appointed to "dispose of the matter in the following manner": To publish a notice in The Advocate notifying the claimants to send in their claims, with their vouchers, and that the Committee determine the real amount of indebtedness, and divide it pro rata among the several Eldershops. Joseph Ross appeared before the Committee and "freely and willingly relinquished all his claim." His claim was "between twelve and fifteen hundred dollars." Winebrenner's account with The Gospel Publisher footed up $3,009.49, and it was proposed to have "the several Eldershops assume" this claim, less one-third, which Winebrenner proposed to "abate."

On the Printing Establishment the Committee ascertained that Colder, to whom Winebrenner had sold the Establishment and transferred The Advocate, was "willing to sell . . . . to this body for the amount it cost him." But as "this body has no funds in its treasury" the Committee recommended that the Eldership "take the Establishment at the amount it cost Colder, and leave it in his hands until the receipts cover that amount." A committee of three was appointed to carry this into effect. E. H. Thomas, John S. Gable and George Ross were appointed. Colder was then elected Editor.

In the Hawk case the Eldership decided that "the Eldership of Iowa erred in expelling Bro. Hawk without a trial." A committee of three, one to be appointed by "this body, the Eldership of Iowa another and Bro. Hawk a third" was agreed upon "to settle the difficulties." In the case of Felix Hartman the appeal was not sustained, but he was referred back to his Eldership.

The Slavery question was irrepressible. Ober's letter was referred to the Committee on Slavery. This Committee, however, reported that "we deem it unnecessary to take any further action at this time." But this could not repress discussion, and the subject monopolized nearly two sittings before the report was adopted and the Committee discharged. Colder at once, in the same issue of The Advocate with the Journal, published the actions of the General Eldership in 1845 and 1854, the former sustaining the position of the most extreme disputants on "the much vexed question" against any concessions to the pro-slavery party.

The division of the Ohio Eldership was recommended, and the boundaries outlined between the two Ohio Elderships by the Ohio Standing Committee were confirmed. The State line between Ohio and Indiana was made the western boundary of the West Ohio Eldership.

Because "God has blessed the churches during the past year with rich effusions of his Spirit in the conversion of many souls and the building up of the membership," the ministers and churches were "recommended to set apart the last Sabbath of July as a day of special thanksgiving and praise."

The Committee on Temperance lamented "that the cause of temperance in this country is on the decline," and "the preachers in the bounds of all the Elderships" were directed "to take a more efficient part on the subject."

The question of the imposition of hands was indefinitely postponed, as having been thoroughly discussed in The Advocate.

The publication of a new Hymn-Book came up through the Committee on Journals of 1854. Nothing had been done during the three years "but the employing of Bro. Winebrenner to make a suitable selection of hymns." The probable cost of the work was given at $1,500, and the Committee recommended that this amount "be raised by subscription, or joint stock." Accordingly "a Stock Committee" of members from all the Elderships was appointed, and a committee consisting of John S. Gable, Joseph Ross and James Colder was named as the Publishing Committee.

6th General Eldership.—In the shadows of the events of the political contest upon which the greatest and gravest issues of the century were suspended, the General Eldership assembled in the Bethel at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, on Monday, May 28, 1860. "Business of the utmost importance to the churches" was anticipated. The session was characterized at its close as "one of the most pleasant, interesting and harmonious we have held since the organization of the General Eldership in 1845." Winebrenner's enfeebled condition, and possible premonitions that this might be his last meeting with the highest tribunal of the Church, had a mellowing effect, and served to chasten the asperities of debate. He opened the session "with reading Scripture and a ministerial address, singing and prayer." The address was "affectionate and able." He also preached on Sabbath morning, "a solemn, plain, systematic, sympathetic, soul-melting and most evangelical discourse," based on Jer. xxxi. 18-20. For fervor, pathos and power this sermon excelled, and was memorable in the history of the General Eldership.

J. H. Hurley and J. Halfiegh constituted the Eldership, when the following enrollment was made:

East Pennsylvania Eldership. Teaching elders—J. Winebrenner, E. H. Thomas, Jacob Keller, James Mackey, A. X. Shoemaker, A. Swartz, J. Halfiegh. Ruling elders—Joseph Ross, J. S. Gable, J. Kennedy, A. I. Kauffman, D. Shoemaker, C. Forney, M. Shelly. For absentees, W. McFadden, G. U. Harn, S. Myers, E. Shaeffer, J. F. Weishampel and B. F. Beck were substituted.

West Pennsylvania Eldership. Teaching elders—J. Hickernell, S. S. Richmond and E. Jordan (absent). Ruling elders—J. M. Domer, P. Loucks and E. Smith (absent).

East Ohio Eldership. Teaching elders—J. S. McKee (absent), M. Beck, L. B. Hartman, L. H. Selby. Ruling elders—J. Beidler, D. Ridenour, D. Baker.

West Ohio Eldership. Teaching elders—T. Hickernell, R. H. Bolton, J. M. West. Ruling elders—J. F. Fox, W. H. Reeme, H. Davis.

Indiana Eldership. Teaching elders—George Thomas, D. Keplinger. Ruling elders—A. B. Slyter, E. Latta.

Illinois Eldership. Teaching elders—J. H. Hurley, J. M. Klein (absent). Ruling elders—J. Bare, G. W. Boyer (both absent).

Iowa Eldership. Teaching elders—H. Murray (absent), D. Wertz, F. F. Kiner. German Eldership. Teaching elder—J. Myers (absent).

The Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership was "admitted and recognised as a member of this body," and George Sandoe was enrolled as teaching elder. The Michigan Eldership was not recognised, "as our knowledge of their membership is much limited." A Committee was named to pay them a visit, "with discretionary power to receive the Michigan Eldership into this body." The delegate, Elder C. C. Linsley, was made an advisory member. J. H. Hurley was elected Speaker; Joseph Ross, Treasurer; J. Haisleigh, Journalizing Clerk, and R. H. Bolton, Transcribing Clerk. A committee to "revise and amend the Constitution" was appointed, composed of Winebrenner, J. Hickernell, D. Keplinger, L. B. Hartman and D. Wertz. The entire thirty-eight Articles were gone over, and acted upon; but only six Articles were amended. The motion of Harn to change the title, so as to read, "The General Eldership of Churches of God," was lost. Another "free conversation on the subject of religion" was a feature of the session. The Report of the Board of Publication on the new Hymn-Book showed that the total expenditures for compiling, editing, proofreading, printing, binding, etc., including also books on hand and sold but unpaid, were $7,728.43, on which there was a balance due the Board of $750.20.

Revs. S. D. Bates and D. M. Graham had been appointed by the General Conference of the Free-Will Baptists "to represent its fellowship and fraternal regard" for the General Eldership, and the former presented the credentials and was received as an advisory member. They solicited a "response by delegate to the next General Conference" of said Church. J. H. Hurley was appointed "Corresponding Messenger to the next meeting of the General Conference of the Free-Will Baptist Church."

The Printing Board reported that the "cherished hopes" of three years ago "have not been realized," that by the end of a year and eight months the Editor had become "embarrassed for want of funds" and the paper "was stopped, the hands discharged and the office abandoned," thus forcing the Committee to "assume the responsibility of publishing The Advocate under their own immediate control, with all its liabilities, amounting to the sum of $1,334.00." Additional debts had to be contracted to finish the last volume, bringing the indebtedness up to $1,900.00. Thomas had been made Editor, and was re-elected, and the contract for three years ratified. On Winebrenner's old claims $797.25 had been paid by four of the Annual Elderships.

A notably long and trenchant debate was precipitated by the Report of the Committee on Slavery, of which Harn, the fiery, ultra abolitionist, was Chairman. It characterized slave-holding to be "man-stealing;" "turns human flesh, blood, bones, sinews, nerves and muscles into articles of common merchandise; sets a price on souls, morals, religion and the image of God," and that "all who perpetrate said sin are classified by Paul along with the lawless, disobedient, ungodly, unholy and profane sinners, such as murderers of fathers and mothers, man-slayers and whoremongers, liars and perjurers." The mildest of its eight resolutions related to the Texas missionaries, simply deeply "deploring the course" of these missionaries on the subject. Thomas offered a substitute, reaffirming the resolutions of 1845, with some additional sentiments better suited to existing exigencies. On this the yeas and nays were called, the vote on substituting the Thomas resolutions for the Report of the Committee standing 21 to 14, and they were adopted.

The Committee on Publications suggested that "the time has come when a Sabbath-school paper should be published," and advised that "a suitable person be appointed, under proper restrictions, to get up a paper for the Sabbath-schools of the Church of God." The adoption of measures was recommended "to encourage the publishing, under sanction of a revision committee, of such books as will be suited to the indoctrinating of our children in the truths of the gospel of Christ." A general "Sabbath-school missionary" was suggested. The Eldership reaffirmed its "confidence in, and devotion to, the principles of the Maine Law," and "solemnly protested against the License Law as an outrage upon the intelligence of a civilized people." In only general terms was the subject of education acted upon. The General Eldership of 1860 adjourned, and the labors of Winebrenner in the highest ecclesiastical body in the Church of God on earth were finished.

7th General Eldership.—The personnel of the General Eldership of 1863 was so changed as to look like a new body. For the first time Winebrenner was not present. Three of the younger ministers were in the East Pennsylvania delegation, and four new names were on the lay delegation. An equally great change was noticeable in the West Pennsylvania delegation, though the tall, erect form of John Hickernell was seen again as one of them. The three Hickernell brothers were present, representing three Elderships. In East Ohio changes were fewer. The West Ohio delegation was increased, making some changes. The ministerial delegation from Indiana was not changed, nor in Illinois. The Eldership convened at New Brighton, Beaver county, Pa., on Monday, June 1, 1863. There was no Opening Sermon; but after "reading of Scripture, ministerial addresses and prayer by Elder J. H. Hurley, Speaker," the Eldership was "constituted by R. H. Bolton, Second Clerk of the last Eldership." "The following were found and reported to be in attendance":

East Pennsylvania Eldership—Elders E. H. Thomas, A. X. Shoemaker, J. Keller, A. Swartz, D. A. L. Laverty, J. C. Owens, B. F. Beck, C. H. Forney; and Bros. J. Rife, Dr. Geo. Ross, Levi Kauffman, J. B. Coover and Jacob Hickernell.

West Pennsylvania Eldership—John Hickernell, J. Hovis, J. M. Domer, J. Glenn and P. Loucks, and Bro. Belles.

East Ohio Eldership—Elders L. B. Hartman, M. Beck, J. S. McKee and W. H. Oliver.

West Ohio Eldership—Elders T. Hickernell, R. H. Bolton, Geo. W. Wilson, L. Ensminger, W. McCormick, Jas. George, and Bro. J. F. Fox.

Indiana Eldership—Elders George Thomas, and D. Keplinger.

Illinois Eldership—Elders J. H. Hurley, J. M. Klein and Bro. C. Klinefelter.

Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership—Not represented.

Iowa Eldership—Not represented.

German Eldership—Not represented.

Michigan Eldership—Not represented.

Texas Eldership—Not represented.

The organization was effected by the election of Jacob Keller, Speaker; J. Rife, Treasurer; R. H. Bolton, Journalizing Clerk, and C. H. Forney, Transcribing Clerk. The matter of receiving the Michigan Eldership was at once taken up, when the report of the Committee to visit said Eldership, appointed in 1860, was received and ratified, thus making it a member of the General Eldership. J. H. Hurley, appointed Corresponding Messenger to the Free-Will Baptist General Conference, reported "non-attendance on account of physical inability." For the first time a licensed woman minister sat with the Eldership as an advisory member, viz.: Mrs. Martha Jane Beecher, of the West Pennsylvania Eldership. The Committee on Slavery had its duties enlarged so as also to be a Committee on the State of the Country. In this double capacity it reported a series of thirteen resolutions, declaring its belief that the Government of the United States is founded on God's ordinance, and is to be preserved inviolate; that thus to preserve and maintain it is the mission of the American people; that all its subjects owe unqualified loyalty to the rightful authorities, and can not be excused because of doubts as to the wisdom of the policy adopted; but conscientious scruples in relation to bearing arms in its defense are not "a justifiable cause for impeaching a man's fidelity to the author of civil government." It rejected "the idea of the right of revolution under a democratic form of government." In "our persistent adherence to some flagrant national sin or sins" did the Committee find the only cause for "a permanent dismemberment of the American Union, or the complete abrogation of our present form of government." The "sacrifice of life and treasure in the war for the overthrow of the slaveholders rebellion" is "obviously the result of God's judgment upon us for our wickedness." American Slavery, it declared as "the solemn conviction" of the Eldership, is "the operative cause of the present rebellion," and hence it is demanded that this "unnatural and cruel system be completely abolished." In these views the Committee, Swartz, Wilson and M. Beck, were fully sustained by the Eldership. A "petition from brethren of the Church in Maryland" for permission to organize a Maryland Eldership was first negatived because "the proper preliminary steps were not taken," and later the Committee reported that such a project is "inexpedient at this time." Weishampel, who had engineered the project, was deeply chagrined at this result, which with other humiliating treatment, he declared, has "knocked out of me all the ambition I had to work for the Church." The Eldership established a precedent when it refused to approve the action "of the West Ohio Eldership in receiving an expelled member of the East Ohio Eldership into full membership in their body," and declared that "the action is null and void." A series of resolutions offered by C. H. Forney on the appointment of "a corps of competent essayists by the Board of Directors of the Printing Establishment," was referred to the Committee on Resolutions, viz.: Swartz, Hurley and Oliver. Said Committee reported favorably, fixed the number at twenty-four, selected pro rata from the different Elderships, to prepare articles for the Essay Page of The Advocate, and defining the rights and duties. E. H. Thomas submitted a preamble and resolution in favor of "a more efficient plan of itinerancy," on which the same Committee reported, advising the appointment of a committee "to mature and present such plan for the consideration and adoption of this Eldership." The Report of the Committee was adopted, and the proposed Committee appointed. Said Committee "most earnestly urged the different Elderships to keep up this system of itinerancy;" recommended that the Annual Elderships "appoint at least one member of their respective Standing Committees to travel as a general missionary throughout their bounds," and prescribing their duties. But the Eldership "indefinitely postponed the report." While the publication of a Life of Winebrenner received considerable attention, and the Board of Publication was "authorized by the East Pennsylvania Eldership to collect material and publish" the same, the Board reported that it "has made partial progress in the work." The General Eldership thereupon "assumed the right to the control of the publication of the intended work." The Eldership was conservative on the subject of Temperance, only resolving that "we strongly recommend and urge the ministers of the Church of God to present this matter clearly and fully to the people, and to discountenance the use of alcoholic, vinous and fermented drinks as a beverage under all circumstances." A "social meeting" was held on one evening of the session, at which one member of each Annual Eldership spoke, according to previous appointment, "setting forth the condition of their respective Elderships."

8th General Eldership.—For the first time in its history the General Eldership convened in 1866 at a point west of the territory of the three Elderships which composed it in 1845. It held its session in the Bethel at Decatur, Ill., beginning on Thursday, 9 a. m., May 31st. There being no Opening Sermon, after "devotional exercises were conducted by Elder J. Keller, Speaker of the last triennial Eldership, R. H. Bolton and C. H. Forney were appointed to constitute the Eldership." The Roll was made out as follows:

East Pennsylvania—E. H. Thomas, J. Keller, A. X. Shoemaker, C. H. Forney, J. C. Seabrooks, H. L. Soule, George Sigler, I. Brady, A. H. Long, J. S. Gable, J. Rife, Dr. George Ross, B. F. Mishey, J. C. Owens.

West Pennsylvania—J. Hickernell, J. M. Domer, P. Loucks, J. Glenn, E. Smith and J. Blackstone.

East Ohio—M. Beck, L. B. Hartman, J. Durstine and W. Gill.

West Ohio—G. W. Wilson, G. E. Ewing, W. P. Small, J. W. Senseney and A. Rush.

Indiana—J. E. McColley, George Thomas, E. Bryan.

Southern Illinois and Indiana—R. H. Bolton, Geo. Sandoe, H. Rupp and W. Booth.

Illinois—J. H. Hurley, R. White, J. Bear and W. H. Reeme.

Iowa—A. Megrew, E. Logue, H. Murray and J. Huff.

German—J. F. Weishampel.

Michigan—C. C. Linsley.

Texas—Represented by letter. A Committee on Credentials was appointed after the Eldership was constituted. Balloting for officers, A. X. Shoemaker was chosen Speaker, he having been nominated against A. Megrew. Authorized to cast the vote of the Eldership for Treasurer, J. Rife was elected. Four were nominated for Journalizing Clerk, and R. H. Bolton was chosen. Three were named for Transcribing Clerk, and P. Loucks was elected. Ross, Forney and Megrew were appointed by the Chair to report Rules of Order, which were unanimously adopted as reported, and became permanent. For the first time a Committee on Business was appointed, which reported four items—The Church Advocate, The Church Hymn-Book, A Church School, and a Sunday-School Paper. When the Report on The Advocate had been adopted, Forney offered resolutions, "which after some debate were unanimously adopted, declaring that Thomas be continued Editor; that an Assistant Editor be elected;" "pledging, and urging upon all our brethren to agree, to use all our efforts to give greater emciency and higher literary merit, and character to The Advocate." Forney, Shoemaker, Hartman, Bolton and White were nominated for Assistant Editor on Friday morning; the election was held on Saturday morning, and C. H. Forney elected. Thomas, Gable and Ross were by motion continued the Board of Publication. Dr. Ross, Book Agent, made a complete report of the business pertaining to the Hymn-Book, showing that in three years, 1863 to 1866, the receipts exceeded the disbursements by $1,266.80, without-standing accounts of $150.88, and books on hand, $964.40. He recommended the establishment of Hymn-Book Depositories. The School question was first considered in Committee of the Whole, beginning on Friday, and was never so thoroughly and practically discussed before. On Tuesday following the Committee on Education, to which the matter was referred, and consisting of Ross, Forney, Hartman, Logue and Ewing, reported in favor of recognizing Centralia College, and providing for a committee of inspectors to visit Centralia and report to the Executive Board, which shall have full power in the premises; that places in Ohio be nominated for competition for a Central College, and fixing the location of said College in the place raising for said purpose "the largest amount exceeding $20,000," and providing for "one or more agents to secure subscriptions and contributions to raise $60,000 endowment." After a lengthy debate, the Report was adopted, after permitting West Pennsylvania, Indiana and Illinois to compete with Ohio for the College. The Eldership decided to authorize the Board of Publication to publish a monthly Sunday-school paper, to begin January 1, 1867; named it "The Church of God Sunday-School paper," and provided, by election, for a "corps of editors and contributors" of thirteen. Daniel Shelley, of Shiremanstown, Pa., was "elected Editor of said paper by acclamation." The first triennial Report of the Chicago Mission showed receipts aggregating $9,820.98 paid in, and $1,816.00 unpaid subscriptions; and total expenditures, $10,494.64. The important question of delegates to the General Eldership was debated, on a resolution affirming it to be "the prerogative of each Annual Eldership to determine who shall be its representatives, provided that such representatives are eligible to election in any one of the Annual Elderships by the provisions of its Constitution;" but the matter was indefinitely postponed. E. Marple's letter, "asking the sympathies of this body and of the different Annual Elderships" was referred to the Board of Missions. A similar letter from B. Ober was also referred to said Board. But Thomas's motion to "recognize the Texas Eldership" was lost on a yea and nay vote. The "speedy completion of the Life of Winebrenner was "earnestly recommended." A resolution on uniformity of Eldership titles, making all in the singular, and a minority report by Hartman, changing the "name, style and title of the General Eldership so as to read, 'General Eldership of Churches of God,' " were laid on the table. So was a resolution that "in the ordination of ministers.....the laying on of hands be practiced by the Presbytery." A special Committee on the State of the Country was created, consisting of Forney, Glenn, M. Beck, W. P. Small, E. Bryan, R. White, E. Logue, C. C. Linsley, J. F. Weishampel and W. Booth, which congratulated the Eldership and Church on their uniform loyalty; with unfeigned gratitude recognized the "intervention of divine Providence in behalf of our imperiled institutions;" "rejoiced in the enlargement of civil liberty;" "honored and cherished the memory of the wise and good Abraham Lincoln," and expressed its belief that "all men are equal before God and the law." Thomas, a man of rare constructive and executive powers, proposed an amendment to Art. XIV. of the Constitution, creating "an Executive Board consisting of five members." It prevailed, and Dr. Geo. Ross, L. Kauffman, P. Loucks, J. Durstine and A. X. Shoemaker were nominated by a committee of one member from each Eldership, and elected. The new Board of Missions was Thomas, Domer, Hartman, Bolton and Hurley. The German Eldership having "authorized J. F. Weishampel to publish a German paper," the Eldership resolved "that he have the privilege of publishing such paper, the same to be under the supervision of the Board of Publication the same as the Editor of The Advocate;" but disclaiming "responsibility for any liabilities of the German paper." Annual Elderships were advised to have their Journals published in pamphlet form. Provision was made for the preaching of an Opening Sermon in the future, the Executive Board to appoint the preacher. The same Board was "instructed to apply to the Legislature of Pennsylvania for an Act of Incorporation of the General Eldership of the Church of God in North America." The Chicago Mission property was ordered deeded to the Executive Board. Thomas editorially characterized the work of this session as "the doings of the most important General Eldership ever held by the body, the benefits of whose works will tell gloriously for years to come."

9th General Eldership.—There was some concert of action in the election of Speaker of the ninth General Eldership. There were two teaching elders present who had been members of the body at its first organization, in 1845, one of which had never been its presiding officer, though a member of each of the eight sessions which had been held. These were E. H. Thomas and Thomas Hickernell. Thomas was quite feeble, and hardly able to preside; yet there was a consensus of opinions that he should be honored by an election to the highest office in this highest judicatory of the Church. The Eldership convened in Lancaster City, Lancaster county, Pa., the church being under the pastoral care of C. H. Forney. It was the home of J. S. Gable, a lay delegate to the first General Eldership. The date of the meeting was May 27, 1869. The first regular Opening Sermon was preached on the preceding evening, by A. X. Shoemaker, now of Illinois Eldership, and Speaker in 1866, on "The Commission." Loucks and Bolton constituted the Eldership, with the following enrollment of delegates:

East Pennsylvania. Ministerial—E. H. Thomas, J. Keller, A. Swartz, D. A. L. Lavery, C. Price, C. H. Forney, J. Halfiegh and G. Sigler. Lay—J. H. Chew, Dr. Geo. Ross, J. S. Gable, D. Shelly, S. L. Hershey, J. Speilman, S. Knisley, J. Rife and W. L. Jones.

West Pennsylvania. Ministerial—J. M. Domer, P. Loucks and J. Hovis. Lay—E. Smith, J. Tinsman and D. S. Fox.

East Ohio. Ministerial—M. Beck and L. B. Hartman. Lay—J. Durstine and Wm. Gill.

West Ohio. Ministerial—T. Hickernell, W. P. Small, G. W. Wilson and J. Richards. Lay—John Bolton, H. Creagor, James Ferguson and John Mann.

Indiana. Ministerial—J. S. Shock, J. Martin and E. Bryan. Lay—S. Bellman, C. Bortner and G. Kimes.

Southern Illinois and Indiana. Ministerial—George Sandoe, W. Booth and S. N. Miller.

Illinois. Ministerial—A. X. Shoemaker, J. H. Hurley and I. E. Boyer. Lay—J. A. Shuler, J. H. Forbes, W. H. Reeme and W. B. Allen.

Iowa. Ministerial—J. Lininger, A. Megrew and J. C. Kepford. Lay—John Stoner, J. Huff, J. M. Miller and J. D. Meads.

Michigan. Ministerial—R. H. Bolton, J. B. White, J. H. Besore and C. C. Linsley.

German. Ministerial—J. F. Weishampel and A. Snyder. Lay—W. Klinger and B. Koch.

Of these sixty-six enrolled sixteen were absent, and without alternates or substitutes. At least thirty-nine of the fifty were natives of Pennsylvania and Maryland. The order to elect a Speaker following, J. M. Domer and E. H. Thomas were nominated. Domer withdrew, and R. H. Bolton was nominated. By permission Bolton withdrew, and a motion prevailed "instructing him to cast a ballot for the election of E. H. Thomas as Speaker of the Eldership." This was done, and Thomas was declared elected. Under like instructions J. A. Shuler was elected Treasurer. M. Beck was elected by ballot the Journalizing Clerk, and Bolton under instructions cast a ballot for J. D. Meads for Transcribing Clerk.

By previous actions of the respective Standing Committees of the East Pennsylvania and German Elderships, the contentions between these two bodies were brought before the General Eldership. They first came up in the form of an amendment to the Constitution by which the action of the German Eldership in expelling certain members of the Kimmel's and Auburn churches would have been validated. This was laid on the table. Thomas offered a resolution which provided for "proper statements by the parties of the difficulties for the purpose of adjustment." This having been done, a committee was named "to draft a form of advice to be given in the premises." The report of this committee was recommended, and again reported with amendments, and provided, that the German Eldership had erred in interfering with an appointee to one of its charges by the East Pennsylvania Eldership; forbidding such interference, thus virtually throwing open again the whole German territory to the East Pennsylvania Eldership whenever the churches desired preachers from said body. It also reinstated the members at Kimmel's and Auburn which had been expelled by the German Eldership. In addition, a separate action was taken correcting the impression that the German Eldership had specific boundaries, and declaring "no special territory shall be held by the German Eldership, and that it shall have the right, as granted heretofore, to operate as the German body upon all fields of labor within the bounds of English Elderships, with the consent of these Elderships."

The speedy publication of the Life of Winebrenner was recommended. The change of the name of the Sunday-school paper, from "The Church of God Sunday-School Paper" to the "Sunday-School Gem," was approved as an obvious improvement. The action of 1866 directing that Eldership Journals be published in pamphlet form was rescinded, in view of the enlarged size of The Advocate. The brethren in Kansas were authorized "to organize themselves into a separate Eldership." While the Executive Board had been authorized "to apply to the Legislature of Ohio for an Act of Incorporation of the General Eldership," the obtaining of such Charter from the Legislature of Pennsylvania was announced. "Assessments to create a Contingent Fund of the General Eldership" were made on all the Annual Elderships both "for the present indebtedness" and "for the ensuing three years." As the Evangelical Alliance was to meet in New York in 1870, it was resolved "that Elders C. H. Forney, R. H. Bolton and A. H. Long be appointed delegates to said Convention."

When the Committee on Journals reported the "resolution of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, urging the General Eldership to pass a constitutional Article touching the itinerant polity of the Church, and declaring it to be fundamental to the existence of our plan of co-operation," C. H. Forney offered a milder substitute, declaring "the itinerant polity of prime importance," but that the "power of the Annual Elderships to assign their ministers to their respective appointments shall not be alienated." But the Eldership did not agree to this. Then Forney offered a proviso to be added to Art. XXXVIII. of the General Eldership Constitution, which stated that "no Article or Articles shall be added, annulled or so changed or amended as to alter the existing polity, Constitution or Rules of the Annual Elderships, unless it shall have been ratified by three-fourths of said Elderships, except in case three-fourths of said Elderships had previously instructed their delegates to vote for said Article, Articles, change or amendments." But this was also voted down. Then "the original resolution of the East Pennsylvania Eldership was voted on, and was defeated." Later Gable offered a preamble and resolution, declaring that "the itinerant ministry was made a fundamental principle of the Eldership plan of co-operation," and resolved "that the principle of itinerancy should be perpetuated inviolate." To this Forney proposed an amendment, to the effect declaring that "we regard the itinerant polity as of primary importance in our system of ecclesiastical co-operation, and that the final power reserved now to the several Annual Elderships to assign their members to their respective appointments shall not be alienated." This "carried." And then the amended resolution of Gable was voted down by 8 yeas, and 33 nays. The proposition of the Iowa Eldership, that the General Eldership "meet only every five years," was not agreed to, as was a suggestion from the same Eldership to "reduce the ratio of representation." To have delegations cast their "full vote in the absence of part of their delegates" also met with no favor. The recommendation of the Committee on Resolutions that "in these days of ritualism and strong tendencies to formalism, we earnestly recommend our ministers to cleave with full purpose of heart to the primitive simplicity in the preaching of the word of life" was fully endorsed, as was the one to guard against any changes "of the old landmarks." The Eldership was not willing to endorse a quasi presiding Eldership, nor regular traveling evangelists, as it voted down resolutions on these subjects. It also vetoed the suggestion that the churches of God hold a national camp-meeting. Indeed the Eldership acted as significantly in its vetoes of various innovations as it did in its affirmative deliverances. On missions it manifested more than its usual aggressive spirit. During the twenty-four years of its history the General Eldership had done no missionary work, save endorse the Chicago enterprise, and it had no missionary funds. But at this session it referred a number of letters to the Board of Missions which required more active and direct efforts. The Board reported that "it had no direct business, or business directly under its control." Hence it said: "In view of all the facts, we respectfully recommended to the body the abolition or discontinuance of the Board, or to commit all business pertaining to general missionary interests to the entire control of the Board." But the Eldership was not ready to do either, yet it gave its Board work to do, and the calls from Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, and the mission to the Freedmen were referred to the Board. The new Board, consisting of R. H. Bolton, Dr. George Ross, E. H. Thomas, J. M. Domer and A. X. Shoemaker, met at Lancaster immediately, and appointed A. X. Shoemaker to Chicago; created four missions, and appointed P. K. Shoemaker to Kansas and Nebraska, D. Keplinger to Missouri, and George Thomas to south-western Iowa, and placed the Freedman's mission into the hands of Thomas and Ross. But the Board had no means, and no authority to create a Fund, and had to depend upon responses to appeals issued for voluntary contributions for each of the fields which it opened. It recommended that the Ohio brethren start a mission in Mansfield, the Indiana brethren at Ft. Wayne and the East Pennsylvania Eldership at Reading and at Harrisburg. Ross, Gable, Durstine, Shuler and Rife, all laymen, were elected as the Executive Board.

With the failure of its two college projects of 1866 before it the Eldership gave only expression to general sentiments on the subject of education. Thomas, Gable and Ross were elected as the Board of Publication. The Eldership granted permission to the East and West Ohio Elderships to unite. As messengers to the Free-Will Baptist General Association the Eldership named Forney, Bolton and Shoemaker.

10th General Eldership.—A peculiarity of the tenth General Eldership was a preliminary gathering at 3 o'clock p. m. on the day before the session opened. It was presided over by J. S. Gable, a lay representative of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Brief addresses were delivered by half a dozen delegates, and also by Prof. Dunn, Free Baptist delegate. Both A. Swartz and G. W. Wilson, principal and alternate to preach the Opening Sermon, being absent, W. L. Jones, East Pennsylvania Eldership, was drafted to preach. The session was held at Mt. Carroll, Carroll county, Ill., beginning on Thursday morning, May 30, 1872. The vacant Presidential chair at once reminded the Eldership of the death of E. H. Thomas. Jacob Keller, who had been a member in 1869, had also died since then. Suitable memorial services were held on Wednesday morning of the last day of the session, when by resolutions the Eldership expressed the sense of its great loss in the death of these eminent men, "inasmuch as they were both strong defenders of the truth, as well as able counselors and active workmen in the church of God," and also "contributed so largely to mold public sentiment on the fundamental truths of our holy religion." The Eldership was constituted as follows:

1. East Pennsylvania. Ministerial delegates—B. F. Beck, C. H. Forney, G. Sigler, W. L. Jones, E. D. Aller, J. F. Meixel, J. Kennedy, H. L. Soule and J. O. Seabrooks. Lay—Dr. Geo. Ross, J. S. Gable, J. D. Schollenberger, D. C. Kolp, H. C. Demming, I. Frazer, E. J. Forney, J. Spellman and J. H. Chew.
2. German Eldership. Represented by letter.
3. West Pennsylvania Eldership. Ministerial—J. M. Domer and P. Loucks. Lay—D. S. Fox and E. Smith.
4. East Ohio Eldership. Ministerial—O. H. Betts and S. Lilley. Lay—J. Durstine.
5. West Ohio Eldership. Ministerial—T. Hickernell, J. Richards and L. Ensminger. Lay—E. Messenger and M. W. Larcomb.
6. Indiana Eldership. Ministerial—J. Martin, W. W. Lovett and J. Bumpus. Lay—J. Simonton.
7. Michigan Eldership. Ministerial—A. J. Hull and J. H. Besore. Lay——.
8. Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership. Ministerial—Geo. Sandoe, R. T. Sargent and Wm. Booth. Lay——.
9. Illinois Eldership. Ministerial—M. S. Newcomer, A. X. Shoemaker and I. E. Boyer. Lay—J. A. Shuler, J. Bailey and J. Carper.
10. Iowa Eldership. Ministerial—R. H. Bolton, A. Megrew, D. Gill, F. F. Kiner and J. D. Meads. Lay—H. Funk, J. H. Lighter, John Hecht, B. F. Bolton and V. B. Bean.
11. Kansas and Missouri Eldership. Ministerial—D. Keplinger.

Ballots being taken, J. M. Domer was elected Speaker; R. H. Bolton, First Clerk; E. D. Aller, Second Clerk, and J. A. Shuler, Treasurer. At 5.30 the Eldership adjourned to attend as a body the decoration services. Knowing that Prof. Dunn and Dr. Graham, Free Baptists, were delegates on an important mission, and Prof. Dunn being present, C. H. Forney offered a resolution making him an advisory member, and expressing the Eldership's readiness "to receive any communication he may offer to the Eldership." He presented his credentials and delivered a brief address, responded to by Shoemaker in behalf of the Speaker. Prof. Dunn

submitted a proposition granting to the General Eldership the right to one or more professorships in Hillsdale College, Mich., the Eldership to endow said professorships, and thus secure the use and privileges of said institution without any additional cost to the body. This proposition was committed to the Committee on Education—C. H. Forney, B. F. Beck and M. S. Newcomer. Said Committee recommended the acceptance of Prof. Dunn's proposition; the immediate election of one professor, and that the professorship should be catalogued as follows: "First Professorship of the Church of God . . . . . Professor of . . . . .". An endowment of $1,000 by means of the sale of scholarships was recommended. It also recommended creating a Board of Education as one of the General Eldership Boards. The Report was adopted. The Constitution was amended so as to provide for a Board of Education, and C. H. Forney, J. M. Domer, R. H. Bolton, Geo. Ross and A. X. Shoemaker were elected the first Board of Education. An attempt was made to call the Professorship "the Winebrenner Professorship," but it failed. John A. Winebrenner, son of Elder John Winebrenner, was elected professor. Gable, Shoemaker and Forney were named as "a committee to attend the next session of the Free-Will Baptist General Conference." The first revenue received by the General Eldership from The Church Advocate was the sum of $545.68, paid by Dr. Ross, who had bought the Thomas contract entered into in 1869. He also became the Publisher for the next three years under a new contract. There was also a small surplus from the "Sunday-School Gem." The Report of the Chicago Mission, by Shoemaker, showed "whole amount collected, $18,257.32; whole amount expended, $20,663.10."

A petition was received, "praying this body to grant the privilege of organizing an Eldership in Maryland." This petition was granted, and the boundaries "be fixed to run along the line between Pennsylvania and Maryland, to the Allegheny mountains, and along the line of said mountains through Virginia, including all of Virginia east of the Allegheny mountains." Boundaries were fixed for the Kansas and Missouri Eldership, so as to "include all of both of the States named, and that Iowa Eldership shall continue to supply those now supplied by it until next Eldership at least." The "boundary line between the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership, and the Indiana Eldership, was changed from the 40th parallel on the line between Ohio and Indiana to Union City on same line, and running due west through Williamsport on the Wabash river to the line of Illinois and Indiana."

The question of Eldership titles consumed considerable time. C. H. Forney introduced the subject by preamble and resolutions, declaring in favor of "uniformity in Eldership titles;" that we have always adhered to "the singular form of the word 'Church' in our Eldership titles," and that all the Elderships should conform to this practice. Also providing that hereafter the General Eldership "in granting charters to new Elderships shall specify their titles, and that the Elderships so chartered shall be required to adhere to such titles." The resolutions were discussed at length, and were adopted one by one, when, pending the motion to adopt as a whole, the Eldership sitting adjourned. When the question came up on Wednesday morning further discussion followed, when the previous question was called, and on a yea and nay vote, the preamble and resolutions were adopted by 40 to 12. The Constitution, Art. XX., was then amended in accordance with the action taken. Art. XII. was also amended to provide for a Board of Education. Dr. Ross offered an amendment to the Constitution, making "the number of members of the Board of Missions equal to the number of Elderships represented in the General Eldership," which was adopted by a vote of 36 to 16. The XIVth Article of the Constitution was also amended so as to elect the editors of all periodicals for one year, and the Board of Publication to elect thereafter annually until the next General Eldership. The Board of Missions during the three years had in its employ for varying periods the following missionaries: D. Blakely, S. V. Sterner, C. B. Konkle, P. K. Shoemaker, D. Keplinger, J. S. Moreland. The Board of Missions under the amended Constitution was made up of the following members, appointed by their respective Elderships: J. Kennedy, P. Loucks, J. Durstine, W. P. Small, J. Martin, G. Sandoe, A. J. Hull, A. X. Shoemaker, R. H. Bolton and D. Keplinger. The Executive Board consisted of J. M. Domer, A. Megrew, J. S. Gable, J. A. Shuler and R. H. Bolton. The Board of Publication consisted of Dr. Geo. Ross, J. S. Gable and J. A. Shuler. The Speaker was directed to cast a ballot for C. H. Forney for Editor of The Advocate, and for J. H. Red-seeker, Editor of the "Sunday-School Gem." A resolution was agreed to that an Assistant Editor of The Advocate be elected, and J. M. Domer was chosen.

The Eldership pronounced emphatically against countenancing or encouraging the manufacture and use of intoxicating drinks; the manufacture and use of domestic wines, and "hailed with great satisfaction the enactment of the legislatures of the States of Illinois, Ohio, Iowa, Pennsylvania and others upon the liquor question." An effort was made to reduce the ratio of representation to one teaching elder for every fifteen. The resolution prevailed at the sitting on Saturday; but on Monday afternoon it was reconsidered and defeated by a vote of 27 to 23. The effort failed to have the General Eldership meet quinquennially. A resolution was unanimously adopted authorizing the establishment of a Book Depository, and one in favor of "a monthly paper for the special benefit of Sunday-school teachers." J. A. Winebrenner, G. Sigler, E. J. Forney, M. S. Newcomer and J. B. Hartman were appointed "to prepare a uniform series of Sunday-school lessons," under an action to "edit the National Series of Sunday-school lessons for weekly publication in The Advocate." By adopting the Report of the Committee on Resolutions the Eldership declared in favor of "a general Sunday-school Convention at an early date," and then appointed a committee of twelve, one from each Eldership, to arrange for it. Expressing strong sentiments in favor of union, peace and harmony between Christian people, the Speaker was authorized "to appoint three brethren to attend the next Free-Will Baptist General Conference. J. S. Gable, A. X. Shoemaker and C. H. Forney were appointed. An interesting sitting was held to hear reports from representative delegates from all the Annual Elderships of the work and prospects within their territories. Speaking of the personnel of the Eldership, the "Mount Carroll Mirror" said: "The members of the Eldership are a fine looking, intelligent body of men; the most intelligent body, perhaps, ever assembled in this city."

11th General Eldership.—Again, as in 1872, the Speaker's chair had been vacated by the summons of the death-angel. Six months after the adjournment of the Eldership over which he presided with admirable grace and dignity he laid down his robe of office and entered into rest. The morning session on Saturday, May 28th, was fixed for holding memorial services. In its resolutions the Committee characterized Domer as "a model Christian, a successful minister of the gospel and an able defender of the faith of the Church." P. D. Collins, though never a delegate to the General Eldership, was also suitably remembered as "an active, zealous gospel laborer." He was elected a delegate by the Maryland Eldership. The Eldership had selected Smithville, Wayne county, Ohio, as the place of meeting; but on account of the existence of small-pox in the community around Smithville, greatly exaggerated by rumors, the Standing Committee of the East Ohio Eldership changed the place of meeting to West Salem, Wayne county; but it created such dissatisfaction that a committee was appointed to investigate the matter. It found that one or two cases of small-pox had existed "not far remote from Smithville;" that reports were "incorrect and unfounded," and that while the Standing Committee "acted in good faith and with the best motives," it "should have consulted the church and pastor at Smithville." On Tuesday evening, May 25, 1875, the Eldership met in the Presbyterian house of worship at West Salem and listened to the Opening Sermon on "Christian Unity" by C. H. Forney. On Wednesday morning when the Eldership was constituted the following enrollment was made:

1. East Pennsylvania Eldership. Teaching elders—C. H. Forney, G. Sigler, B. F. Beck, C. Price, D. A. L. Laverty, W. L. Jones, A. H. Long, J. W. Deshong. Ruling elders—G. W. Seilhammer, J. S. Gable, S. Knisley, H. C. Demming, S. L. Hershey, George Ross, J. Kennedy, A. Hostetter.

(Those marked thus (x) were absent.)

The Nebraska brethren had named twelve bearers of a Memorial, asking authority to form a Nebraska Eldership; but no one was present. As the Constitution made no provision for "representatives," on motion of C. H. Forney they were granted the rights of delegates, except the right to vote, though out of forty votes there were fourteen against the motion. Forney also moved the appointment of a committee "to examine the Constitution and By-Laws," and to "suggest such amendments as may be necessary to harmonize them." C. H. Forney, C. Price and G. W. Wilson were appointed. They reported an amendment to Art. XVIII., reducing the number of members of the Board of Missions to five. Also amending Art. XVII. so that no member of the Eldership can be a member of "more than one of the Boards of the Eldership." These were unanimously adopted. The Committee also reported amendments to Articles IV., V., VI., XII. and XIII.; reported a new Article relative to the Board of Incorporation; one prohibiting the doing of "any official business without the presence of a majority of any Board;" amending Art. XIV., so as to readopt it as it was prior to 1869, and making editors "subject to removal by the Executive Board." Also amending Articles XV., XVI., XXVII., and inserting a new Article with reference to the Board of Education; striking out Art. XXIX., and amending Art. XXX.; making Articles XXXI., XXXV. and XXXVII. Rules of Order, and striking out Articles XXXII., XXXIII., XXXIV. and XXXVI., and inserting a new Article on the Itinerancy. The entire Report was adopted. An effort was made by George Sandoe to amend the Report so as to change the ratio of representation from one for every ten, to one for every fifteen licensed ministers; but the Eldership by a vote of yeas 11, and nays 25, refused to change the ratio.

The Treasurer's Report showed total income for the three years of $4,547.59 for missionary purposes. The Advocate was paying its way, but had no surplus. Blame was largely placed on the credit system under which the paper "was losing quite an amount annually." H. C. Demming made a proposition to take the publishing of The Advocate, put it on a cash-in-advance system, pay all expenses, keep it up in all respects to its existing standard, pay the Editor $200.00 more salary, and "pay $1,000.00 into the General Eldership treasury at the expiration of three years." The Board of Publication was directed to make the best contract it could in its judgment, and in 1876 it accepted the Demming proposition, except the extra $200.00 for the Editor, which was refused on the ground that the income would not justify it. George Sigler offered resolutions, which were adopted, providing for Centennial Celebration of 1876. They called for "a general convocation of the Church to be held in Philadelphia, commencing the first Wednesday of June, 1876," and the appointment of a committee of five to make the necessary arrangements.

The missionary interests consumed much time. Oregon called for a missionary. Nebraska desired more missionaries, as did Missouri and Kansas. But the Chicago Mission presented the most perplexing and irritating subject with which the body had to deal. The mission had proved a failure, and it came up in the Report of the Committee on Overtures, which referred "a letter from Chicago in respect to the mission property and work in that city" to the Board of Missions. It was made a special order. Meanwhile Shoemaker made his report, after which the Chicago letter was read and considered, developing considerable friction and bad feeling. The subject was under consideration for three sittings, when J. Kennedy offered a resolution, "recommending the sale of the property.....with a view of commencing mission work in some other part of the city." This was agreed to by a vote of 39 to 16. This question and several others into which a good deal of personal feeling and antagonism entered made the session a more or less unpleasant one. An effort was made "to elect a corps of at least five editors of The Advocate, including an editor-in-chief." The subject being divided, C. H. Forney was elected editor. In place of a corps of editors, it was agreed to elect an assistant editor, and H. C. Demming was elected. J. H. Redbecker was chosen editor of the "Sunday-School Gem."

When the Eldership took up memorials, it agreed to grant the East Ohio Eldership "the privilege of consolidating with the West Ohio Eldership," although there was some disposition to consolidate it with the East Pennsylvania Eldership. The memorial from Nebraska for privilege to organize an Eldership was agreed to, and the "name, style and title" thereof was fixed to be "The Eldership of the Church of God in Nebraska." The boundaries were to be the State lines, except that "the two northern tiers of counties in north-eastern Kansas shall be part of the Nebraska Eldership territory." Lenawee, Hillsdale and Monroe counties, Mich., were given to the West Ohio Eldership. "All the East Ohio territory belonging to West Pennsylvania Eldership was given to East Ohio Eldership."

Indirectly the Eldership affirmed the doctrine of the conscious state of the dead by giving it as its opinion that "it is inexpedient to license any minister who will openly preach and defend the dogma of the unconscious state of the dead." On motion of A. H. Long, "the Eldership of the Church of God in Texas was received as a member of the General Eldership," and the names of the delegates were ordered "entered on the Journal." Suitable action was taken to secure "a permanent missionary fund," and bequests were invited for that purpose.

R. H. Bolton presided over the deliberations of the body as Speaker in an efficient manner. J. A. Shuler was re-elected Treasurer. H. C. Demming acted as Journalizing Clerk, and P. Loucks, Transcribing Clerk. The Journal was ordered published in pamphlet form. George Ross, J. S. Gable and J. A. Shuler were elected the Board of Publication; B. F. Beck, C. H. Forney, A. H. Long, M. S. Newcomer and Isaac Frazer, the Board of Education; R. H. Bolton, J. Kennedy, P. Loucks, A. X. Shoemaker and W. P. Small, the Board of Missions, and A. Megrew, G. Sigler, D. A. L. Laverty, G. Sandoe and A. Swartz, the Executive Board. Prominent members of this Eldership regarded it as one which "will in all time stand out prominently as one of the most important and efficient meetings of the body."

12th General Eldership.—Sometimes a convention of any character seems relatively so much better because of the anticipation of unpleasant things which were not realized. Accordingly the twelfth General Eldership was pronounced by all as exceptionally pleasant because the strifes, the hot antagonisms, the fierce contentions which were prophesied by some gave way to the truly "Christian spirit of love, and conciliation, and peace." It was called "all in all the best General Eldership" since 1863. The body convened at Syracuse, Kosciusko county, Ind., to listen to the Opening Sermon by M. S. Newcomer, on Wednesday evening, May 28, 1878. The text was Ps. cxix. 130. Theme—"Modern Theological Skepticism." On Wednesday morning the Eldership was constituted by J. M. Carvell and W. B. Allen, who made the following enrollment of delegates:

The delegates were mostly in the prime of life, exceptions being found, however, in both extremes, as a few quite young men and a few aged veterans were present. It was a typical Eldership for both counsel and action. By ballot the following officers were elected: Speaker, C. H. Forney; W. B. Allen, Journalizing Clerk; R. H. Bolton, Transcribing Clerk, and Isaac Schrader, Treasurer. At various stages of the session the following elections were held: Editor of The Advocate, C. H. Forney; Editor of "The Gem," J. H. Redsecker. But as he resigned later, his place was filled by the election of G. Sigler. Board of Publication, J. S. Gable, George Ross and I. Frazer. Board of Foreign Missions, M. S. Newcomer, J. W. Aukerman, C. H. Forney, R. H. Bolton and W. P. Small. Executive Board, J. H. Besore, A. X. Shoemaker, J. Lininger, J. Bailey and T. Koogle. Board of Missions, P. Loucks, M. S. Newcomer, G. Sigler, W. P. Small and R. H. Bolton. Assistant Editor, M. S. Newcomer. The action creating a Board of Foreign Missions was taken in response to the appeal of Dr. J. L. Phillips, Free Baptist missionary to India, delegate to the General Eldership. The Committee on Mission Work reported "that missions in foreign lands should be established as soon as possible," and approving of "the initiatory steps taken by the East Pennsylvania Eldership toward the establishing of a mission in India, or the joining hands with the Free Baptists in said missionary work." But the Eldership was not ready for this, and referred the matter to a new committee, which reported in favor of "the creation of a Foreign Mission Board, with which the Elderships were recommended to co-operate in this work, and that we establish a mission in India at as early a day as practicable." This was adopted. Mission work in general received much attention, not only during the regular sittings, but several evenings were devoted to its consideration, and to the Report of the Board of Missions. There were urgent calls from Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon, California, Texas and Arkansas, in addition to the older fields in Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and Michigan. The Board regarded with favor the effort made by the Kansas and Missouri Eldership to "introduce the ancient gospel in England." To secure the necessary means the Board proposed "an appeal for twenty-five cents from every member of the Church of God in the United States." By this method it was calculated that $7,500 should be realized annually. However, it continued the former plan of having "a missionary collecting agent in the field, to devote his whole time to this work." W. R. Covert was appointed to Crete; Evan Wilson, to Missouri; J. W. Kager and C. S. Kilmer, to Nebraska; A. L. Nye, to "North Nebraska Mission;" P. Shaw, to Kansas, and J. A. Smith, to Texas. Upon request, the publication of "a monthly Sunday-school Journal" and "lesson leaf" were authorized, and B. F. Beck was selected to edit the same. The discontinuance of the "Kundschafter," the German paper published by Weishampel, was ordered. The Executive Board was directed to appoint "a suitable person to write the history of Winebrenner; also "an article for McClintock and Strong's Cyclopaedia." Mrs. Elizabeth R. Gable was appointed to write the former, and C. H. Forney the latter. The "request that this body should take steps towards procuring or erecting an institution of learning" was answered by resolution receiving, "the overtures of Prof. Ege, of Mechanicsburg, Pa.:" by expressing appreciation of an "offer by Dr. Bates, Ridgeville College, Ind., relative to the endowment of a professorship in said college," and "looking with favor on the liberal offer of the President of Mt. Pleasant Institute, Mt. Pleasant, Pa." Authority was given to "appoint an agent to solicit subscriptions towards a fund for educational purposes." C. H. Forney and B. F. Beck were added to the Board of Publication "on the item of a smaller hymnal." "C. H. Forney and M. S. Newcomer were appointed to attend the General Conference of Liberal Baptists."

While the questions of dividing the Iowa Eldership; organizing an Eldership in Arkansas, and the status of the Maine Eldership were brought before the body, its Committee on Boundaries reported that it had "no report to make. Not anything came before us which needed action." The Eldership approved of the celebration of the semi-centennial of the organization of the first annual Eldership, and placed the matter in the hands of the Editor and Assistant Editor of The Church Advocate "to make the necessary arrangements." The most unpleasant feature of the session was the discussion incident to the contract entered into in 1876 for the publication of The Advocate. The publishers under said contract found themselves forced to suspend publication, and involved the Eldership in considerable loss. Much personal feeling manifested itself, very much aggravated by the course of the "Kundschafter," which persistently assailed the Editor of The Advocate, and its Editor also sent documents to the Eldership for distribution, in which he sought to influence the votes of members on questions involved. A Special Committee, consisting of Sigler, Newcomer and Lininger, was appointed, which reported that the publishers of The Advocate from 1876 to 1878 failed to receive that support they had reason to expect; that nevertheless they "showed very unwise business management;" that the contract with the Board was "entered into voluntarily, and ought to have been maintained inviolably to the close of the term specified in the contract;" wholly exonerating the Editor of all responsibility for the "failure of the paper," and censuring in strong terms the course of the Editor of the "Kundschafter," as being directly opposed to the common courtesies of society, and particularly derogatory to any religion suffering the infliction of such wrong." The report was adopted by a vote of 51 yeas; nays, 0; excused, 3. This was followed by a resolution declaring "that this body enters its unqualified protest against individuals sending documents to its delegations, whose aim is to throw a shadow of suspicion on the lives and characters of individual members of the body." The Eldership called attention to the fact that "several of the Annual Elderships have violated our Rule of Co-operation as set forth in Article XXIX. of the Constitution, prohibiting members of one Eldership removing into the territory of another Eldership, or laboring within its territory," and declared such violation causes trouble, and holding each Eldership "strictly to account for any violations which may occur hereafter."

13th General Eldership.—Two inter-denominational events which marked the General Eldership session of 1881 were variously commented upon by the delegates. Two brethren from Idaville, Ind., were present, who were identified with a body known as the "White County Conference of the Church of God," State of Indiana. Said body had formerly belonged to the German Baptists, but withdrew in 1848. Having in all respects the same faith and practice as the Church of God, closer fellowship, if not organic unity, seemed desirable and possible. The Free Baptist Church was represented by Dr. A. D. Williams, of Nebraska, and Dr. D. W. C. Durgen, President of Hillsdale College, Mich. They were cordially received, with suitable expressions of fraternal regard. They were reminded, in reply to their greetings, that the Free Baptist Church had abandoned feet-washing, and thus put a higher barrier between it and the Church of God. The force of this reminder was felt by Dr. Williams, who, in reporting his visit to the General Eldership in "The Morning Star," spoke in terms of commendation of the character and work of the Church of God. The body met at Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, on Tuesday evening, May 24, 1881, when George Sigler, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, delivered the Opening Sermon. Theme:—"The Church of God of the Future." The Roll of members as made up by the Journalizing and Transcribing Clerks was as follows, presumably only those present being enrolled:

East Pennsylvania Eldership. Teaching elders—C. H. Forney, G. Sigler, D. S. Shoop, J. M. Carvell, G. W. Seilhammer, F. L. Nicodemus, C. Price, A. H. Long and J. C. Seabrooks. Ruling elders—J. S. Gable, I. Frazer, D. M. Bare, J. H. Redsecker, H. J. Forney, John Clippinger, S. Myers, A. Hostetter and G. D. Shaefer.

West Pennsylvania Eldership. Teaching elders—J. S. Marple, R. L. Byrnes, S. Woods, B. F. Bolton and J. W. Davis. Ruling elders—E. Smith, S. P. P. Young, A. Shontz, G. W. Pritts, D. A. Stevens and J. B. Henderson.

Maryland and Virginia Eldership. Teaching elders—L. H. Selby, S. W. Nail and J. A. Saxton.

West Ohio Eldership. Teaching elders—G. W. Wilson, J. M. Cassel, T. Koogle, T. Hickernell and C. N. Belman. Ruling elders—D. Hale, H. Shuler, S. Bolton, S. Kline and S. Dickerhoof.

Indiana Eldership. Teaching elders—W. W. Lovett, J. Bumpus and I. W. Markley. Ruling elders—J. Mowery and H. O. Smith.

Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership. Teaching elders—Geo. Sandoe, A. Miller and W. Booth. Ruling elders—J. Miller, Sr., G. Rupp and John Snively.

Illinois Eldership. Teaching elders—M. S. Newcomer, S. D. C. Jackson and W. B. Allen. Ruling elders—M. Anderson and J. Stare.

Michigan Eldership. Teaching elders—A. J. Hull, J. B. White and Sheldon Smith. Ruling elder—N. Baim.

Iowa Eldership. Teaching elders—C. L. Wilson, J. H. Besore and R. H. Bolton. Ruling elders—D. Hoover and J. H. Bolton.

Kansas and Missouri Eldership. Teaching elder—C. S. Bolton.

Balloting for officers resulted in the election of M. S. Newcomer, Speaker; R. H. Bolton, Journalizing Clerk, and W. B. Allen, Transcribing Clerk. These both refused to serve, when J. H. Besore and F. L. Nicodemus were elected. The Eldership would not recognize the Treasurer as a member by virtue of his office, whereupon I. Schrader, Treasurer, was appointed by the Standing Committee of the Indiana Eldership a lay delegate. The "Sunday-School Gem" reported a net profit of $405.41 for the three years. The Report of the Book Agent showed a net balance of $3,812.63. The Editor of The Advocate made a financial report of unusual length, which showed that the net income of the paper for three years was $595.15, the first surplus reported. The Treasurer's Report gave the total collections for the various Funds as follows: Missionary Fund, for first year, $1,184.22; second year, $1,265.65; third year, $856.78. Contingent Fund, first year, $95.61; second year, $118.49. Permanent Missionary Fund, $450.00. Permanent Educational Fund, $200.00. The publication of the "Workman Quarterly and Lesson Leaves," which began with the issue of January, 1879, was financially a success, and the Workman Publishing Company offered to "turn over the publication with its subscription lists to the Eldership, without compensation, and entirely free of debt," which was accepted, and J. Halfleigh was appointed Business Manager of this publication and of the "Sunday-School Gem." Editors were elected as follows: The Advocate, C. H. Forney; Assistant, M. S. Newcomer; "Gem," G. Sigler; "Workman," P. Loucks; Assistants, W. B. Allen and W. W. Lovett. The Editor of "The Gem" and the Assistant Editor of The Advocate were each voted a salary of $50.00 a year. The former was also voted $50.00 per year for each of the preceding three years. A number of serious charges being preferred against J. F. Weishampel in connection with the publication of the "Kundschafter," they were referred by unanimous vote to a committee "to consider his course in all its details, and present a report and statement of facts to the Eldership." The committee reported that Weishampel had published his paper in violation of the Rules of Co-operation, and that he "made one of his papers the vehicle of flagrant abuse and false accusations." It also condemned the German Eldership for "failing to call said member [Weishampel] to account," and declared it to be "the duty of said Eldership to carry the actions of the General Eldership into effect," and required it "to exercise the necessary discipline over the member of said Eldership who is still violating our Rules of Co-operation, and who has been and still is guilty of actions deeply repugnant to the judgment and moral sense of this body." A "permanent General Missionary Secretary" was provided for, as reported by a committee of ten, one from each Eldership represented. The school project came up in various forms, one of which was a proposition to sell to the General Eldership the High School at Smithville, Ohio. These various propositions, with the whole subject, were referred to the Committee on Education, consisting of C. H. Forney, S. D. C. Jackson and R. L. Byrnes. Said Committee "recognizing the importance, and that immediately, of a Church school," recommended "that the Board of Education be instructed to make arrangements to secure at once a suitable place for said school, and to provide whatever means may be required for the opening and working of the same." In place of the words, "Board of Education," the words, "the General Eldership," were inserted, and the resolution was adopted, thus laying the foundation for Findlay College on Friday evening, May 30, 1881. Not only did the Eldership by resolution express its gratification in having Drs. Williams and Durgen as delegates from the Free Baptist Church present during its sittings; but it elected M. S. Newcomer and R. H. Bolton delegates, and C. H. Forney and W. B. Allen, alternates, to the next meeting of the Free Baptist General Conference. The publication of a Church Hymnal was brought up in the Report of the Committee on Journals. The Committee to prepare a Hymnal had decided not to act on account of the large number of Church Hymn-Books on hand, but recommended that the matter be referred to the Board of Publication, in connection with a committee to be elected. This was agreed to, and C. H. Forney, M. S. Newcomer and G. Sigler were elected. The Board of Publication consisted of Isaac Frazer, J. H. Redsecker and D. M. Bare. The following were elected a Board of Missions: P. Loucks, R. H. Bolton, W. P. Small, G. Sigler and M. S. Newcomer. The new Executive Board consisted of T. Koogle, J. H. Besore, W. B. Allen, C. H. Forney and George Sandoe. R. L. Byrnes, J. M. Cassel, D. Blakely, J. S. Gable and J. M. Carvell were elected on the Board of Education. Said Board was "directed to secure an amendment from the Legislature of Pennsylvania to the Act of Incorporation of the General Eldership, constituting the Board of Education a part of the Board of Incorporation." The Eldership in the State of Maine was duly recognized, and the boundary lines of the State were made its boundaries. Permission was granted the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership to effect a division of its territory, the Illinois part to consolidate with the Illinois Eldership; the territory in Indiana to constitute an Eldership, with the State line between Indiana and Illinois as its western boundary, "all other lines remaining as heretofore." The brethren in Kansas were granted the privilege of organizing an Eldership within the boundaries of the State. Appropriate action was taken on the death of Dr. George Ross, of East Pennsylvania Eldership. He was characterized as "one of the most efficient members of this body; a member of pure Christian character, of rare business energy, of unimpeachable integrity, of unwearied industry in all departments of Church work, of amiable and affectionate disposition and of exemplary fidelity in all his official and personal relations." As one of the Assistant Editors of the "Workman," Alexander Wiley was worthily remembered by the Committee on Resolutions as a minister of "self-sacrificing zeal in the cause of the Redeemer, whose loss to us is his eternal gain."

14th General Eldership.—In addition to the regular work of each triennial session of the General Eldership, the one to meet at Wooster, Ohio, May 28, 1884, anticipated the discussion of sundry questions of special interest. The general mission work was assuming large proportions; the great work of building the College presented an entirely new subject for most serious attention and then the impetus given to the movement toward some form of active co-operation between Liberal Baptists made it impracticable to ignore the question. But the fourteen Elderships represented had chosen delegations composed largely of their ablest men. The Eldership was constituted by the Journalizing Clerk of the session of 1881, J. H. Besore, and the enrollment was made as follows:

East Pennsylvania Eldership. Ministerial delegates—C. H. Forney, G. Sigler, C. Price, J. B. Lockwood, A. H. Long, J. M. Carvell, D. S. Shoop and G. W. Sellhammer. Lay delegates—J. H. Redsecker, D. M. Bare, H. J. Forney, S. Knisley, S. L. Hershey, I. Frazer, D. W. Spencer and J. H. Abraham.

Maine Eldership—No delegates.

German Eldership—No delegates.

The question of the eligibility of W. Rice was raised, as he had not been a member five years. He was seated on the proviso in the Constitution that such election is admissable in "cases where it is unavoidable." Before an organization was effected C. H. Forney submitted a proposition, that "no one shall be declared elected unless he had received a majority of the votes cast." The proposition was later submitted as an amendment to Article IV. of the Constitution, and a similar one as an amendment to Art. XI. with reference to "election of editors of the various publications." The following officers were elected: Speaker, George Sigler; Journalizing Clerk, W. B. Allen; Transcribing Clerk, D. W. Spencer. O. B. Cheney, President of Bates College, Me.; O. R. Bacheler, missionary to India, both of the Free Baptist Church, were seated as advisory members. G. W. Ball, delegate from the Free Baptist General Conference, was accorded the same privilege. Dr. Cheney in his address before the Eldership, stated that Prof. Dudley, of the Free Baptist College, Hillsdale, Mich., was also appointed a delegate, but he failed to arrive. While the West Virginia Eldership had been organized and its delegates enrolled, it had as yet no charter from the General Eldership. As soon as the committees were appointed a petition was presented "asking the privilege of organizing a new Eldership in West Virginia." The matter was referred to the Committee on Boundaries, which reported favorably. The name of the new body was fixed as that of the "West Virginia Eldership of the Church of God," and its territory "Greene county, Pa.; Belmont, Jefferson and Monroe counties, Ohio, and all of West Virginia except that part occupied by the Maryland and Virginia Eldership." Allen and Newcomer had attended the Free Baptist General Conference, as delegates, in 1883, and gave an interesting report of their visit. This was followed by addresses by Dr. Cheney and Dr. Bacheler, to which the Speaker made a suitable response. The writing of the Life of Winebrenner, which fifteen years before had been arranged for, had not yet been undertaken, and it was left in the hands of the family of Elder Winebrenner, which expressed a "willingness to undertake its preparation." The Committee on Church Hymnal reported its work completed, and that the Hymnal was ready for sale in the Winter of 1881-2. The Board of Education reported its work in locating Findlay College, and, in connection with the Executive Board, the creation of the Findlay College Corporation and the election of the first Board of Trustees. The work extended over a period of five months, from July 6, 1881, to February 25, 1882. The report was strongly approved, and a new Board elected consisting of C. H. Forney, J. R. H. Latchaw, W. B. Allen, R. L. Byrnes and J. M. Carvell. The report of the Editor of The Advocate showed a net balance of $1,634.55. C. H. Forney was re-elected Editor. The Committee on Resolutions submitted a resolution, that an Assistant Editor be elected who should also be editor of the "Sunday-School Gem," and all Sunday-school periodicals, which prevailed. Being reconsidered at a later sitting, when C. H. Forney submitted a new proposition, viz.: that said action "shall not go into effect until such time as the Board of Incorporation is ready to start a Book Store and Printing Establishment," and that until then the present arrangement shall be continued, and the election of an Assistant Editor under the proposed consolidation to be placed in the hands of the Board of Incorporation. This was adopted, and M. S. Newcomer was elected Assistant Editor; George Sigler, Editor of the Gem, and J. H. Redsecker, Editor of the Workman. One of the suggestions of the Editor of The Advocate was to authorize the necessary steps to be taken to start our own printing establishment. The whole question was referred to the Board of Incorporation, which was instructed to "establish a Book Concern as soon as practicable." The Executive Board consisted of George Sandoe, J. H. Besore, C. Price, W. W. Lovett and S. L. Hershey. The new Board of Missions was R. H. Bolton, M. S. Newcomer, W. P. Small, George Sigler and I. W. Markley. I. Schrader was re-elected Treasurer. The new Board of Publication consisted of I. Frazer, J. H. Redsecker and D. M. Bare. The suggestion made by the Board of Publication to publish "a small monthly illustrated paper," and also "Winebrenner's View of the Church of God," was approved, and the revision of the latter placed in the hands of C. H. Forney, G. Sigler, R. L. Byrnes and W. B. Allen. R. H. Bolton and C. H. Forney were chosen as delegates to the Free Baptist General Conference. Dr. Ball in his address before the Eldership "rejoiced at the unanimity of feeling between the two bodies represented, and hoped for more of the same spirit." Actuated by the same feeling, the committee to which were "referred the greetings and other considerations by the Free Baptist delegates to this body," recommended "that this body co-operate with the Free Baptist Board of Foreign Missions," and that "some person be appointed who shall act as secretary and treasurer, and shall collect funds, conduct correspondence," etc., with a view of "sending at as early a date as possible a missionary into the foreign field." This was adopted, and J. R. H. Latchaw was appointed Secretary and Treasurer. The Eldership, with a few immaterial alterations, also adopted all the items "of the principles declared by the Convention of Liberal Baptists held in Minneapolis." But it failed to incorporate them in its Minutes. The Eldership recorded its "cordial approval of the work written by Dr. Forney on the Christian Ordinances," and also requested the Board of Publication to issue a new edition of Bolton on the Church of God. The Eldership placed itself clearly on record "in favor of constitutional amendments in all our State Constitutions prohibiting the legalized sale of intoxicating drinks." In the resolutions on the death of three former ministerial delegates, the Eldership pronounced P. Loucks "one of the ablest counsellors, and purest and most unselfish members;" A. Swartz as a man among us who had "no superior as a clear, logical reasoner, and no peer as a disputant noted for forcible statements," and D. A. L. Lavery as a "life-long, tried and efficient man, always ready by word and act to co-operate with the brethren."

15th General Eldership.—The triennial meeting of the General Eldership is always an event of more than ordinary interest. It occupies the attention of the ministry and churches for from six to eight months before it convenes. Interests are under its control which concern the brotherhood generally, and these become subjects of discussion, and sometimes of official action, during the Summer and Fall of the preceding year. The election of delegates by the different Elderships is a matter calculated to awaken interest. There are ambitions, if not rivalries, to be taken note of. Questions of general concern are matured, changes in methods and plans are proposed, and often delegations are instructed on questions of special interest to their respective Elderships. In this way, too, publicity is given to these questions, and they receive consideration by other delegations. There have been instances when some of these questions have been discussed, or specially cited to the attention of delegates-elect. This was the case in March, 1887, when D. M. Bare, an East Pennsylvania lay delegate, addressed an open letter "To the Delegates of the General Eldership," in which he called their attention to resolutions which had been introduced at the meeting of the Incorporate Board in June, 1886, and were referred to the General Eldership. They proposed a radical, but a more economical and efficient, change in the system of collecting funds for various purposes. The body convened at West Newton, Westmoreland county, Pa., May 24, 1887. In the evening by reason of the declination of C. H. Forney to preach the Opening Sermon, and his alternate, it fell to the lot of George Sandoe, of Illinois, President of the Executive Board, to officiate, using for his text II. Tim. ii. 2. The session was a short one, as final adjournment took place on Monday evening, about 10 o'clock, May 30th, having in that time held thirteen sittings of about three hours each. The Journal, which with two exceptions had been published in The Advocate, was printed in a supplement of five full pages. The following is the enrollment as the Eldership was constituted by R. H. Bolton and I. W. Markley:

East Pennsylvania Eldership. Ministerial Delegates—C. H. Forney, D. D., J. M. Carvell, A. H. Long, G. Sigler, B. F. Beck, J. B. Lockwood, D. S. Shoop, J. W. Deeshong. Lay—S. Knisley, J. H. Redsecker, Samuel Myers, S. L. Hershey, D. M. Bare, J. C. Forney, J. H. Abraham, J. H. Esterline.

The Kansas Eldership had also elected R. T. Sargent, ministerial, and J. N. Smith and N. Hill, lay delegates. The German Eldership had elected a lay delegate—Chas. E. Quail. Texas and Arkansas Eldership had chosen two ministerial delegates—B. Ober and G. T. Bell, but no delegate. Maine Eldership had made no election. The Missouri Eldership had elected D. Blakely, ministerial, and Eli Blackstone, lay delegates. The Michigan Eldership is not on the list, as no delegate was present, although J. B. White, Wm. Rice, J. M. Ireland and J. Partridge were elected delegates. Illinois Eldership being one short on its lay delegation, Mary Berkstresser, a licensed minister, was substituted, making the first woman delegate to sit in the General Eldership.

When ballots were taken for officers, T. Koogle was elected Speaker; I. W. Markley, Journalizing Clerk, and B. F. Beck, Transcribing Clerk. After the Report of the Treasurer was audited, I. Schrader was elected to that office. An effort was made to introduce the "unit rule," requiring delegations to vote as one on all questions on which they may claim the right so to do." The Eldership did not take kindly to such an innovation. The resolutions to which Bare had called the attention of delegates in March were brought up by a Special Committee previously appointed, which recommended that "each year in June, beginning with this Eldership, the Board of Missions make an estimate of the amount of funds required to carry on the work during the succeeding year, and apportion the same among the several Elderships." These amounts the Elderships would collect in their own way. This became the fixed plan of securing funds for general missionary purposes. The Treasurer's Report showed receipts for missions for the year ending May, 1885, $1,632.96; the year ending May, 1886, $1,831.77, and the year ending June, 1887, $1,504.40. Parts of these amounts were interest on Permanent Missionary Fund, which in June, 1887, aggregated $7,677.80. The total amount of bequests during the triennium was $1,835.00. The success of mission work in the Indian Territory was "most gratifying," as "359 members of the Church of God were enrolled, and seven young preachers were raised up to preach the gospel in the Indian Nation." J. R. H. Latchaw, Secretary and Treasurer of the Foreign Mission Fund reported "total cash receipts in treasury of $515.75." The Report of the Board of Publication stated that "The Sunbeam" was started in January, 1885, of which Sadie R. Hemperly was editor until the Fall of 1886, when Lydia A. Forney was elected. Winebrenner's "Brief View of the Church of God" was republished, after undergoing extensive revision by C. H. Forney, R. L. Byrnes, W. B. Allen and George Sigler, with a Preface by Forney. The net profits of "The Sunday-School Gem" for the three years were $482.92; of the "Workman and Lesson Leaves," $536.83; on "The Sunbeam" there was a loss of $10.97. The Advocate from a balance in 1884 of $1,634.55, on May 23, 1887, showed a net balance of $3,094.78. The change of form of the paper was agreed upon. The new Board of Publication consisted of D. M. Bare, J. H. Redsecker and J. C. Forney. The following were elected as the Executive Board: George Sandoe, J. H. Besore, S. L. Hershey, T. Koogle, J. H. Chew. Ballot for a Board of Education resulted in the election of J. R. H. Latchaw, C. H. Forney, W. B. Allen, J. M. Carvell, W. I. Berkstresser. This Board approved the work at Barkeyville.

Academy, and favored its "earnest prosecution," to be "tributary and auxiliary to the College at Findlay, Ohio." The new Board of Missions was composed of M. S. Newcomer, R. H. Bolton, George Sigler, I. W. Markley, R. L. Byrnes. "C. H. Forney offered a series of amendments to the Constitution," which were approved by a committee, and adopted by the Eldership. The election of J. R. H. Latchaw as President of Findlay College was ratified. The Committee on Education, Forney, Latchaw, Schrader, Alexander, Newcomer, Winbigler, reported two items of special interest: The endowment of "The Sabbath-school Professorship of Systematic Theology" "by the contributions of Children's College Day," and fixing "the first Tuesday in next September as the time for dedicating Findlay College." The first triennial report of "the Board of Directors of the Publishing House and Book Rooms" was made by the Treasurer, C. H. Forney, showing a net cash balance of $289.04. He recommended "that the Board be authorized to secure real estate for a Publishing House," which was approved. In addition to the Board of Publication, the following were elected to constitute the Board of Directors: J. M. Carvell, George Sigler, C. H. Forney, Samuel Knisley. Editors elected were: Church Advocate, C. H. Forney, D. D.; "The S. S. Gem," Geo. Sigler; "Workman," J. M. Carvell; "Sunbam," Lydia A. Forney. The Southern Indiana Eldership was "granted the privilege to unite with the Indiana Eldership." A strong protest was adopted "against the publication of Sunday papers." Huff, Lockwood, B. F. Bolton, McKlveen and Ritchie, Committee on Temperance, secured the adoption of a resolution declaring, "That all kinds of license, or tax, favoring the liquor traffic, whether high or low, are wrong in principle, and demand the opposition of the Church and good men and women everywhere." The plan to co-operate with the Free Baptist Church in Foreign Mission work, adopted in 1884, was reversed, and it was agreed as "the sense of this body that when we enter upon Foreign Mission work, that we do so upon territory our own, and relying upon our own resources." Of two former members of the General Eldership it had to be recorded, that they were claimed by Death, for "Death, cold usurer, had seized his bonded debtors," in the persons of Daniel Wertz and Thomas Hickernell, concerning whom Chairman Sandoe, of the Committee on Obituaries, reported eulogistic resolutions.

16th General Eldership.—For the first time in its history of forty-five years, the General Eldership crossed the Mississippi River, and held its sixteenth session in 1890 in the "Hawkeye State." Sixteen Elderships represented in this supreme body were entitled under the constitutional Rule to one hundred and two delegates; but as late as May 21st, the names of only eighty-seven delegates had been reported. These consisted in large "part of the most experienced and best qualified and trained ministers and laymen of their Elderships." The Executive Board had failed to appoint a minister to preach the Opening Sermon; the pastor of the church was absent, and so when the delegates assembled near the village of North Liberty, Johnson county, Iowa, on the evening of June 4th John Huff, Iowa, lay manager of pre-Eldership interests, "was appointed conductor of the evening meeting," held in "the meeting-house" of North Bend Church. A. H. Long led in the devotional services; Jacob Lininger "delivered a befitting and warm welcome in behalf of the Iowa Eldership," after which the "Conductor introduced respectively the following brethren, who delivered responses: T. Koogle, Dr. C. H. Forney, J. R. H. Latchaw, A. M., W. B. Allen, W. R. Covert, W. W. Lovett, Geo. Seilhammer, Geo. Sigler, C. S. Bolton, J. H. Redsecker and D. B. Zook." Of the ninety enrolled, however, seven were absent, reducing the total to eighty-three, of which number forty-eight were ministers and thirty-five laymen. The vote for President resulted in the choice of W. W. Lovett; Journalizing Clerk, W. I. Berkstresser; Transcribing Clerk, F. L. Nicodemus. John Huff was at a later sitting unanimously elected Treasurer. The Board of Missions was called on the first afternoon for its Report. It showed conversions for the first year, 386; baptized, 227; fellowshipped, 354; new churches formed, 12. Missouri for the three years reported "progress slow numerically," with a total membership of 618; organizations, 21; ministers, 20. The summarized account for all the fields for three years was: Conversions, 583; new churches, 27; accessions, 656; baptized, 425. The total in the Foreign Mission Fund reported by Latchaw was $1,135.96. The names of the new Board of Missions were M. S. Newcomer, R. H. Bolton, George Sigler, W. B. Allen, J. C. Forncrook. Executive Board elected was J. H. Besore, T. Koogle, W. W. Lovett, W. R. Covert, B. F. Beck. Board of Education—C. H. Forney, J. R. H. Latchaw, W. I. Berkstresser, D. S. Shoop, J. M. Cassel. Board of Directors, in addition to the Board of Publication—S. Knisley, B. F. Beck, Geo. Sigler, G. W. Seilhammer. Board of Publication—D. M. Bare, J. H. Redecker, J. M. Carvell. A Committee on Credentials, on motion of Forney, was for the first time created. Also a regular Committee on Business, whose Report named twenty-six items. The Treasurer's Report showed receipts to have been: For year ending 1888, $1,403.72; year ending 1889, $1,946.08; year ending 1890, $2,573.88. The periodicals reported as follows: "Gem," net gain, $128.69; "Workman," loss for three years, $305.55; "Sunbeam," loss for three years, $39.97. The Advocate reported a net balance of $3,828.55. Editors elected were: The Advocate, C. H. Forney, D. D.; "Gem," George Sigler; "Sunbeam," Lydia A. Forney; "Workman," a corps of five editors, with J. H. Redecker, Managing Editor. A "communication was received from the sisters," assigning reasons for, and asking for the privilege of, organizing "a Woman's General Missionary Society." It was signed by Sisters Covert and Grimm, West Pennsylvania; Shaffer and Bolton, Ohio Eldership; Schelly and Lovett, Indiana Eldership; Hodges and Ritchie, Illinois Eldership; Jeffries and Besore, Iowa Eldership; Aller and Breidenstine, Nebraska Eldership, and Blakely and Eckart, Missouri Eldership. Also as "representative" of Findlay College, Mrs. Latchaw, and of the General Eldership, Mary Berkstresser. This memorial was favorably acted upon, amended as follows: "This Society shall co-operate with the Board of Missions of the General Eldership in its plans of work and the appointment of missionaries, endeavoring to work harmoniously with it in the advancement of a common interest, and shall submit to it, for its approval, a complete annual report of the work of said Society." State and local societies under it were to be organized, and a committee of seventeen was named "to draft a Constitution to govern said Society."

"Death, with terrible tread, has entered our ranks," reported the Committee on Obituaries, "and left us but the grave and the glorious example of Elder George Sandoe. He was an able minister of the New Testament; clear, sound, logical and convincing. He combined the elements of a true and noble manhood with a conscientious integrity that was never sullied by a breath of suspicion." Charles Manchester was authorized to publish a missionary paper on certain conditions. The soliciting of funds through The Advocate was forbidden, "unless authorized by the Eldership of which the individual is a member." The College was heartily commended. The supreme importance of unity and uniformity was forcibly set forth. The prevalent order in observing the ordinances was set forth as that which the body approved. It also deprecated any tendency to introduce any change in regard to posture in prayer, and insisted that the custom of, "kneeling as the true posture in prayer" be maintained. Transfers are declared as not severing the relation of a minister to his Eldership until deposited and received by another Eldership. The request made by East Pennsylvania churches in Schuylkill county to have the Charter of the German Eldership revoked was deferred until the next General Eldership, on the ground that it was not presented in regular form. Total abstinence and prohibition were strongly endorsed. The appointment of a minister to Ft. Scott, and General Missionaries to Nebraska, Missouri, Indian Territory, Arkansas, California and Oregon, as made by the Board of Missions, were approved.

17th General Eldership.—The session of the General Eldership in 1893 was anticipated with unconcealed anxiety. On May 31st it was characterized editorially as one "of unusual interest." It was forecasted that "Grave constitutional questions will demand discussion. Great public interests are in jeopardy. New lines of Church activity are to be marked out. The polity of the Church must be defended and maintained in the face of possible defections; or else important, if not vital, principles in our system of co-operation, already set at naught by a few, will have to be abandoned by the body. And some of these questions are essentially of such a nature that calm and unimpassioned discussion will be next to impossible. Perhaps the most perplexing of all the questions to be discussed and acted on are those which relate to Findlay College." In retrospect, on July 19th the Editor said: "The General Eldership of 1893 was a thunder storm! It was also a love-feast." Being held in the College Chapel, Findlay, Ohio, on account of the meeting of the Board of Trustees and College Commencement, the Eldership did not convene on the usual date in May, but on Friday morning, June 23rd. The Opening Sermon was delivered on the previous evening by G. W. Seilhammer, who took for his text John viii. 1, 2. The Roll of delegates was read by W. I. Berkstesser, the Journalizing Clerk of 1890, corrected and amended, as follows:

On a ballot for officers the following were chosen: M. S. Newcomer, President; W. I. Berkstresser, Journalizing Clerk; Chas. Manchester, Transcribing Clerk.

Reports of periodicals showed the following net balances: S. S. Gem, $620.81; Workman, $865.93; Sunbeam, $178.36 loss; The Church Advocate, $5,344.72. The Treasurer's Report made a good exhibit of the various Funds, showing that on June 1, 1893, the various Funds stood as follows: Permanent Mission, $8,757.80; General Mission, $900.60; Pacific Coast, $107.50; S. S. Gem, $565.72; Freedman's Aid, $32.00; Contingent, $122.14. The Board of Directors of the Publishing House and Book Store was given "discretionary powers to purchase a suitable property in the city of Harrisburg." The Trustees of Findlay College presented a "Memorial to the General Eldership," which stated that "the Board did continue to contract debts to carry on the school, until said debt approximates $24,000.00." It also advised the General Eldership that unless relief is provided and co-operation secured the College with all that pertains to it would be lost. A committee of one from each delegation was selected, to which the Memorial was referred. This committee recommended a loan to cover the indebtedness; the putting of a collecting agent in the field; a redistribution of trustees, and directing "each minister of the Annual Elderships to collect an amount equal to one dollar or more from each member on his field." The Board was empowered to place a mortgage on the College property in order to secure means to pay the indebtedness.

Clark county, Mo., was "placed within the boundaries of the Iowa Eldership." The boundaries of the Maine Eldership were "made to include the territory of Massachusetts and New Hampshire." The Indian Territory and Oklahoma Eldership was chartered, and the boundary lines of the two territories were made the boundaries of said Eldership. St. Louis, Mo., was made part of the Southern Indiana Eldership. The Oregon and Washington Eldership was granted a charter, "to include the boundaries of said States." "The charter and vested privileges of the German Eldership" were revoked and withdrawn, and the churches of said Eldership were to become identified with the East Pennsylvania Eldership. Boards and editors were elected as follows: Executive—W. W. Lovett, T. Koogle, B. F. Beck, R. L. Byrnes and W. R. Covert. Education—C. H. Forney, J. R. H. Latchaw, S. G. Yahn, W. I. Berkstresser, W. P. Small. Publication—D. M. Bare, D. S. Shoop, C. I. Brown. Missions—G. Sigler, M. S. Newcomer, W. B. Allen, C. Manchester, D. B. Zook. Treasurer, J. Huff. Free Baptist Board of Foreign Missions, J. R. H. Latchaw; Editors: Advocate, C. H. Forney; Gem, G. Sigler; Workman, D. S. Shoop; Sunbeam, Lydia A. Forney. The Y. P. S. C. E. was "recognized as an agency well adapted to the care and development of young Christians," and the Department in The Advocate devoted to Y. P. S. C. E. work was approved. C. H. Forney presented the request of the East Pennsylvania Eldership for "permission to change its name, style and title so as to read, 'The East Pennsylvania Association of Churches of God.'" It was referred to the Committee on Revision. It reported, "that the Annual Elderships consider and vote upon the advisability" of the change, "with instruction to report to the next General Eldership." The subject was also to be discussed in The Advocate, the Editor to lead in the discussion. Violations of the General Eldership Constitution were reported, and acted upon. The most important provision referred to was the action of the Ohio Eldership in abolishing the itinerancy. The action was disapproved, and the Ohio Eldership was instructed to adhere to the polity of the General Eldership. The recommendation of the Revision Committee to substitute a Life Certificate of Ordination for the annual license was "referred to the Annual Elderships for action." The form of the proposed Certificate was agreed upon, and was submitted. The action of the Board of Education, recommending "the preparation of a suitable course of studies for adoption by the various Annual Elderships" was approved. A radical innovation submitted by the Board of Missions was adopted, viz.: to change Art. II. of the Constitution so as to provide, in addition to the regular delegation from each Eldership, that "one delegate from the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society" to be organized, "duly elected by the Society," be granted a seat, with all the rights and powers of Eldership delegates. To this Foreign Missionary Society the Treasurer of the Foreign Mission Fund was to pay all moneys in his hands, and the Treasurer of the Woman's Missionary Society was to pay over "all funds in the treasury collected for Home Missions," to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership.

18th General Eldership.—In 1893 the General Eldership adjourned to meet in Muncie, Delaware county, Ind., in 1896. But the church at Muncie became so scattered and weak that it was unable to entertain the Eldership, and it became necessary to select another place. But there was no specific power granted in the Constitution to any officer or Board to make a change either as to the time or place of its meeting. "The General Eldership," says the Constitution, "shall meet every three years at such time and place as shall be agreed on at each consecutive Eldership." The Executive Board, however, decided to make a change as to the place, and upon petition of the Standing Committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, Harrisburg, Pa., was selected. W. R. Covert was a member of the Executive Board, and a member of the Southern Indiana Eldership in whose territory Muncie is located. He objected to having a place selected outside of said Eldership territory, and being outvoted by the other members of the Board he resigned his membership, and also sent in a strong protest against its action, with a "charge of illegality in the Board's changing the place of holding the General Eldership." The Board took no action on his resignation, as "it was only mailed five days prior to the meeting of the General Eldership," but referred the whole document to the General Eldership. It was then placed in the hands of a committee, of which C. H. Forney was the Chairman, and Chas. Manchester, Secretary. This committee's report was adopted, which declared "that it is within the constitutional powers of the Executive Board to change the place of holding the General Eldership, and we recommend that the action of the Board be approved and ratified as legal in fact and form." But the opposition to the change whereby the session was held in almost the extreme eastern part of the territory operated against a large attendance. It was inferred that the object was to reduce the membership to a minority of delegates elected, and to question in the courts the legality of its actions, as a similar question had been raised in the Evangelical Association. On Wednesday evening, May 27, 1896, the delegates to the eighteenth triennial session of the General Eldership met in the Fourth Street Bethel, Harrisburg, capital of the county of Dauphin and of the State of Pennsylvania, to hear the Opening Sermon, which was delivered by the veteran G. W. Wilson, delegate from the Ohio Eldership, who preached from Rev. xiv. 6, 7—"The Gospel Ministry, Its Attributes and Benefits." On Thursday morning, after "half an hour spent in a prayer and praise service," the Eldership was constituted by the Clerks of the preceding session. The enrollment was as follows:

East Pennsylvania. Ministers—C. H. Forney, D. D., D. S. Shoop, G. W. Getz, B. F. Beck, C. I. Brown, B. S., G. Sigler, D. D., J. W. Deshong, C. C. Bartels. Laymen—D. M. Bare, S. Knisley, H. J. Forney, H. S. Burket, Levi Kendig, J. F. Wiggins, S. L. Hershey, J. Koser.

Fifty-three delegates were enrolled, thirty-two being teaching elders, and twenty-one, ruling elders. The Maine Eldership having withdrawn from the General Eldership, there were seventeen Annual Elderships entitled to representation, with a total representation of ninety-six. R. L. Byrnes was elected President; W. I. Berkstresser, First Clerk; M. K. Smith, Second Clerk; D. M. Bare, Treasurer, but declined. Findlay College was in such a critical condition that the Board of Trustees adopted a "Memorial" to the General Eldership, asking it to decide the question "whether the school shall continue to run, or shall close," and in case it was to continue, "to provide ways and means by which funds in cash, or absolute securities, will be furnished to do so." This the Eldership did, and insured the continuance of the College. As no representatives of the German Eldership appeared, the action of 1893, revoking its Charter, was confirmed, and C. H. Forney was reappointed Attorney-in-fact to resume the law suit pending in the courts of Schuylkill county, Pa. The W. G. M. S. elected five "fraternal delegates" to the General Eldership, which were present, including Clara Landes, appointed Missionary to India. An evening was granted them during the session "in which to hold a missionary meeting." At their instance the Constitution was so amended as to "admit a Woman's Board of Missions, consisting of five persons, elected by the W. G. M. S., which shall act conjointly with the regular Board of Missions on all questions relating to Foreign Missions and to the Home Mission work of the W. G. M. S." The financial interests, including the different periodicals, were in a gratifying condition. The Treasurer, John Huff, reported Permanent Mission Fund, $12,104.05; General Mission Fund, $1,503.06; Foreign Mission Fund, $1,200.00; Freedmen's Aid Fund, $40.00; S. S. Gem Fund, $980.01; Contingent Fund, $53.71. The "Gem" also had a cash balance of $651.47; the "Workman Quarterly," $1,313.28; the "Sunbeam," $357.75; the net balance of The Advocate, $7,188.57; net gain of the Central Book-Store, $4,817.47. Editors were elected as follows: The Advocate, C. H. Forney; "Gem," W. A. Lavery; "S. S. Quarterly," D. S. Shoop; "Sunbeam," Lydia A. Forney; "Missionary Signal," C. Manchester; Assistant Editor of The Advocate, S. G. Yahn. The different Boards were elected as follows: Executive Board—W. W. Lovett, R. L. Byrnes, B. F. Beck, W. H. McKlveen, W. B. Allen. Board of Education—S. G. Yahn, Mary Berkstresser, T. Koogle, M. K. Smith, J. W. Dehong. Board of Directors—C. H. Forney, H. J. Forney, J. F. Wiggins, C. C. Bartels, and the Board of Publication, consisting of D. M. Bare, C. I. Brown and D. S. Shoop. Board of Missions—G. Sigler, C. Manchester, W. I. Berkstresser, J. C. Fornecrook and C. H. Forney. The latter, after serving to near the close of the Eldership, resigned, and C. C. Bartels was declared elected. The Editor of The Advocate was required to give bond in the sum of $10,000.00. T. Koogle and M. K. Smith were appointed Attorneys-in-fact and empowered "to enforce settlement with J. R. H. Latchaw, Treasurer of the Foreign Mission Fund." Four items of business on the Journal of 1893 were acted upon. The first was the "change of Eldership titles." C. H. Forney offered resolutions changing "Church of God" to "Churches of God," and "Eldership" to "Association." C. Manchester led the discussion in opposition to the second amendment. The vote stood—ayes, 14; nays, 39. On the first proposed change the vote was—ayes, 25; nays, 20. The second item related to "Life Ordination," which was "postponed for three years." The third, "relating to the General Eldership Delegate Fund" was negatived, and the system continued, "that each Annual Eldership pay the expenses of its own delegates." The fourth, "the change from the itinerancy in the Ohio Eldership," was settled by said Eldership voluntarily rescinding its action on the subject after a year's trial. The action on the temperance question declared that it "does not deem it within the providence of this body to dictate how any man shall vote, yet it is the sense of the Church of God in General Eldership assembled that men should not be abettors of this legalized rum traffic by voting for a man or party that stands pledged to the license system; and we do most earnestly urge the brotherhood to come out of affiliation with the corrupt political parties that sustain the evil." On the use of tobacco the Eldership spoke

In condemnation of the "filthy and injurious habit," and ministers are to abstain from it, or "at most use it moderately, and that our licentiates be required to abandon the use of it." Covetousness was condemned, and "resistance to this the greatest sin of the age" was advised. The cruelties perpetrated against "our brethren in Armenia by the relentless Turks" were viewed with unfeigned abhorrence, and the sending of relief to these sufferers was urged. An aggregate of $2,020.00 was assessed on the Annual Elderships for frontier missions. Two Annual Elderships were chartered, and their titles fixed, as follows: "The Arkansas Eldership of the churches of God (colored)," and "The Southern West Virginia Eldership of the churches of God." Without including the assessments made at this Eldership, the Annual Elderships were in arrears to the General Eldership for Contingent Fund, $782.17, and for Mission Fund, $4,121.32. One of the items of special interest at this session of the General Eldership was "the presentation by Ralph Laverty, son of D. A. L. Laverty, deceased, in behalf of the young men of the Fourth Street church, to the General Eldership, of a gavel and block, made of wood and stone taken from the Glades homestead, the birthplace of John Winebrenner."

19th General Eldership.—"The General Eldership of 1899," is the testimony of R. L. Byrnes, "was, if not superior to, the equal of, any in the history of the churches of God." The Annual Elderships elected delegates who could have had no superiors as faithful representatives both of themselves and of the interests of the churches at large. Great and grave questions confronted the body, the solution of which would affect all the churches and all the interests under the care of the General Eldership. And at its close Byrnes wrote: "All questions were presented fairly, considered carefully, discussed intelligently. The discussions were singularly free from bitterness and captious criticism." And the Editor of The Advocate wrote: "A spirit of loving fraternity prevailed. Conclusions reached were accepted in good faith, and the deliberations were free from acrimony, asperity and virulence. It was a blessed meeting, one which the members will always recall as having reached the high water mark of generous and kindly fraternal feeling." The session was held at Decatur, Macon county, Ill., and the Opening Sermon was delivered on Wednesday evening, May 31st, by D. S. Shoop, from Acts v. 20—"The Dignity, Authority and Theme of the Gospel Ministry." On Thursday morning M. K. Smith and W. J. Schaner constituted the Eldership, when the following enrollment was made:

Of those enrolled fifty-nine were teaching elders, and thirty-two, ruling elders, a total of ninety-one. Eleven were absent; there was one substitute, making a total membership of eighty-one. The election for officers resulted in the choice of C. T. Fox, President; W. J. Schaner, Journalizing Clerk; M. K. Smith, Transcribing Clerk. A gavel was presented to the President by Clara Landes, missionary in India, and made of native wood. Boards were elected as follows: Board of Publication—D. M. Bare, C. I. Brown, D. S. Shoop; Board of Directors—C. H. Forney, H. J. Forney, I. A. MacDannald, J. F. Wiggins; Executive Board—W. B. Allen, R. L. Byrnes, H. H. Sphier; Board of Missions—Geo. Sigler, M. S. Newcomer, S. G. Yahn, W. R. Covert, Chas. Manchester. Upon the death of John Huff, Treasurer, M. K. Smith was elected to that office by the Board of Incorporation June 15, 1898, and was re-elected by the Eldership. The editors elected were as follows: The Advocate, C. H. Forney; "Gem," W. A. Lavery; "Sunbeam" and "Primary Quarterly," Lydia A. Forney; "Lesson Quarterly," D. S. Shoop. The "Missionary Signal" was ordered to be discontinued. Amendments to the Constitution were made, changing the number of members of the Executive Board from five to three; substituting the words "Certificate of Ordination" for the word "license;" changing Art. XXVII. so as to read, "No person shall be considered an accredited minister in the churches of God without a regular Certificate of Ordination. Said Certificate to be given for life, subject to recall for any cause which the Eldership granting it may deem sufficient. And each candidate for ordination shall be put under promise to surrender his Certificate of Ordination when demanded by the Eldership with which he is identified." Article XIV. was amended by adding: "And no final action shall be taken by any Board without the presence and vote of a majority of its members." By request of the Board of Education an amendment was adopted discontinuing said Board. The Board of Directors of the Bookstore reported a net gain of $5,442.49 during the three years. The "Workman Quarterly," the "S. S. Gem" and the "Sunbeam" added $1,025.80 to their surplus in 1896. The net income of The Advocate during the triennium was $2,261.34, and its total net surplus, $9,449.91. The delinquencies by the Annual Elderships on their assessments had increased to $5,590.14 due the General Mission Fund, and $1,212.05 due the Contingent Fund. On three items actions of the Board of Incorporation were either declared illegal, or stricken out as being inadvisable. The disposition of the Eldership was to hold all its Boards to a strict accountability. The "Canteen business as carried on among the soldiers of the Government," the Eldership "regarded as an evil ruinous to thousands of the noble young men sent but from the homes of the country." The "enactment of a law by which the canteen is to be abolished" was a subject for congratulation, and it was recommended that the Government have the constitutionality of the Act of Congress tested in the Supreme Court. The "organization known as the Anti-Saloon League" was strongly endorsed. A somewhat pessimistic view of the state of religion taken by the Committee was sustained by the Eldership. The declension was regarded as general, and as affecting pastors and people; that it is manifested in the "decreased stalwartness of many church members; its subjects seem more effeminate, less aggressive, and more indifferent in defense of 'all the words of this life;' unconverted members are received into the churches; the ordinances of God's house are ignored; members live formal lives, not to say ungodly." There are "too many pleasure-seeking, mercenary people in the churches." "The abounding of works on higher criticism," the increase of "clubs and societies," and the "worldly methods resorted to in carrying forward the Lord's work" are given as causes for the prevailing spiritual declension. The Permanent Foreign Mission Fund was increased by a bequest of $1,000.00 by Samuel Eberly, Mechanicsburg, Pa. The General Eldership's control over Annual Elderships, as per Article XXIV. of the Constitution, was reaffirmed, and the method of making said Article practical was defined. It was recommended that "the imposition of hands should not be a part of any ceremony of ordination."

20th General Eldership.—The session of the General Eldership of 1902 was made memorable by its action on the "Special Report of the Board of Missions" on the organization of a Woman's General Missionary Society to take the place of the one organized in 1890. The questions raised and discussed touching the latter organization for the preceding two years had created considerable friction and tension, especially west of Pennsylvania. But after careful thought and a free expression of sentiments, the Special Report of the Board was adopted by a vote on Roll call of 60 ayes, and 4 nays. The solution of the difficult problem seemed such a fortunate one that there was quite general rejoicing, except on the part of the original W. G. M. S.. At this session also the first Report of the "Central Printing and Publishing House of the Churches of God" was made, an event which was greatly appreciated by the General Eldership and all the churches. The Eldership convened at Idaville, White county, Ind., and was in session from May 28th to June 3rd. On the evening of the 28th Dr. Charles T. Fox, Findlay, Ohio, delivered the Opening Sermon, from Isaiah VI. 1-8. Theme—"A Closer Walk With God." On the morning of the 29th W. J. Schaner and Charles H. Gatchell were appointed to constitute the Eldership, assisted by a Committee on Credentials, consisting of Forney, Yahn, Manchester, Newcomer, Covert, Heltibridge and Zook. This committee derived its importance from the fact that there was a new basis of representation. The Roll was approved, as follows:

Seven of these were absent. Eleven classed as lay delegates were ministers. The election for officers resulted in the choice of A. C. Garner, President; W. J. Schaner, Journalizing Clerk; Charles H. Gatchell, Transcribing Clerk. Later Prof. M. K. Smith was elected Treasurer. During the preceding three years the Board of Missions had spent $4,477.79 in the support of mission work, and reported 399 conversions, 529 accessions to churches, and but "few churches organized because much of the time of missionaries was spent in building up churches which had gone down for want of care." The income of the Board was $6,920.22 from the General Mission Fund, and from Annual Eldership collections. S. G. Yahn, A. C. Garner, J. C. Forncrook, C. I. Brown and J. Bernard were elected as the Board of Missions. The Constitution was revised so as to make the General Eldership to consist of one ordained minister for every eight ordained pastors, and for every fraction above three-eighths, and an equal number of elders, except ministers are substituted in their places. Also making it possible that the Treasurer may be a member of the Eldership, or of some church of God, or a bank, firm or corporation. And provision was made to change the place of holding the sessions of the Eldership upon petition of a majority of the delegations of one-third of the Annual Elderships. The title of the presiding officer was changed to President. The Board of Incorporation was empowered to oversee the investments made by the Treasurer. The Revision Committee making these recommendations was composed of C. H. Forney, S. G. Yahn, C. T. Fox, M. S. Newcomer and W. R. Covert. The editors elected were: C. H. Forney, Editor-in-Chief, and C. I. Brown, Assistant Editor, of The Advocate; W. A. Lavery, of the "Gem;" Lydia A. Forney, of the "Sunbeam" and "Primary Quarterly," and D. S. Shoop, of the "Workman Quarterly." The Treasurer's bond was fixed at $25,000.00. The first action was taken to create a Church Extension Fund, by the appointment of a committee to consider the question. The boundary line for frontier mission work was fixed as approximately "the western and southern boundary of Iowa and the Mississippi river," east of which no missionaries were to be appointed by the Board of Missions. The new Executive Board consisted of Byrnes, Spiher and Kline. The Board of Publication was Bare, Shoop and MacDannald. In addition to these three, the following were elected as the Board of Directors of the Publishing House and Book Rooms: C. H. Forney, J. F. Wiggins, H. J. Forney and C. I. Brown. Anticipating an early decision in the German Eldership case, the Eldership authorized the Board of Incorporation "in the name and in behalf of the General Eldership to take whatever steps may be necessary to enforce the resolutions and the actions and proceedings of the General Eldership so had in 1893." It also granted the German Eldership "a further hearing in the premises" if desired by it, and to that end it agreed that a special meeting of the General Eldership might be called. The body "pledged its unconditional opposition to the whole rum traffic, and to lend its active assistance to every legitimate effort looking toward its entire suppression." The state of religion was declared to be "not as satisfactory as we would desire to see it;" "the gospel as lived by many is different from what it was in the days of its beginning." There were four cases of "appeals" brought before the Committee on Appeals. The Indiana Eldership vs. W. R. Covert, who was adjudged to have violated Art. XXIX. of the Constitution in the Idaville church case. But the boundaries were not changed, nor the Idaville church transferred to the Indiana Eldership. S. P. P. Young, West Pennsylvania Eldership, appealed from an action annulling his Life Certificate of Ordination. The appeal was dismissed. The other two cases were compromised, the one related to complaints by the W. G. M. S. against certain brethren for publishing certain articles which reflected on the work of the Society. The questions of Sanctification and faith-healing were brought up on a document presented by the Standing Committee of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, where "very destructive schisms have been caused in several of our churches by teaching" these doctrines. The Eldership declared clearly against "the so-called second-work sanctification doctrine, as a perversion of the orthodox, scriptural teaching on this important subject." And that "faith-healing is not in harmony with the practice and teachings of the churches of God." The Ministerial Register of the ordained ministers of the different Annual Elderships contained four hundred and seventy names.

21st General Eldership.—The Ministerial Register of 1902 was evidently incomplete, as in 1905 the number of names enrolled in the Journal of the General Eldership was four hundred and eighty-two, with five of the western Elderships not reported. The German Eldership case remained unsettled. Representatives had been invited to attend this session of the General Eldership with a view "to adjust all matters in litigation in a mutual and amicable manner." But though representatives were present, they had no authority to agree to any basis of settlement, and accordingly the General Eldership reaffirmed its actions of 1893 and 1902, and "instructed the Board of Incorporation and its Attorney-in-Fact, C. H. Forney, to take whatever measures it may deem proper and legal to enforce the rights and authority of the General Eldership in the premises." The Eldership convened at Mt. Pleasant, Westmoreland county, Pa., on Wednesday evening, May 24, 1905, when the Opening Sermon was delivered by A. C. Garner, from John xii. 21:—"Plea for Christian Unity." At the first sitting, on Thursday morning, W. J. Schaner and C. Fatland constituted the Eldership, assisted by C. H. Forney, C. T. Fox, H. H. Spiher, R. S. Mackey and O. A. Newlin, Committee on Credentials. The official Roll was made up of the following delegates:

East Pennsylvania Eldership. Ministerial—C. H. Forney, C. H. Grove, I. A.

MacDannald, F. W. McGuire, G. W. Getz, D. S. Shoop, W. J. Schaner. Lay—D. M. Bare, J. F. Wiggins, H. J. Forney, H. M. Angle, A. L. Bierbower, S. L. Hershey, J. F. Hummel.

West Pennsylvania. Ministerial—S. G. Yahn, R. L. Byrnes, J. L. Updegraph. Lay—T. S. Woods, George W. Byrnes, W. H. Guyer.

Missouri. Ministerial—G. L. Chapman.

Southern Indiana—No delegate.

Kansas. Ministerial—W. E. Tuttle. Lay—O. A. Newlin.

Oklahoma and Indian Territory. Ministerial—J. W. Burns. Lay—J. D. Fulson.

Arkansas Eldership (Colored)—No delegate.

Texas and Arkansas. Ministerial—None. Lay—J. D. Henson.

Nebraska—No delegate.

Oregon and Washington. Ministerial—J. F. Schoch. Lay—J. C. Garrigus.

Former German Eldership. Minister—J. M. Fahl. Layman—Oscar Mengel.

The unusual transaction of unseating a delegate after being enrolled occurred in the case of the West Virginia Eldership, North, when at the sitting on the fifth day Covert and J. W. Mackey, West Virginia Eldership, North, were "unseated by action of the Eldership." Thirteen of the lay delegates were ministers. The Eldership elected C. H. Forney, President, who made the innovation of "appointing C. I. Brown Assistant to the President during the sittings of the General Eldership." C. H. Gatchell was elected Journalizing Clerk, and W. J. Schaner, Transcribing Clerk, and M. K. Smith, Treasurer. Resolutions submitted by C. H. Forney called for the appointment of a "Judiciary Committee, Special," to "inquire into all matters pertaining to the Woman's General Missionary Society organized in 1903;" "to hear all grievances," and "present its conclusions, which should constitute a good and reasonable basis for general co-operation in carrying out the plan agreed upon in 1902, and put into effect by the Convention at Findlay in 1903." These were adopted, and the members of the Committee, as selected by the delegations represented on it, were: C. H. Forney, I. A. MacDannald, G. W. Byrnes, C. T. Fox, I. W. Markley, J. S. Walls and C. Fatland. The W. G. M. S. of 1900 had kept up its organization and continued its work in three of the Annual Elderships, and in India, and declined to conform to the action of the General Eldership in 1902 as carried into effect in 1903 in the organization of the new W. G. M. S. In Ohio and Illinois it still had State organizations and some of the local societies. In Iowa it practically held all the local societies under its State W. M. S. The Special Committee recommended that "the Iowa W. M. S., together with such W. M. Societies in Illinois and Ohio as may so desire, shall be permitted to continue to support Miss Landes and her co-laborers as heretofore, and meanwhile all labor for general co-operation," with other subsidiary recommendations. These were all adopted with one voice, and there was common rejoicing over what was considered an equitable and final adjustment. This action, construed in line with the Constitution, the action of the General Eldership in 1902, and the Convention of 1903, with the approval of all that it did, meant the following: 1. That the W. G. M. S. of 1890 was eliminated. 2. That the support of Miss Landes was to continue as provided for until her return home in 1906. 3. That her reappointment as missionary to India for a second term would have to be under the provisions of the Constitution and through the W. G. M. S. of 1903. 4. That by that time "the ultimate unification of all Woman's Missionary Societies" under the W. G. M. S. of 1903 was to be effected. Something was thus yielded on both sides, and future harmony and unity supposed to be secured, and it was resolved "that this final action shall be considered binding on all the members of the General Eldership, and upon the ministers and people of the Annual Elderships." Changes in boundaries of Elderships were made by including St. Louis in the Missouri Eldership; placing the Sodus church, Michigan, into the Indiana Eldership, and transferring part of the "strip" in the Kansas Eldership to the Oklahoma Eldership. The following editors were elected: The Church Advocate, C. H. Forney; Assistant, S. G. Yahn; "Sunbeam," Lydia A. Forney; "S. S. Gem," W. A. Laverty; "Workman Quarterly," D. S. Shoop. The new Boards elected were: Board of Publication, I. A. MacDannald, C. H. Grove and H. M. Angle; Board of Missions, A. C. Garner, S. G. Yahn, J. Bernard, C. T. Fox and G. W. Getz; Executive Board, R. L. Byrnes, F. W. McGuire, L. A. Lukenbill, E. E. Heltibridge and C. F. Rogers. The Board of Missions reported considerable work accomplished. It had approved the Constitution and organization of the new W. G. M. S., and managed with good judgment the difficult work which followed. The different publications were in good condition, showing net balances for each one. Important amendments were made to the General Eldership Constitution. One declared that the "provisions of this Constitution shall be considered a form or plan of government of a general character" to extend to the whole Church and all its members, societies and organizations. Another granting judicial powers to the Executive Board, and providing for Appeals. The Treasurer's Report showed a balance of $11,304.05 in the Permanent Home Mission Fund; $5,019.76 in the Permanent Foreign Mission Fund; $983.12 in the General Mission Fund; $778.29 in the Available Foreign Mission Fund. Propositions for the settlement of the German Eldership case were formulated by the Committee and adopted; but they were not agreed to by the representatives of said body, nor by the body itself. Authority was given the Attorney-in-Fact to continue the suit against the German Eldership. The Executive Board reported a "hearing" in the case of "certain allegations made by M. S. Newcomer, W. R. Covert, A. E. Kepford and M. B. Newcomer, reflecting on C. H. Forney, Editor of The Advocate; S. G. Yahn, Secretary of the Board of Missions, and C. Manchester, President of Findlay College." It was held at Findlay, O., November 25, 1903. The decision was adverse to the complaints, the Board affirming nearly all the prayers of the defendants. The Eldership placed itself "uncompromisingly against the liquor traffic in its every form," and pledged itself "to use every legitimate effort looking toward its entire suppression." The state of religion throughout the General Eldership was "not what we would desire to see." The reasons given were these: "Many of our people, in a measure, are drifting from the primitive order of the Church, and are unwilling to follow the path of true piety marked out by our forefathers, allowing the pleasures of the world to be more attractive to them than the church and its privileges." This is "due to a lack of consecration." It was also stated that "some pastors have even separated the sacred ordinance of feet-washing from the Lord's Supper." But "in other places much has been done to advance the spiritual interest of the churches, and to awaken a deep concern for the doctrines and principles as taught by the churches of God." The Constitution having been amended so that the General Eldership would meet once every four years, it adjourned to meet in 1909.

22nd General Eldership.—In 1909, for the second time in its history, the General Eldership held its session west of the Mississippi River, in the State known as "the Garden of the West," and named from the Kansas river, Indian, "Smoky Water." It is the central State in the American Union. It was believed at the time that this first quadrennial session would "go down in history as an epoch-making Eldership." Not only was it a session remarkable in spirit; but some of the actions taken were to an extent fundamental, and established and confirmed principles of a far reaching character. It was an Eldership remarkable for the Christian spirit which pervaded it, the loving fellowship which pulsed in all its sittings, the unanimity of sentiment which developed on all vital questions, and the calm, but determined, persistence to settle finally and permanently the questions which had vexed the body for the previous six years. The Eldership convened at Fort Scott, Bourbon county, Kansas, when "the Opening Sermon was delivered on Wednesday evening, May 19, 1909, by Rev. C. H. Forney, D. D., LL. D., Harrisburg, Pa. Text:—Phil. iv. 8. Theme, 'The Supreme Things in the Believer's Personal and Corporate Life.'" The Eldership was constituted on Thursday morning by W. J. Schaner and C. F. Rogers, appointed by acclamation, and the following enrollment of delegates was made:

Of the sixty-nine delegates enrolled, five were absent. The election for officers resulted in the choice of T. Koogle, President; W. J. Schaner, Journalizing Clerk; C. F. Rogers, Transcribing Clerk. On account of certain difficulties existing in the Oregon, Washington and California Eldership a Judiciary Committee was provided for and appointed, "to which all matters pertaining to" said "Eldership were referred." It consisted of C. H. Forney, C. I. Brown, A. C. Garner, R. L. Byrnes and J. Bernard. This Committee recognized the Eldership "chartered by the General Eldership," "composed of all ordained ministers of both factions and other members;" appointed "the first Thursday in October, 1909," and Salem, Oregon, as the time and place for the next session of the Eldership to be held, and decided "that all previous troubles and difficulties shall receive no further recognition."

The Boards and Agents and Editors elected were as follows: Executive Board, R. L. Byrnes, F. W. McGuire, L. A. Luckenbill, C. F. Rogers, E. E. Heltibridle.

Board of Missions, C. T. Fox, A. C. Garner, J. Bernard, G. W. Getz, J. L. Updegraph.

Board of Publication, C. H. Grove, I. A. MacDannald, A. L. Bierbower.

Board of Directors of the Central Publishing House and Book Store, in addition to the members of the Board of Publication—C. H. Forney, H. J. Forney, J. F. Wiggins, H. M. Angle. C. H. Forney having insisted on his retirement from the editorship of The Advocate, S. G. Yahn, Assistant Editor, was elected Editor. Editor of The Sunbeam and the Primary Quarterly, Miss Lydia A. Forney. Editor of The Workman Quarterly and Lesson Leaves, D. S. Shoop. Treasurer, M. K. Smith. On the matter of writing and publishing a Church History, "the General Eldership most earnestly requested Rev. Dr. C. H. Forney to write, and the Board of Directors of the Publishing House and Book Rooms to publish, a work in one or more volumes on the History and Doctrine and Polity of the Churches of God."

Despite internal troubles, the Committee on the State of Religion reported "a vigorous growth and abiding interest in our Church enterprises." It congratulated the churches on "the increased number and the character of our young men preparing themselves for the active ministry." And it "noted with profound gratitude the growing enthusiasm in the Annual Elderships and the General Eldership, and the determined purpose to eliminate all disturbing elements." Eight Articles of the Constitution were amended, the most important being those relating to irregularities in teaching, practice or polity, and to controversies between members of two or more Annual Elderships, to wit:

Article XXIV. Section 2, was amended to read as follows:

"That the method shall be, upon information of irregularities in teaching, practice, or polity, furnished by an Annual Eldership or its Standing Committee, or, in the absence of such official information, upon due information obtained otherwise, for the General Eldership, or its Executive Board, to express its judgment on matters thus brought before it, and require the Annual Eldership, or Elderships, involved to carry said judgment into effect."

Article XXV. was amended to read as follows:

"In all controversies and difficulties arising between the members of any two or more Annual Elderships, the Executive Board shall have original jurisdiction; but either party may take an appeal from its decision to the General Eldership, provided notice thereof be given to the President of the Board and to the appellee, within thirty days after the rendering of such decision."

The interests in the hands of the different Boards were in a gratifying condition. "The improved condition of Findlay College in all its interests and departments" was the subject of hearty congratulation. But as increased endowment was highly necessary, the "Eldership invited the earnest co-operation of all the Annual Elderships in a determined effort to raise during the current year $37,500.00 needed to secure the promised contribution of $12,500.00 from Mr. Andrew Carnegie." Home and foreign mission work was making gratifying progress. Final action was taken on the unification of the Woman's General Missionary Societies by the adoption of the action of the Commission on Unification, and also a series of resolutions proposed by C. H. Forney, President-Secretary of the Commission. This ended the controversy relative to the W. G. M. S. so far as the General Eldership was concerned, leaving it with the several Annual Elderships within whose territories the former W. G. M. S. still operated to some extent to put the final actions into effect.

Two items of special interest were reported by the Board of Directors of the Publishing House and Book Store. One was the final liquidation of the debt on the property of the Board, located at 329 Market street, Harrisburg, Pa. The other was the increased value of the property, from $32,300.00 to about $75,000.00. So that, including stock and machinery, the total assets of the Board approximated $100,000.00.

A protracted discussion followed the Report of the Executive Board on the case of the West Virginia Eldership, North. The Board decided against the claims of "the Incorporated West Virginia Eldership, North," a minority of the Eldership, and recognized and declared, "the boundaries of the West Virginia Eldership, North, to be the same as fixed by the General Eldership in 1896, and that the organization of any other so-called Eldership within said boundaries is hereby declared to be a violation of the Constitution of the General Eldership, and is hereby condemned."

"That if such organization be still in existence it is hereby formally enjoined from continuing as such, it never having been established by the General Eldership, and therefore all its actions are necessarily declared to be null and void."

The Eldership expressed its judgment to the effect, "that money raised for a specific purpose should be sacredly held and used for the purpose specified; and therefore we set our stamp of emphatic disapproval upon the actions of such Sunday-schools as observe Children's College Day and appropriate the offering of the day to other purposes than the support or endowment of Findlay College."

Four ministers, who had at different times been delegates to the General Eldership, ended their earthly careers during this quadrennium. A. H. Long, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, "well and favorably known in many of our Annual Elderships not only because of his extensive preaching, but also through his printed sermons and numerous tracts. He was a preacher of more than ordinary strength and power, and a man of splendid Christian character. He ministerial life which extended over half a century, was a gracious benediction to every community in which he lived, and to every church to which he ministered in holy things. In the holy character he possessed and the influence he exerted he left a monument more enduring than brass and loftier than the regal structure of the pyramids, which the flight of time itself shall not efface. He died at the age of 85 years, having died February 7, 1908.

Rev. G. W. Willson, of Findlay, Ohio, departed this life February, 1906, aged about 93 years. He was well known throughout the boundaries of the General Eldership. He was the oldest minister in the Ohio Eldership, and probably in the General Eldership.

Rev. Alexander Miller died at his home in Bartlesville, Okla., February 15, 1908, aged about 72 years. He was a pioneer preacher in Kansas.

Rev. David Keplinger died about March, 1908, at the Soldiers' Home in California. He was eighty-four years old. He was a pioneer preacher in Southeastern Kansas. The combined ages of these four worthy ministers exceed those of any other four of the more than two thousand ministers ordained by Elderships of the churches of God. The sentiment is worth impressing upon the hearts of the living, that "the safest thing that a Christian can do is to die."

23rd General Eldership.—For the third time in its history the General Eldership was entertained by the "Mother Church," Fourth Street, Harrisburg, Pa. The session was of greater length than usual, beginning with the Opening Sermon on Wednesday evening, May 15th, and closing on Thursday night, the 22nd. T. Koogle delivered the sermon, from Psalm cxxiii. 1. Theme—"Unity." With sentiments of appreciation of the merits of the sermon and of its opportune character, the Eldership "ordered it to be published in The Advocate." On Thursday morning, the 16th, Chas. Manchester and W. E. Turner were selected Clerks to constitute the Eldership, assisted by a Committee on Credentials. The Eldership was constituted as follows:

East Pennsylvania. Ministerial—C. H. Forney, D. D., LL. D., W. N. Yates, D. D., D. S. Shoop, S. G. Yahn, D. D., I. A. MacDannald, D. D., F. W. McGuire, C. H. Grove, H. F. Hoover. Lay Delegates—H. M. Arkansas and Oklahoma Eldership (Colored). No representation.

Forty-eight of the enrolled delegates responded to their names. In intenseness of interest, if not in portentous distrust concerning the future, it resembled the session of 1857. But when final adjournment was reached the delegates dispersed with reassured confidence and with closed ranks, determined "to go forward with a steady and united front." The officers and Boards elected were as follows: President, J. Bernard; Journalizing Clerk, W. E. Turner; Transcribing Clerk, Chas. Manchester; Treasurer, Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, Columbia City, Ind.; Board of Publication, C. H. Grove, A. L. Bierbower, I. A. MacDannald. After adjournment, and the election of C. H. Grove by the Executive Board to be Editor of the Workman Quarterly, C. H. Forney was elected on the Board of Publication and Grove on the Board of Directors. Executive Board, F. W. McGuire, C. F. Rogers, G. W. Elliott, J. W. Whisler, L. A. Lukenbill; Board of Missions, Charles T. Fox, A. C. Garner, J. Bernard, W. N. Yates, J. L. Updegraph; Board of Directors of Publishing House and Book Store, C. H. Forney, G. W. Fox, H. M. Angle, H. N. Bowman, C. H. Grove, A. L. Bierbower, I. A. MacDannald; Board of Church Extension, F. W. McGuire, A. C. Garner and J. L. Updegraph.

There were three parts in the deliberations of the Eldership of absorbing interest. Two were under protracted deliberation, but with moderation and restraint. They were considered "with closed doors, with the exception of the delegates of the W. G. M. S., and advisory members of the Eldership and all members of the Church." The first related to the Funds of the General Eldership and the W. G. M. S. in the hands of the Treasurer. These were found to be in bad condition, with a possible loss of thousands of dollars. Attorneys-in-fact were appointed, and these two resolutions adopted: "That all funds which have been secured, and shall be secured, from the former Treasurer be divided pro rata among the Funds of the General Eldership and the W. G. M. S., according to the proper percentage due to each Fund." And, "That the Report [of the Executive Board] be adopted as a whole, and that the adoption of this report shall not be construed as accepting the bonds which the Treasurer holds as collateral securities, and which have been named in the report of the Board."

Following the election of the Treasurer another resolution was adopted, to wit:

"Resolved, That the said Treasurer when elected, in conjunction with the Attorneys-in-fact appointed by the Incorporate Board, is hereby duly authorized and empowered by the General Eldership of the Churches of God to make full and final settlement with M. K. Smith, whose term of office terminates with this election, and to do all things necessary to effect such settlement."

The second item related to the Endowment Fund of Findlay College. The Pro-Secretary of the College reported the "investments of the Endowment Fund," and added:

"In the above summary will be noticed an investment contrary to the By-Laws of our Institution that has caused much criticism and comment in the past few weeks, and, therefore, deserves special mention.

The mistake was made by our President, who has labored so unceasingly and against great odds for the building up of the Endowment Fund." In fact, a number of different investments of this character were made, aggregating a large amount. The various questions involved having been considered at some length, the matter was left in the hands of the Board of Trustees, which decided, that, "as soon as possible, a complete inventory and appraisal be made of all assets and liabilities of the College, and that the Board elect two of its members to carry out this recommendation." The Board added a third member. It also appointed one of its members as Attorney-in-fact "to institute legal proceedings" against one company in whose bonds investments were made "contrary to the By-Laws of our Institution," in case of failure to fulfill their contract.

The third part was the "Memorial Service" on Saturday afternoon, or the unveiling of a Monument on the grave of Winebrenner, erected in the Spring and paid for with funds contributed by churches and societies of different Elderships. It replaced the Monument erected September 23, 1868, and paid for by collections in churches of a number of Annual Elderships. This service, "owing to rain, was held in Fourth Street Bethel instead of the Harrisburg cemetery, as previously arranged. It was a meeting the impressiveness and solemnity of which we shall never forget." The following program was pre-arranged:

"PROGRAM.*Rev. W. N. Yates, D. D., Presiding.*Hymn—'How Firm a Foundation.'*Prayer—Rev. Geo. Sigler, D. D.*Anthem—Selected choir, directed by Prof. J. R. Swartz, Organist Fourth Street Church of God.*Oration—Rev. C. H. Forney, D. D., LL. D., Editor Emeritus Church Advocate.*Hymn—'I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord.'*Benediction—Rev. A. C. Garner."

Not less impressive were the usual Memorial services, at which "a number of addresses were made on the lives and works of Rev. B. Ober, Rev. O. B. Houston, Rev. H. W. Allen, Rev. M. S. Newcomer, D. D., Prof. Enoch A. Fritter, Dr. C. E. Quail and Brother H. J. Forney. These brethren were all earnest and efficient men in their several lines of work, and their home-going leaves vacant places hard to fill."

Instead of sermons on the evenings after the Opening Sermon, there were addresses and other exercises pre-arranged by the Executive Board. Thursday evening, the Educational Work, with address by W. H. Guyer; Friday evening, the Woman's General Missionary Society; Saturday evening, Missions and Evangelism, with J. Bernard and Chas. Manchester as speakers; Monday evening, Young People's Societies, with an address by J. E. McColley; Tuesday evening, Our Church Literature, address by S. G. Yahn. For 1917 it was provided "that we have an evening for a lecture on Sunday-school work." A number of amendments to the Constitution of the Eldership were adopted. Provision was thus made for a Statistical Clerk, and a blank form of annual reports was adopted. Each Annual Eldership is required to collect statistics on all items covered by this statistical blank, and forward the same to the Statistical Clerk of the General Eldership immediately following each Annual Eldership. Besides the address on Young People's Societies, the Eldership rejoiced in what has been attained, and urged the organization of societies in all churches where they do not now exist, and directed the Annual Elderships to use all their influence to this end. It especially urged the importance of the Junior work, recommending Junior Societies wherever possible, and declaring it to be the sense of the General Eldership, that an earnest endeavor should be made to deepen the spirituality in all societies.

The Report of the Board of Missions indicated a fair degree of success in general mission work. A half dozen houses of worship were built in the four years; twenty-nine churches organized; over one thousand accessions, and the Board paid in salaries $8,484.20. Some of the missionaries labored with churches organized years before. A relatively large number of men was employed, as many served but brief periods. The condition of the periodical publications of the Eldership was set forth in favorable terms by the Board of Publication. It mentioned with disapproval the "Graded Lesson System," and "most earnestly recommended the continuation of the Uniform Lessons." It also submitted "the advisability of establishing an Intermediate Quarterly, if there is a sufficient demand for it." The Eldership responded to this suggestion by authorizing a "Junior Intermediate Quarterly" to be published. The following Editors were elected: The Church Advocate, S. G. Yahn; S. S. Gem, W. A. Laverty (by the Board of Directors); Workman Quarterly, Lesson Leaves and Junior Intermediate Quarterly, C. F. Reitzel; Sunbeam and Primary Quarterly, Lydia A. Forney. Reitzel resigning, C. H. Grove was elected in his place by the Executive Board. The Report of the President-Treasurer of the Printing and Publishing House and Book Store gave evidence of reasonable prosperity. It showed receipts for the four years of $156,095.47, and after paying all bills due the gains, added to those of former years, showed $15,250.00 in loans and investments, and $1,159.94 in the Treasurer's hands. It forecasted enlargement of the Printing Establishment which may cost, with further equipments, from $6,000.00 to $8,000.00. It also recommended the appointment of a Permanent Church Historian, which the Eldership approved.

On the question submitted by the Oklahoma Eldership, asking the General Eldership to express its judgment as to deacons being members of Annual Elderships by virtue of their office, it adopted the following:

That while we continue to recognize the right of Annual Elderships, within reasonable limits, to decide who shall constitute their membership, we express our judgment on the question submitted as follows:

1. That an Annual Eldership should be composed of ministers and ruling elders.
2. That ruling elders should become members of an Annual Eldership by virtue of their annual election.
3. That, so far as possible, the number of ministers and ruling elders in an Annual Eldership should be equal."

The Report of the Committee on Boundaries, which was sustained, "authorized the forming of an 'Oregon Eldership,' whose boundaries shall be the State lines of Oregon. Also the forming of a 'Washington Eldership,' whose boundaries shall be the State lines of Washington, and approving their Constitution presented to the Eldership. The churches in California and all other churches not in the bounds of an Annual Eldership are to be under the control of the Board of Missions." The Eldership declared strongly in favor of National Prohibition; approved of the "cold water movement," in rejecting the use of intoxicants at receptions given at the National White House, and expressed its appreciation of every law having as its object the suppression of the business of shipping intoxicating liquors into dry territory. It urged "Congress to adopt an amendment to our Constitution granting us National Prohibition, and to this end it pledged its influence in favor of agitation and combination of influences, in order to bring the greatest possible pressure to bear upon Congress to the end that the said amendment may be soon adopted."

It may be accepted as its final admonition "that we seek to strengthen the ties which bind us together in a common faith and purpose, and the sacred relationship of a common brotherhood. We have general enterprises which are essential to the continued success of our common cause. The maintenance and enlargement of these enterprises, in turn, depend upon the harmonious co-operation of all the Elderships. And this co-operation, in its truest and most fruitful sense, is the outgrowth of our oneness in Christ. For this let us labor and pray. And with the Holy Spirit to inspire us, and the voice of God to bid us forward, increasing prosperity and usefulness will attend us in the years that are yet to be."

DIVISION IV.

HISTORY OF THE PRINTING ESTABLISHMENT.

The distinction between a Publishing House and a Printing Establishment was not recognized by the Church of God in 1833. Perhaps it did not exist in the United States, as the two had not as yet acquired a distinct and separate character. The printer was also the publisher. The Church desired to publish a religious paper, and its first thought to the realization of this desire was the securing of a Printing Establishment, a place fitted up with cases, type, press and other necessary materials to print the paper. The printing press is much older than the newspaper, the first press which was brought to the new world having been installed in the City of Mexico, in 1539; but the newspaper came much later, and was closely connected with the printing establishment or plant. In 1828 the total number of newspapers printed in the United States was 852. To print a paper by contract, as is now not at all uncommon, was then a rare exception. The religious body that would have its own paper would also need to provide for the printing of it on its own press. In 1833 few of the religious bodies were publishing papers. "The Library of Religious Knowledge" names six as having been started prior to 1833, and one in that year. It would, hence, be interesting to know with whom the idea originated that so young and small a body as the Church of God was then should undertake to publish a paper. The records do not inform us. It is simply stated by Dr. George Ross, in 1880, that "year after year the matter was agitated, but no definite action was taken until 1833." From that year on it is not so difficult for the historian to follow the development of the idea until its fullest realization in 1901. It was on December 25, 1833, at the fourth Eldership in East Pennsylvania, held at Middletown, Dauphin county, that "the subject of starting a Printing Establishment was first officially acted upon." And then the fact that a Printing Establishment was to be installed was only implied as being self-evident. The resolution was as follows: "That we deem it highly important for the good of the cause of God to establish a religious paper." But after agreeing on the title of the paper, and fixing the subscription price, a committee was appointed, consisting of J. Winebrenner, James Mackey, Joseph Ross, Jacob Rupp and S. Boyer, which was "to locate the paper and purchase type." For this purpose the necessary funds were to be secured by collections and subscriptions through the ministers. If they succeeded, the type was to be bought and the first issue of the paper was to be printed and published March 1, 1834. What was done by said date, or up to the Eldership held at Shippensburg, Cumberland county, December 13, 1834, can not be determined. The Committee on Journals, Wm. Miller, D. Maxwell and J. Mackey, reported the item as found on the Journal of 1833, and stated that "the resolution for the establishment of a religious paper had not been carried into effect for want of sufficient encouragement to warrant the same." The Committee also "recommended the Eldership to make renewed efforts to effect the purpose aforesaid." Acting upon this suggestion a committee was appointed, consisting of J. Ross, J. Winebrenner and Andrew Miller, "to raise funds for the purchase of a Printing Establishment." This Committee collected $280.75; borrowed $764.63, and bought a press, type and other material, so that by June 5, 1835, the first number of the paper was issued.

As there was only one Eldership at this time, all this work was done by it. The Committee, however, were personally responsible for the debt created, though the Printing Establishment was installed by the authority of the Eldership. Accordingly the Eldership held at Uniontown, Md., November 2, 1835, directed that "the printing press and materials, the subscription list and all incomes of the Establishment be given to the Printing Committee as an indemnity to them for the money by them advanced." Nominally and legally the Establishment was, however, still the property of "the Board of Trustees;" but it was virtually mortgaged for its full value, and its liabilities increased with no augmentation of its assets. It seemed to have been "an ill-fated enterprise" from the beginning, as Winebrenner later called it, and instead of proving a source of income to be used for missionary purposes, it involved certain brethren in heavy losses. But, sanguine of success, the establishment was continued, and efforts were renewed to reduce, or liquidate entirely, the debt which had been originally incurred, and was growing. In 1837, when the Eldership convened at Harrisburg, two actions were taken. The one was the appointment of "J. Winebrenner and A. Miller to solicit subscriptions in aid of the Printing Establishment, to be paid in five yearly installments, beginning January 1, 1838, to pay off what was due on the same." The other was broader in its scope. It named Winebrenner, A. Miller, J. Ross, Walborn, Mackey, Flake and J. S. Kerr as a committee "authorized forthwith to take measures to relieve the Printing Establishment, and to pursue whatever course they may think best in relation to the same." Whatever success may have attended this plan, it did not relieve the Establishment, so that without a published report, at the Eldership at Middletown, November 11, 1838, "the Printing Establishment was taken under consideration," and Winebrenner was authorized to "go one round with the preachers on each circuit and solicit subscriptions for the Printing Establishment, and for a Missionary Fund." Evidently he was not gifted with the hypnotic power of the modern solicitor, or had less sensitive subjects, for conditions at the Eldership in 1839 had not improved. The session was held at Shiremanstown, Cumberland county, November 11th, and the affairs of the Printing Establishment were fully discussed. As a result, "Jacob Rupp, Joseph Ross, Andrew Miller, George Rupp, Sr., and David Lingle, and such others as they may see proper to add to their number," were "appointed a Committee, or Board of Trustees of the Printing Establishment." They were "empowered to audit and settle the accounts of the Establishment, and after liabilities are ascertained, to make a loan for the payment of the same." And a second time they were granted the right to "hold the Establishment, with all its assets, as their security for the payment of the loan." This Board could appoint agents to collect money, and "control and manage the Establishment and its finances until its liabilities are discharged, and then the Establishment to be returned as the property of the Eldership." On January 3, 1840, this Board reported the indebtedness to be $4,409.70, and the assets consisted of $1,500.00 unpaid subscriptions, $225.00 five-year pledges, with other "availabilities" to the amount of $518.95. If these assets were convertible into cash, the net debt would have been $2,165.75; but they were almost worthless. Of these liabilities one item of $2,718.12 was a debt to the Editor. One thing which seriously militated against the Establishment was the fact that from the first issue of Vol. I. of The Gospel Publisher the prospect was prominently held before the readers that the Establishment would make money, replenish the Missionary Fund, and that these "net proceeds will be applied to religious purposes." During the year 1841 and 1842 prospects apparently brightened, for in November, 1842, the Board of Trustees reported a "total gain of $1,009.47 since January 1, 1840. An agent was secured to collect to pay off the balance of the debt. But this was only a rift in the ever-lowering clouds, for on February 20, 1843, one of the members of the Board of Trustees stated, that by April of said year there would be a deficit which might reach $1,200.00. In November of said year an earnest plea was made for all indebted to the Establishment to pay. And at the Eldership held at Shippensburg, November, 1843, all the members pledged themselves to collect funds to pay the debt on the Printing Establishment. The body also gave assurance that it would "keep the Board of Trustees of the Printing Establishment from all losses which they might sustain on account of the Establishment." The number of Trustees at this time was twenty-four, which was increased to thirty-four in 1844. It created a permanent "Relief Fund," which the Eldership approved in November, 1844, "to raise funds to liquidate claims upon the Printing Establishment." Winebrenner was appointed to make collections. And while there were gains reported in some lines, in others there were losses, so that by January 15, 1845, "the Auditing Committee reported the debt of the Printing Establishment to be $4,042.42." It was concluded that "voluntary subscriptions alone could save the Establishment from dissolution." By this time two other Elderships had been organized, and these were appealed to for help "to raise money to place the Establishment on a free footing." In October, 1844, the Ohio Eldership responded with a favorable resolution, followed in November by a similar action. Subscriptions were reported by May, 1846, of about $2,520.00, from Ohio and East Pennsylvania, to be credited to the "Relief Fund." On December 12, 1845, after the suspension of The Gospel Pub- lisher, August 13, 1845, the Board of Trustees announced that "the Agents have nearly finished canvassing the ground, and have failed to raise an adequate sum to discharge the entire debt of the Establishment." And the Editor stated as a reason for the suspension of the paper that "the Executive Committee have become tired borrowing money to carry on" the paper; and as "the subscribers will not pay, it therefore must of necessity stop." The blame for the catastrophe was placed upon the patrons of the paper, through whose dereliction a larger amount than the debt was lost. How much of the $7,000.00, which the Auditing Committee reported as having been "lost" in the less than ten years The Gospel Publisher was printed no one may know; but while the members of the Board of Trustees finally lost considerable (as the total debt in August, 1846, was given at $8,968.99), after years of contention and diligent effort "Winebrenner's claims" were liquidated.

This closed out the Printing Establishment as a direct Eldership enterprise for that period. It was prematurely initiated; but it must be conceded that the action of 1833 was by far the most important taken by that Eldership, the most far-reaching in its effects upon the future of the Church. Had, however, the project been deferred five or ten years the evil results of this miscarriage, with the friction and enmities engendered, would have been avoided. And also the unity of feeling and sentiment in the body and the co-operative zeal and spirit of aggression would have carried the Church to greater triumphs. The Evangelical Association was considerably stronger when the first steps were taken, in 1816, to establish a Publishing House. But, says Bishop R. Yeakel, "It was soon ascertained that the Association was yet too weak to support such an institution." It was, however, not until 1836, when the Association numbered about 7,000, that the "Christliche Botschafter" was founded, and "the coming year a Publishing House should be founded." Their English paper was "ordered to be published by the General Conference in 1847. At the beginning of the year 1821, says Ansell H. Bassett, author of the History of the Methodist Protestant Church, "there was not a Methodist newspaper issued anywhere upon the continent." "The Methodist Protestant," the first paper published by the M. P. Church, was established in 1831. It was in 1834 that "the Trustees of the General Conference" of the United Brethren Church, as per instructions by the General Conference, "secured real estate at Circleville, Ohio, purchased a press, type, and other necessary material, and established the Publishing House of the Church." "December 31, 1834 the first periodical publication issued from the Establishment" was printed—"The Religious Telescope." Conditions under which these periodicals were launched were not dissimilar from those of The Gospel Publisher. The size of the papers, the price and the number of subscribers were nearly identical. None, however, had so small and weak a constituency.

That, when on May 1, 1846, The Church Advocate was issued, it was not from the Printing Establishment of the Eldership is substantiated by circumstantial and direct evidence. Winebrenner says, in his "Editorial Address," I have agreed to publish the first volume of the new series on my own responsibility." The standing announcement at the head of the first column of the first page was: "Printed and Published by John Winebrenner, V. D. M." In a brief editorial, "Delay of The Advocate," he says: "Having bought the office." And the Board of Trustees of the Printing Establishment, in the last number of The Gospel Publisher, stated that "we have concluded to wind up the concern." It continued to be Winebrenner's Printing Establishment, though The Gospel Publisher and The Church Advocate were the organ of the General Eldership, until April 23, 1857. On that date the following announcement was made editorially by Winebrenner: "Since the foregoing editorials were written, preparatory to the next volume, we have quite unexpectedly sold and transferred the good will and Advocate Establishment to Elder James Colder." In the issue of the paper of May 1st, J. Colder stated he had "purchased the good will and fixtures of the Advocate Establishment." The General Eldership convened June 1, 1857, at Harrisburg, Pa., when "the Committee on Purchasing the Printing Establishment" reported the willingness of Colder "to sell the same to this body for the amount it cost him." As the General Eldership had no funds, it concluded "to take the Establishment at the amount it cost Colder, and leave it in his hands until the receipts cover that amount, after which the entire proceeds are to pass into the hands of the General Eldership." Colder was elected Editor,

"at a salary of $300.00 for the first year, and $500.00 for each subsequent year up to the meeting of the next General Eldership." E. H. Thomas, John S. Gable and Dr. George Ross were "appointed agents of the General Eldership, as the Publishing Committee of The Church Advocate." It was shortly after this that Colder began his public opposition to the missionaries and their course in Texas, and also got into an illicit controversy with Winebrenner, both of which militated seriously against the prosperity of the paper. As a consequence, Colder, on January 6, 1859, suspended the publishing of The Advocate. He also gave the Board of Publication to understand that it was responsible for the debts of the Establishment. The Board would not furnish funds, but decided to take the paper, the Establishment, the debts and all. The total indebtedness was $1,334.00, "and not a dollar in hand to print the paper." It took Colder's place in the contract with the General Eldership, and then made the same contract with Thomas to print and publish the paper, except the matter of salary. Thomas was to take the Establishment, with all liabilities and assets, subscription list and materials, and carry on the work, paying all liabilities and receiving all the income for two full years from May 1, 1859. At said date, May 1, 1861, he was to deliver up the Establishment clear of all incumbrances to the General Eldership. The first issue of the paper under this contract was dated February 10, 1859. However, the estimates and anticipations on which the contract was based proved erroneous, so that by May 1, 1860, the debt was $1,637.38. The contract had one more year to run when the General Eldership assembled in 1860. Desiring to have it synchronous with the triennial period of the General Eldership, this fact was set at naught, and the former contract was extended to the time of the meeting of the General Eldership in 1863. Thomas, Gable and Ross were re-elected as the Board of Publication. During these three years the debt was reduced to $500.00. The former contract was renewed, to expire in 1866, and the old Board was re-elected. During these three years prices for labor and materials of all kinds so increased that instead of reducing the debt it was found that the expenses exceeded the income by $600. Indeed so threatening were the indications that another disaster was apprehended by some. In the most heroic spirit Thomas decided, in 1868, to meet the storm which seemed to be brewing by doubling the size of the paper and providing "an entire new suit from head to foot." And while it did not succeed in wiping out the debt on the Establishment, it was the forlorn hope which ultimately crowned the breach and brought victory to those who entered into Thomas's labors. It was the popular thing to do, and the results showed that it spelled victory. While the debt in 1866 was about $1,000.00, in 1869 it did not exceed $1,200.00. At the General Eldership in 1869, leaning over the grave, Thomas submitted a proposition, asking for a new contract for three years. But he proposed to pay off the entire debt the first year, and for each of the two succeeding years to pay to the Treasurer of the General Eldership $300.00. The Eldership accepted the proposition, and for the first time in thirty-four years had a good foundation for the hope of "revenue for religious purposes" from the Printing Establishment. Within less than four months of the ratification of this contract Thomas was soothed to sleep by the music of heaven. But under the law, and according to the provisions of his Will, the Executor claimed that the contract was not abrogated by Thomas's death, but that the Executor took his place. Though not agreeable to the remaining members of the Board, they acquiesced in this view. But during the Winter following the death of Thomas negotiations between Dr. Ross and the Executor resulted in the transfer of the contract to Dr. Ross for the consideration of $1,500.00. He fulfilled the contract, and in 1872 paid the $600.00, minus a small amount paid for type for a new mailing list, to the General Eldership. He was also the official Publisher of the paper from 1870 to 1876. The material of the old Printing Establishment was of very little value, "consisting of an old and useless hand press and some worn-out and antiquated type, neither of which were of any use." Thomas had his own Job Printing Plant, and the presswork was done by contract in another Publishing House.

From the date that Thomas became publisher of The Advocate until 1901 the General Eldership had no Printing Establishment. And even from 1846 only in name. The printing was done by contract with other publishing houses; or, as in the case of Thomas, in his own establishment. The first outside contract was with "The Inquirer Publishing Co.," Lancaster City, from 1870 to 1874. In 1874 "The Herald Printing and Publishing Co.," Carlisle, secured the contract, and held it until 1876. Then "The Farmers' Friend Publishing Co.," Mechanicsburg, had the contract for two years, after which the same parties and "The Harrisburg Telegraph Co.," held the contract alternately until 1901. But during these thirty-one years of exile the desire to have a Printing Establishment owned and controlled by the Church was not extirpated. It was being quietly nursed in the mind of the Editor who succeeded Thomas, and with confidence and in measured terms it was occasionally submitted to the Church. And as, after 1878, a surplus began to accumulate, the purpose of using it to establish a Printing and Publishing House was presented in stronger terms. In the issue of The Advocate of February 4, 1880, the Editor again took up the strains of the early thirties, and in an editorial on the subject, said: "We are amply strong enough to have a good Printing Establishment." On July 14, 1880, under the caption, "Our Publishing Interests," he said: "If we are to do anything special during this semi-centennial year for our Publishing Interests, it is proper that the particular things which may be done should be pointed out and discussed." And added: "One of the things to do is to raise the means to start a Printing Establishment of our own," with such arguments in favor of the project as appealed to his judgment. A "Book Concern" was originally associated in the minds of the brotherhood with a Printing Establishment and a paper. And so when Dr. Ross in 1877 opened his Bookstore on South Third street, Harrisburg, it was anticipated that in connection therewith there would soon be a Printing Establishment. It was the headquarters of the periodical publications of the Church. His nearest friends believed with reasonable assurance that only his premature death prevented this consummation, for the Lord had put it into his heart to devise liberal things. This precedence of the "Book Concern" appears in the official action of the General Eldership in 1884. The Committee on Book Depository reported on the subject, and with surprising unanimity the Board of Incorporation, upon recommendation of said Committee, was authorized to establish a Book Concern as soon as possible. Periodicals were to continue under existing management "until the Board of Incorporation shall establish a Book Concern and Printing Establishment." Other arrangements touching periodicals which were proposed were "not to go into effect until such time as the Board of Incorporation is ready to start the Book Store and Printing Establishment." The proponents of this scheme realized the difficulty against which such a large and widely-scattered Board would labor in carrying this action into effect. But they had a year to think and to mature plans, for the Board would not meet until June, 1885. When it did meet, June 16, 1885, Editor Forney first submitted a resolution, declaring that "it is expedient on the part of the Board of Incorporation to take some action at the earliest day practicable touching a Book Store and Printing Establishment referred to this Board by the General Eldership." This encountered no opposition. At once J. H. Redsecker read and submitted Editor Forney's preamble and resolutions, prepared in advance, which provided for "the establishment of a Publishing House and Book Rooms with as little delay as the importance and magnitude of the work will admit of;" that they "be located at Harrisburg, Pa.;" that "a Board of Directors be appointed to consist of the Board of Publication together with two other brethren to be elected by the Board of Incorporation," and prescribing the duties of said Board of Directors. Considerable discussion followed. It was proposed by W. B. Allen that the location be Findlay, Ohio; but the amendment was lost by a large majority. R. H. Bolton submitted an amendment that the name be "The Publishing House and Book Rooms of the Church of God," which was sustained. One other amendment prevailed, making the elective members of the Board of Directors "four" instead of "two." One more step was at once taken. The four members of the Board were elected. The tendency to scatter the Board became at once apparent. Of the ten persons nominated one was from Iowa, two from Illinois, one from Ohio, one from Indiana, one from West Pennsylvania and four from East Pennsylvania. Those elected were John Huff, Iowa; W. W. Lovett, Indiana; C. H. Forney, East Pennsylvania; W. P. Small, Ohio. These, with Isaac Frazer, J. H. Redsecker and D. M. Bare, Board of Publication, constituted the first Board of Directors. The first duty of this Board was to rent a room and start a Book Store. Following this, gradually, as the judgment of the Board would dictate, it was to install a job printing office, and then a Printing House. The Board was also authorized "to draw on the Treasurer of the General Eldership for such amount, out of the Book Fund, as may be necessary." From this source the Board received $2,900.00 in cash and $4,162.00, the estimated value of books held by the Book Agent, and it made a loan from the Book Agent of $1,134.92. The Board as constituted never held a meeting, as the members west of the mountains failed to be present. The work rested upon the members living in the territory of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. They were united in purpose, and worked expeditiously. In seven days less than three months after the Board was created, on September 9, 1885, Editor Forney made this announcement: "To-day the first step in this enterprise is a reality. The Book Store is now open. At No. 335 Market street, Harrisburg, Pa., the Board of Directors has now a well-stocked Book Store." From the beginning the enterprise was providentially favored with a good measure of success, for from September 9, 1885, to April 30, 1887, the amount received from sales of merchandise was $13,461.39. The members of the Board then, and ever since, gave their time and labor and carfare without remuneration.

Larger things were now on the horizon. To prepare for these, when Treasurer Forney submitted his report to the General Eldership in May, 1887, he recommended "that the Board of Directors be authorized to secure real estate for a Publishing House when in its judgment it would be advisable." This was granted. This authority was renewed in 1893. The Board was making haste slowly. It acted with wise deliberation. It kept the ultimate purpose ever in view. April 30, 1893, it was said editorially, "Unless the General Eldership dissents, we propose that every dollar that can be made by The Advocate, and also the Book Rooms, shall go into a fund to establish a Publishing House." As the Board was almost exclusively dependent on income from the Book Store and the various periodicals for funds to purchase property and install a printing plant, it acted in a spirit of prudence and circumspection. Three properties on Market street, and several in other parts of the city, were considered at different dates; but no final action was taken until at a meeting of the Board held July 11, 1899, when a casual remark, reported to the Board as to the probability of buying the property at 329 Market street, led to the adoption of a motion to open negotiations for its purchase. A committee was at once appointed to see Edward Stover, the proprietor, and make the purchase, at a price left within the discretion of the committee. On August 1, 1899, the Agreement of Sale was signed at Hummelstown, Dauphin county, near which town Mr. Stover lived, and a certain amount paid.

By this act the Board came into possession of a very valuable property at a reasonable price. The lot has a frontage of 26 feet, 6 inches, on Market street, and a depth of 210 feet to Blackberry avenue. Thereon stands, on Market street, a four-story brick building, with a depth of 150 feet, and on Blackberry avenue two three-story dwelling houses. The purchase price fixed in the Agreement of Sale was $32,300; but Mr. Stover generously donated $300.00. By April 1, 1900, when the Agreement of Sale called for the transfer of the property and full payment of the purchase money, the Board secured a loan of $15,000.00, paid Mr. Stover in full, and secured a clear title. Later, to provide for the Life interest of $2,300.00, the Board invested $2,500.00 in guaranteed bonds.

The degree of success which rewarded the labors of the Board inspired confidence. The Board had a paying business; the periodicals reported net gains each year which the Board controlled, and it had the room in which to install a complete printing plant. Why not venture a little further, and if necessary borrow a few thousand dollars additional and complete the Establishment as originally designed? On January 24, 1901, a special meeting of the Board was called to consider this question, and after thoroughly canvassing the whole question, decided to proceed at once to make necessary changes on the first floor and basement, and purchase the machines and material to install a printing plant to fully meet the requirements of our own publishing interests, the same to be finished in good time to print No. 1, of Vol. LXVI., of The Advocate of July 3, 1901. This included the following: One No. 9, 4-roller, 2-revolution Cottrell Press, one Brown Folder, one Wire Stitcher, one Linotype, one Paper Cutter, one Job Press, one Perforator, one Proof Press, a number of series of Job Type, General Furniture, one large Imposing Stone, electric motors for every machine, and full assortment of cases, cabinets and printers' wood furniture. The total cost was $10,776.19. The total indebtedness now, less cash and securities, was about $21,000.00. On July 3, 1901, as prearranged, The Advocate, which had up to this date paid nearly $12,000.00 toward the Publishing House and Printing Plant, in its present form, was set up, printed, folded, trimmed and stitched on the machinery installed and mailed from "The Publishing House of the Church of God." The expectation was indulged by the Board, that by May, 1909, it could pay off the debt entirely. But working with all diligence and economy, heartily co-operated with by the General Manager, W. A. Lavery, it was announced by the President-Treasurer four months in advance of this date, January 1, 1909, that the debt was canceled, and that "the Board of Incorporation now had a clear title, in fee simple, without incumbrance, or lien of any character. The last dollar on our mortgage was paid this morning." With the advance in real estate, the value of the entire plant now was placed at "not less than $100,000.00." Since then there have been added a large Job Press, a Punching Machine and a Cleveland Folder and electric motors, costing about $2,500.00.

The membership of the Board of Directors during the period between the General meetings from 1884 to 1913 was as follows:

1885 to 1887:—I. Frazer, D. M. Bare and J. H. Redsecker, Board of Publication; C. H. Forney, W. P. Small, W. W. Lovett, J. Huff.

C. F. Reitzel, on May 30, 1913, having resigned as Editor of the "Workman Quarterly," C. H. Grove was unanimously elected in his place by the Executive Board. Having accepted the position it was necessary that he should resign as a member of the Board of Publication. The Executive Board on July 4th unanimously elected C. H. Forney a member of the Board of Publication. C. H. Grove was elected in his place on the Board of Directors, Forney becoming a member ex-officio.

In 1885 W. F. Becker was elected Superintendent of the Book Store. He served in that capacity until January 29, 1889, when W. A. Lavery was elected, who in 1901 was promoted to General Manager of the Publishing House and Book Store. His continuance in this office to the present is the best evidence of his ability and integrity which the Board could give.

During these twenty-eight years the number of different persons on the Board of Directors was twenty-four. Of this number fourteen are living, and ten are dead. But the only one to die in office was H. J. Forney, who on April 16, 1912, suddenly "passed through the dread portal of Death" at his home in Penbrook, Pa. In his stead the Executive Board elected George W. Fox, of Piketown, Dauphin county, Pa., who had frequently been a delegate to the East Pennsylvania Eldership, and was three times elected a delegate to the General Eldership.

Henry J. Forney was a native of West Hanover township, Dauphin county, Pa., born in 1833. He acquired his early education principally in the common schools of his native county, and at the St. Thomas Institute, Linglestown, Dauphin county, under Prof. John Focht. He was of a studious disposition and a great reader of periodical literature. Apt to acquire knowledge of branches then commonly taught in the public schools, he began teaching before he reached his majority. But in 1856 the county superintendent of Dauphin county, for reasons other than literary qualifications, declined to give him a certificate, and thus diverted the aspiring young teacher's mind into that business career in which he was so eminently successful. He inherited a religious disposition from his mother, and early in life became a member of the church of God at Linglestown. Thence, upon his removal to Harrisburg, he transferred his membership to the Fourth Street church, and later to Progress, and then to the newly organized church at Penbrook, in whose fellowship he died. For many years he was a ruling elder in the churches of which he was a member; was a delegate to the Annual Eldership, and a number of times was elected a delegate to the General Eldership. He was of a resolute disposition, firm in his convictions, of great tenacity of purpose and conscientious in his search after truth. His wide and protracted experience in business, church councils, city and borough councils and stockholder in various interests made him specially fitted for membership on the Board of Directors.

George W. Fox was born in West Hanover township, Dauphin county, Pa., April 12, 1852, near the present village of Piketown, where he still resides. He is a descendant of one of the original Church of God families in that community, being a grand-son of Christian Forney. With pious parents and grand-parents, he was early inclined to follow in their footsteps. He was converted, baptized and fellowshipped at the age of seventeen, and has ever since been an active worker, having been an elder in the church continuously since 1889, and for twenty-eight years Superintendent of the Sunday-school. Like so many other elders and ministers of the Church, he was raised on a farm. But he taught school sixteen terms, and a preparatory school for teachers for five terms. His training for this work he received in the public school and at the Linglestown Academy. Since 1880 he has been engaged in the mercantile business at Piketown, and when in 1892 a post-office was established at that place he became the Postmaster, a position he still holds. He has served as Justice of the Peace seventeen years, and County Auditor three years. These facts indicate the ample qualifications he possesses for the position of honor and responsibility in the General Eldership to which he has been elected.

The Office of Publication prior to the establishment of the Printing Plant at 329 Market street, Harrisburg, had been at a number of locations. In 1835 it was in "the Editor's Drug and Book Store," Market Square, Harrisburg. On May 13, 1840, "the new Office is next door to the United States Hotel, along the C. V. R. R., Mulberry street." Then on April 1, 1841, Weishampel removed it to Shiremans-town, with the printing plant. In December, 1843, the Board of Trustees voted six to five to return to Harrisburg, which was done between March 6th and 13th, and the Establishment was located on Mulberry street, between Second and Third. When Winebrenner started The Church Advocate on May 1, 1846, it was "edited, printed and published on Mulberry street, near the Railroad Bridge," in the basement of the Mulberry Street Bethel. The next imprint, Vol. XXI, May, 1857, locates the "Office on Fourth street, opposite the new Bethel," to which place it was removed April 2, 1857. The Office was continued here until March 10, 1859, when it was removed to "Brady's Row, Mt. Joy, Lancaster county, Pa., opposite the Bethel." Thence on May 12, 1859, it was changed to "Brenneman's Building, Center Square, Lancaster, Pa." On May 9, 1861, the new location was "next to Hubley's Grocery Store, Second Story, Center Square, Lancaster." Again on February 9, 1865, it was removed to "North Queen street, West Side, Russell Building, second story, back of Cummin's Daugerean Room, Lancaster City." May, 1870, it was found in the "Inquirer Printing and Publishing House," North Queen street, Lancaster. Thence in 1874 it came back to its original home, Harrisburg, where it has ever since remained, though part of this time the printing was done elsewhere until 1901.

Since the inception of this work in 1909 there have been three changes in the membership of the Board of Directors as given in the Frontispiece. First came the death of H. J. Forney, and the election of Geo. W. Fox as his successor. John F. Wiggins not having been a delegate to the General Eldership in 1913, H. N. Bowman was elected in his place. And upon the resignation of C. H. Forney, in October, 1913, S. G. Yahn was elected by the Executive Board to succeed him. Henry Nicholas Bowman is a son of John and Elizabeth Bowman, life long friends and supporters of Winebrenner, who became acquainted with Winebrenner when he preached at Salem (or Stone) Reformed church, near Shiremanstown. They united with the first organization of the church of God at Walnut Grove school-house, near Oyster's Point, now part of the borough of Camp Hill. Henry was born on August 4, 1840, in the old stone house in which he still lives, in Camp Hill, East Pennsboro township, Cumberland county, Pa. He was converted in 1855, during a revival held at Camp Hill by H. L. Soule, and was fellowshipped by the church at said place, in which he has ever since been an active and influential member, and a deacon or elder for over thirty years, as well as Superintendent of the Sunday-school. His intellectual training he received in the common school at Camp Hill and the White Hall Academy located there. When a Soldiers' Orphans' School was established at White Hall Academy he had charge of it for some years. Much of his time he has devoted to farming and real estate business, holding also the office of Register of Cumberland county for one term of three years, and having been a justice of the peace for thirty-three years. He stands deservedly high in the community in which he has lived from childhood.

DIVISION V.

HISTORY OF PERIODICALS OF THE CHURCH.

I. THE GOSPEL PUBLISHER.

Religious journalism was in its infancy in 1835. It has indeed been said that "the history of 'newspapers' as such does not commence until about 1820;" but this is an extreme statement. Had it been limited to "religious journals" it could be endorsed, although about a half dozen such periodicals were established prior to that date. Secular papers ante-date the religious papers by more than a century. "The Herald of Gospel Liberty," started in 1808, is the oldest religious periodical published in the United States. Other religious papers established earlier than The Gospel Publisher were these: "The Religious Remembrancer," 1813; "Weekly Recorder," 1814; "The Boston Recorder," merged in "The Congregationalist," 1816; "The Watchman," 1819; "The Register," 1825; "The Examiner," and "The Observer," 1823; "The Christian Advocate," and "The Morning Star," 1826; "Reformed Church Messenger," 1827; "The Christian Standard," and "The Evangelist," 1830; "The Methodist Protestant," "The Presbyterian Journal and Messenger," and "The Lutheran Observer," 1831; "The Religious Telescope" and "The Western Christian Advocate," 1834. Between 1792 and 1855 no less than eighteen newspapers had been started in Harrisburg. How many were cotemporaneous may not be known, for while a few survived, some lived three months, some four, some six and longer and then suspended, while a few became permanent. These frail barks encountered the inevitable rocks submerged in the financial waters. Nearly all these early ventures in the field of journalism were of unpretentious size, and began with a few hundred patrons, or less. These are facts in the light of which the efforts to establish a religious paper by Winebrenner and his co-laborers, and their failures and successes, are to be compared. The character of the journalism of that period is also the only true standard by which to judge the work of Winebrenner, Weishampel and McCartney as editors. The functions of journalism then were but two-fold:—"to furnish information, and to comment thereon." In the exercise of these functions the religious and secular papers found a common part in the worldly and spiritual affairs of State or Church, and so it is for the way in which they exercised these functions that they have their responsibility, as also their reward. But from the first, not only was there an eagerness on the part of individuals to enter the field of journalism; but the idea of a religious paper for a Church thus early secured a sure footing in the history of the modern church.

If the credit of originator of the project to publish a paper for the infant organization known as the Church of God is to be attributed to Winebrenner, as may be assumed; it is equally true that he found prepared ground in which to plant the seed. The public inception of the enterprise dates from the meeting of the General Eldership (now the East Pennsylvania Eldership) at Middletown, Dauphin county, Pa., which convened December 25, 1833. On Monday, the 30th, quite abruptly the matter was introduced by the following entry on the Minutes: "On the subject of a Printing Establishment the following action was had." The first resolution follows: "Resolved, That we deem it highly important for the good of the cause of God to establish a religious paper." It was also determined that "the paper be entitled 'The Gospel Publisher and Journal of Useful Knowledge,' and that it be 'printed and published on a medium sheet, at \$1.50 per annum, if paid in advance; \$1.75, if paid within the first six months, and \$2.00, if not paid within the year.'" In addition, "all the preachers and elders were authorized to secure subscribers," and J. Winebrenner, J. Ross and William Hinney were made "a committee to draft and issue a Prospectus." A Printing Committee was appointed, consisting of five persons, which should "locate the Establishment, and commence the paper by the first of March, 1834." As nothing was done during the year, at the Eldership held at Shippensburg, Cumberland county, Pa., December 13, 1834, the Committee reported to that effect, "for want of sufficient encouragement to warrant the same," and added: "Your Committee beg leave to suggest, that in their opinion such a publication, conducted on proper principles, would result in much good to the Church and cause of God." And so it urged that "all possible means be immediately resorted to for the above purpose." This was evidently done, for six months later, on June 5, 1835, the first number of volume one was issued from the Printing Establishment of the Church of God, under the name adopted in 1833. The size of the printed page of Vols. I. and II. was  $15\frac{1}{4} \times 10$  inches; number of pages, 4; issued weekly; terms, \$1.50 per annum, if paid in advance. It had between four and five hundred subscribers, only five hundred being reported on December 26, 1839; while in April, 1840, the number had increased to eight hundred; it gradually decreased again on account of non-payment of subscriptions. There were \$3,000.00 due at the latter date. The list of agents numbered forty-five. John Winebrenner was the Editor until April 1, 1840, when he was succeeded by J. F. Weishampel, who served in that capacity until December 26, 1843. His successor was George McCartney, from January 4, 1844, until August 13, 1845, when the publication of the paper was finally suspended, except one issue on December 12, 1845, containing the Journal of the Annual East Pennsylvania Eldership of that year, and also the "Proposals for Publishing a semi-monthly paper, entitled The Church Advocate." The only original matter in the first issue of the paper was one editorial, outlining the proposed Departments and general character of the paper, and a short letter by J. Flake, congratulating Winebrenner that "The Gospel Publisher will soon be forthcoming." The primary object, or purpose, of publishing the paper, said Winebrenner, was "to furnish our patrons weekly with the best and most interesting religious news of the day and age in which we live, in connection with the diffusion of general knowledge;" the dissemination of gospel truth, and to secure funds to send out missionaries. This thought of "net proceeds, to be applied to religious purposes" was among the standing announcements, and was an item dwelt upon editorially. The size of the initial number was continued two years, when it was increased to  $19 \times 13$  inches, and published semi-monthly, at \$1.50 a year. A very noticeable change was made in the form and size of the paper, beginning with Vol. V., January 3, 1840. It was made an eight-page paper,  $9\frac{1}{4} \times 7\frac{1}{2}$  inches, and issued weekly, at \$2.00 a year. This was continued two years, when with the beginning of Vol. VII., it was enlarged to a "sixmo" or a twelve-page paper, with the same dimensions of the page, and same terms. With the beginning of Vol. VIII. it was reduced to eight pages, same size and terms. Volume IX. witnessed a slight increase in the size of the page, being  $11\frac{3}{4} \times 9\frac{1}{4}$  inches, which was continued until the suspension of publication.

That an English paper should be published by a Church so largely German was not according to the usual order. The Evangelical Association first published a German paper. The importance of the German language was always a dominant thought with Weishampel. Soon after he became Editor, in July, 1840, he began to devote a page, more or less, to German matter. At the Eldership in 1841 the question of publishing a German paper was under consideration, but it was deferred because it seemed to be "rather a doubtful undertaking." Besides, there were "other matters upon foot" that would be interfered with. The constant and large losses sustained by the non-payment of subscriptions disposed the Board of Trustees in November, 1843, to adopt "the cash system." After a brief trial it was found that the most obvious effect of this policy was to cut down the number of subscribers.

The editorial work of Winebrenner on The Gospel Publisher covered a period of about 4 years and 10 months; that of Weishampel, 3 years and 8 months, and that of McCartney, 1 years and 7 months. Winebrenner had little natural taste for editorial work. He wrote few editorials of any length. He was too much occupied with other duties to do justice to himself as Editor, or to the paper. There was also an evident lack of interest on the part of the pastors, so that religious intelligence was limited during his term. Weishampel was a man of an entirely different type. He was a practical printer, a fluent and easy writer, and possessed of a penchant for controversial discussions.

He was of a versatile character, and could write on almost any subject with little apparent effort. With a fertile brain, he had new expedients to suggest and plans to propose for the accomplishment of desired ends. The thought of a certain number of Assistant Editors was suggested by him with a view of popularizing the paper. Under his direction, while the departments of the paper remained about as outlined by Winebrenner, yet the character of the contents changed. There was less space given to secular matters and to general religious news, and more to the news from churches of God. In the sphere of journalism he was in his element. On August 30, 1843, he announced his intention of resigning the editorship, which he did later to take effect December 27, 1843, at the end of Vol. VIII. He then became the "Printer," and in that capacity contributed articles for the paper. But his inborn proclivity for editorial work soon mastered him, and he conceived the thought of starting a paper of his own, possibly foreseeing the wreck of The Gospel Publisher. This project he matured while "Printer" of The Gospel Publisher, and persuaded Mackey, who aspired to the editorship when McCartney was chosen, to become the Editor of the "Gospel Messenger." For this violation of the System of Co-operation he and Mackey were arraigned before the Eldership on November 13, 1844, charged with "starting the publication of a paper called 'The Gospel Messenger' without the consent and approbation of the

J. F. Weishampel.

Eldership." This was "held to be irregular, and contrary to the plan of co-operation." Mackey explained, that he "neither suggested nor planned" the project; but that he accepted the editorship "at the earnest entreaty of Weishampel, and from sympathy towards him." However, he was "dissatisfied because of treatment received in relation to his application for the editorship of The Gospel Publisher." He had also withdrawn from "The Gospel Messenger." His action was condoned, and his license was renewed. But Weishampel was not so ready to submit, and so he was disfellowshipped for "contempt of the Eldership," and for "unjust" and "unfounded charges" against the Eldership and certain ministers.

Under McCartney the paper at first seemed to manifest new life. It was less a personal organ, and secured more general and hearty co-operation. For a short time it received commendations; but by the middle of the first volume criticisms were beginning to be heard, and later through the magnanimity of the Editor "condemnatory" articles were even published in the paper. A degree of "embarrassment" was expressed by McCartney on January 17, 1844, which was interpreted to forecast its discontinuance in July, 1844, on account of the "Gospel Messenger." This paper was drawing away some patronage, so that the outlook darkened. Winebrenner took up the matter in the issue following, and proposed a plan to relieve the Establishment. Others followed; but no material results were realized. Conditions became more complicated, so that a year later "the long-threatened" suspension was announced in the issue of August 13, 1845, being No. 32 of Vol. X. The Eldership which convened November 12, 1845, appointed a committee, consisting of Winebrenner and McCartney "to publish the Journal of the Eldership," which they did as Vol. X., No. 33; of The Gospel Publisher, the last issue published. Said Eldership also "requested the Publishing Committee to commence the publication of a paper as soon as possible." This ended the first chapter of religious journalism for the Church of God.

II. THE CHURCH ADVOCATE.

In the last issue of The Gospel Publisher appeared "Proposals for publishing a semi-monthly paper, entitled The Church Advocate," which "the Publishing Committee of the Eldership have agreed to publish, as the organ of the Church of God, in lieu of The Gospel Publisher." It was "intended to be the only authorized organ of the Church of God, and will be published under the direction of the General Eldership [now the East Pennsylvania Eldership], so that all the churches and Annual Elderships, which adhere to the plan of general co-operation, as established by the first General Eldership, will be equally interested, and equally entitled to a proportional share in the proceeds of the same." The price fixed upon was "$1.25, payable always in advance, or within the first three months." "The ruinous credit system," as Winebrenner called it with exact justice, was to be a historic fact only. And yet before the close of the first volume Winebrenner, for want of support, had to "dwell on the chagrin, shame, mortification and loss of another suspension" as an argument for a larger subscription list and more prompt pay. "Punctuality is the life of business," said Winebrenner, in August, 1846, and when the first three months had passed, he stated that "more than one-half of the subscribers have forfeited their subscriptions by non-payment." In September, 1847, there were three hundred delinquents in debt on the first three months of Vol. XI., and three hundred and forty on Vol. XII. "It unsettles our business, and runs us into very considerable expense," Winebrenner said. But this was the Rule established by the Publishing Committee, and Winebrenner made an effort to enforce it. It, however, was gradually relaxed, and then virtually suspended. No "cash system" works that is not a pay-in-advance system. This Winebrenner fully realized by 1854, when before the close of Vol. XVIII. he announced that it "was now finally settled that with the new volume the strictly cash system" would be enforced. He was forced to this by the heavy losses sustained, which fell on him, as under his contract the receipts were his up to and including reasonable salary, and he had to pay all other expenses. It cost him a good many subscribers, and did not increase the income. In reality the paper was his, but he was subject to the Board of Publication, and had a contract with it in 1846 for one year, which was renewed in 1847. He states that he bought the Printing Establishment in 1846, and was "proprietor and conductor" of the Establishment, but in a sense the paper was not his. It was about of uniform size from June, 1846, until he sold it to James Colder, as announced April 23, 1857. It was published semi-monthly from 1846 to June, 1852, and thereafter weekly. The price was $1.25, paid in advance, or within three months, for Vols. XI. and XII. From 1848 to 1852, the price was $1.00; and from 1852 to 1857 it was $1.50. He published the paper under a contract for the first year, which was renewed at the end of the year, without any subsequent mention of it. And while there were constant losses, and the paper was never out of danger, it may be truly said that Winebrenner made it a fixed institution of the Church. He put his heart much more fully into it, and labored assiduously to make it a success financially and as the organ of the Church. While he felt that "preaching is my proper calling, and not editing;" yet his zeal and self-sacrifice and painstaking efforts as Publisher and Editor are clearly in evidence. The loss of subscribers he keenly felt, and near the close of different volumes his pathetic pleas to subscribers not to stop their papers, and to former ones to return were humiliating. His joy at the growth of the list of subscribers he could not conceal. The original list consisted of from 500 to 800, and had grown to some 1,400 by 1852, when it again began to fall off, but somewhat recovered by 1857. These increases in the lists were accounted for by conditional promises to enlarge the paper, as in 1851, should 500 new names be furnished; or in 1852, when an increase of 1,500 new subscribers was the condition upon which the paper was to be published weekly. Premiums were also offered at different times for new subscribers. In 1856 a "new dress" was the proposition, as in 1857, "new type and a larger" paper, for 500 new subscribers. Neither was realized, and frankly stated. The enlargement in 1857 was opposed by Weishampel, the "Printer," who published an article to that effect without the Editor's knowledge. Until April, 1857, the paper was "printed and published on Mulberry street, near the Railroad Bridge," or, as incidentally stated, in "the basement of the Old Bethel," whence at the beginning of April, 1857, it was "removed to the upper story of the Keystone Machine Shop, opposite the new Bethel on Fourth street." Less than a month later, on April 23, 1857, the sale of the Establishment and paper to James Colder was announced by Winebrenner and confirmed by Colder.

That great improvements were made on the paper by Winebrenner between 1846 and 1857 is evident to the most casual reader. And they were made against serious difficulties and at sacrifices hard to estimate at their full strength. Some of these grew out of unavoidable conditions, such as delays in issuing the paper, as No. 1, Vol. XI., which was delayed from the date first fixed, April 1, 1846, to May 1st; by various ill-founded criticisms; by the wear of type so as to make poor impressions, and various other causes. The unfavorable effect of a protracted agitation to "move the paper West" was quite perceptible. It began in 1851, and continued for six years. Harn in more than one sense was an agitator, ambitious, restless, resourceful. He had cast in his lot with the West, and with little conception of its cost in different ways, on May 9, 1851, wrote from Wooster, Ohio, "that there is a deep and abiding anxiety west of the mountains that the whole Printing Concern should be transferred to this place. We advocate an entire new Establishment, owned by the Church at large. An effort will be made at the coming General Eldership." Winebrenner was forbearing, patient, moderate and diplomatic. Above all he wanted a Printing Establishment and a paying paper, and he was tired carrying both. He did not antagonize the movement. When on May 26, 1851, the General Eldership met at Pittsburg, Pa., it spent considerable time on the proposition Harn had submitted. It finally decided "highly to approve the generous effort of western brethren to secure a Printing Establishment to be held as the property of the whole Church; and, provided sufficient encouragement should be given, we recommend to the Publishing Committee to secure such Establishment, and locate it at Wooster, Ohio." On October 1, 1851, Winebrenner called attention to this resolution, and to the proviso. He desired to get the proposition out of the mists of declamation and generalities into the clear light of facts. What does it mean? He says: "Now to enable the Committee to judge whether such encouragement [sufficient] has been given, or is likely to be given, we would here state the substance of what has been reported since the General Eldership." Harn said Ohio has subscribed $500.00. Logue wrote that West Pennsylvania has subscribed $1,050.00. But as much more, Winebrenner said, would be needed, and if furnished, "the project can easily be accomplished." For "we are altogether favorable to the project, provided there is general co-operation. We think the Church ought to have a Printing Establishment; locality is a minor consideration." "All Elderships should help." Weishampel, on November 1, 1851, opposed the removal to the West. The East Pennsylvania Eldership agreed to co-operate with the brethren West to buy a new Establishment "on condition that they will assist in paying off the old debt." This the West was not ready to agree to, as this meant $2,705.46 more. The West Pennsylvania Eldership, however, "considered all the Elderships bound to pay Winebrenner's claims." The Ohio Eldership in part acceded to this, as in October, 1851, it approved the efforts being made for the purchase of a Printing Establishment to be located at Wooster, Ohio. They had $570.00, and "expected several hundred dollars more." In 1852 it named a collecting agent to secure more subscriptions. Meanwhile West Pennsylvania Eldership approved the 25-cent plan to liquidate Winebrenner's claims. The Indiana Eldership at first stood aloof as it found itself "too poor to assist in carrying out the proposed project," and so resolved to remain neutral. This in answer to an address to Iowa, Illinois and Indiana on the subject by Winebrenner. He also, in January, 1852, insists on conditions being fulfilled, to which some were opposed. But in March, 1852, the Ohio Standing Committee yielded, and agreed "to pay off the debt first," and "invited Indiana, Iowa and Michigan to co-operate in purchasing a new Printing Establishment and paying off the old debt." May 29, 1852, the "Printing Committee agreed that when $2,000.00 in cash, or responsible bonds, have been raised, the Board will proceed to purchase, and remove to some point west of the Mountains." As at this time $1,100.00 had been subscribed, Winebrenner said "it will be easy to raise the balance." But counsels were being divided. January 10, 1852, one writer opposed removal, and advocated two papers. In July, 1852, Sandoe, Illinois, urged payment of debt through the 25-cent per member plan; but he advocated locating "the new Establishment further West than just west of the Mountains." A Pittsburg subscriber advocated Pittsburg. Another from the East named Cincinnati, Ohio. The agitation was continued year after year with no decisive results. In 1854 the General Eldership decided that "as soon as sufficient funds can be obtained for a Printing Establishment, the Executive Committee shall purchase one, and locate it at any place agreed upon by a majority of the members of the Standing Committees of the several Elderships." The Elderships seemed again united under these resolutions, and scores of agents were appointed from East Pennsylvania to Iowa to secure subscriptions, urged on by words of encouragement from Winebrenner. Suddenly the course was changed by the interjection of the new Hymn-Book question, which Winebrenner was compiling, and on February 11, 1856, the Ohio Standing Committee resolved, that while urging the new Printing Establishment, yet it did "not think it best to enter upon the project of starting it until the new Hymn-Book is completed and published." The Annual Elderships were united on this demand for the new Hymn-Book, and were impatient at the delay in its publication. Winebrenner regretted that both plans could not be worked together. But as interest became somewhat stagnant, and the time for the General Eldership in 1857 was approaching, Winebrenner was constrained to make calculations for the next volume. He therefore published the Prospectus of Vol. XXII., proposing "to issue said volume, beginning April 30, 1857, with entirely new type and in an enlarged form," "if 500 new subscribers were furnished." But in the last issue of Vol. XXI., April 23, 1857, he announced the sale of "the good will and Advocate Establishment to Elder James Colder."

There was no election of Editor; but in the first issue of Vol. XXII., May 7, 1857, Colder announced, that having "become the proprietor of The Church Advocate, we now enter upon the discharge of our duties as Editor." The transfer of the Establishment and paper to Colder was unexpected. But Winebrenner sold because he "wanted to sell;" because he "had a chance to sell;" because he "was weary of the toils and perplexities of editorial life;" because he "had no reason to believe that the General Eldership would be prepared to take it off our hands at its next meeting;" because "certain brethren were not satisfied with our manner of conducting the paper;" because he "had entirely too much money standing out," and because he "needed more time to finish the new Hymn-Book, selling stock of the new Collegiate Institute," and other work. He was Associate Editor, however, for a short time. But though Winebrenner had no reason in April 1, 1857, to believe that the General Eldership would take the paper off his hands; yet said body bought it from Colder on June 4, 1875, "for the amount it cost him." The contract of sale provided that the Establishment and paper be "left in his hands until the receipts cover the amount to be paid, after which the entire proceeds are to pass into the treasury of the General Eldership, and Brother Colder to receive no more than the salary agreed upon." This was "$300.00 for the first year, and $500.00 for each subsequent year up to the meeting of the next General Eldership." He was elected Editor, and E. H. Thomas, J. S. Gable and Dr. George Ross were elected the Publishing Committee. Except that "an entirely new stock of materials for the office" was bought for the first issue under Colder, no change in size, form or price was made. Prospects were so favorable that as early as August, 1857, Colder stated that "the subscription list is larger now than at any time since the commencement of the paper," and that he expected to be enabled "to pay off all the current demands of the office for this year, and make The Advocate the property of the Church at large at the close without a penny of expense." But the winds began to blow contrary. The controversy between Colder and Winebrenner over the Texas Eldership matters divided the patrons of the paper, and portentous clouds were seen on the horizon. The Board of Publication on November 26, 1857, issued a pathetic appeal, and others used their good offices to avert a failure of the Establishment. But the effort was fruitless, and after editing the paper one year and eight months, "because of embarrassment for want of funds," Colder "stopped the publication of the paper, discharged the hands and abandoned the office, and gave the Committee of Publication to understand they were to be held responsible for the debts of the Establishment," which amounted to $1,256.00. Colder was in various ways well equipped for an editor, and possessed the advantages of a classical education. But he lacked other qualifications which made him unfit for a pilot in times of stress and storm.

After the suspension of the paper by Colder, on February 10, 1859, the Committee on Publication resumed its publication, having bought the Establishment. It arranged with E. H. Thomas, a member of the Committee, to assume "the control and editorship, assisted by James Mackey, as Assistant, or Corresponding,

E. H. Thomas.

Editor. The debt at the time was $1,300.00, "without a dollar to carry on the paper." This was increased to $1,637.00 by the end of the volume. The contract with Thomas was a duplicate of the one with Colder, and was to run two years. That is, Thomas was to "take the Establishment with all its liabilities and assets, and carry forward the publication of The Advocate on his own responsibility, and receive all the income for two full years"—to the end of Vol. XXV., June 1, 1861. Then to deliver it over to the Board free of debt. Thomas at the time lived at Mt. Joy, Lancaster county, and was pastor of the church. He had bought a printing plant there, and at once arranged to remove The Advocate to that place. March 10, 1859, the first number was issued from the new office. He threw all his energies into the new sphere of activity into which he was providentially thrust. And for ten weary, vexing years he labored with consuming zeal to bring the paper out of the quagmire and the fogs to solid ground and an elevation where he could "see the clear sky through and beyond the clouds," as he wrote a few months before he entered that other life beyond the veil. How this happy terminus was reached is a story of anxieties, perplexing problems, criticisms, vexations and hardships which no one can make real to himself. While Thomas received his "meed, a friend's esteem and praise," his opposers and critics were never slow to harass him. As soon as the paper of March 10, 1859, was issued from the Mt. Joy office, the Illinois Standing Committee "disapproved of the course pursued by the Publishing Committee in removing The Church Advocate office from Harrisburg to the village of Mt. Joy." Without explaining the matter, on May 5, 1859, Thomas announced the removal of the paper to Lancaster City, adding that it is "the design of the Printing Board that this location shall be permanent." He was almost constantly in straits on account of the debt, and often referred to it, inquiring reproachfully at times whose it is, and the necessity of paying it. And by the end of his second year it was reduced to "less than one-half." He offered premiums from time to time, urged greater activity on the part of ministers, and announced improvements in order to increase the list of subscribers. He measurably succeeded in this, for by 1868 he had nearly 3,000 names on the list of subscribers, and was ready to enter into an agreement in 1869 to close out his contract by June, 1870. While Thomas's first contract ran to June, 1861, the General Eldership renewed it in 1860 to extend to June, 1863. Each successive triennium it was renewed, but in 1869 it was limited to one year, to expire June 1, 1870. And for each of the two succeeding years Thomas was to pay $300.00 to the General Eldership. He had an indomitable purpose to succeed, and adopted every honorable means to that end. In December, 1861, he suggested the enlargement of the paper, and reduction of the price, on condition that 1,000 new subscribers were secured. He repeated his proposition in January, 1862. This met with a favorable response by the West Ohio Standing Committee, other official bodies and a number of influential ministers, while a few came out in opposition. Thomas generally consulted public opinion on any change he was disposed to make. On April 3, 1862, he stated that only "one-half of the 1,000 new subscribers" had been reported, and so he could not reduce the price, unless the full 1,000 should be in by May 1st. He modified his proposition, so as to enlarge the paper by making it one inch longer; by striking off all who were in arrears three years; by accepting new names at $1.00 cash, and leaving the price to old subscribers at $1.50 unless a new subscriber is sent in with the subscription, until the 1,000 mark is reached. The slight enlargement was made, and new type bought, so that Vol. XXVII. was pronounced by Thomas "the largest, neatest and most interesting volume ever issued from The Advocate office." But the War cost the loss of subscribers and money. Everything was going up in price. The position of The Advocate on the prosecution of the War, the abolition of slavery and other questions militated against its prosperity, so that danger again threatened the frail craft. On October 12, 1865, Thomas proposed a change in the form of the paper, if not in size, from an eight-page to a four-page paper. This was approved by the following Elderships, or their Standing Committees: Michigan, Indiana, West Pennsylvania, East Ohio, Iowa, Southern Illinois and Indiana, and Illinois. There were individual protests; but on November 23, 1865, Thomas stated that he "settled it in our mind to considerably enlarge and otherwise improve The Advocate." And in February, 1866, he announced a majority in favor of a change in form and increase in size. As the General Eldership would meet in May, 1866, Thomas was doubtless preparing the way. The Illinois Eldership had instructed its delegates to the General Eldership to vote: 1. To enlarge the paper. 2. For a Board of Editors from different Elderships. 3. A change of form. 4. To bring the paper West—to Chicago. There was a spirit of insubordination among some in Illinois. They assailed The Advocate in such terms as to call out most scathing editorials. R. White, in the columns of The Advocate was permitted to do this, and he boldly defended the proposition to remove the paper to Chicago, or start the publication of another Church paper. In March, 1866, Thomas announced enlargement and change of form, "with the consent of the Board of Publication." On May 3, 1866, Vol. XXXI., this was done as to size, one inch being added to the length and one-half inch to the width, without any surface opposition the old contract was renewed for three years, Thomas re-elected Editor, and C. H. Forney, Assistant Editor. The latter was to have no pay, but was to serve by way of preparation for the editorship in case of disability or death of the Editor. But the opposition in Illinois continued active, and in June, 1868, "the initiatory number of a new paper, with the title 'The Church,' made its appearance," published at Polo, Ill. But it was short-lived. The most remarkable change Thomas made was in 1868, when he had nearly 3,000 subscribers. Quietly the program was published, that if the 3,000 were guaranteed the paper would be enlarged to nearly double the size of Vol. XXXII., and the price advanced to $2.00. In so far as there was an expression of opinion it was "an almost unanimous verdict in favor of enlargement," and on April 16, 1868, the matter as to "the question of enlarging The Advocate was settled, and making it a $2.00, pre-paying paper." Accordingly Vol. XXXIII., No. 1, May 6, 1868, was issued "with an entirely new dress for the first time since 1835," at a cost of $500.00, and $40.00 a week more than before to publish it." It was an eight-page paper, 19½x14 inches reading matter and headline. Thomas was enthusiastic, yet had his doubts. And by October 28, 1868, he made earnest pleas for help, and recalled the "terrible conflict and struggles for existence our Church organ had had to pass through for thirty-three years." But he ventured to hope that "the danger of failure is over." Anticipating a renewal of his contract and re-election as Editor for three years longer, on May 5, 1869, Thomas hopefully began Vol. XXXIV., referring his readers to "our past efforts" as the "only pledges we have to make for the future." He was not disappointed, for he was re-elected Editor, and the contract was renewed for three years, with this modification: that during the first year the balance of the indebtedness was to be paid, and for each of the two succeeding years he was to pay $300.00 into the General Eldership treasury. C. H. Forney was re-elected Assistant Editor under the action of 1866. But the fatal arrow had marked him, and less than four months after this last contract had been signed, on September 11, 1869, at 4.18 a. m., this strong, good, loyal man went up "the shining road from this dimmer sunlight into the light of God."

An essential change in the relation of the Editor of The Advocate was automatically effected by the death of Editor Thomas. He was Publisher and Editor, and also the owner of the Printing Plant. Under the Resolution of 1866, C. H. Forney was elected Assistant Editor, to take the place of the Editor in case of his disability or death. Re-elected in 1869, when the Editor died he succeeded to that office; but the Executor, it was conceded, took Thomas's place as Publisher and Proprietor. But on February 2, 1870, G. Ross and J. S. Gable, the other two members of the Board of Publication, announced that the contract with E. H. Thomas would terminate on May 1, 1870, and that Geo. Ross, having bought the contract, would be the Publisher. This was put into effect with the volume beginning May 1, 1870. The Editor then was only Editor, except that for convenience and better service he became Business Manager for the Publisher, a position he has ever since held. Ross carried out the Thomas contract, and in May, 1872, paid $600.00, less a small amount of special expenses, to the General Eldership, the first surplus that body received. He was elected Publisher in 1872, and continued in that capacity until 1876, when Thomas and Demming became Publishers and Printers until July, 1878. Since then the Board of Publication has been the Publisher. This Board has always faithfully guarded the interests of the paper. Its members have changed considerably, to wit: 1875-8:—J. S. Gable, George Ross, J. A. Shuler. 1878-81:—J. S. Gable, George Ross, I. Frazer. 1881-4:—I. Frazer, J. H. Redsecker, D. M. Bare. 1884-7:—The same. 1887-90:—J. C. Forney, D. M. Bare, J. H. Redsecker. 1890-3:—D. M. Bare, J. H. Redsecker, J. M. Carvell. 1893-6:—D. M. Bare, D. S. Shoon, C. I. Brown. 1896-9:—The same. 1899-1902:—The same, except that in February, 1901, Brown resigned, and I. A. MacDannald succeeded him. 1902-1905:—The same. 1905-9:—I. A. MacDannald, C. H. Grove, H. M. Angle. 1909-13:—I. A. MacDannald, C. H. Grove, A. L. Bierbower. Of the nineteen members of the Board during these thirty-eight years seven are living.

The same Editor, with successive re-elections, some times unanimous, was continued until July, 1909, serving three years and three months as Assistant Editor, and three months less than forty years as Editor-in-Chief. On three occasions he asked to be permitted to retire, and in 1909 positively declined re-election. The size and form of the paper were changed three times, the price, except from 1876 to 1878, when it was $1.50, remaining at $2.00. The large size adopted by Thomas, 19½x14 inches, was continued to the close of Vol. LI., July, 1887. It was then changed to a 16-page paper, 15x9½ inches, for four volumes, to July, 1891, when the larger size, 4-page, form was again used, until July, 1901. Then the present 24-page form was adopted, 12x7½ inches. It was upon recommendation of the Board in 1899 that this form was determined upon, as there was a widespread desire for "a book-form." The paper suffered another short suspension in 1877. Ross, as Publisher, had made the paper successful from 1870 to 1876; but there was not only a persistent demand for a reduction in price, but a belief that such a course would largely increase the subscription list and prove a greater success financially. This belief was shared by the Printing and Publishing Firm of Thomas and Demming, and accordingly Demming submitted a proposition to the General Eldership to print and publish The Advocate, same size and quality of paper, at $1.50 a year; pay the Editor an increase per year of $200.00 salary, and at the end of two years pay $1,000.00 into the Treasury of the General Eldership. And while the Editor declined the $200.00, and opposed the proposition, it was recommended conditionally to the Board of Publication. In the Spring of 1876 the contract for printing and publishing the paper was given to Thomas and Demming, the terms to be $1.50 cash. The list had grown from August, 1870, to May, 1873, by the addition of 1,743 names. At this time the subscription list numbered nearly four thousand. To enforce the cash system, the manner of doing which was strongly disapproved by the General Eldership in 1878, this high water mark was cut down to twelve or fifteen hundred, and has never been reached since. The Publishers, Thomas and Demming, were losing money with their reduced list of subscribers, and determined to quit. Without any warning, or notice, after February 21, 1877, the paper ceased to be printed. The Board stepped in, relieved the Firm of its obligation to pay the $1,000.00, and made other concessions, so that, beginning May 2, 1877, publication was resumed, and the fifty-two numbers of the volume issued by the end of June, 1878. On July 4, 1878, the General Eldership again became the Publisher, through the Board of Publication, and advanced the price to $2.00. Other matters which militated somewhat against the paper were the agitation of the old question of a Corps of Editors, and the revival of the project of another Church paper, as well as petty jealousies of which "there is a great deal among otherwise good men," although "of all the passions, it is that which exacts the hardest service, and pays the bitterest wages." On March 23, 1870, the Standing Committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership adopted a resolution in favor of an appointment by the Executive Board of "a Corps of Editors" of which the then Editor was to be Editor-in-Chief, at a stated salary. Again in 1875 the proposition was revived at the General Eldership. Both times it failed. In December, 1876, there was considerable dissatisfaction in the West because the office was so far East, and it required much time for papers to reach subscribers in the extreme West. The agitation for a second paper was started, but was vigorously opposed by the Editor as a suicidal policy. The movement soon subsided. On April 1, 1874, editorial announcement was made, that the Office of Publication would be removed to Harrisburg, Pa., on April 29, 1874. It has not been changed since. Yielding to the demand for an addition to the Editorial Staff, the General Eldership in May, 1872, created the office of Assistant Editor, and elected J. M. Domer. He died November 15, 1872. The office remained vacant until 1875, when H. C. Demming, of the firm of Thomas and Demming, was elected. Assuming his duties July 28, 1875, he served until May 23, 1877. Neither of these gave any material aid in the work on the paper. In 1878, M. S. Newcomer was elected Assistant Editor, and retained that position until the Summer of 1885, when he resigned. He contributed a column or more nearly every week, being a forceful and facile writer. Under the prospective plan of an Assistant Editor who should also edit all the Sunday-school periodicals, but which has not yet been put into effect, J. M. Carvell was elected Assistant Editor in 1885, but never entered on his duties. From 1887 to 1890 T. Koogle, I. W. Markley, W. I. Berkstresser, and J. H. Besore were Editorial Contributors. The same office was filled from 1890 to 1893 by W. H. McKlveen, W. W. Lovett, W. I. Berkstresser and M. S. Newcomer. And from 1893 to 1896 by W. W. Lovett, B. F. Beck, M. S. Newcomer and R. L. Byrnes. As this arrangement proved less satisfactory than was expected, the office of Assistant Editor was re-established, and on February 13, 1901, C. I. Brown entered upon the discharge of its duties, and continued until December 7, 1904, when he resigned, and the following week S. G. Yahn took his place, serving until July, 1909. The finances continued to improve. Except the nearly $600.00 paid into the Treasury by Ross in 1872, there was no net gain until 1881. On February 2, 1879, the editorial, "Possibly Out of the Woods," augured financial success. And on July 1, 1881, there was a reported net balance of $595.15. This nucleus continued to grow, until in 1909, when the Editor finally retired he had paid nearly $15,000.00 toward the Printing Establishment and Publishing House, and turned over to his successor cash and bonds to the amount of $2,472.01.

A number of changes in the Departments of The Advocate were made during the forty years. A Sunday-School Department and a Department of Foreign and Domestic News were the first innovations, introduced in 1870. A rule was put into force excluding "personalities" by contributors and the Editor. In 1899 the General Eldership went further, and closed the columns of the paper to "controversies." In July, 1896, the Editor arranged for a new Department, conducted at first by Mary Berkstresser, known as the "Mission Work." It was previously conducted under another name by R. H. Bolton. Later as "The Mission Work," by W. J. Schaner. On March 8, 1893, the C. E. Department was started, conducted by that sweet-spirited minister and worker, M. M. Foote, until his death. After C. I. Brown became Assistant Editor he conducted this Department with excellent satisfaction. Upon the election of S. G. Yahn Assistant Editor, this work was assigned to him, and was performed with great efficiency. In 1899 the General Eldership excluded Journals of Elderships, Minutes of Ministerial Associations, S. S. Conventions and C. E. Conventions from the columns of The Advocate. The suggestion of "Advocate Day," a practical movement of value to the paper, was first officially made by the Committee on Education of the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1906. It named the first Sunday in December. It was followed in 1908 by similar action by the Elderships in West Pennsylvania and Ohio. Such devoted workers as C. F. Raach and C. Manchester wrote it up in a vigorous manner. The General Eldership in 1909 established the day for all the Annual Elderships.

At the session of the General Eldership at Ft. Scott, Kas., S. G. Yahn, of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, was elected Editor of The Advocate. No Assistant Editor was elected, as agreed upon in 1905.

Sherman Grant Yahn was born on a farm near North Sewickley, Beaver county, Pa., February 5, 1867. Like many other country boys who have become famous, he was born minus a silver spoon in his mouth. He was not a precocious youth; but was always a good learner. He received his preparatory training in the public schools, and at the North Sewickley Academy. He pursued the study of the languages under a private teacher, followed by a course at Curry College, Pittsburg. At sixteen he joined the ranks of the pedagogues, and from his sixteenth to his nineteenth year he occupied a teacher's desk in a public school-room. With the church of God at Slippery Rock (now Lillyville) he received his early religious instruction in the Sunday-school. Here, too, he was brought to a personal, saving knowledge of Christ as his Savior, and at the age of eighteen became a member of this church. Having his mind favorably directed to the Christian ministry, as thousands have had while teaching the rudiments of education in a country school-house, he began at this early age to give special attention to English composition. He wrote for the local papers when but sixteen. Later, more as a discipline than for pulpit use, he wrote extensively in the way of sermonic preparation, but he never has been a sermon-reader. For three years and a half he was joint editor and publisher of the "Missionary Signal." In 1893 he wrote and published a brief "History of the West Pennsylvania Eldership." He also published two smaller pamphlets, on "Bible Study," and "The Teaching Function of the Churches of God." In 1896 he was elected by the General Eldership to the office of Assistant Editor of The Advocate; but in the Fall of the same year, having decided to retain his position as pastor of Mt. Pleasant church, he declined to serve. In December, 1904, the Executive Board elected him to that office to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of C. I. Brown. He continued to serve in this capacity, having been re-elected in 1905 by the General Eldership, until his elevation to the higher office of Editor. Dr. Yahn was ordained to the gospel ministry by the West Pennsylvania Eldership in 1886. And up to 1909, when he removed to Harrisburg, he had spent twenty years in the active work of his calling. Of these twenty he was pastor of the Mt. Pleasant church eighteen, the longest consecutive pastorate in the history of the churches of God. His pulpit services were peculiarly interesting, forceful and spiritually instructive. He was a successful pastor, without anything phenomenal, having exceptional powers to lead men to Christ, so that in many instances he was instrumental in the conversion of the second generation. His sterling worth was soon recognized by his Eldership, in which he early became a recognized leader by reason of his spotless character, his judicial temperament and his mental equipment. Thrice he served as President of his Eldership, and was an efficient member of all its boards and committees. He was also honored by six successive elections as delegate to the General Eldership. He was chosen a member of the General Board of Missions in 1899, and served continuously until 1909, where he gave evidence of a clear grasp of every question and a singleness and persistence of purpose which always go before promotion and honor. These same qualities were manifested during the several terms which he served as a member of the Board of Trustees of Findlay College, one term of which he was President of the Board, and did much in framing its policies and guiding its deliberations to wise conclusions. In 1905 the College gave deserved recognition to his literary and theological scholarship by voting him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. Thus he came to the office of Editor exceptionally well equipped for its responsibilities and duties. As a writer he has command of a good and expressive vocabulary. He does not waste words, nor deal too liberally in qualifying terms. There is clearness, directness, force and unity in his thoughts. He is a thinker and a teacher. There is purity of style, precision of terms, perspicuity of expression. He discusses with growing intelligence the larger problems and interests of the kingdom of God without any assumption of superiority or hints at pedantry. And as the basis of all his admirable qualifications there is a deeply laid substratum of true nobility of character, sterling integrity, a fullness of spiritual life, splendid spirit and that charity which suffereth long and is kind.

He has conducted and edited the paper since July, 1909, with purity of purpose, painstaking industry, rare ability and commendable caution. He is the first Editor who was not a member of the East Pennsylvania Eldership at the time of his elevation to that responsible office. He has the high qualification of a consciousness of the true character of his office, as having charge of "the most influential agency among the churches of God." "It has done more than anything else to shape, direct and encourage every enterprise of the General Eldership, and to teach and establish our ministers in the faith of the Church." Under his management, while there were few changes and other innovations, the paper has been conducted so as to meet universal approval. He added the Department of "Preacher and Pastor" for the special benefit of active ministers. Current events throughout the world, in their bearing on religious questions, have been discussed with commendable discrimination. He has revealed a thorough familiarity with the doctrinal and historical theology of the churches of God, and has frequently done the churches and ministers a signal service by the lucid and illuminating discussion of questions pertaining to practical Church work. As a special object he has kept in view the support and furtherance of the general interests of the body. The W. G. M. S. controversy having been ended by the final action thereon by the General Eldership in 1909, there have been no questions of controversy to disturb the serenity of the four years during which he has held the responsible position of Editor. Under the contract with the Board of Directors of the Central Printing and Publishing House of the Churches of God, the financial condition of the paper was good. At the General Eldership in 1913 the Editor reported a balance of $4,463.04.

III. THE MONTHLY PUBLISHER.

The passion for publishing papers developed rapidly during the first half of the century of American religious journalism. Scores of periodicals were projected, or actually started, for which there was no reasonable justification, and they soon came to disastrous ends. One of these was "The Monthly Publisher." On January 8, 1845, the Executive Committee of the Board of Printing Establishment issued a "Prospectus" proposing to publish "a small monthly paper in octavo form," "for the benefit and accommodation of the young, and such persons as cannot afford to take the weekly Publisher." Eight hundred subscribers were to be secured before beginning its publication. The terms were "66 2-3 cents per volume, payable always within the first three months of the year." But on March 5, 1845, the Committee announced that the "publication will not be commenced for the present," because of "not getting a sufficient number of subscribers, as well as for other reasons."

IV. CHRISTLICHER KUNDSCHAFTER.

The German Eldership, formed in 1854, at its first session in October appointed J. F. Weishampel to Reading, Berks county, and requested him to become the Editor of a German paper. He had at the time a charge in the East Pennsylvania Eldership, which favorably recommended the proposed paper. On February, 1855, preparatory to taking charge of the Reading Mission in April, Weishampel published a Prospectus of the new paper, and called for subscribers. The name adopted was "Christliche Familien-Gast," to be published semi-monthly; a 4-page paper, the size of The Advocate of that date, at 50 cents a volume. But on June 2, 1855, he announced that because of the small number of subscribers the paper "would not be published for the present." He wanted not less than 400 subscribers. In 1860, in 1863 and again in 1865 the German Eldership adopted resolutions, speaking of the great importance of "establishing a small German paper," and urging Weishampel to undertake it. This he was entirely willing to do if there would be sufficient encouragement. Accordingly, on September 18, 1866, he stated through The Advocate his willingness to try it; but not having the means, he asked for donations aggregating $200.00 for type and other materials. The first number of the paper was to appear January 1, 1867. While a few opposed the project, others strongly sanctioned it. It also had the approval of The Advocate, and the General Eldership in May, 1866, gave it official endorsement. The German Eldership again in 1866 authorized Weishampel to begin the work. Some funds were received, but not enough, and January 1, 1867, passed, but no paper had been issued. The German Eldership Standing Committee on May 3, 1867, demanded, that, as there was "no prospect that a German paper will be published," the money sent in to buy type, etc., be placed in the Missionary Fund. But on November 21, 1867, Weishampel replied, stating that "the fate of the proposed paper is not finally decided." The work of securing funds continued; the title of the paper was changed to "Christlicher Kundschafter," and on April 4, 1869, the first number, printed at Baltimore, Md., was issued. From Baltimore the office was removed to Auburn, Schuylkill county, Pa.; thence to Orwigsburg, in 1870, and then to Lancaster, Lancaster county, in 1873. It was a "neat little sheet of four pages." Its patronage was small, as in 1875 its circulation was 250; but it at times had more than twice that number. For several years it was the official organ of the Evangelical Mennonite Church. In 1875 the General Eldership placed it under the jurisdiction of its Board of Publication; elected Weishampel Editor, and made him amenable to its Executive Board. Weishampel was well adapted to the work. He was a ready, if at times acrimonious, writer and composer in German and English; a practical printer, who could set up his own articles without previously writing them. There was a vein of native humor in him which he used to good effect. It was easy for him, however, to get into "hot-water." And yet he was generally of a hopeful, buoyant spirit, and built many castles in the air. But when he felt aggrieved, or believed he was injured by an enemy, he was unable to restrain himself, and wielded an implacable and malicious pen. This occurred in 1877, and was kept up to the end. A charitable judgment is proper, for many extenuating circumstances are discernable. But officially these could not be so fully recognized, and so his course was condemned, first by the Board of Incorporation of the General Eldership, and then by the Board of Publication, both of which requested the Executive Board to take action. Feeling the effect of this official action, Weishampel, on September 29, 1877, stated to the German Eldership that he proposed "to stop the 'Kundschafter' on April 1, 1878." The Eldership was not favorable to this, and urged the continuance of the paper. Weishampel did so, printing a page or more in English, so as to reach the ministers and brethren in English Elderships. The General Eldership in 1878 took up the complaints against Weishampel's course, and finally ordered his paper to be discontinued.

V. THE CHURCH OF GOD SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPER.

It was at the session of the General Eldership of 1860, the last session Winebrenner attended, beginning May 28th, that the question of publishing a Sunday-school paper was first officially mentioned. A committee on the subject was appointed, and it reported favorably, declaring that "we think the time has come when the Sabbath-school interest among us as a people requires the publication ..... of a Sabbath-school paper." It further recommended that "a suitable person be appointed, under proper restrictions, to get up a paper for the Sabbath-schools of the Church of God." And while the recommendation was adopted, nothing further was done. The project slumbered for six years, when on April 19, 1866, a contributor to The Advocate wrote, saying: "The want of a Sunday-school paper has no doubt been long felt by those who labor in our schools." "We have sufficient schools and scholars to sustain such an enterprise." As the meeting of the General Eldership of 1866 was only a little more than a month off, "H" called its attention to this proposition. When the Eldership convened on the last of May, 1866, among the committees appointed was one on a Sunday-school paper, consisting of one from each Eldership, including the Board of Publication. Said Committee reported, that "the Board of Publication be authorized to publish a monthly Sunday-school paper, to commence on the first day of January, 1867." It also provided for collections in all the Sunday-schools to secure the means to purchase type and all other necessary materials. Before the paper should be issued there should be 5,600 subscribers. A corps of Editors and Contributors should be appointed, all to be under the Editor of The Advocate. That the name of the paper should be "The Church of God Sunday-School Paper." All this was adopted; thirteen contributors were elected, with D. Shelley, Shiremanstown, Cumberland county, Pa., as Editor. Thomas, as a member of the Board of Publication, entered upon this enterprise with the vim and energy of a youth. Early in the Fall he outlined his plans and called for cash and subscribers. Soon the voice of the pessimist was heard, and there were prophecies of failure. Thomas walked and worked by faith in the brotherhood. On November 15th he stated that "not half the amount necessary has been subscribed;" but that he had resolved that the paper shall appear on the date fixed. Only $194.00 had been pledged, and 2,020 subscribers. Gradually Thomas introduced the term "Gem" in place of "Paper." He was sustained by the faith of others, and heard their encouraging words: "We only need general co-operation to succeed." The Annual Elderships strongly endorsed the project during October, and Thomas went ahead. On November 29th $207.00 were pledged; but he wrote: "We have now negotiated for a complete set of new material for the publishing of the Church of God Sunday-School Gem." And on December 6th: "We have now reached a point in our preparation for the publication of the Sunday-school paper that compels us to proceed." And on December 13th: "We are pushing ahead as fast as possible to get The Gem out at the appointed time." There were $211.00 pledged. The day designated by the General Eldership came when the paper was to be issued. Shelley had declined the editorship. There were but $293.00 secured. But on January 2, 1867, Thomas announced through The Advocate, under the heading, "S. S. Gem," "We have now sent out the first number of the Sunday-school paper authorized by the General Eldership." There were 2,175 copies ordered by the schools. One thing Thomas regretted touching this first number:—That he failed to get a piece of music for it. At the close of Vol. I. Thomas reported receipts, $1,125.03; expenses $1,092.00. But there was still a balance due him of $158.53. He hopefully began Vol. II., having made special mention of help afforded him by George Ross and J. H. Redsecker. To the latter the editorial work was gradually transferred, as in the beginning of July, 1868, Thomas had become very frail. On December 23, 1868, the announcement was first made that J. H. Redsecker had become Editor of the "Gem," and assumed full editorial control January 1, 1869.

He was an enthusiastic and successful worker, admirably adapted to the new position. With an optimistic, cheerful spirit, he drew other workers around him, and the list of patrons rapidly increased. New features were added, such as publishing portraits of deceased or aged ministers, and other pictures. Thomas continued to be the Publisher up to his death. In May, 1869, the General Eldership elected Redsecker Editor, and also in 1872, 1875 and 1878. But before the Eldership adjourned in 1878 he resigned the editorship, but continued as Publisher. During his first year as Editor the amount of $131.00 still due Thomas was paid, and on January, 1870, a small net balance remained to the credit of "The Gem." G. Sigler was elected as Redsecker's successor.

He entered upon his work in January, 1879. Sigler was born near Burkettsville, Md., June 9, 1834. He was converted in 1852, and was baptized by Wine-brenner. In the Fall of the same year he began conducting revival meetings near his parents' home, but he hesitated to preach because he felt that his education was too limited, and he failed to get the consent of his father to go to an academy to pursue his studies. He was licensed to preach at the Eldership held at Mechanicsburg, Pa., in 1854, and entered on his first charge in April, 1857. Since then he has been in the active work, and has been an efficient and highly appreciated preacher and pastor. He was always thoroughly interested in Sunday-school work; an efficient and popular pastor; devoted and loyal to every interest of the Church. His work on the "Gem" was always appreciated, even if he did not have the temperament which proves magnetic to children. His administration of the office was to his credit. With the make-up and the illustrations he was not concerned. During his incumbency the receipts above expenses slowly increased for several years, reaching an aggregate of $405.41 in three years. The question of a semi-monthly issue of the "Gem" was agitated prior to Sigler's election as Editor, but received no support. It was also brought before the General Eldership in 1881 and agreed to; then reconsidered, and voted down. The Illinois Eldership in 1883 instructed its delegates to the General Eldership in 1884 "to endeavor to have a cheap primary paper published weekly or semi-monthly." But without awaiting the action of the General Eldership, the Board of Publication in January, 1884, "concluded to publish the 'S. S. Gem' twice a month, beginning with the April number." This action the General Eldership approved, and it gave general satisfaction.

In 1896 a new Editor of "The S. S. Gem" was elected to succeed Sigler. The reason for the change was financial. The new Editor, W. A. Laverty, was the General Superintendent of the Book-Store, and could do the work of editing the "Gem" in addition to his other duties. He had been a member and worker in Sunday-schools from childhood, and had qualifications which adapted him to his new duties. His conduct of the paper commended itself so to the General Eldership and the Board of Directors that he has been re-elected successively until the present. In 1905 and 1909 the Board of Publication gave him two assistants as Editorial Contributors, to wit: F. W. McGuire and Wm. Harris Guyer. Their work has been well received. In 1902 a suggestion was made at the General Eldership that "The Gem" be published weekly; but the Board did not receive sufficient encouragement to undertake the extra expense. But on January 1, 1906, prospects for sufficient patronage were so fair that a weekly edition was printed, which by June, 1909, had reached over 5,000 copies. With few exceptions, "The Gem" has had a small net gain to its credit each year. It has been almost wholly changed as to its contents and illustrations since the first issue, and is a popular Sunday-school periodical.

VI. THE MONTHLY PREACHER.

Though important matters went very wrong in 1857-9, Winebrenner did not throw up his hands in despair, nor lose his nerve. His patience, perseverance and indomitable will enabled him to take things easier than most of his co-adjutors, and to seek to devise new enterprises for the benefit of the cause. He could take criticism and weigh it well, without becoming personally resentful when it was an impersonal issue. These traits he clearly evinced in 1858, under conditions when it would have been easier to retire than to start a new enterprise. He conceived a most praiseworthy enterprise in the Summer of 1858, and announced it in The Advocate on August 5th. It was in the form of a "Prospectus for publishing a series of sermons in monthly numbers, at $1.00 per annum in advance," if he could secure 500 subscribers. The sermons were to be doctrinal and practical sermons he had preached. Colder, Editor of The Advocate, spoke of the project as of special value, saying: "Something of the kind ought to have been done long ago." This was a truth widely recognized. On October 14th Winebrenner had matured his plans far enough to change his "Prospectus" so as to name the periodical "The Monthly Preacher," and as a sub-title, "Or a Series of Doctrinal and Practical Sermons." The first number was promised for January 1, 1859. His relations with The Advocate Printing Establishment were of such a character that he contracted with John F. Weishampel, Jr., Baltimore, Md., to print and stereotype the work. The form was a regular octavo, the ordinary book size, convenient for binding and permanent preservation. Had Winebrenner lived to continue the work for a period of years, it would have become a System of Theology for the Church. On February 10, 1859, Winebrenner announced that "the first issue of The Monthly Preacher was completed and sent out a few weeks ago." It contained a sermon on "The Church of God and her Ministry," and part of one on "The Conversion of Multitudes in the Last Days." J. F. Weishampel, Sr., commended it by saying: "A more important work than the Preacher could not possibly be procured." The twelve numbers were published during the year, containing thirteen sermons, written in the style of an able and lucid expounder of the word of God. The last three sermons were on Baptism, Feet-washing and the Communion. Winebrenner had a number of extra sheets printed, which he had bound in book form, with the title of "Doctrinal and Practical Sermons." The work was continued one year, when Providence interfered, and later in 1860 ended his noble warfare.

VII. THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL RECORD.

This proposed periodical had its unexpected origin at the General Eldership in 1872, though the need of such a journal had been felt and canvassed by Sunday-school workers for a year or more. At the Mt. Carroll, Ill., session of the General Eldership, when other publishing interests were being acted upon, George Sigler offered a resolution, which was adopted, "Instructing the Board of Publication, if in its judgment it is expedient, to publish a monthly paper for the special benefit of Sunday-school teachers." But it slumbered for more than two years, when the Board of Publication took it up and granted authority to "the brethren to publish a Sabbath-school Monthly." On August 11, 1874, the Board decided that the title should be "The Sunday-school Record," the first number to be issued January 1, 1875. It also elected G. Sigler and D. A. L. Laverty, Editors; P. Loucks, W. P. Small, M. S. Newcomer and R. H. Bolton, Associate Editors, and D. C. Kolp, Business Manager. The price was fixed at $1.00 a year, to be paid in advance. Each number was to have the International Lesson, and lesson leaves for each Sabbath. It was to have 24 pages. The contract for the printing was awarded to the Herald Printing Co., of Carlisle, Pa. On October 7, 1874, the Business Manager published a "Prospectus of the new Monthly for Parents and Teachers." It was endorsed by Iowa, Indiana, West Ohio, East Ohio, Kansas and Missouri, Illinois, West Pennsylvania and Nebraska Eldershops. A favorable preamble and resolution was offered at the East Pennsylvania Eldership; but it was stricken out and one introduced as a substitute, referring the whole matter to the General Eldership in 1875. Because of this action the Editors resigned on November 25, 1874, and Associate Editors followed. On December 23, 1874, the Business Manager announced that "The Sunday-school Record will not be published until after the General Eldership in 1875." The Business Manager reported the facts to the General Eldership, and spoke hopefully of the prospects of success, stating that there were nearly 200 subscribers enrolled when the Editors resigned. The expenses had been $22.10, which the Eldership ordered to be paid. No request was made to the Eldership for a renewal of the authority to publish The Record, and no further action was action.

VIII. THE WORKMAN QUARTERLY.

After the failure of the project to publish the Sunday-School Record there was a disposition to yield to the temptation to quit enterprises of this character. For nearly three years matters were quiescent, when at the session of the East Pennsylvania Eldership in October, 1877, action was taken, requesting the delegates to the General Eldership in 1878 "to use their influence to have published a Lesson Leaf, to be called "The Church of God Lesson Leaf." There was evolution, a developing progress. Like Disraeli who made a failure of his first speech in the House of Commons, so these persistent brethren said: "We have begun several times, many things, and have often succeeded at last." East Pennsylvania Eldership caused the failure of The S. S. Record; it would start in a humble way something that would succeed. The General Eldership did not resent its initiative in the new venture. It went beyond its petition, and generously adopted measures for a magazine, with B. F. Beck, East Pennsylvania, for Editor. It declared that there is "a pressing necessity for the provision of a Teacher's Manual," and that "the Board of Publication be directed to prepare said monthly as soon as possible." It "authorized B. F. Beck to edit and publish a monthly Sunday-school Journal for teachers, and Lesson Leaves." But on doctrinal grounds it was deemed wise to make different arrangements. The Board of Publication took the matter up, and about the beginning of September, 1878, it elected J. H. Redsecker Business Manager; P. Loucks, Editor-in-Chief, and J. M. Carvell and A. Wiley, Assistant Editors. The name selected was "The Sunday-school Workman." It was to be a monthly magazine, with lesson leaves, at 75 cents a single copy; 65 cents for ten or more to the same address. Everything progressed favorably, and on January 1, 1879, the first number was published. Some had doubts, and a few criticised; but the Annual Elderships approved and encouraged the project without exception. The Editor was unusually optimistic, and entered on his work with vigor and zeal, and for two and one-half years labored for its success with unabating energy. Announcement of the appearance of the new monthly was made October 30th, and the Sunday-schools responded, some "with large lists of subscribers." At the end of the first year congratulations of the Editor and Business Manager were numerous. "It was more successful than the most sanguine had anticipated. It deserves success. It is an admirable periodical, and is fully adapted to the wants of teachers." By July, 1881, the number of subscribers for the Workman was 800; for the Lesson Leaves, 10,000. Loucks was re-elected Editor, and W. B. Allen and W. W. Lovett, Assistant Editors. But a month later Loucks resigned, "owing to afflictions," and J. H. Redsecker was elected in his stead, with J. M. Carvell as Assistant Editor. Redsecker was a business man, although of literary tastes. Yet he was better adapted to the editorship of the Sunday-School Gem than The Workman. On January 25, 1882, Carvell resigned as Assistant Editor, and J. W. Miller was elected as his successor, who served one year, when the office was discontinued. On March 3, 1886, Redsecker's resignation as Editor took effect, and J. M. Carvell was elected to the office of Editor.

The Monthly Workman was discontinued with the number for December, 1889, and instead The Quarterly and Lesson Leaves were adapted from those published by the American Sunday-School Union, and the work of the Editor was mainly one of oversight, guarding against objectionable matter appearing. Yet in many ways Carvell was well qualified for the editorship. He was held in high esteem, was a laborous student and a consecrated servant of the Church. After completing his academic studies he took a post-graduate course at Wooster University, Ohio, receiving the degree of Ph. D. His tastes were classical, and he was later applying himself to the study of metaphysical theology, poetic works and polite literature. He never wrote much, but he was a vigorous thinker, and his style was concise, forcible and remarkably pure. Had death spared him, larger spheres of usefulness would have opened to him. The arrangement for furnishing the Quarterly and Lesson Leaves was not satisfactory, and it was also published at a loss, the total for three years having been over $300.00. In 1890 the General Eldership directed the printing of a Quarterly and Lesson Leaves by the Board of Publication, and D. S. Shoop, M. S. Newcomer, W. H. McKlveen and J. R. H. Latchaw were appointed Lesson Editors, and J. H. Redsecker, Managing Editor. The publication was to begin October 1, 1890. But within a few months after the appearance of the first number all resigned except Shoop and Redsecker, and so the entire work of preparing the lessons devolved on Shoop. This was done in a very satisfactory manner, as his work was "of a very high order." In 1893 the Board recommended that "the work of editing the Quarterly and preparing the Lesson Leaves be given into the hands of one person," and that Shoop "ought to be continued in the position." The Eldership elected him Editor of the Workman Quarterly and Lesson Leaves.

He has been re-elected at each successive General Eldership since, thus having served continuously from October, 1890. This confidence expressed in Editor Shoop, together with the steady increase of the circulation and of the net surplus income is the strongest evidence of his eminent fitness for the position. Changes for the better in this periodical have been made from time to time, which were appreciated. It has also been enlarged, and the lessons differently arranged. In January, 1907, The Home Department Quarterly was started. It was intended for those who, from whatever cause, are unable to attend the sessions of the Sunday-school. This Shoop also edited. He is a concise and cogent writer, and his style is not lacking in smoothness and elegance. He is first and always a Bible teacher, whether in the pulpit or in the editorial chair. A native of Shiremanstown, Cumberland county, he was converted, baptized and fellowshipped at Newville, same county, at the age of 17 years. He attended Millersville Normal School, taking a three-year course preparatory to teaching. But becoming convinced that he was called to the ministry, he was ordained by the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1872, and diligently served a number of charges with great acceptance and good success. He has been honored by his own Eldership, by the General Eldership and the Board of Trustees of Findlay College by elections to official positions. Of unblemished character, nothing in his whole life has ever been a silent witness against him. His purity of purpose is the basis of his purity of character.

IX. THE SUNBEAM AND PRIMARY QUARTERLY.

To make The S. S. Gem satisfactory to the higher classes in the Sunday-schools its literary character had to be advanced. This left the smaller scholars without a paper suited to their capacities. The need of a small paper, with simple stories, thus became a need generally felt. To this need the Illinois Eldership gave formal expression in October, 1883, when it resolved, that "as The Gem is better suited for more advanced scholars, the delegates to the General Eldership [in 1884] are requested to endeavor to have a cheap paper published weekly, or semi-monthly, for the little folks." The East Pennsylvania Eldership in November, 1883, expressed its sense of the need in similar terms. These sentiments were echoed by the Board of Publication at the General Eldership in 1884, declaring that there is a demand "for a weekly illustrated paper for the very little folks, a paper about 6x8 inches." The matter was referred to a committee which "heartily recommended the movement," and asked that the body "authorize the Board to publish a small monthly, illustrated paper for the small children." The Board accepted its commission, and with little delay proceeded to make the necessary arrangements to issue the first number by January, 1885. J. Haisleigh, the efficient Business Manager, on November 19, 1884, announced "A new Sunday-school paper, to begin on January 1, 1885." He revealed the name—"Sunbeam"—and gave the rates—100 copies, one year, $25.00; 10 copies or more, at the same rate. On January 1, 1885, the new periodical was issued, and on its title page appeared the name of Sade R. Hemperly, as Editor, a member of the church at Middletown, Dauphin county, Pa. She had reluctantly accepted the position, and so in the Fall of 1886 she prevailed on the Board of Publication to accept her resignation. She had discharged her duties well, possessing a natural aptitude, developed by training, for such work. The Board finally succeeded in finding her successor in the person of Lydia A. Forney, Harrisburg, Pa., who at once entered upon her important work. She has been continued in "the position of Editor ever since, being re-elected without opposition at each General Eldership."

Gradually a desire for a Primary Quarterly made it advisable to do something to supply the schools with such a publication. For a few years this was done by an arrangement with the American Sunday-School Union, whereby Church of God schools were furnished its Primary Quarterly with the imprint of the Board on the cover. There was no secret about it, as the fact was published in a standing advertisement in The Advocate. But in the latter part of 1896 there was issued a "Primary Quarterly by direction of the Board of Publication of the General Eldership of the Churches of God." Of this, on account of its close connection with the Sunbeam, Miss Forney was also elected Editor, and has been re-elected at each General Eldership since. Both these periodicals have been enlarged and very much improved. Miss Forney had special qualifications for this work, and she had received high commendation from the Board and the General Eldership. She was converted at the age of twelve years. A year later she began to teach in the Sunday-school at the Forney school-house, West Hanover township, Dauphin county, Pa., and has been a teacher of a Bible class ever since. She also, as early as 1871, began public work in various places, making addresses at Sunday-schools, conventions, children's meetings and like gatherings. Gifted with musical talents, she devoted considerable time to song services, furnishing music, vocal and instrumental, at various gatherings. For all these and many other labors she not only had native talent of more than ordinary degree; but she spent three years at Mrs. Dixon's Seminary, Harrisburg, and took a four-years' course by correspondence at the People's College, and a course in the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle. Also a special course of Bible studies. She began teaching in her third year at the Seminary as an Assistant, and then four years in the public schools. She had a passion for vocal and instrumental music, and took courses in vocal culture, elocution, harmony and composition. But her success as Editor of The Sunbeam and The Primary Quarterly rests upon an inborn affinity with children and her admirable executive powers.

X. MISSIONARY SIGNAL.

The inception in 1887 of the project of a missionary periodical might be traced to the "Mission Field" Department in The Advocate, which about that time was conducted by C. Manchester. It was in 1888 that, upon application, the Board of Incorporation "deemed it advisable to appoint C. Manchester as Editor and Manager of a monthly magazine." It had the endorsement of the Illinois, the Ohio, the Missouri and the East Pennsylvania Eldershops, and was commended by The Advocate. In August, 1889, the Board of Publication definitely "authorized C. Manchester to publish a monthly Missionary Magazine," he also to be the Editor. In 1890 this action was reported to the General Eldership, and adopted. But the character of the new periodical was further thus defined: "To publish a missionary paper." By September, 1890, he had "everything ready to begin the work;" but it had to be suspended on account of his leaving Illinois to take charge of Barkeyville Academy, Venango county, Pa. On December 21, 1892, he announced that he had associated S. G. Yahn, of Pittsburg, Pa., with him as his Assistant, and that "The Missionary Signal," a paper 16x11 inches, would appear January 1, 1893. It was to be a monthly, with the office of publication at Barkeyville, Venango county, Pa., the subscription price, 50 cents a year.

Manchester was a loyal, faithful, earnest worker, manifesting the deepest interest in all that pertained to the furtherance of the cause of the Church. At the General Eldership of 1896 he and Yahn offered to turn the paper over to said body. The Committee to which the subject was referred reported that it should be placed under the control of the Board of Publication, and continued three years longer. Manchester was elected Editor. But as he was elected later by the Board of Trustees of Findlay College to the Presidency of said institution, he resigned the editorship, and W. J. Schaner was elected Editor and Business Manager. He changed the office of publication to Roaring Spring, Blair county, Pa. At the expiration of three years, the General Eldership in 1899 decided to discontinue the Signal, which was done with the issue of June, 1899. The "Mission Field" Department in The Advocate was revived, and Schaner was secured to be the Conductor. He was well prepared for such work, and would have succeeded with the Signal if there had been a constituency to support it. He had been trained at Barkeyville Academy, followed by a theological course at Findlay. He was ordained by the Ohio Eldership in 1887; went to Illinois, and thence back to Pennsylvania, his natal State. The East Pennsylvania Eldership for years enjoyed his services as Stated Clerk, and elected him a delegate to the General Eldership. Faithful and efficient in all positions he occupied, of independent judgment, he served the body with conscientious purpose.

XI. THE COLLEGE REVIEW.

There seemed to develop about 1887 quite an extravagant tendency in the brotherhood of the churches of God to start new periodicals. Several of these were connected with institutions of learning under the auspices of the churches of God. Naturally in the lead was Findlay College. It came before the Board of Incorporation through its Faculty on June 20, 1889, and received the approval of said Board of its proposition that the Faculty and students have the privilege to publish a College paper; but the matter was then referred to the Board of Publication, which "authorized the Faculty and students to organize the Review Publishing Company, to publish 'The College Review.'" President J. R. H. Latchaw was elected Editor. The first number appeared August, 1889. It was a monthly, 10x6½ inches, at 75 cents a year. Annual Elderships commended it, and in 1890 it was endorsed by the General Eldership. But it did not live long, for its last issue appeared November 4, 1891. Under different auspices "The Ossarist" was at once started. It was published by the College Literary Societies, with Elmer McClure as its first Editor. It was somewhat more successful, and had a longer life. "The College News," a more modest publication, is of a different character, and has been published largely as an advertising medium for the College. It has been regularly issued since 1897. It is under the control of the President, and is printed by the students. Then "The Argus" was started, under the control of the students, with frequent changes of editors. It was published during the College year, or ten months in the year. It had real merit. In 1905 Barkeyville Academy, Barkeyville, Venango county, Pa., followed the example of Findlay College, and "The Academy News" was published, with the Principal, Wm. Harris Guyer, as the Editor. The first number appeared February 1, 1905. With his experience at Findlay College, it was quite natural for C. Manchester to desire to have a paper to represent Fort Scott Collegiate Institute. At the beginning of his first year as Principal he began the publication of "The Collegiate Institute Record," which he edited.

XII. THE FAMILY VISITOR.

The force of circumstances induced B. Ober, missionary to Texas, to enter the field of journalism. The lines of communication with the North were gradually closing in 1860. The mails became uncertain. The Church Advocate antagonized the position which Ober and his fellow missionary, E. Marple, were constrained to take, and the result was the starting of "The Union," published at Mt. Pleasant, Titus county, Texas. It was their medium of defense on account of the anti-slavery principles advocated by the Church in the North. The paper was well received, and soon had 700 subscribers. It first appeared in the Spring of 1860. But "The Texas News and Family Visitor" had preceded, having been published as a prohibition campaign paper in 1859. The office was located at Banham, Fannin county, Texas. It was edited and published by Ober. Under the name of "The Family Visitor," Ober revived it in 1889, locating it at Paris, Lamar county, Texas. In 1887 Ober also began the publication of "The Caddo Gazette," in the cause of prohibition, but a local secular paper. He was a man of great enterprises, tact and push.

XIII. OTHER INDIVIDUAL PAPERS.

It was soon after this that what have been called "parish papers" began to spring up, and flourished for over a decade. They were considered very serviceable to a congregation. Their cost was not considerable, and was principally paid for by the advertisements of the business men of the community. More general in scope than "parish" papers, was "The Temperance News," which in 1883 C. D. Rishel launched while pastor at Chambersburg, Franklin county, Pa. It was a temperance campaign paper, its longer continuance to depend on circumstances. "Bible Truth" was published in St. Louis, Mo., in 1890, by Mrs. M. B. Woodworth, with Emma L. Isenberg as Editor. Its object was the dissemination of her distinctive views, and incidentally her vindication against her assailants. In 1893 it came under the control of H. H. Spiher, of Indiana, who was its Editor for several years. A German paper, partly for the German Eldership churches, known as "The Religious Messenger," was published in 1898. J. M. Fahl, of said Eldership, was connected with it as Associate Editor. The more purely "parish" papers were "The Church at Work," edited and published by S. G. Yahn while pastor at Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland county, Pa., a four-page paper. Its publication began in 1894 and continued for several years. "The Mt. Joy Helper," which C. I. Brown published and edited while pastor at Mt. Joy, Lancaster county, a four-page paper. While pastor at Shippensburg he edited and published "To the Work," a paper varying in size from four to sixteen pages. From 1897 to 1904, I. A. MacDannald, pastor at Washington Borough, Lancaster county, edited and published "The Church Visitor." It had been preceded in 1892, for a few months, by "The Diadem," under the same control. "The Little Gleaner," a four-page monthly, and "The Monthly Morsel," first a four-page and later a sixteen-page monthly, were published and edited by C. F. Reitzel. The last one was continued six years. Reitzel developed special powers as a writer, and could have become a popular editor.

DIVISION VI.

HISTORY OF INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING.

A century and more ago a large majority of the colleges in the United States were established by religious denominations, and their special object was the training of young men for the Christian ministry. But religious bodies like the Church of God, the United Brethren, the Evangelical Association in their earliest histories had strong prejudices to contend against with reference to an educated minister. Very few of their ministers had educational attainments beyond what could be reached through the common schools, or were gained in private study after entering upon their ministerial careers. Their habits of close and sustained thinking, the best results of mental training, were thus formed, and this, accompanied with their greater zeal, industry and activity in their calling gave them often remarkable power in dealing with pulpit subjects. They also possessed a degree of spirituality, and their ministrations awakened such deep sympathetic feelings, or had an "unction," unknown in the educated ministry of other bodies. The sermons of this latter class were recognized as learned, but unspiritual, as indeed were but too often the lives of the ministers themselves, and much more the lay membership. Education and spirituality and piety seemed incompatible to these devout, humble, poor country folk. Thus a decided prejudice against a collegiate training for ministers came to have a deeply rooted existence, which had to be largely eradicated before a Church could hope to succeed in educational work. Hence, it was not until 1845 that the first definite action looking toward the founding of an institution of learning for the Church was taken by the General Conference of the United Brethren Church. Somewhat more German than the United Brethren, it was not until 1854 that a successful effort was started for the erection of a Seminary or College for the Evangelical Association. It is hence worthy of note that the ministers of the Church of God began to agitate the question of a school at so early a date as 1844. Two facts contributed to this: The common school system, and Winebrenner's scholastic attainments and personal interest in the mental training of ministers. His scholarship, adorned with simplicity, modesty, spirituality and religious fervency, disarmed prejudice and created a thirst for higher attainments. But he was forbearing, conservative, patient and moderate, willing to wait until conditions were favorable. Yet as early as 1836, in the columns of The Gospel Publisher, he began, not the agitation for a Church College; but the sowing of seed which would ripen in the consciousness of a need for an institution of learning for the training of ministers. He republished articles from his exchanges urging Lyceums, the wider diffusion of knowledge, the propriety of female education, and in December, 1836, two columns on Oberlin College, by the Financial Agent of that institution.

The first specific action which the East Pennsylvania Eldership took on the question of a Church school was somewhat too stupendous for the small body of people of limited means and few in number.

I. BETHEL COLLEGE.

Winebrenner christened it "Bethel College," but after it was located the name was changed to "The Swatara Collegiate Institute." The first definite mention of a school, singularly enough for that period, was when the East Pennsylvania Eldership in November, 1844, adopted this minute: "This Eldership has as yet no institution of learning," and we "recommend Cedar Hill Seminary, at Mt. Joy." This was a school for girls. In March, 1845, Winebrenner published an article on Cedar Hill, by "E. C. W.," which revealed Winebrenner's interest in this institution, as several of his daughters were students. The seed he was sowing was of slow growth. He was no agitator, no extremist. He could endure trials, counting them "God's vote of confidence." Not until November 1, 1848, did the East Pennsylvania Eldership speak out definitely on the Church school question. Then it declared, that "it is desirable that we should have an Educational Institution," and appointed a "committee of five to consider the expediency of establishing such an Institution," and "report in 1849." This Committee consisted of Winebrenner, G. U. Harn, J. Flake, A. Swartz and E. H. Thomas. On October 31, 1849, the Committee on Education reported, advising, "that the subject of an Educational Institution be agitated by all means, and be kept before the minds of the public." The Committee of five, of 1848, had not had a quorum when called to meet; but in May, 1850, Harn made a report in which he suggested three points for consideration: 1. Is it necessary and expedient to establish a school? 2. Have we the means? 3. Where should it be located? This induced the Eldership to take action in October, 1850, when it appointed a committee of twelve to consider the first point, and if decided favorably "to select a site and erect, rent or purchase a suitable building, and commence an Institution of Education." This committee was directed to report through The Advocate. It did so on December 16, 1850, giving its conclusions and recommendations on seven points: 1. That the Church has ample means. 2. That for the present the matter of location be left open. 3. That the stock system should be adopted. 4. The name to be Bethel College. 5. That there be a Board of Trustees of forty members, two-thirds of them members of the Church of God. 6. Shares of stock should be $10.00. 7. That $20,000 of stock should be disposed of. As the session of the General Eldership would be held in May, 1851, nothing was done to carry these conclusions into effect until said body had expressed its views. It took favorable action; but it also cast in the first "apple of discord." It approved the plan of the East Pennsylvania Eldership; advised that "the Committee be retained, and authorized it to solicit subscriptions and sell shares of stock of Bethel College." But it "recommended the western Elderships to endow one or two professorships in a college at Chester, Geauga county, Ohio."

Another element of division, and even of strife, at this time assumed prominence. Several brethren, on August 15, 1851, announced that they had purchased property in Shippensburg, Cumberland county, Pa., and intended opening an Academy in the Fall. Winebrenner published this announcement on the editorial page, and also an advertisement. On September 15th he called attention to the advertisement, and commended the proposed school, which opened the first Monday in October, 1851. At the East Pennsylvania Eldership, November 5, 1851, Harn offered a resolution, which was approved, commending the Shippensburg Institute, and recommending it to the patronage of the churches. The Ohio Eldership, encouraged by the action of the General Eldership, on October 20, 1851, declared in favor of a Seminary at Wooster, Ohio. Until this should be established it advised the churches to patronize Oberlin College, Ohio. In Illinois a "General Council Meeting" (the Eldership not yet having been organized), held December 1, 1851, expressed itself "in favor of select schools, Academies, Seminaries or Colleges established on Christian and purely anti-sectarian principles." Until October 23, 1852, everything in East Pennsylvania Eldership was quiescent, when Winebrenner was appointed "to sell scholarships of Bethel College." A resolution also prevailed to appoint other agents to solicit donations and sell scholarships. With only a general resolution in favor of Education in October, 1853, the Eldership again appointed Winebrenner to sell scholarships. The same year the West Pennsylvania Eldership called attention to, and recommended, the Shippensburg Institute. By this time Harn had secured stock in this Institute, which he increased until in December, 1857, he owned one-third of the stock. At the General Eldership in 1854, the action of said body in 1851 was referred to, and in view of the "want of effort to carry out the object it proposed," it expressed "the hope that the brethren will go ahead and establish a Seminary, or College." It also suggested "co-operation with the Free Baptists," and recommended Shippensburg Academy meanwhile, but preferred a College. In 1855 the East Pennsylvania Eldership recommended the establishment of a High School. With this absence of unity and these towering obstacles, it challenges admiration when in January, 1856, the old Committee manifested signs of new life. It met at Harrisburg and considered the question of the location of Bethel College, agreeing in advance that the place guaranteeing the largest amount should have it. Shippensburg offered $6,000.00; Harrisburg, $7,000.00; Middletown, $8,000.00. The latter won the prize. At once the sale of stock was resumed. Winebrenner and James Colder were also appointed a Committee to receive proposals, and on April 30, 1856, the President of the Board of Trustees, Jacob Rife, invited architects to prepare and submit designs and specifications for the proposed building, under the name of "The Swatara Collegiate Institute," at or near Middletown. On November 27, 1856, proposals to erect the building were solicited, to be opened on December 9, 1856. On the same date a call was issued for the payment of $1.00 on each share of stock sold. This was repeated on December 16th, for $5.00 per share, as the main building was to be put under contract. An Act of Incorporation was passed by the Legislature, which Governor James Pollock signed in April, 1856. On November 13, 1856, the Trustees announced the purchase of ground, being a tract of more than three acres, the property of Stephen Wilson, located on the hill on the left bank of Swatara Creek, back of Portsmouth, adjoining Middletown, Dauphin county, Pa. The price to be paid was $1,000.00. The building as designed by Mr. Detto, of New York, was to cost $20,000.00, of which $17,000.00 had been subscribed. The building was to be four stories, with a length of 138 feet. As the Proposals were all too high when opened on December 16, 1856, no award of contract was made. This marked the final turning point, as dissensions now developed on the Board of Trustees. President Smuller resigned, and also cancelled his stock. The meeting of the Trustees and stockholders, called for June 23, 1857, was not held, as there was no quorum. The General Eldership in 1857 gave it little encouragement, only advising "the Elderships East and West to exert themselves to establish at least one good Institution." On July 2, 1857, referring to the called meeting of June 23rd, Colder said: "We now look upon the establishment of the school at Middletown as improbable. Do not believe it will be." Colder had become a stockholder of the Shippensburg Academy, and on August 20, 1857, announced that a stock company had been formed, which bought in all the stock except Harn's, and that the holders of stock were chiefly Church members. September 17, 1857, Colder editorially calls the Shippensburg Institute "our Church Schools," and he was chosen Principal. On September 22, 1857, the stockholders of Swatara Collegiate Institute resolved to "authorize the Trustees to sell the lot, with a view to the winding up of the whole concern."

Counsels were now divided. The East Ohio Eldership recommended the Shippensburg Institute in October, 1857. The West Ohio Eldership considered "the propriety of erecting an Institution of Education to be located within" its own boundaries. Illinois regarded the Shippensburg school as "now under the supervision of the Church of God," and recommended it. At the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1857 Winebrenner offered a resolution to purchase the Cumberland Valley Institute. It was antagonized by the friends of the Shippensburg Academy, resulting in a decision that nothing could be done for either in view of the financial panic and money stringency. With Colder in control of the Shippensburg Academy the indications were favorable, however, to its becoming in fact the Church of God school. But bereavement, with other causes, determined Colder to resign the Principalship in April, 1858, without any arrangements to continue the school. East Ohio in October, 1859, recommended Oberlin College and Shippensburg Institute. Iowa advised the "establishing of a good school within its territory, under the government of the Church of God." In 1860 the General Eldership passed by the subject of a school.

II. MT. JOY ACADEMY.

At the Eldership in October, 1861, with a number of young men of some culture in its ranks, a proposition was made to the East Pennsylvania Eldership to sell to it the Academy located at Mt. Joy, Lancaster county. A committee, consisting of E. H. Thomas, A. Swartz and C. H. Forney, was appointed to confer with Mr. Moore, the Proprietor and Principal, and also, in conjunction with another committee, J. S. Gable and J. S. Stamm, to visit and inspect the buildings. The report was favorable, expressing the opinion that "special efforts should be made to purchase or establish an Institution of Learning," and that "the proposition of Mr. Moore was feasible." Forney and Moore were made the Agents of the Eldership "to take subscriptions for stock," and report to the Board of Incorporation. They met with some encouragement; but when they reported to the Eldership, in 1862, the point was raised, and sustained, that "the matter of establishing an Institution of Learning was beyond the jurisdiction of this Eldership." But as the Eldership believed "that we should have an Institution of Learning," it urged the subject on the attention of the General Eldership. The General Eldership in 1863 simply "deplored the want of an Institute of Learning," and "urged special effort to purchase or establish one." "On February 18, 1864, Thomas published an editorial on a "Church School," declaring that "we have failed so far for want of cooperation," and insisted on faithful co-operation. But the Church was not yet prepared for it. There had been very little such general co-operation. There were jealousies, animosities, rivalries and sometimes hatred. And "where love is not, hate too often is, and hate is ———." Illinois in 1863 voted in favor of getting "a location for a High School under our own control." East Ohio Standing Committee in April, 1864, was moving "for a school at Smithville, Wayne county," but urged the East and the West to join in the enterprise. It appointed an agent to canvass the Eldership. It decided on a college building in "the form of an octagon, with three floors; selected the site, purchased a lot and made a contract to build. The Eldership in October, 1864, endorsed the plan. The East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1864 strongly favored a College "located in some central, easily accessible place." This was the sentiment now in Iowa. Illinois changed in 1864, and favored "a National College at the earliest date." In January, 1866, the brethren at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, inaugurated a plan to build a college at said place. It was to secure subscriptions and donations of as large an amount as possible, and go to the General Eldership in May of that year, and make a bid for a college "for the whole Church." This plan the West Ohio Standing Committee approved, and appointed a committee to visit Upper Sandusky and canvass for funds. Iowa, East Pennsylvania, East Ohio and West Pennsylvania were still disposed to work for a school in their own territory, though ready to fall in line for one each in its own territory "for the whole Church." Thomas, in November, 1865, gave the signal for the united forward movement at the General Eldership in 1866. Rehearsing the resolutions adopted by the Annual Elderships in 1865, all in favor of a school, he insisted on some central place, where the whole Church should establish a first class Seminary, with a Theological Department, under the auspices of the General Eldership. Illinois Eldership had virtually instructed its delegates to this effect.

III. CENTRALIA COLLEGE.

If with prophetic accuracy some seer in 1836 had written a forecast of the different projects of the Church of God to establish a college, and their results for the following thirty-six years, he would have been regarded as afflicted with a species of deceptive vision. But in 1872 he would have been acclaimed a prophet, while the Church would have been stigmatized with pursuing an "ignis fatuus" that "bewitches, and leads men into pools and ditches." It was in November, 1865, that G. E. Ewing, appointed missionary to Kansas, paid his first visit to Nemaha county, and selected Home township in said county "as our future home." He considered himself very fortunate in receiving an offer to donate what was called Centralia Collegiate Institute to the General Eldership, which was to meet May, 1866. This property consisted of an unfinished building, a number of lots, together with the school fund belonging thereto, amounting to between $7,000.00 and $10,000.00, the interest of which could be used. This much was made public in November, 1865. But in January, 1866, Ewing further explained, that one hundred acres of land in ten ten-acre lots, in the suburbs of the village, would go with the college block, as well as four separate lots in the village. Also that already "$2,044.47 in notes secured by loan on real estate bearing interest to conduct the college had been given to the Board of Trustees." A boarding-house was needed, and toward this several hundred had been subscribed. The proposition was not very favorably received. It was too far west, and Church work had not made much progress there. Even Thomas was silent until May 24, 1866, when he wrote on "The Kansas College," stating that it was an error to construe his silence as meaning opposition. He was ready to colobar with the majority for a school wherever it would be located. The Proposition as published by Ewing was laid before the General Eldership in 1866 by George Thomas. After considering it in Committee of the Whole, it was referred to the Committee on Education, consisting of George Ross, C. H. Forney, L. B. Hartman, E. Logue and G. E. Ewing. This Committee reported conditionally, after calling attention to the Proposition, the fact that Centralia is in the extreme western borders of the territory of the General Eldership, and also that it is not so accessible as other available points for a school centrally located. Hence it recommended: 1. Recognizing Centralia Collegiate Institute as an institution of the Church. 2. The appointment of a committee to visit the school, and report to the Executive Board. 3. The Executive Board to appoint a Superintendent for the Institution. 4. Said Board also to secure an additional section of land. All this was adopted by the General Eldership. The Committee, E. H. Thomas, George Thomas and John Huff, visited Centralia, and made a favorable report. Ross declared it to have been a wise thing to accept the Proposition, he having been there with the Committee. The Committee's report, July 5, 1866, stated that everything was found to be as reported in the Proposition; that the building was a good, two-story frame superstructure, four-square weatherboarded, but not plastered nor painted; that $500.00 would finish it, but this was found later to be only half enough; that citizens would contribute $500.00 of this amount; that the balance should at once be raised by an agent appointed for that purpose, and that a Principal should be secured to open the school in the Fall. The building was finished in time for A. F. Millard, Principal, of Log Chain, Nemaha county, Kas., to open the school in December, 1866. L. B. Hartman, East Ohio Eldership, was employed as the Collecting Agent. Thomas spoke in encouraging terms of the school in several editorials. The Elderships, with but one or two exceptions, endorsed it and pledged their help in maintaining it. But by 1867 they had almost nothing to say concerning it. On May 2, 1867, the newly elected Principal, J. S. Stamm, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, reached Centralia to take charge of the school. In March, 1868, he made a good report of the first year's work. But by August 5, 1868, Thomas lamented the state of things at Centralia, saying, "It is now on the verge of death; but it may possibly be resuscitated. Our voice is raised to save it." August 19th, in a second long editorial, he pleaded for the Institute, as "the most important work at the present time that the Church has in hand." D. A. L. Lavery had been appointed to collect funds. But the Elderships in 1868 were all silent except Indiana, which favored Centralia Institute. Michigan turned toward the Free Baptist College at Hillsdale, Mich., as again in 1869. On August 26, 1868, the end was foreshadowed by an action of the Board of Incorporation (for Trustees) of the Institute, when it decided "to suspend definite action in disposing of the property, in order to wait action of the Boards of the General Eldership in October, 1868." The Boards were powerless to help, and Failure was written over the project.

There was one cause for this unfortunate issue in the attempt at the same time to build what at times was called "the second College," or

IV. CENTRAL COLLEGE.

The Committee which reported favorably on the Centralia proposition, also suggested the "nomination of places in Ohio to compete as to funds for the erection of a College Building." The condition was, that "the place raising the largest amount above $30,000.00 should have the school." Agents were also to be put in the field to collect $60,000.00 additional for an Endowment Fund. But early in the work Illinois announced its intention to enter the competition, stating that "one man in Decatur, Ill., offers $20,000.00 if the College should be located there." For the collection of the Endowment Fund L. B. Hartman was also secured. Illinois Eldership in 1867 appointed a committee to work up interest in favor of locating the Central College in Decatur. While Iowa still recommended Centralia Institute in 1867, it also regarded "the Central College as of vital importance." In January, 1867, Hartman came East, but devoted most of the Winter to evangelistic work. He did not again resume his collecting work, but resigned. This finished another chapter of failures to secure a college for the Church of God.

V. HILLSDALE COLLEGE.

Previous to 1872 the actions taken with reference to Hillsdale College were only recommendations to patronize it. No overtures from the Board of Trustees, or the President, had been received, and no applications had been made. The actions of the Annual Elderships in 1871 were in the main of a general character, such as insisting on increased facilities for educating the children of the Church and to prepare young men for the ministry; to instruct delegates to the General Eldership in 1872 to secure a college building for the Church, or to adopt a feasible plan to establish a Church school. But the East Ohio Eldership directed its Standing Committee "to purchase or build a college building," and report to the Eldership. East Pennsylvania, through its Board of Education, consisting of D. A. L. Lavery, C. H. Forney, Jesse Kennedy, George Ross and Levi Kauffman, organized "a permanent Society, to be known as the Board of Education of the East Pennsylvania Eldership," with a view "to the ultimate establishment of a Church school."

This was done under instructions by the Eldership "to take such action as the Board may deem necessary for the purpose of securing a school." An Act of Incorporation was to be secured from the Legislature, and a regular Constitution and By-Laws adopted. But when the General Eldership met at Mt. Carroll, Ill., in May, 1872, there was present as a delegate from the Free Baptist General Conference and representative of Hillsdale College, Michigan, Prof. R. Dunn, who submitted a Proposition embodying these points: That the General Eldership shall endow one or two professorships in said College, and that in return the Church of God should have equal use of the buildings and facilities of the College and all the advantages thereof as an institution of learning. The Proposition was committed to the Committee on Education, consisting of C. H. Forney, B. F. Beck and M. S. Newcomer, which reported Prof. Dunn's plan to be practicable, and recommended its acceptance. It further advised: 1. That one professor be appointed, to be supported by an endowment. 2. That a Board of Education be elected to which the matter should be committed. 3. That a Visiting Committee be sent at once to Hillsdale to investigate matters. 4. That the Professorship should be called "The First Professorship of the Church of God." 5. That the General Eldership elect the Professor, whose salary should be $1,000.00 a year. The entire report was adopted, and the items carried into effect. J. A. Winebrenner, son of John Winebrenner, was elected Professor. The Committee sent to Hillsdale made a very favorable report. While the action of the General Eldership was generally approved, there was some opposition. The most serious hindrance was the declination within a month by Winebrenner to accept the Professorship. But in the Fall almost with one voice the Annual Elderships approved what was done. The East Ohio Eldership added: "That above all an effort should be made to establish a school of our own." The East Pennsylvania Eldership approved the plan "as a temporary arrangement to prepare the way for a college under our exclusive control." The Board of Education proceeded at once to perfect arrangements to raise $10,000.00 to endow the Chair, and named R. H. Bolton as Collecting Agent. But to its call for pledges there were but three of $100.00 each. There was so little interest manifested that the miscarriage of the project soon became evident, and was abandoned, and the Board of Education so reported to the General Eldership in 1875, expressing its opinion that "the arrangement would have proved beneficial to the Church, and would have paved the way more rapidly for the securement of an institution of learning under our immediate and sole control."

The nine years following the action of the General Eldership touching Hillsdale College, in 1872, were years of agitation and discussion of the school question. Beginning with 1873 Eldership after Eldership adopted resolutions urging the devising of plans and means to establish some kind of an institution of learning. It was declared to be "a growing necessity." Its importance was emphasized with a variety of terms and phrases. Pledges of help were repeatedly made, and the urgency of the matter was set forth in strong terms. In 1874, the Fall preceding the next General Eldership instructions were given to delegates by the Michigan, the East Ohio, the Indiana, the West Ohio, the Kansas and the Illinois Elderships to urge upon the General Eldership definite action in the matter. Other Elderships equally interested themselves in other ways calculated to influence the General Eldership. Thus the East Ohio Eldership appointed Jacob Durstine as Agent, who in February, 1874, under instructions, went to Hayesville to investigate matters relative to the Vermillion Institute, a Presbyterian school in Ashland county, Ohio, which was for sale. The Eldership received his report, and recommended it to the General Eldership as a desirable property. The East Pennsylvania Eldership through its Board of Education considered the question of buying the Cumberland Valley Institute, Mechanicsburg, Pa., favorably recommended by the Standing Committee. The West Pennsylvania Eldership adopted resolutions to patronize the "Baptist Institution at Mt. Pleasant until we have a school of our own." The way seemed thus to have been fully prepared, and a strong enough public sentiment created, to justify and inspire the General Eldership in 1875 to adopt measures to establish at once a school for the Church. It convened at West Salem, Wayne county, Ohio, May 25, 1875. It received and adopted the report of its Board of Education on the Hillsdale College project. Its further actions were nerveless and irresolute. It "recommended the brethren everywhere to send their children" to the Mt. Joy Academy, at Mt. Joy, Pa., and it "recommended the Institution of Learning at Hayesville, Ohio, to the consideration of the Board of Education." Disappointed as were the Elderships, they were not discouraged. In October following the Illinois Eldership resolved to create a fund to establish a school, and appointed a committee of three to act as trustees. It also invited other Elderships to co-operate with it, as if the General Eldership were to be ignored. East Ohio did not continue negotiations for the purchase of the Vermillion Institute, but advised that steps be taken to buy a school located at Ida, Hardin county, Ohio. In 1876 the East Pennsylvania Eldership received and considered adversely another proposition for the purchase of the Cumberland Valley Institute. It, however, declared that "an institution of learning for the Church is an imperative necessity." In 1877 with one voice eight Annual Elderships insisted on immediate steps being taken to build or buy property for a school for the Church. Little that was specific was urged; but it was a general expression of a deeply felt need. But the hopes thus centered in the General Eldership of 1878 were destined to be disappointed. For reasons hard to discern said body at its session held at Syracuse, Indiana, simply referred "a request that this body take steps toward procuring or erecting an institution of learning to be under its control" to "the Board of Education." Said Board submitted no report, but the Committee on Education reported: 1. "That we require a school for the education of our ministers and people under our control." 2. Recommended that "the overtures relating to the Cumberland Valley Institute be received." 3. That "we look with favor on the liberal offer of Mt. Pleasant Institute." 4. That "we appreciate the offer of Rev. S. D. Bates to endow a professorship at Ridgeville College, Indiana." These items were adopted, and the appointment of an Agent authorized "to solicit subscriptions towards a fund for educational purposes." Was the criticism of A. D. Williams a merited one, when he pointed out the profligency of the body in passing resolutions, and its inefficiency in putting them into effect?

But the Watchman proclaimed the coming dawn, preceded by the darkest hour. Not fainthearted, the Annual Elderships renewed their demands that "immediate steps be taken to secure a school." With greater volume was this voice heard as the time came, in 1880, to elect delegates to the General Eldership in 1881. There were also plans proposed by several Annual Elderships to establish schools in their territories. In 1880 nearly every Eldership joined in deploring the fact that the body had no school, and in demanding action. The Advocate, in editorials and contributed articles, discussed the school question vigorously during the first half of the year 1880, being the semi-centennial year. This brought as the first-fruits favorable action by the Board of Incorporation of the General Eldership in June, 1880, which suggested further agitation on three points: 1. The character of the school. 2. Probabilities of success. 3. General and special consideration of plans. This revived enthusiastic discussion, participated in by ministers and laymen from many sections of the General Eldership territory. Another important factor was a convention, called by C. H. Forney, President of the Board of Education of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, to meet in Harrisburg prior to the convening of the Eldership. It was largely attended. After careful consideration of the school question it declared in favor of proceeding without further delay to secure a school; requested the Eldership to set apart one evening for the discussion of the school problem, and petitioned the Eldership to grant permission to put collectors in the field. The Eldership concurred in the entire report presented to it. The result of this determined and spirited agitation was unusual unanimity on the school question when the General Eldership assembled at Findlay, Hancock county, Ohio, May 24, 1881. The subject was in the hands of the Committee on Education, consisting of C. H. Forney, S. D. C. Jackson and R. L. Byrnes. The Report of this Committee was made a special order for Monday afternoon, May 30th. The Committee "realized the importance, and that immediately, of a Church school." It advised "that the Board of Education arrange to secure at once a suitable place for said school, and to employ whatever means may be required for the opening and working of the same." Also, granting authority to said Board to employ agents to canvass the churches for funds. The Board was also instructed "to visit the Academy at Smithville, Ohio, and other places and institutions immediately, and make selection of a place to locate" the school. The first item was condensed by amendment to read, "That the General Eldership proceed to procure a school." The report was adopted item by item, and everything was done that was necessary for the Boards to go to work.

VI. FINDLAY COLLEGE.

The Board of Education, which consisted of R. L. Byrnes, J. M. Cassel, D. Blakley, J. S. Gable and J. M. Carvell, and the citizens of Findlay and Smithville, Ohio, evidently understood that "immediately" in the Eldership action meant "at once." Both towns went to work even before the Eldership adjourned, to inspire sentiment and secure subscriptions with a view of determining the location of the "College." The Board also lost no time, for on July 6th it met at Smithville to look at the property and school building which Prof. J. B. Eberly offered free, except a mortgage of $5,000.00, which the Board was to pay. So far this "was the best offer ever made." Thence the Board went to Findlay, where "a town meeting in the Court House" had been prearranged. At this meeting Findlay submitted its proposition, which was to pay to the Board $20,000.00 cash, donate 10 66-100 acres of land worth $10,000.00, on which there was a dwelling house valued at $2,400.00. On August 1st the Chairman of the Board of Education notified the President of the town meeting that "the Board had decided to locate the College Building in what is known as North Findlay." At its meeting at Findlay, on July 8th, the Board also appointed "four Agents to solicit and collect money to aid in erecting a suitable College building or buildings, and in furnishing and endowing the same." But by reason of actions of the Executive Board at its meeting at Findlay, Ohio, January 25, 1882, the Board of Education ceased to be a factor in the work after that date. The members present at said meeting were made advisory members of the Executive Board, which consisted of T. Koogle, J. H. Besore, W. B. Alien, C. H. Forney and Geo. Sandoe. The Annual Eldership sessions had been held; all had acted on the doings of the General Eldership and the Board of Education in July and August, and they had strongly sanctioned it. This inspired confidence in the Collectors, who were actively at work, and gave the Executive Board fortitude to do whatever might be necessary to carry the mandate of the General Eldership into effect. It was found necessary under the statutes of Ohio to create a Corporation; draft Articles of Incorporation; name Corporators, and provide for the election of a Board of Trustees. The Corporators named by the Executive Board were J. M. Carvell, R. L. Byrnes, Isaac Schrader, T. Koogle, J. M. Cassel, A. C. Heck, J. C. Strickler, Geo. F. Pendleton. It drafted Articles of Incorporation, to which the Corporators subscribed and were qualified, and which became the Law of the Board. The name of the Corporation was "Findlay College," and its duties were prescribed. The number of trustees was fixed originally at nineteen, including the President. The Executive Board named the eighteen for the Corporators to elect. It also designated February 8, 1882, as the date, and Findlay as the place, for the first meeting of the Board of Incorporation, which was the only meeting it ever held. It met pursuant to appointment, when it was found that Hiram Plank, H. Clay, D. Hale, of Ohio, and Jehu Bailey, of Illinois, recommended for trustees, declined an election. All the others nominated, with four others, were elected the first Board of Trustees of Findlay College, as follows: David J. Cory, John Ruthruff, A. C. Heck, Samuel Howard, E. G. DeWolfe, Isaac Steiner, E. P. Jones, J. W. Aukerman, Aaron Blackford and Thomas Mitzler, of Ohio; Isaac Frazer, J. H. Redsecker and D. M. Bare, East Pennsylvania; Jacob I. Stoner and J. B. Henderson, West Pennsylvania; R. M. Paige, Indiana; John Stare, Illinois, and John Huff, of Iowa. This Board of Trustees was "forthwith called to order," after having "subscribed their names to the Articles of Incorporation, and the oath of office administered," and effected an organization by electing Isaac Frazer President Pro Tem.; Eli G. DeWolfe, temporary Secretary, and Elijah P. Jones, temporary Treasurer. After the appointment of certain committees and other minor items of business, the Board adjourned to meet in Findlay, on Wednesday, June 21, 1882, the date fixed by the Executive Board for the "annual meeting." At this first annual meeting the Board adopted the By-Laws and elected the temporary officers as the permanent officers of the Board, with the addition of A. C. Heck, Financial Secretary, and A. Blackford, John Stare, D. M. Bare, T. Koogle and Isaac Steiner, Executive Committee. The Treasurer reported "subscriptions, notes and cash taken by collectors, $41,017.56." By lot the eighteen trustees were divided into three classes of six, to serve respectively one, two and three years, and thereafter each class three years. The Board also issued an Address to the churches, stating that the cost of the College building and equipment would be $60,000.00, and that $100,000.00 Endowment Fund would be required. "Thus furnished," the Board added, "it will be placed on a permanent basis." Hence,

"large gifts" were insisted upon. It rather depressed the spirits of the churches, and created doubt of final success. But it was felt that "confidence, enthusiasm and determination were the leading characteristics prominent in each member of the Board," and that "the College erection is a certainty." Had there been a true prophet in Israel the result might have been otherwise. But the Board had resolved in June, 1882, that "we will erect College buildings at as early a day as possible;" that architects were to be consulted with a view of securing plans, and that as soon as plans were adopted "the foundation should be laid." It verified this, when at a special meeting held October 18, 1882, it considered plans submitted by different architects, and unanimously adopted those of M. Rumbaugh, of Mansfield, Ohio, at an estimated cost of $50,000.00, subject to changes.

The plan adopted gives a building 171 feet 8 inches in length, by 107 feet 3 inches in depth, four stories high, exclusive of attic, and including basement. There is a main corridor in each story, running the entire length of the building, and an east and west corridor from the front center to the main corridor in the first story. The chapel will seat 800 persons, and is on the west center of the building, and extends through two stories. There are two large Society rooms, large double parlors, offices for the President and Faculty, laboratory in the basement, and library on the first floor. Proposals for erecting the building according to the plans and specifications adopted were asked for. But when the Board met in special session March 6, 1883, and the bids were opened, they were found to be too high, and were laid over until the June meeting, and the Building Committee was authorized to ask for further Proposals. Hope was being deferred; patience tried. Already in December, 1882, reports had gone out that "the first load of rock has been delivered for the foundation of the College." This delay worked discouragement. Other clouds were gathering. Results of the canvass for funds were not up to expectations, and for six months no agents had been in the field. The cost of the building produced some consternation. It became real to the churches that a stupendous project had been undertaken, and that the body might not be equal to the task, and yet $50,000.00 in notes and cash were in the treasury. But when the Board met June 20, 1883, and accepted the proposals of Pierce and Coleman, Dayton, Ohio, "to build the new College building for the sum of $49,000.00," and took other actions which indicated energetic work, the clouds dispersed and the churches were inspired with fresh courage. At this meeting C. H. Forney was elected President of the College. While the special meeting of the Board called for October 31, 1883, was not held for want of a quorum, the fact was made public that work on the building was in progress, and on November 5th two-thirds of the foundation walls were up. Another called session was held December 5, 1883, which ended the work of the year. At this meeting the declination of the Presidency was received and accepted, "notwithstanding our earnest hope that the answer would be different." By May 24, 1884, when the Board met in annual session, everything was in readiness for the laying of the corner-stone. This ceremony was performed on Sunday, May 25, 1884, when the Oration was delivered by M. S. Newcomer. A statement compiled by the Financial Secretary showed resources of all kinds to have been $57,534.66, and $1,500.00 Endowment Fund. Agents were again "put in the fields of the several Elderships to procure funds for the completion and furnishing of the College Building." The building was "being rapidly pushed forward." However, as funds were coming in slowly, "contract work was suspended" later in the season. At a meeting of the Board on November 13, 1884, J. R. H. Latchaw was elected President, which was approved by the Executive Board February 1, 1885. He was "authorized to take possession of the house on the College Campus" in April, 1885, and have general supervision of the College grounds. Latchaw was well equipped for the Presidency of the College. He was a loyal son of the Church; a man of high moral character; a graduate of Hillsdale College in 1881, at the good age of thirty, and had the experience of several years as Principal of Barkeyville Academy. He seemed to have an imperative sense of duty which was above every other consideration, so that no flattering allurements could divert him from the path indicated by his conscience. His first acquaintance with the representatives of the Church at large was in 1878, when he was an advisory member of the General Eldership. A complimentary resolution was adopted, commending him to the churches for aid in finishing his education. The same Fall the Iowa Eldership ordained him to the ministry, and at their Ministerial Association he was on the Program to discuss the Necessity of Regeneration. After his graduation he went to Venango county, Pa., and in the Fall united with the West Pennsylvania Eldership, and was appointed pastor at Barkeyville. In 1882 he was elected Clerk of the Eldership, and was appointed to preach the Opening Sermon in 1883, and also elected delegate to the General Eldership in 1884. At the Commencement at Hillsdale College in 1890 the degree of Doctor of Divinity was given him. He was self-reliant and of an enterprising spirit, a good instructor and an able minister of the gospel. In his position as Principal of Barkeyville Academy and President of the College all these qualities appeared to good advantage. On May 15, 1885, in a letter of considerable length, Latchaw accepted the Presidency of Findlay College. In this letter he practically outlined the various departments of the College and drew up "the curriculum of studies for the Academic, English, Normal and Preparatory courses," and made other valuable suggestions. Being a member of the Board of Trustees (since changed), he had a controlling influence in all its transactions, and was accordingly held to a greater responsibility. Urged strongly by him, the Board at its meeting in June, 1885, appointed a large number of collectors to "solicit subscriptions or otherwise secure such additional funds as are necessary to complete, furnish and liberally endow the College and put it on a good financial basis." To the Departments Latchaw suggested the Board add the Theological, Musical and Commercial. At this meeting it also elected members of the Faculty, in addition to the President, who had the Chair of Ethics, and Mental and Political Science, as follows: W. H. Wagner, Hebrew and Sacred Literature; A. C. Redding, Chemistry and Natural Science; W. B. Allen, Greek and Literature; Miss Lizzie Granel, Preparatory Department; Miss Florence Moffit, same Department. When the Board met on June 16, 1886, the Faculty was enlarged and rearranged, so that it consisted of ten members, with salaries ranging from $480.00 to $1,000.00 a year. And while the Prospectus, issued later, gave the names of but seven professors, six other professorships were indicated in blank, "to be filled by the Board of Trustees as the necessity of the case requires." This was promised, however, to be done "at the next annual meeting of the Board." The sum of $15,000.00 was yet to be expended in "completing the building ready for occupancy." But of this sum $6,000.00 was already provided for. So that the Board rejoiced that "light is dawning; land is in sight." Agents were to be put to work to raise the amount needed. The "Building Fund" was given in the Prospectus issued in the Summer of 1886 at $60,958.66; expended, $44,325.69; "visible Endowment Fund, $17,270.00." These assets did not include "grounds and buildings other than the College." The assurance of the endowment of a Chair by the widow of Daniel Wertz was put on record by the Board, in addition to the foregoing, the Chair to be known as the "Wertz Professorship." In anticipation that everything would be completed, the Prospectus was published and the opening of the College advertized for September 1, 1886. The building was pronounced "magnificent," "the most complete and best arranged College Building in the Northwest." The absolute need of an Endowment Fund was now insisted on in the editorial columns of The Advocate with greater vigor. "No college can possibly live without an endowment. Many American colleges are now seriously embarrassed for want of, or on account of too limited, an endowment." This was the rock to be avoided now. The College opened auspiciously, so that on September 15th ninety-five students were enrolled, "and more to follow." "The last and final estimate for work and material on the College building was received and approved "by the Executive Committee November 8, 1886, amounting to $4,410.00. A meeting of the Board of Trustees was called for November 25, 1886, at which time the "College building was accepted from the hands of the Contractors," when it appeared that the "total of contracts" was $51,662.95, on which a balance of $11,038.39 was due the Contractors. A loan of $7,000.00 was authorized, secured by a mortgage on the College property. The balance the collectors were expected to secure within the time for final payment. The College year closed June 23, 1887, with a Faculty of thirteen and 170 students enrolled.

J. R. H. Latchaw.

The equally difficult and more perplexing problem now confronted the Board of Trustees—to conduct the institution successfully with so large a Faculty and so inadequate an endowment. The Editor of The Advocate renewed the agitation of the question in May, 1887. And the Executive Committee "instructed the College Agents to turn their attention mainly toward the Endowment Fund." And this especially in view of "the sale of a part of the College grounds opposite the College for $15,000.00." It was also proposed that the endowment of a Professorship by the Sabbath-schools be made a special object. This was approved by the General

Eldership in 1887, which named the Chair "The Sabbath-school Professorship of Systematic Theology." It also fixed the day in June on which the Annual Elderships were called upon to "urge the Sunday-schools connected with the churches to observe Children's College Day." The day was partly a growth, as such days were observed by a few churches as early as June, 1882. And in 1884 the General Eldership commended it. No reports of receipts were made, except by individual schools; but from 1884 to 1912, both years included, the schools throughout the territory of the General Eldership contributed a total of $31,554.05. The formal dedication of the College had been referred to the Executive Committee in December, 1886; but it was referred to the General Eldership in 1887, which committed the matter to the Board of Education. It was to have occurred on September 6, 1887, but for unpublished reasons was deferred to June 20, 1888. The Board consisted of C. H. Forney, W. I. Berkstresser, J. M. Carvell, J. R. H. Latchaw and W. B. Allen, which prepared an elaborate program of songs, hymns, anthems, prayers, addresses and Dedictory Oration. The ministers who participated were: Invocation, R. H. Bolton; Reading Scripture, B. F. Beck; Prayer, M. S. Newcomer; Address, T. Koogle; Oration, C. H. Forney; Dedictory Prayer, George Sandoe. In the evening the President was inaugurated, when Latchaw delivered his Inaugural Address, and J. H. Besore, J. M. Cassel, R. L. Byrnes and J. W. Aukerman participated in the exercises. Already in July, 1887, the Board of Trustees began to be embarrassed for lack of funds. To attempt to tide matters over it rented some of the rooms of the College Building to the School Board of Findlay Union School, and other rooms unused to students. The Executive Committee also "borrowed of the Permanent Endowment Fund [in June, 1887] $180.00," and "authorized and required the Financial Secretary to place in the hands of the Treasurer all the Endowment cash funds for the use of the Teachers' Fund," which "shall be treated as a loan from said Endowment Fund." The result was that on June 20, 1888, when the Board of Trustees met, the Treasurer reported that "there is in the General Endowment Fund $44.70;" "in the Permanent Endowment Fund $163.33." As a school, a good report was made, the enrollment having been 246 as against 169 the first year. The financial conditions of the College however, were beginning to awaken concern, and to restrain giving. The Board had realized $9,500.00 from the sale of lots prior to November 2, 1888; but the debt on said date was $16,155.00. Because of this "constantly growing deficit" retrenchment was decided upon by the Executive Committee on January 8, 1889. While this reduced the annual deficit, it did not wipe it out. Indeed some years it increased, as in 1890, when it was $2,039.31. Yet the income was growing, as for several years a collecting agent was constantly in the field, until the territory was thoroughly covered, and expenses nearly equaled receipts. In 1889, with a shortage of $1,652.53, the total liabilities reached $7,101.67. The Endowment and General Fund now aggregated $45,621.15. The Executive Committee had "borrowed" $2,649.00 of the Endowment Fund. In 1890 the Endowment was $53,171.65, and the total debt, $14,362.15. There was a disposition to transfer the total in the Children's Endowment Fund to the General Fund, and use it. But as this was vigorously opposed, the Executive Committee continued to "borrow" from it. Thus in 1891 it "borrowed" $1,539.00 from the Endowment Fund, and $1,051.00 from the S. S. Professorship Fund. The debt now was $17,204.00; the Endowment, $58,171.00. The Board authorized a collector to be put in the field. It also directed that "stringent inquiry be made to see if it is possible to decrease the expenses, and to increase the income." To effect the latter the President was instructed to go out over the territory and to the Annual Elderships and make every possible effort to turn the tide. But confidence had been so shattered that his efforts were futile. When the Board met in 1892 it found the school in fine condition, with a Faculty of nineteen, of which eleven were salaried, and eight teaching for the tuition. But the deficit reached $4,199.62, instead of $1,623.63 in 1891. The debt was now $20,086.18, and the Executive Committee had borrowed $1,643.38 from the Endowment Funds. The Co-operative Plan was considered, under which the income was divided in proportion to salaries. But still the debt grew, and by August 24, 1892, it was $24,000.00, and the Endowment, $56,912.67. Discussion as to the failure of the College now began in The Advocate. It was conceded that a point had been reached when it meant a "struggle for the existence of the College." Plans to "save the College" were not wanting; but they brought very limited results. In July, 1893, the aggregate of all liabilities of the College were given at $25,500.00; the total Endowment, $57,- 468.19. As the General Eldership convened at Findlay, June 23, 1893, it was clear that the crisis was at hand. Latchaw probably realized this when, on December 21, 1892, he resigned; but at the earnest solicitation of the Executive Committee he withdrew his resignation. Several things were evident, namely: The College was organized on too vast a scale. The expenses were too heavy for the churches to bear voluntarily. The spirit of the College was changing, so that it could hardly be recognized as a Church of God institution. As a consequence, it was not serving the churches, as the young men who graduated nearly all went to other religious bodies. As the trustees were under the law held personally for debts created without authority of the General Eldership, it became practically impossible to get men of means to serve in that capacity. The illegal action of the Board in "borrowing" Endowment Fund money forfeited the confidence of the brotherhood in the Board. Confronted with such an environment the Board came to the General Eldership in June, 1893, with a "Memorial," in which it made a circumstantial statement of conditions, and then virtually threw the College on the hands of said body, refusing to go on any further except as specifically empowered and sustained by the Eldership. Here was a task compared with which the labors of Hercules were child's work. The "Memorial" was referred to a committee of one from each Annual Eldership, and was composed of D. S. Shoop, S. G. Yahn, J. A. Saxton, J. S. Marple, H. Clay, W. Redding, I. W. Markley, H. H. Sphier, J. Bernard, A. C. Garner, A. Wilson, J. C. Forncrook, B. Ober and J. I. Brown. This Committee virtually acquitted the Board and President of charges of extravagance, mismanagement and excessive expenditures, and put blame on the churches for a want of liberality in supporting the College. The facts as to the debt, spending Endowment funds and other items through which confidence was greatly weakened were passed over. A loan of from $10,000.00 to $20,000.00 was authorized, secured by mortgage on the College property. Under this new commission the Board resumed its session on July 1, 1893. Latchaw desired permission "to withdraw his withdrawal of his resignation as President," proposing to take a position on the Faculty under C. H. Forney as President. But this position the latter declined, and Latchaw's resignation was accepted, and he was elected Professor of Biblical Theology, and W. N. Yates was elected Acting President. Latchaw stood high with the Board of Trustees, and it adopted a series of laudatory resolutions, and in the General Eldership there were few incidents to show that his services were discounted by reason of the history of the College. He betrayed no consciousness of any misdemeanor in office, and had the enthusiastic endorsement of the Faculty and students. But events speedily culminated. His pulpit utterances following the adjournment of the Eldership gave evidence of a spirit of independence incompatible with a position on the Faculty. On August 22, 1893, the Chicago "Inter-Ocean" announced that Dr. Latchaw, late President of Findlay College, renounced the authority of the General Eldership of the Church of God and left the Church." This he had done in a sermon in the College Chapel the previous Sabbath morning. At the meeting of the Board of Trustees the Chair of Biblical Theology was declared vacant. There were other defections, and something of a spirit of insubordination, so that the Board was constrained to assert its authority over the members of the Faculty, and diplomatically advised them of possible dismissal if they failed to co-operate.

It was under these formidable conditions that a young man, largely trained under Latchaw, was placed at the helm to guide the ship. It was William Nelson Yates.

Yates was a native of Westmoreland county, Pa. He was converted, baptized and united with the church of God at Mt. Pisgah, in said county, under the labors of B. F. Bolton, in 1874, when nine years of age. Until sixteen years of age he attended the public school in the Winter and worked on the farm during the Summer. He began to preach occasionally in 1882, delivering his first sermon on April 29th of that year. His name first appears as a delegate to the West Pennsylvania Eldership on October 5, 1883. In the Fall of 1884 he was a student at Barkeyville Academy, and occasionally wrote for the columns of The Advocate. He graduated from said Institution June 15, 1887, in the College Preparatory, and the Classical course, under E. F. Loucks, Principal, successor of Latchaw. In December, 1887, the Standing Committee granted him license to preach, and appointed him to Pittsburg. But he declined, and went to Findlay College. He was also given a place to preach, four miles east of Findlay, where he organized a church on March 4, 1888. In September, 1888, the Ohio Eldership ordained him.

He had returned East in November, 1888, with his transfer, and was again appointed to Pittsburg. In the Fall of 1889, the Ohio Eldership received his transfer and assigned him to the Front Street church, Findlay. This position he held for six years, until after his election as Acting President of Findlay College, in June, 1893. He was graduated from Findlay College in June, 1891. He had already gained a good reputation as a public speaker, and more than once received the first prize in oratorical contests, not only at Findlay, but at Columbus and other points. But upon entering on his duties as Acting President, as a young man of limited experience, Yates accepted a burden in his new position from which any one might well seek to beat a retreat. It was a heritage of debt, of doubt and alienated confidence. He was painfully conscious of all this. But he went to work with remarkable vim and enthusiasm, and soon measurably rallied the disheartened forces around him. The Elderships and churches had been appealed to for $1.00 per capita contributions. It seemed so easy that it could not fail. Yates took hold of it with all the ardor of his exuberant nature. He sounded the alarm on August 8, 1893: "Something must be done, and that very soon, or the College must be lost to the Church." November, 1893, "Now or Never!" was the title of a strong appeal. He soon realized that the $1.00 plan would never save the College, and began to urge the other plan endorsed by the Board of Trustees as an alternative—the issuing of $100.00 bonds to the number of two hundred. And while nearly all the Elderships endorsed the $1.00 plan, some regarding it as "the best possible plan," the Editor of The Advocate and others sustained Yates in his insistent call for contributions of $10.00 to $500.00, and more from persons of means. Yates was persistent in calling on the brethren to "show your confidence." Explained "how to pay the debt." Warned that "the mortgage could be foreclosed any day." As it became evident that the debt was still increasing, reaching $26,000.00 December 27, 1893, others joined through The Advocate in the chorus of calls to "save the College." It became a hysterical epidemic, with but comparatively little cash. For by January 16, 1894, only $4,499.32 had been received, which would little more than cover the deficit by June, 1894. This was published on February, 1894, and called out the comment that the Church was in "the darkest hour of its history." In the Fall of 1893 Yates had visited a number of Elderships personally to urge the $1.00 plan, and in other ways work up interest and secure contributions. He resumed his canvass in February, 1894, now with a new plan, to wit: To have the different Annual Elderships assume each a portion of the debt. So much was he encouraged by his effort that in April, 1894, it was announced that "the pledges are well up toward $24,000.00;" that "light is dawning for Findlay College." Zeal was somewhat dampened by a simultaneous statement that "the shortage at the College from 1893 to 1894 would not be less than $4,000.00." But the work went on, and on May 30, 1894, Yates had the extreme satisfaction of stating to the churches that the total amount would be in hand by July 4, 1894. The Board of Trustees June 20, 1894, could join Yates in his exclamation: "Praise the Lord!" It was cheerfully acknowledged that he was "worthy of all praise for his untiring efforts and sacrifice," and the Board gratefully put on record a tribute to his "unceasing efforts by which he has accomplished a most magnificent work in the matter of freeing the College from debt." At this meeting it also elected him "Permanent President." The debt was assumed as follows: East Pennsylvania, $5,500.00; West Pennsylvania, $4,000.00; Illinois, $3,000.00; Ohio, $5,000.00; Indiana, $1,000.00; Kansas, $1,000.00; Iowa,

Charles T. Fox.

$3,088.09; Maryland and Virginia, $350.00; Nebraska, $116.00; West Virginia, $250.00; Missouri, $15.00; Southern Indiana, $325.00; Iowa additional, $185.00. Total, $23,829.09. As the expenses were still exceeding the income, the apprehension began to grow that another debt would accumulate. The Executive Board advised strongly against this, and indicated where expenses could be reduced, and even vetoed some items adopted by the Board of Trustees. And on November 5, 1894, the Financial Secretary published the statement that he estimates that the deficit by June 20, 1895, would be $4,500.00. On March 19, 1895, Yates handed his resignation as President to the Executive Committee, to take effect in June, 1895. "My reason for resigning is, that it is impossible, under the circumstances, for me to conduct the work successfully." It was referred to the Board of Trustees to meet in June. It was then reluctantly accepted, with a testimonial to his valuable and efficient services. The excess of regular expenses over regular receipts for the year was $3,043.01, and of special, $1,410.50, or a total shortage of $4,543.51. Already the practice of "borrowing" Endowment Fund money was resorted to, and was sustained by a yea and nay vote of nine to three. The Board's attention was called to the statutes of Ohio, which "hold the individual members liable for all debts incurred." As a consequence some members of the Board resigned, and it was with difficulty that their places could be filled. Otherwise the school was at no time in better condition, as the enrollment in all Departments was 434, "none counted twice." Near the close of the session the members of the Faculty made four propositions to the Board, which were adopted: 1. Prof. Chas. T. Fox to be Acting President. 2. A representative man to be put in the field to collect for the Endowment Fund. 3. Reasonable amount of advertising. 4. The Faculty to receive for compensation the income from tuition and interest on Endowment Fund. Prof. Fox was considered "a good man, and one who will make a worthy successor to President Yates."

The new President was not a stranger to the College. He came there as Professor of Latin and German in 1887, having been a member of the Faculty of Barkeyville Academy in 1886. He was a native of Westmoreland county, Pa., born February 26, 1857, and spent his early life on a farm, where he learned the habits of industry, perseverance and frugality which have been prominent traits in his life. He was trained under such Christian influences as to make virtue, purity and integrity the jewels of his character. When seventeen years of age he left the common school and entered Mt. Pleasant Institute, near his home, where he remained a student during the Spring term for three years, and the whole school year of 1877-8. In 1878-9 he was at Bethany College, West Virginia, and thence he went to Meadville, Pa., and became a student of Allegheny College, from which he was graduated in 1885. Before entering college he had taught in the public schools four terms. In 1885-6 he was Superintendent of Schools and Principal of the High School at Linesville. He was elected to the Professorship of Latin and German in Findlay College in June, 1886; but in 1895 he was appointed to the Chair of Philosophy, German and Latin. In 1892 he was ordained to the ministry by the Ohio Eldership. Since then he has filled positions of honor and trust in his Eldership and in the General Eldership. He was President of the latter body in 1899. In 1901 the degree of "Ph. D." was conferred upon him by Findlay College. In 1903 the Executive Board elected him a member of the Board of Missions, to which position the General Eldership re-elected him in 1905 and 1909. No higher tribute can be paid to Charles T. Fox as a man, a Christian and a scholar, than the record of the fact that, after twenty-six years of devoted service to the cause of education at Findlay College, he stands unrivaled in the esteem and affection of the Church and the students of the College. As the enrollment of students kept up quite well, the number being 289 at the close of the year in 1896, it was evident that the trouble was to be looked for elsewhere. The Board of Trustees found a "new debt" growing to considerable proportions, given at $7,496.70, and that several hundred dollars more than this amount had been "borrowed" from the Endowment Fund. There was a shortage for this year of $2,312.12, and the total Endowment Fund was given at $33,213.40. The Board had met at Findlay, May 21, 1896, but having no quorum, it adjourned to meet with the General Eldership at Harrisburg, Pa., May 29th. It presented a Memorial to said body, submitting to it the question "whether the school shall continue to run, or shall close." If the latter, that the General Eldership must "provide ways and means by which funds in cash, or absolute securities, will be furnished the Board." It also asked that the trustees be relieved of personal liability for debts, as otherwise it would be impossible to secure trustees. Ordering the school to be continued, the Eldership not only granted the other two requests, but made itself responsible for $2,000.00 annually toward the running expenses. Collectors were to be kept in the field to solicit cash and notes and pledges for the Endowment Fund. The Board decided not to elect a President. Fox "repeatedly refused the proposition of the Board" to serve as "Acting President at such a salary as they believed they were able to pay," to which position he had been elected at Harrisburg. A special session of the Board was, therefore, called to meet at Findlay, Ohio, July 15, 1896, at which time Charles Manchester was "elected Acting President of Findlay College." He was also elected to the Chair of Philosophy, Latin and Greek. All such actions requiring the approval of the Executive Board of the General Eldership, and said Board on July 16, 1896, disapproved the election of Manchester as Acting President, but approved the assignment to the Professorship named. From the former action the Executive Committee took an appeal to the General Eldership in 1899, in case the Executive Board fails to reverse its action. Several resignations of members of the Faculty also followed, and a number of students made formal protest to the Board against actions taken affecting Professors Loucks and Fox. Conditions were such as to call forth the judgment, that this was "the darkest hour in the history of the College." The "Church had the College, toward which it had paid about $150,000.00," and it had received very little in return, which became an occasion of hard feeling, crimination, contention and alienation. Yet the cry was, "It must be saved at all hazard." Manchester, in September, left Barkeyville, Pa., and went to Findlay to fill the Chair to which he was elected, and to conduct the school as "President of the Faculty." The enrollment for the Fall term was "less than last year, or former years for some time." It was under such difficulties and disheartening conditions as these that Manchester assumed control of the School. But in a measure he was reared in the school of adversity, and was inured to trials and hardships. He was a native of Burnitt, Winnebago county, Ill., born December 28, 1858. His elementary education was secured in the country school of Illinois, Howard county, Iowa, and Pattawatomie county, Kansas. Amidst privations his thirst for knowledge became his chief passion, and he turned for help to any one who could contribute toward the realization of his ambition. In 1875-6 he attended High School in Irving, Marshall county, Kansas, and in 1877 he entered Park College, Missouri, from which in due time he was graduated with honor, being Valedictorian of the class of 1883. He was converted, baptized and fellowshiped by the church of God in 1876, and in September, 1878, he was licensed to preach by the Kansas and Nebraska Eldership, at White Hall, Kansas. During the Summer of 1883 he preached at Peakville, Missouri, but in September he went to the McCormick Seminary, Chicago, Illinois, preaching at Buda, Illinois, to support himself. Thence he went to Oberlin in 1884, where he was graduated from the Theological Seminary. He went to Barkeyville, Pa., in 1890, and was pastor of the church there until 1896, and Principal of the Academy from 1892 to 1896. He resigned the latter position in 1896 to go to Findlay College, where in 1897 he was elected Acting President. Oberlin Seminary gave him the degree of B. D. His Alma Mater, in 1887, had given him the degree of A. M., and in 1898, that of D. D. He was a man of tireless energy, of heroic loyalty and of unblemished character. He was possessed of that Spartan spirit which has made many a life sublime and grand. Honesty, purity and sincerity so adorned his life as to put it out of the power of truth to give him an ill character.

In July, 1897, the Report of the Board of Trustees made it clear to all that "the College is down on the most economical, the lowest possible, basis." Although in the following years heavier pressure was used to save wherever it could be done. The co-operative plan was continued from year to year; but toward the close of each year an effort was made, generally successful, to make up the deficit by voluntary contributions. Collectors were generally at work, the Acting President often so serving, with the special object of increasing the Productive Endowment Fund. Income to meet expenses was the first desideratum, and the payment of "the new debt" would help to this end. More students, too, would bring in funds to pay the teachers, the number in January, 1898, having been only 108. But in June, 1898, it was cheerful news that greeted the ears of the friends of the College, that "for the first time in its history it has lived within its income," and that "the College is on its feet." True, the "new debt" was not out of the way, as at this time it was $8,827.35; the Endowment, $47,382.31. In July, 1899, the Memorial of the Board of Trustees to the General Eldership asked for authority to place a mortgage on the College property to secure a loan of $10,000.00 with which to take care of this "new debt." It also requested the General Eldership in 1899 to "relieve us of financial responsibility in regard to continuing College work," and requested it to "decide whether the College shall continue to run and if so, on what plan." The Board had become quite timid. Manchester had been again elected Acting President, which was approved by the Executive Board, and his work received the commendation of the Board of Trustees. The auspicious beginning of the Fall term of 1899 was heralded with the announcement of additional Productive Endowment of $3,500.00, "proceeds of two life insurance policies carried in favor of the College by Brother Carrothers." Other events calculated to inspire confidence were such as the action of the Iowa Eldership in 1900 to take "steps immediately to endow a Chair in Findlay College;" the work in the East Pennsylvania Eldership to endow a Professorship, toward which over $2,400.00 had been secured, and similar movements in other Elderships. Except as to the finances, in May, 1901, the College was reported in "excellent condition." The Endowment Fund, however, had reached $62,000.00. Manchester was now President of the College one year, and the conditions at the College were normal and healthy. During this year he raised $1,071.00 for College expenses. The number of students had grown to 285. In 1902 the amount of the Endowment Fund was reported as having been increased by the addition of $23,574.83. Manchester was re-elected President "without date." This last point the Executive Board did not consider wise. The enrollment for the year ending June, 1903, was "269, none counted twice." When the Board of Trustees met in June, 1904, it was gratified to learn that during the year "the enrollment was a little larger than the year before," having been 349, and that there was but a small deficit. The Endowment had also been slowly climbing up toward the mark made some years before, as it now stood as follows: Interest paying, $53,936.90; non-interest paying notes, $32,013.85; interest paying Scholarship Notes, $6,000.00; non-interest paying Scholarship Notes, $4,000.00. Total, $95,950.75. Also bequests which will realize $36,000.00. At the sitting of the Board on June 15th, "somewhat unexpectedly President Manchester, after eight years of devoted and faithful service at the head of the College" handed in his resignation. It was based on "the many burdens of the office;" "the work that came to him in addition to the Presidency," and his preference "to be a pastor, or teacher of theology." The Board accepted his resignation, giving him its "unqualified testimony to his high Christian character, his supreme and unselfish loyalty to the interests of the Church and his untiring zeal in the cause of education during the eight years he was President of Findlay College." "C. I. Brown was unanimously elected to that office for the ensuing year," which the Executive Board approved. Charles Ira Brown was born about one mile east of Woodbury, Bedford county, Pa., and was trained under German Baptist influence, his parents having been zealous and faithful members of said Church. One brother and two brothers-in-law were ministers of the same faith. Young Brown, however, was converted when attending school at a Methodist Seminary; but was baptized near Woodbury and fellowshiped in the church of God at said place by the pastor, James M. Waggoner, in the Summer of 1886. After pursuing the branches of study in the common schools he went to Dickinson Seminary, Williamsport, Pa., where he further prepared himself for the ministry. He was an applicant for license at the East Pennsylvania Eldership in October, 1887, but not for a charge. Being well recommended by his pastor and the elders of his church, before which he had preached his first sermon in 1886, he was at once licensed. In October, 1888, he had finished his studies, and was ready for work. His first charge was Camp Hill, Cumberland county; the second, Mt. Joy, Lancaster county, and the third, Shippensburg, Cumberland county. He at once developed staying powers, as he served these three charges the sixteen years he was in the pastoral work without any perceptible diminution of power. He was early a man of typical energy and activity, and became a leader in the progressive work of the churches he served. Activity, energy and efficiency are generally rewarded by promotion, and so Brown soon found his reward in elections to the Boards of his Eldership. In 1892, just eligible as delegate to the General Eldership, he was elected a ministerial alternate to the said body in 1893. By reason of the absence of one of the delegates he became a member. At that session he was elected a member of the Board of Publication. He was a delegate to the General Eldership in 1896, 1899, 1902 and 1909. He was elected a trustee of Findlay College in 1896, and was President of the Board for several years. For a number of years he was Conductor of the C. E. Department of The Advocate, and on December 11, 1900, he was elected Assistant Editor. The degree of "D. D." was conferred upon him by Findlay College in 1905. In 1904 the Board of Trustees elected him President of the College, and on December 13th of said year he was inaugurated. He maintained his reputation in that office as an earnest, hard-working, zealous official, exhibiting special energy in carrying financial projects into effect. He was a business President preeminently, as he was simply the President, the most of the time since his election holding no active professorship and doing no teaching. His predecessors in the office taught sometimes as many as seven classes each day. Two powers he seemed to aim to bring to their fullest perfection: The art of expression, and the power of persuasion. The former made him an attractive, epigrammatic speaker on pulpit or platform; the latter gave him unusual control over the motives of men so as to secure cheerful, liberal giving. Thus equipped and consecrated to this one work, and released from the duties of the class-room, Brown went to work with persistent zeal to place the College on a substantial basis financially. In his Inaugural he outlined his program, to wit: "To increase the regular Endowment as rapidly as possible, so that the income will be sufficient to meet all regular expenses;" a "ladies' dormitory and a gymnasium;" to secure endowment of Chairs of Pedagogy, of Greek, of Philosophy, of Physics and Chemistry, of English Language and Literature. To these were added by the President in January, 1905, the "ten-cent plan" for the Day of prayer, which by May, 1905, brought $526.87 into the College Treasury. Also the "Annuity Plan," to raise $10,000.00 to replace the Endowment money "borrowed" and spent, and to lift the mortgage off the College. Also the proposition for "a living endowment" of a professorship, or the payment of a professor out of the receipts of Children's College Day. With all these plans in operation, the receipts of the year 1904-5 were $33,645.16; the expenditures, $21,414.60, and the Secretary's figures for the Endowment Fund, $104,755.00, with an enrollment of 342 students. To encourage the President in his heroic work and to stimulate larger giving, C. H. Forney submitted a proposition to make himself "personally responsible for, and to guarantee, the endowment of the President's Chair in Findlay College." In October, 1905, the Board of Trustees authorized, in harmony with an action of the General Eldership, the formation of "a Living Endowment Association," the members to pay annually, as they would determine, from $1.00 to $25.00, for the benefit of the College. On March 9, 1906, the Carnegie Proposition, secured by the President, was officially reported, to the effect that of $50,000.00 new endowment he would give $12,500.00. The President was constantly supported in these various plans by The Advocate, and had the active sympathies of the brotherhood. At the end of the year 1905-6 the ten-cent plan had brought in $728.35; in 1906-7, $853.00. Withal, there was a shortage nearly every year of amounts varying from $1,000.00 to $2,500.00, which was usually secured during the Summer months. In part to provide for this, the "Golden Chain" was devised and put into effect in 1906. It was composed of persons agreeing to pay $1.00 or more toward "the running expenses of the College." In this way in 1908 the President hoped to make up the shortage of "$1,700.00 before the Board meets in June." And while the amount was not secured by that date, it was by September 9th. In June, 1908, Manchester reported to the Board of Trustees the realization of a generous gift to the College of a property in Findlay, to be known as "The Henderson Home," which has been converted into a Dormitory. Another liberal benefaction was reported on December 25, 1906, being the gift, on certain conditions, of a property for the President's Home. It was officially reported to the Board in June, 1907, and possession was given in September. It was valued at about $7,000.00, the gift of George Carrothers. In 1907-8 the number of students was 405. The receipts were $33,539.29, and the expenditures $29,234.61. The Endowment was given at $74,176.67, interest bearing; $56,900.00, non-interest bearing. By this strenuous method of gathering means the President succeeded in increasing the Endowment Fund year after year, and meeting all current expenses. And these expenses were steadily increasing. Thus in 1911 the Report of the Financial Secretary showed that the receipts for the year were $63,837.86, and the "expenditures" $64,803.12. But included in this aggregate were some $40,000.00 which were not strictly "expenditures." The total interest bearing Endowment Fund was given as $131,145.41, and over $48,000.00 as non-interest bearing. The pledges toward the $37,500.00 to meet the Carnegie Proposition were coming in so slowly up to 1909, that few outside the immediate associates of the President shared either his optimistic views, or his fortitude. But when the Board of Trustees met with the General Eldership at Ft. Scott, Kansas, May 19, 1909, President Brown informed it that he had "in notes and pledges about one-third of the amount needed," and urged an active canvass for the other two-thirds. This the Board heartily approved, and at once employed O. A. Newlin as Field Secretary. Entering at once upon his work, and enthusiastically seconded by the President and cheered on by scores of helpers, and hindered by many more doubters, the work was energetically carried forward for over two years, when on January 1, 1911, it was announced that "the churches and friends of the College have raised all and more than the amount asked for to meet Mr. Carnegie's offer."

But as the Henderson Home, valued at $4,000.00, was counted, and Mr. Carnegie would not accept that as part of the $37,500.00, another effort was required to raise that amount, less $500.00 in hand. But by April 26, 1911, the additional $3,500.00 were secured. Immediately a new project was started, to raise a further Endowment Fund of $25,000.00, toward which in 1912 the President reported "more than $6,000.00 already paid or pledged." A "Students' Loan Fund" was also begun, for which $1,000.00 were given by one person. The endowment of a new Chair, that of "Religion and Education," was submitted to the Board of Trustees in 1912, and "authorized." The Henderson Home was converted into a Dormitory. The "receipts" for the year ending June, 1912, were given by the Financial Secretary at $51,953.30; the "expenditures" at $51,402.42, with many items on both credit and debit side which can not be considered as properly so entered. The interest bearing securities and notes of the Endowment Fund were $136,914.13; non-interest bearing, $48,100.00. The number of students during the year 1911-12 was 345, of which 18 were in the Theological Department. One of the gratifying features of the College was its good moral tone and spiritual atmosphere, notwithstanding the absorbing business and financial activity. To this doubtless the College church and the Christian Associations of the College contributed quite materially. The primary mission of the College was conceived to be spiritual, and to fulfill said mission it was regarded as a high duty of Presidents and Faculties to seek to deepen the spiritual life of the students through religious training and example, as well as through intellectual development.

At a special session of the Board of Trustees of Findlay College, held at Findlay, Ohio, April 2, 1913, C. I. Brown tendered his resignation as President of the College. It was not accepted. But at the regular annual meeting of the Board at Harrisburg, Pa., in May, 1913, having again been submitted to the Board, it was accepted, and William Harris Guyer was chosen Acting President.

Prof. Guyer was elected to the Chair of Theology and History in 1912, so that his elevation to the Presidency differed in this respect from some of his predecessors. He is forty-three years old, having been born at Waterside, Bedford county, Pa., September 2, 1870. He spent the first eighteen years of his life on a farm, attending public school in Martinsburg during the Winters. His parents removing to a farm near Woodbury, he continued to attend public school until about eighteen years old, when he entered a normal school at Woodbury, Pa., and the following year one at New Enterprise. He also took an advanced Normal course at Danville, New York. He taught two terms in the public schools. He next went to Barkeyville Academy, Barkeyville, Venango county, Pa., from which he graduated with the highest grades in the class. He then spent two years as a student at Findlay College, where he finished his course by correspondence in 1906. For two years he was Assistant Principal of the Collegiate Institute at Butler, Pa. During two years he was Principal of Barkeyville Academy. While pastor at Barkeyville he took up several special courses at Grove City College, Mercer county, Pa. His post-graduate course for the degree of Master of Arts was taken at Findlay College.

Young Guyer was converted in the bethel at Woodbury, Pa., under the preaching of E. Myers, who also baptized him and received him into church fellowship. Here he began church work, teaching a Bible class and leading prayer-meetings.

After preaching for about two years, Guyer was ordained by the West Pennsylvania Eldership at Butler, Pa., in October, 1894. The years of his active ministry were spent in the West Pennsylvania and Ohio Elderships, including a pastorate of four years at Barkeyville and one of six years at Alverton, both in Pennsylvania. From the latter pastorate he was called to Findlay College. These facts in his strenuous life mark him as a most thorough student. His library is extensive and well selected. He is at home with his books, and reads with pleasure as well as for profit. A natural talent for writing has been so developed by careful and constant practice that the products of his pen are received with much favor. He has written several tracts and published them, and also three books, namely, "James Arminius," "Our Mothers," and "Memories of Our Old Homes." As a preacher he is instructive and impressive. His thoughts flow freely and are always good. His illustrations are apt and his voice and manner of delivery are pleasant. On the various occasions when he has been called upon for public speeches, his addresses have been clear and forceful. He is a creditable representative among the churches of God. He has splendid social qualities.

Back of these social and intellectual qualifications is a strong Christian character and a noble manhood. Herein are the principles which govern his daily conduct and determine his decisions in the problems of life. His heart is true and loyal to the doctrine and polity of the churches of God, which he has been taught from his childhood.

VII. BARKEYVILLE ACADEMY.

Barkeyville Academy was located in the village of Barkeyville, Venango county, Pa.. Its beginning was natural and spontaneous. It had two elements as its origin: A local, conscious need of something better than the common schools, and a poor young preacher just out of college. He was importuned for a year previous to come to Barkeyville and be pastor of the church of God in the village. Between his arrival and the Annual Eldership there were about three months of enforced inactivity. It was at this juncture that the thought was suggested that he might open "a private school for a period of eight or ten weeks." It was acquiesced in by the impecunious young preacher, and he mapped out his program: A Fall term of ten weeks; as students, children of from fourteen to sixteen years; nominal tuition of $5.00 per term. As for a place to hold his school the use of the house of worship of the church of God was obtained. These preliminaries settled, John R. H. Latchaw started out "with a small passbook and pencil to canvass among the homes of the people" for students. In a few days he had the promise of seventeen, which he considered a sufficient number to warrant a beginning. The school opened in the after part of the Summer of 1881 with twenty students, which number increased to over thirty. And instead of children alone in the common school branches, there were young men and women who began the study of Latin, Higher Mathematics, English Literature, General History, etc. Mrs. Latchaw was the Assistant Teacher, and Miss Sadie Hunsberger and Miss Sophia Hummel tutors in the common branches, while Miss Henrietta Hunsberger had charge of the Music Department. At the Eldership Latchaw was appointed pastor at Barkeyville, Hickory Grove and Clark's Mills. This gave him too much work to justify the opening of a Fall term in 1881. The Winter's work being over there were renewed importunities for another term in the Spring of 1882, which was conducted under the same conditions as the first term. The enrollment was over fifty. The attendance exceeded expectations, the interest in the school deepened, and after a regular "commencement" the well-sustained interest became enthusiastic for the school, and its continuance became a matter of necessity. As additional accommodations would be needed, Henry Barkey and Abraham Hunsberger provided them. The regular first School Year opened early in September, Barkeyville Academy.

1882. Prof. E. F. Loucks, who had graduated from college in the Summer, was added to the Faculty. Larger quarters were needed, and with the assistance of brethren in Westmoreland county a building was erected, 40x60 feet, with a chapel which had a seating capacity of 300. The school continued to grow and prosper under Latchaw, having gained quite a reputation, when in the Summer of 1884 he was elected President of Findlay College, but continued at Barkeyville until 1885. His successors, as nearly as can be determined were E. F. Loucks, 1885-9; J. F. Bigler, 1889-90; Charles Manchester, 1890-6; W. C. Meyers, 1896-7; Ira C. Eakin, 1897-1900; G. W. Davis, 1900-1901; H. K. Powell, 1901-2; W. H. Guyer, 1902-5. The number of students varied from sixty to one hundred and forty. About one dozen of its graduates became ministers in the Church of God.

Instead of remaining a local, individual school, the West Pennsylvania Eldership gradually took it under its control. Already in 1882 it placed a resolution on its Journal, commending "H. Barkey and A. Hunsberger who so nobly aided in establishing a school at Barkeyville, and who are now erecting a commodious school building."

And the General Eldership in 1884 "recognized the work," however limiting the school so as "not to be above the grade of an Academy" and to be tributary to Findlay College, and under the general supervisory authority of the General Eldership. A regular Board of Trustees was formed, which held its first meeting June 25, 1884. It was composed of J. R. H. Latchaw, E. F. Loucks, H. Barkey, D. B. Stoner, D. M. Waldron, A. Hunsberger, Christian Fox, G. M. Wilson, S. A. Arnold, J. B. Henderson. To this Board Barkey & Co. deeded the Academy property for $1,000.00 less than its cost. This created a debt, for the payment of which a canvass was to be made. The second Sunday in May was designated by the Executive Committee as a day to quicken interest in the Academy. While the Board succeeded in liquidating the debt, adverse winds began to blow about 1886, and Loucks stated that there are "grave misgivings with reference to the final outcome to Barkeyville Academy." But the Trustees were so much encouraged that they decided to erect a larger building for a Boarding Hall, at a cost of $3,054.71. The regular income in 1886-7 was $220.25, but this was required for the ordinary expenses. Hence, the debt incurred had to be provided for in some other way. The conclusion was reached to sell stock and scholarships. The title was then vested in the Eldership, which accepted the property and made persistent and strenuous efforts to surmount the difficulties which confronted it. And while Manchester reported a "bright outlook for the future" for the school before going to Findlay, by 1906 the obstacles had gradually become too formidable, the school was closed and the property disposed of.

VIII. FORT SCOTT INSTITUTE.

The original suggestion of establishing an academy at Fort Scott, Kansas, came from C. Manchester, in 1888, and was made to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership, which reported it to the Board of Incorporation, with a recommendation "that Manchester be given the privilege of establishing an Academy at Fort Scott, to be under the supervision of the Board of Education of the General Eldership." The Board, however, "deferred the matter until another and fuller meeting." When O. A. Newlin was sent to Fort Scott as missionary, he began a school there in 1901, and in 1902, on November 19th, the Fort Scott Institute was founded and chartered, with the following Board of Trustees: O. A. Newlin, T. H. Smallwood, J. H. Richards, E. B. Keeling, J. V. Whisler, W. H. Sheets, W. E. Tuttle. A property had been bought and paid for by the citizens of Fort Scott for $1,700.00. The main building was 50x40 feet, with an addition 25x20 feet.

The Academy opened October 21, 1902, with the following Faculty: O. A.

Newlin, Superintendent, and Professor of Theology; C. K. Showalter, Professor in College Department; Mrs. O. A. Newlin, Normal Work; Miss Helen Smith, Music Department. The General Eldership in 1902 gave its sanction to the project, appending this condition: "That said school shall not become a permanent charge to the General Eldership, or any of its Boards." The Elderships west of the Mississippi River, except Iowa, were named as the "patronizing Elderships," which the Principal of the Academy might canvass. In other Elderships he might make appeals to friends by correspondence. Newlin and his successor accordingly visited Elderships at different times, and canvassed for funds. In 1905 the General Eldership again approved the establishment of the Academy, declaring that "its record had confirmed the wisdom of the undertaking as an institution of the General Eldership." It now had property "worth from $3,000.00 to $5,000.00." The Eldership approved the report of the Board of Missions in making Newlin a General Missionary in addition to being Principal of the Academy, and appropriating $300.00 annually for four years. In 1909 it repeated this action for his successor, increasing the appropriation to $400.00. It also required the deeding of the property to the Board of Incorporation. The various improvements and additional buildings increased the value of the property, so that in 1906 it was estimated at from $5,000.00 to $7,000.00, with a debt of $400.00. The enlargement of the Dormitory at a cost of $6,000.00 increased the debt to $4,000.00, which was unprovided for in December, 1912. The school was quite well patronized, the number of students varying from 51 in 1904, to 100 in 1907; but fell to 43 in 1912.

Newlin was born in "the cornbelt of Illinois." He was brought up to hard work; but with a genetic desire for knowledge, he attended the public schools, until in 1897, when as a young man he entered Findlay College, and by perseverance and unremitting industry he worked his own way through College, graduating in the Ministerial Course. He was at once appointed missionary at Fort Scott, where he soon saw what he conceived to be "the need of some place where the young people of the Church of that section of the country could secure an academic education under the influence of the Church." He has always manifested a sincere and loyal love for the Church and its educational interests and institutions. A man of excellent character and fine natural powers, he is capable of constant growth. He has acquired a winning, popular style of public speaking. His descriptions are often glowing and fervid. He lays down moral and religious axioms, based on the divine word, as a foundation, and then proceeds to reason out the practical deductions. He deals largely with the concrete. With his vein of humor, but rather his intense and pathetic descriptions, springs of deep emotion are often touched by his pulpit efforts. His services as pastor at Fort Scott and Principal of the Institute afforded him a good field to develop his natural and acquired powers. It was, hence, with reluctance that church and school acquiesced in his departure.

O. A. Newlin.

Charles Manchester in 1909 was elected Principal of Fort Scott Collegiate Institute, by the Board of Trustees. His experience as Principal of Barkeyville Academy and President of Findlay College gave him special qualifications for this position, so that a member of the Board could say: "We feel a no more worthy or able man could have been secured than Dr. Manchester." He began his work at the Institute with his characteristic zeal and energy. He secured additional property, so that by 1912 the total estimated value of the Institute property was $10,000.00. While he regarded the outlook throughout his four years as President as quite hopeful, there was the constant embarrassment of the need of funds. In part to meet this a Collegiate Institute Day was provided for by authority of the General Eldership. This brought in a total of $1,258.81. Manchester's dominant thought was that Fort Scott Collegiate Institute was needed "to give young men and women," in the southwest of the General Eldership territory, "an opportunity to secure a liberal education under Christian influence." And to doubters he also constantly pointed to the advantageous geographical location of Fort Scott.

The project of establishing a mission school in the Indian Territory was agitated by J. W. Chandler, a successful missionary among the Indians. In 1886 R. H. Bolton was in that country, and in a conservative manner indorsed the matter, stating that about $2,000.00 would be needed, and that a Charter would be required from the Indian Nation Council. This he succeeded in securing. The Texas and Arkansas Eldership in 1887 declared it to be an urgent need to locate a school in the Indian Territory. By direction of the Board of Missions a committee visited the place in 1888, and found that W. N. Littlejohn, and Sallisaw, Ind. Ter., would donate 20 acres of land for the school; that a Bethel was in course of erection, which could be used until school buildings could be erected, and recommended favorable action by the Board. To this the Board would not agree, but it instructed the Secretary to correspond with the Woman's Missionary Society on the subject. In 1892 J. W. Riddle, doing mission work in the Indian Territory, had the project revived. J. B. Pemberton and Henry Perry had "built a house at a cost of $1,000.00, at Redland, Cherokee Nation, which they proposed "to give to the Church free, if it would establish a mission school." Riddle endorsed it, believing that "a splendid school can be inaugurated." It never gained sufficient support to make it feasible.

HISTORY OF MISSION WORK AND MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

The missionary idea is not only as old as Christianity, but it is its essential element. Forms and methods of missionary activity have varied from generation to generation; yet long before Mills, Hall, Judson and Newell had offered themselves for the work of Christian missions, from 1643 to 1808, the Churches had put forth earnest and successful efforts for the conversion of those in their own and in foreign lands. The missionary spirit is the life of the church. Yet one generation often vaunts itself because of its new methods, as if that signified that previous generations had attempted, or accomplished, nothing. The rebuke of this conceit is found in historical facts. When in this revealing light one contemplates with swelling pride the Babylon he has builded, the rails he has laid, the cities he has founded, it is disconcerting to see the man who long before had done the same things, and done them much better. In the past two decades or more it has been often proclaimed that the Church of God did almost nothing for missions prior to 1890 compared with what has been done since. This applies to foreign mission work alone. With different methods the results prior to that year far exceeded those of the later years. Nor was the Church behind other religious bodies in inaugurating mission enterprises and forming missionary organizations, except as to foreign work. The mission work of the Church began with Winebrenner, in 1825, so that by 1830 churches were established by him and his collaborators in a number of counties in eastern Pennsylvania. There were no missionary organizations, or societies; but after the primitive style these heralds of the cross went everywhere preaching the word. Now, prior to 1830 the records of but five Home Missionary Societies in the United States are known. These were the Old School Presbyterian, the New School Presbyterian, the American Home Missionary Society, the German Reformed Board of Domestic Missions, and the Methodist Episcopal Domestic Missionary Society. Between 1830 and 1840 the Church enlarged her borders by the labors of its missionaries so as to include most of the counties in eastern Pennsylvania now occupied, and a number of counties in western Pennsylvania and Ohio. And this work continued with unabating zeal until by 1880 to 1890 more ground was covered than is occupied to-day, on which more than half a score of Annual Elderships were organized. The first half century of the Church was the period of greatest power and most encouraging results.

But methods gradually changed, in harmony with environment and the spirit of the age. These had their effect on the churches of God and their ministry. They imitated the methods and plans of other bodies, and were seldom far behind. This the data at hand will make evident. Between 1830 and 1840 five Home Missionary Societies were organized: the Protestant Episcopal, the Reformed Dutch, the American Baptist and Seaman's Friend Society, and the Evangelical Association. In 1853 the Home, Frontier and Foreign Missionary Society of the United Brethren Church was organized. The churches of God and the Annual Elderships organized societies later, although action was taken in May, 1845, when the General Eldership adopted this resolution: "That this Eldership resolve itself into a Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society." But mission work antedated this action. The East Pennsylvania Eldership (known as the General Eldership from 1830 to 1835) has left no minutes or record of appointments made until its fourth session, in December, 1832, when "a committee was appointed to arrange the preachers on the circuits and stations." Five appointments were made, in the counties of Cumberland, Perry, Lancaster, York and Dauphin. All this territory had been the scene of missionary labors, and parts of it were still unoccupied and to be reached by church extension work. Before this all ministerial work was of a missionary character, as each minister went forth on his mission to plant churches and enlarge the Eldership as organized in 1830. These churches clustered into "circuits," and some of them in 1883 had become "stations." Such charges by anticipation were recognized in the Constitution of the Eldership adopted in January, 1831. It was also provided in Article VII. of said Constitution that "there shall be appointed annually one or more missionaries, whose duty it shall be to visit destitute places, establish churches, form new stations and circuits." Until September, 1836, there was but the one Eldership, and it was without boundaries. It had the United States for its territory, and could send missionaries to any part of this territory. It gave permission in 1835 to "the brethren in Ohio to hold a yearly Eldership." And these two Elderships granted the privilege to the West Pennsylvania Eldership to be organized in 1843. In 1833 the mission work carried on by the East Pennsylvania Eldership had enlarged its occupied territory, that in addition to the five counties in the State above named there was a "station" in Philadelphia, and one circuit in Juniata county and one in Lebanon and Schuylkill counties. The work meanwhile had been extended into Maryland and Ohio, and at this Eldership in 1833 E. West was appointed to "the Maryland circuit," and D. Maxwell to "the Ohio circuit." Instead of Maxwell, Joseph Adams went to Ohio, and in 1834 reported that he "left the churches in a very prosperous condition." In 1835 Thomas Hickernell and Jacob Keller were assigned to the Ohio circuit. The latter brought the petition "from a meeting of Elders in Ohio," in 1835, requesting the privilege of holding an Eldership in Ohio." Thus through the aggressive and enthusiastic work of the East Pennsylvania Eldership a similar body was formed in Ohio in 1836, and a little later, by the co-operation of these two, in the western part of Pennsylvania. In November, 1838, the East Pennsylvania Eldership appointed the first missionaries to western Pennsylvania. These were John Hickernell and E. West. Their fields of labor was called the "Pittsburg Mission," but embraced a large territory north and south-east of the city. The same potent missionary spirit pervaded the Ohio Eldership, so that by 1838 it had four circuits and one mission, and lacked a minister for the Pittsburg Mission; but in 1839 it appointed John Hickernell and Joseph Dobson to said Mission. There is no record prior to 1838 as to the methods employed to secure means to support these missionaries; but the Ohio Eldership in that year resolved "that a missionary fund be raised by subscriptions and collections, for the purpose of sustaining missionaries." It appointed Jacob Keller as agent to work up this fund. Annually public collections were ordered to be taken by the pastors in both Elderships, and in the West Pennsylvania Eldership after its organization.

The Annual Elderships through their delegates carried the same intense missionary spirit into the small body of ministers which in 1845 organized what has ever since been called "The General Eldership of the Church of God [or Churches of God] in North America." On May 30th it resolved "that this Eldership resolve itself into a domestic and foreign missionary society." It then proceeded to adopt a Constitution, the title of which is: "Constitution of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Church of God." The first Article gives it this name. It was further provided that "any person paying annually the sum of fifty cents, or upwards, shall be a member of this Society." "Any person paying the sum of $5.00 for five years in succession, or the sum of $20.00, at any one time, shall be a life member." The "members of the General Eldership who are members of this Society shall constitute the Board of Missions." All the ministers of the Church of God were made "agents to get members of the Society and to receive their yearly, or life, subscriptions, donations," etc. This scheme in theory promised all the needed funds; but it was not workable. It, however, became a pattern for Annual Elderships for years following, and they made strenuous efforts to put it into effect for the General Eldership. It was of no avail, as reports at subsequent sessions of the General Eldership show. Thus in 1848 the Board of Missions reported: "There have been no organizations of societies, and no money received, except what came from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, to wit: $45.23. Consequently no missionaries were employed." Strong resolutions were adopted, urging "the brotherhood to give largely to the missionary cause." In 1851 the Board in laconic terms reported: "Dear Brethren:—Having no means, we employed no missionaries." In 1854 no report was made. The Eldership decided, however, "to appoint a Board of Missions composed of one member from each Annual Eldership, to take charge of all missionary operations outside of the bounds of Annual Elderships," each Eldership to raise funds and place them in the hands of said Board. In 1857 there was again no report; but a committee, consisting of E. H. Thomas, T. Hickernell and S. S. Richmond, was named "to mature a plan of general co-operation in the mission enterprise." It reported, that it be made the duty of each pastor in every Eldership to solicit ten cents per member for General Eldership missionary purposes. Winebrenner, Thomas and Colder were elected as the Board of Missions. In 1860 there was no report made by this Board. Not having lost heart through these repeated failures, the Eldership proceeded to amend the Constitution adopted in 1845, by inserting a clause which provided that "the whole Church shall be regarded as a General Missionary Society, and each local church as an auxiliary." There was also to be lifted "an annual public collection at each church and appointment." In 1863 there was the stereotyped report of "no means, and no missionaries appointed." An appeal was made for collections. In 1866 the Board reported the appointment A. X. Shoemaker to the Chicago Mission, and reappointed him at the session of 1866. At this Eldership, as in 1860 and 1863, a Board of Missions was elected, consisting of five persons, viz.: E. H. Thomas, J. M. Domer, L. B. Hartman, R. H. Bolton, J. H. Hurley. But the Board did nothing, as it had no means.

Thus until 1869, by which time there were organized eleven Annual Elderships, no missionary work was undertaken and sustained by the General Eldership. Possibly there were two reasons for this unwelcome fact: 1. The overlapping of the work the General Eldership purposed to do and that which the Annual Elderships were doing. 2. The greater activity of the Annual Elderships and their incessant appeals for funds. For at no period of their histories did the Annual Elderships labor more assiduously to "possess the land." And their work during these twenty-four years resulted in carrying the banner of the Church into western Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas and Texas and Arkansas. Yet there was a healthy stimulus in the actions of the General Eldership, and its plans were incorporated in Annual Eldership actions. Nor were they lukewarm in seeking to put into effect the plans of the General Eldership. While their own interests were naturally regarded as paramount, yet they gave prominence to the interests of the General Eldership. Thus while in January, 1845, the Standing Committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership requested pastors and churches to see to it that "the missionary collection ordered by the Eldership be punctually lifted," in October at the session of the Eldership a resolution was adopted directing that missionary funds be raised on the plan proposed by the General Eldership in May, and readopted it in October, 1846. And also in May, 1846, Winebrenner exhorted "the ministers and elders in every church to go to work on the plan recommended by the General Eldership," and to "send in the names of life members of the Missionary Society." He insisted that the mission cause is God's cause. It was this in the beginning, and it is still." Others also strongly sustained the action taken by the General Eldership, so that though as to results the delegates were "in the ranks of the losing side," yet they trusted the God to whom they were consecrated, and had the consciousness that they had enriched the world and performed a service beyond the world's ability to pay. Thus "they that stumbled are girded with strength." The East Pennsylvania Eldership consistently aimed to carry into effect the plan of the General Eldership until it became a dead letter. In February, 1847, E. H. Thomas, in the Advocate, asked the question: "Have all the churches formed Missionary Societies according to the plan of the last East Pennsylvania Eldership?" The church at Lancaster had organized one January 1, 1847, and had adopted a "Constitution of the Missionary Society of the Church of God at Lancaster, Pa." But the object was "to sustain missionaries employed by the East Pennsylvania Eldership." The dues were 12½ cents each quarter. Elizabethtown followed in April, 1847, adopting a Constitution similar to that of the Lancaster church. Except as to the organization of local societies, the East Pennsylvania Eldership was in advance of the General Eldership. In 1840 it took action, appointing "a Board of Missions with a view of carrying out a system of Home Missionary operations." It had power to appoint missionaries anywhere. The members were William Miller, Edward West and Jacob Keller. To secure funds each pastor was instructed "to take up two collections in each year for missionary purposes." In 1848 the Board received $138.28, as against $90.37 in 1846. In 1849 the initial steps were taken to send one missionary to Illinois and one to Iowa. As all the funds which had been gathered before were needed to support missionaries within the territory of the Eldership, pledges were called for to support these prospective missionaries to the West. Winebrenner said this is "a day of small things," as he felt the churches and ministers lacked in liberality. In a short time $114.00 were secured, when Winebrenner earnestly pleaded for "a few more pledges, and we can sustain a missionary in the West." The Board this year also received $183.28; in 1850, $241.42. Without waiting for the General Eldership in 1851 to take action on this project of sending missionaries to the West, the East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1851 completed its arrangements to send one missionary to Iowa, three to Illinois, and one general assistant in Illinois and missionary in Indiana. These were A. Megrew, Iowa, $300.00; Illinois, George Sandoe, $300.00; J. M. Klein, $200.00; Daniel Wertz, $100.00; T. Hickernell, General Assistant and Missionary in Indiana, $200.00. The Board employed Wm. McFadden as the Agent to collect funds. It required $1,220.00 that year to meet all of the Board's obligations. The earliest suggestion to establish a mission in Texas is found in The Advocate in 1852. In the Fall of 1853 the East Pennsylvania Eldership acted on this suggestion by recommending that one or two missionaries be sent to Texas, and a general agent placed in the field to collect funds. As was common then, a "pledge list" was at once started, which with what the agent collected amounted to $404.00 by 1854 when the missionaries, B. Ober and E. Marple, were to leave for their distant field of labor. To widen and deepen the interest in these enterprises the Eldership directed that each church should "hold a monthly prayer-meeting to pray for our missionaries." A more systematic and economical method of collecting funds seemed necessary, and so Winebrenner, General Missionary, in 1855 proposed a plan in accordance with which the "Missionary Board adopted a Constitution" giving it authority to superintend the collection of missionary funds. It at once directed that "every local church shall be considered a missionary society, and every minister and member shall be a contributor." To assure the carrying out of this plan, a collector was to be appointed in each church. Winebrenner as the General Collector prepared and published a heading and form to be used by the local collectors. Colder endorsed the plan, and made a stirring appeal. The result as reported to the Eldership was the receipt of $441.66, and in 1856, $761.87. The Eldership directed that "a missionary collector, or two, be appointed in each church by the pastor and elders, and also that a public collection be lifted each year in January or February for all to give." In 1858 it renewed its recommendation, making each church a missionary society, and "each minister and member a contributor." A "subscription list was to be opened at each appointment." This plan was characterized as "an excellent missionary system," and "abundantly efficient." But results were disappointing, as in 1859 the Board of Missions received only $265.74 through these agencies. The Eldership renewed its recommendation, and added that "any preacher who fails to carry out this system is to be censured by the Eldership." But where criminals are the judge and jury there is no enforcement of the law. Yet in 1862 the Eldership directed the organization of what had been called "sub-societies." It considered itself the "parent society," and the churches were to be auxiliary societies. The Constitution made "the duty of all the churches to resolve themselves into missionary societies." This was to go into effect on and after January 1, 1863. The project of sending a missionary to Nebraska was endorsed at this Eldership. I. E. Boyer was secured as the missionary, and $289.57 were raised to support him one year. In 1863 it obligated itself to pay $300.00 annually toward the Chicago Mission, in addition to the $325.00 appropriated to missions in its own territory. With the starting of the Philadelphia Mission in 1866 it began the system of assessments, which finally became its permanent financial system, as also of the General Eldership. It avoided the obnoxious term "assessment" for quite a while, using instead "apportionment." A committee estimated the total amount of missionary money needed during the year 1866-7, and "apportioned it among the churches." The first year it was $1,955.00; the second $2,750.00. The missions in the West were now called "frontier missions." In 1868 the assessment was much reduced because the plan of having a "missionary meeting" one evening at the Eldership proved a surprising success, as individual subscriptions were secured amounting to $1,400.00. The work of the Eldership in 1869 was supplemented by the organization in 1870 of a "Sunday-school Missionary Society," with a plan to raise $300.00 annually, with "the hope of increasing it to $1,000.00 a year." This was to be done by the sale of "Life Certificates" at $20.00 each, and by inducing all the Sunday-schools to give their collections the first Sunday of each month to the S. S. Missionary Society. The Society was organized at the S. S. Convention held at Harrisburg, which was honored by the presence of Governor Geary. Six life members were enrolled. The same year the Eldership ordered monthly missionary meetings to be held by the churches. The other Elderships in the main followed the example of East Pennsylvania, all being equally energetic and enthusiastic, but weaker and possessed of more limited means. Thus the Ohio Eldership in 1843 appointed "Samuel Metzler, S. Hollinger and Samuel Scott a Board of Missions to receive and pay over the semi-weekly collections, donations," etc. In 1845 it recommended a public collection annually for missionary purposes, to be paid to the Board of Missions. In 1848 it organized the "Missionary Society of the Ohio Eldership." Its Board of Missions in 1852 received $115.40, and it supported in part two "domestic" missionaries. The object of its Missionary Society was "to support domestic and foreign missionaries." In 1854 the receipts were $296.29. In 1855 a committee was directed to prepare a new plan to secure mission funds. It maintained the society idea, but incorporated the Life Membership principle, under which notes were secured on which interest was paid during life, or until the principal was paid. There were also "dues" received from others. This became the permanent policy, and when worked by agents duly appointed brought good results. In connection with this it had the first distinctive woman's organization, called "The Ladies' Missionary Society." After the East Ohio Eldership was formed it continued the same policy; but in 1862 it "required each church to form itself into a sub-society," and gave directions how to raise funds. It organized the "Missionary Aid Society of the East Ohio Eldership," of which all the ministers were ex-officio members. Any other person paying 25 cents or upwards was a member for one year; persons paying $10.00 or upwards were life members, and persons paying $100.00 were honorary life members. The ministers were instructed to work up this plan. What was known as "Article 7," being the seventh Article of the Constitution of the General Eldership of 1845, it was insisted upon must be strictly adhered to. The "parent" society idea, with the "sub-societies" was a growth from this germ. In 1866 the East Ohio Eldership established a foreign mission in Canada, without so designating it. It then had $1,360.00 in Life Memberships, and the cash receipts were $207.00. To get into larger towns in its territory it began missionary work in Mansfield in 1870. To raise additional funds it resorted to per capita assessments, making the annual amount $1.00 for the men and 50 cents for the women. The West Ohio Eldership having been part of the original Ohio Eldership, when it was organized adopted the East Ohio plan in the main. But a "Home Missionary Society" was organized in 1858, through which $154.00 were raised the first year, and in 1859, $325.00. In 1863 it formed the "Missionary Aid Society of the West Ohio Eldership," conformed in all particulars to the East Ohio Society. Its object was "to sustain missions in West Ohio." It was proposed by these measures to raise $1,000.00 from 1866 to 1867, and then to have "one minister as missionary on new ground each year."

The West Pennsylvania Eldership, the third annual Eldership to be organized, did not fully co-operate with the General Eldership for several years. Its first move to raise funds under Eldership authority was in 1853, when each pastor was instructed to collect 25 cents per member for the Missionary Fund. It soon fell fully in line, and in 1856 instructed a committee to draft a Constitution for a Missionary Society. In 1857 this "Constitution of the Missionary Society of the West Pennsylvania Eldership" was adopted. It provided for a membership fee of $1.00 a year. In 1858 the Eldership resolved itself into a Missionary Society, and declared that "we regard the Church of God as a great Missionary Society, called upon by divine authority to send the gospel into all the world." The Eldership was to be the "parent" society, and each local church an auxiliary. The ministers were directed to secure subscriptions. In 1865 it began gathering money for a "Perpetual Missionary Fund," and soon had $700.00. In 1866 ministers were instructed to "urge large subscriptions in cash or notes bearing interest for the endowing of a Mission Fund as per previous plan." It started a "frontier mission" in 1869 when D. Blakely was appointed to Missouri. Its first effort to raise funds by apportionment was in 1870, when it resorted to this plan to raise the amount asked of it by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. The Indiana Eldership adopted the methods of the Ohio Eldership. Local missionary work was at first done largely by T. Hickernell and J. Martin. It thus extended its territory southward until the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership was organized. Its largest domestic missionary enterprise was at Fort Wayne, in the interest of which it repeatedly canvassed the churches. When in 1868 D. Keplinger removed to Missouri it agreed to do all it could to support him as its missionary. In 1870 it directed monthly prayer-meetings to be held for missions. The work was said to have "two gratifying features: 1. A more determined disposition to raise means; and, 2. A readiness to seek to take possession of the principal cities in the territory of the Eldership." It had less machinery and fewer organizations and plans than most of the older Elderships. The Michigan Eldership began its missionary operations through general missionaries, to support which the Eldership in 1853 directed that money should be raised by taking subscriptions in all the churches to run for a period of five years. Then the Board of Missions was instructed in 1860 "to adopt measures to raise mission funds." In 1867 it organized a "Missionary Aid Society." In the course of a year it had twenty-seven members, making $270.00. In 1870 it organized itself into a Missionary Society and adopted a Constitution providing for life members and other details similar to those in Ohio. But its means were always too limited to do efficient missionary work. It, however, contributed its proportion to the Chicago Mission, as did all the western Elderships, some of them giving largely. The Illinois Eldership soon after its organization began raising mission funds by public collections at each church and preaching point. But in 1859 it organized "The Home Missionary Society of the Church of God in Northern Illinois," to "prosecute Church extension work in that part of the State." This became a general Society in 1861, known as "the parent Society," and the Eldership directed that in each church a "Missionary Society should be organized to aid the parent Society." The latter held its sessions at the annual Elderships, when subscriptions were received and collections taken, amounting in 1863 to $167.00, and in 1870 to $180.00. Extra-State mission work was forcibly urged by G. Sandoe in 1867. There seemed a providential opening in Minnesota, which J. L. Fasig, who had removed thither from Illinois, regarded as "a fruitful field." Sandoe insisted that "we have the means," and suggested the old method of "a pledge list" through The Advocate to secure the money. He headed the list with $10.00, followed by R. H. Bolton with $10.00. In 1870 the Life Membership feature of other Elderships was incorporated in its system, which supplemented its other agencies to such an extent that it enabled the Eldership to do efficient home mission work. The missionary spirit was characteristic of the Iowa brethren before the Eldership was organized. In 1849 they made strenuous efforts "to swell our pledges in order to sustain a mission in Iowa." Voluntary subscriptions were urged in 1850, and in 1851, when they made a request that the East Pennsylvania Eldership "send another missionary" in addition to A. Megrew, funds were to be "raised in each neighborhood to support the latter." In 1856 the Eldership decided "to form itself into a Missionary Society," and created a committee to draft a Constitution. The pastors were required to preach one missionary sermon at each point on their fields, and lift a collection. In 1859 the sum of $380.00 was secured from Life Members of the Missionary Society. In 1860 the Eldership obligated itself to support one minister to travel as a missionary in the State, and made a call for the man. Outside of the State it was also ready to do its full share, giving not only liberally to the Chicago Mission, but projecting missions in Missouri, in California and in Minnesota. For some years its most efficient, though expensive, method of collecting missionary funds was through Agents, two or three being assigned annually to different districts of the Eldership territory. These brought into the treasury in 1866 the sum of $540.60. Larger amounts were secured by 1868 in notes and from Life Members in the Missionary Society of the Eldership. At the extra session of the Eldership missions was the absorbing topic, and the conclusion was reached "to labor to extend our borders and to occupy as many new points as can be served."

In 1859 the Southern Illinois and Indiana Eldership appointed "a Committee to consider the best and most available means to raise missionary funds." It was concluded to appoint one man in each church to collect missionary money to support one or more missionaries in this Eldership. In 1864 a "Missionary Aid Society" was organized on the Ohio plan. The ministers were instructed to present the claims of this Society to the churches, and to collect funds at each appointment for it. It became interested in a mission project in Richland county, Wisconsin, in 1867, as some Church families had located there, and one of the ministers proposed to join them. In the German Eldership there was no disposition to adopt the new methods of raising missionary funds. It had its Board of Missions as early as 1857, of which George Kimmel was a member. He bequeathed nearly his whole estate to the Eldership, the income from which was to be used in missionary work. In 1859 it did resolve "to form a Missionary Society," but it was not an active organization. At times a strong missionary spirit became evident, yet but little work could be done for want of suitable men. The territory lying eastward and southward was good ground for German missions, and at different periods men were appointed to open missions there; but the territory of the Eldership early began to contract, and nothing in the way of Church extension was effected. Its most auspicious project was the "Susquehanna Mission," in 1867, to which A. Snyder was assigned, with the Eldership's guarantee of $400.00. The money, besides what came in from the Kimmel estate, was raised on the floor of the Eldership and through collections.

The year 1869-'70 marks a new era in the mission work of the Church of God. Up to that date domestic and frontier work was done by the Annual Elderships. At this period the two became separated, with a few exceptions, and the General Eldership took over the frontier work. The Annual Elderships continued mission work in their own territories and according to their own plans and methods. As new Elderships were organized they generally followed the methods of older Elderships from which their first ministers came. Thus their borders were enlarged, new churches organized and fields of labor formed. During the canvass of the Elderships by the General Collecting Agents of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership an effort was made, which was temporarily successful, to revive the original plan of forming missionary societies in every church. The Elderships co-operated with the Agents, and creditable amounts were collected. Many of the Elderships had a General Society with which the local societies co-operated. And in 1882 the Board of Missions suggested "that one General Missionary Meeting be held annually in each of the General Missionary Societies organized." The General Missionary Secretary had somewhat of an oversight of these Societies, and gave suggestions for these meetings. But in 1887 the General Eldership instructed "the Board of Missions in June each year, at its annual meeting, to make an estimate of the amount of money required to carry out the work for the succeeding year, beginning with November 1, 1887, and apportion the same among the several Elderships." While the idea of "assessments" was repugnant to some Annual Elderships, this became the permanent policy of the Board, each Eldership collecting the "apportionment" in its own way. The Board began its active life in 1869. At the General Eldership held at Lancaster, Pa., in that year it seemed to realize that it was an abortive and superfluous appendage unless a change be effected. It accordingly suggested in its Report that, as hitherto it had done nothing, it "be abolished, or else be given the entire business pertaining to frontier mission work into its hands." The Eldership adopted the alternative, and gave the Board all the power it asked. It at once appointed four missionaries. A. X. Shoemaker to Chicago; D. Keplinger, Missouri; George Thomas, South-western Iowa, and P. K. Shoemaker, Kansas and Nebraska. As to "domestic" missions the Board said it "could only make suggestions." It did so, advising the Fourth Street Church, Harrisburg, Pa., "to open a mission somewhere in the western part of the city;" that a mission be started in Reading by the East Pennsylvania Eldership; one in Mansfield by the Ohio Eldership, and one in Indiana by the Indiana Eldership. The method by which the Board might secure the means to support its missionaries, except Shoemaker who collected his own salary, was no doubt suggested by the offer of $25.00 by one brother. The Board, therefore, asked for "free-will offerings to the Lord." Since 1869 it has kept missionaries in its employ each year, sending them to Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, Indian Territory, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Oregon, Washington and Colorado. It was largely through these faithful missionaries that Elderships were established in those States. Perhaps one of the most serious difficulties the Board had to contend against was to secure men wholly consecrated to mission work. Too frequent changes of missionaries resulted, and much labor and considerable means were wasted. To provide means to carry on its work year after year until the apportionment method was used, supplemented by the income from the "Permanent Mission Fund," the Board resorted to one plan after another. In addition to the appeal for free-will offerings used in 1869, it fell back on the measure adopted in 1845 by the General Eldership—a 25-cent contribution per member, which made the giver a member of the General Eldership Missionary Society. Then followed these: Each Eldership to collect according to its own rules; a 10-cent offering from each Church member; a $1,000.00 Fund, apportioned to the Elderships; through missionary collecting agents appointed by the Board; through an organization of sisters in East Pennsylvania in 1873, which undertook to care for Nebraska; General Collecting Agents, and local societies organized by them; special offerings by Sunday-schools during the Raikes Centennial; offerings in all the churches during the Semi-centennial year of the Church. By these methods it succeeded in raising as much as $4,339.31 in cash, and $761.00 in pledges, as in 1875, and smaller amounts in other years, until the present system of assessments was adopted.

The women of the churches came to the front as a distinct factor in mission work in 1873, when on February 24th, Elizabeth R. Gable, Lancaster, Pa., proposed to form a company of "ten sisters to obligate themselves to raise $1,000.00 for the support of two ministers in Nebraska." This was endorsed by the Editor as "an excellent proposition." To interest others in addition to the ten, the proposition was modified in March, so as to permit any number in a given church to combine and make a $100.00 contribution. The project was heartily endorsed by A. X. Shoemaker, President, and R. H. Bolton, Secretary of the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. The first to respond, outside of Mrs. Gable, Mrs. J. Kennedy and Mrs. George Ross, the originators of the plan, was Mrs. P. Loucks, of Alverton, Pa., followed by Mrs. Wm. McFadden, of Harrisburg, Pa. In Iowa the scheme was worked up by Mrs. R. H. Bolton, Mrs. A. McGrew and Mrs. John Huff. By May 15th $900.00 were secured. When the Board met on May 21st, the formal offer of $1,000.00 by the sisters was made, and cordially received, the Board "recognizing in the sisters' missionary movement the promptings and leadings of the Holy Spirit." The Board also recommended "the organization of a Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, with one President, one General Secretary and a Board of Managers." Joined by sisters in Indiana and one or two other Eldershops, the "promise of $1,000.00 was more than kept good." It seemed more difficult to secure the $1,000.00 for the second year, so that when the Board met May 21, 1874, only $600.00 had been secured. This the sisters said would "support the work in Nebraska," and they "hoped to be able to sustain another missionary on some other destitute field." Other sisters enlisted in this cause, as Mrs. J. E. McColley, Indiana; Lydia A. Forney, Harrisburg, Pa.; Martha Zeller, Iowa, each agreed to raise $100.00. So confident was the Board that the sisters would succeed that "it committed the entire State of Nebraska to the Sisterhood, with four appointed missionaries to sustain." The sisters also began working for a "Permanent Missionary Fund," and reported some contributions and pledges in July, 1874. The sisters in quite a number of local churches were now at work, co-operating with the original leaders. They considered it "the most noble work our sisters have ever undertaken." Naturally the idea followed this movement that missionary societies should be organized in the local churches, with a general society in each Eldership. Here was the genesis of the later and more complete system of Woman's Missionary Societies and the Woman's General Missionary Society. In this movement the Indiana Eldership took a leading part, as at its session September 28, 1874, it adopted two resolutions on the subject. One "suggesting the propriety of organizing a Sisters' Missionary Society in the respective churches of the Eldership." The other advising that a general society be formed "among the sisterhood of the Eldership." The Eldership elected the officers of this Missionary Society, thus keeping a close supervision over it. Later this became the State Woman's Missionary Society. West Pennsylvania Eldership had forty-one Sisters' Missionary Societies in 1879, with 432 members, which, by the assistance of the Missionary Agent, S. P. P. Young, raised $9,788.50 by July of said year. Each pastor was "required to preach a sermon in favor of the Sisters' Mission." In 1882 the Eldership "granted the sisters the privilege of forming a General Missionary Society, and of holding yearly meetings." This Society was also "permitted to send a delegation of five members to the Eldership to represent its interests." In East Pennsylvania Eldership the "Sisters' Eastern Missionary Society" was organized in 1879 "to support missionaries in Maine and other sections in the Eastern States." It was formed under the supervision of the Eldership, and the officers were elected by the Eldership. The Illinois Eldership organized a Sisters' Missionary Society at its session in 1882, electing its officers and directing it to "publish its method of raising money." These Sisters' Missionary Societies in many places were either the General Missionary Societies revived, organized by R. H. Bolton, I. W. Markley and others, or their successors. For the General Societies were too loosely and imperfectly organized, and by 1886 were rapidly disintegrating. Hence, the Sisters' Missionary Societies under Annual Eldership control. The former "had been organized in most of the churches of God in the United States;" the latter were more limited in numbers and membership. They gradually changed to the "Woman's Missionary Societies," which first appeared in print in November, 1886, in connection with the Illinois Society. And on December 7, 1886, the Illinois Standing Committee "suggested the propriety of organizing Woman's Missionary Societies in the local churches." In 1887 said Society, having been organized, "requested the aid and sympathy of the Eldership in publishing a missionary quarterly in the interest of the W. M. S. of Illinois." It was called "the State W. M. S.". The name, however, was not generally adopted at that time, for at the Ohio Eldership in 1887 "an evening was set apart for the consideration of the Sisters' Missionary Society's Report of Findlay." This Society changed its title to Woman's Missionary Society in 1888. The "Mission Field," a Department in The Church Advocate, then conducted by C. Manchester, quietly encouraged this change in all the Societies. He submitted the draft of a Constitution of the Woman's Missionary Society of Peaksville, Mo. The East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1888 directed "all the churches having no missionary societies to organize at once." In this Eldership the sisters worked under the order established by the General Eldership Agents, and in close co-operation with the Eldership. It was not until April, 1893, that a general organization was effected, known as "the East Pennsylvania Eldership Woman's Missionary Society." This, slightly changing dates, was true of Societies in some other Elderships, though "State organizations" were advised "if only six or seven workers in a State were present." This conception disregarded the fundamental principle of the State organizations being representative bodies, upon which East Pennsylvania strenuously insisted. In Ohio a State Woman's Missionary Society was organized on September 26, 1889, and a regular Constitution adopted. The Illinois W. M. S. Constitution was closely followed by the Ohio W. M. S. and other western Elderships. In the Kansas Eldership Woman's Missionary Societies were organized prior to 1890, and was preparing to organize a State W. M. S. in the Winter of 1889-90. In Kansas, the Standing Committee in March, 1890, appointed four sisters "organizers of Woman's Missionary Societies in the State." Missouri also took action in May, 1890, to "form a State Woman's Missionary Society," putting the word "Home" in the name.

Woman's Missionary Societies having been organized in nearly all the Annual Elderships, it was natural that when the General Eldership convened at North Bend, Johnson county, Iowa, the organization of a Woman's General Missionary Society would be taken up. While Women's Missionary Societies were organized as early as 1803, the idea of separate organizations for women did not generally commend itself until much later. Especially is this true of organizations for foreign work. The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the M. E. Church was organized in 1869; that of the Reformed Church in 1875; of the Free Baptist Church in 1873; of the Lutheran Church in 1879; of the Baptist Church in 1888; of the United Brethren Church in 1875; of the Evangelical Association in 1891; of the Methodist Protestant Church in 1879. And while the W. G. M. S. of the churches of God was not organized as a Foreign Missionary Society, it has largely become so. The harbinger of this new organization is found in an article by C. Manchester in the "Mission Field" in The Advocate of April 23, 1890. He was then a minister of the Illinois Eldership, with the sisters of which the idea of forming a W. G. M. S., "as we henceforth will call it for short," and was familiar with their plans. A "memorial" was sent out "to ascertain the feeling" on the subject. It came back with nineteen signatures, nearly all from Ohio and Illinois. Each State W. M. Society was directed "to appoint a delegate to go to North Bend June 5th, to present the Memorial" to the General Eldership. The Standing Committees of "Elderships where there are no W. M. Societies" were requested "to appoint sisters who will go to the General Eldership for the same purpose." These directions were complied with by several Elderships which had no State organizations, and by the officials in other Elderships which had State Societies. The Memorial was presented to the General Eldership, which appointed M. S. Newcomer, R. H. Bolton and C. Manchester "a committee to consider it, and report to the Eldership." Also a Committee on Constitution, composed of two women from each of the Elderships of West Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri, with Mary Berkstresser "as a representative of the General Eldership and Mrs. J. R. H. Latchaw as representative of Findlay College." The Committee on Memorial reported a recommendation "that the requests and suggestions of the Memorial be adopted." The Constitution defined the "object of this Society" to be "to promote an interest in missions among the churches, and especially among the women and young people; to secure systematic contributions; to disseminate missionary intelligence, and to encourage the grace of giving." A corollary would be a missionary periodical, and this was regarded now as "a necessity." By "paying $1.00 annually through an auxiliary, or directly into the treasury," entitled "any woman to become a member." To become a Life Member the sum of $25.00 was required to be paid either at one time, or in installments of not less than $5.00. The payment of $100.00 constituted a woman an Honorary Life Member. The "voting members shall consist of the officers of the General Society," which were a President, Vice Presidents, the different Eldership Presidents, who shall be Second Vice Presidents, a Recording Secretary, one or more Corresponding Secretaries and a Treasurer." Provision was also made for a Board of Managers, to "consist of the officers of the Society; the trustees, who shall be chosen from the Board of Managers, and the delegates from the various Societies." This Board was given "power to establish mission schools, select and appoint missionaries, designate their fields of labor, fix their salaries, appropriate the funds of the Society as the cause may demand, working in harmony with the Board of Missions of the General Eldership." The first organization was as follows: President, Miss L. A. Forney; Vice President, Mrs. Anna P. Shaeffer; Recording Secretary, Miss Mary Berkstresser; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Ella Jeffries; Treasurer, Mrs. R. H. Bolton. It became evident within a year or two that there were several serious defects in the Constitution. These were: The partial abrogation of the General Eldership's sovereignty over the W. G. M. S., so that later it could claim to be rather a co-ordinate than a subordinate body; also the possible self-perpetuating power of the Board of Managers. Besides, it lacked elasticity for want of a truly representative element. It was sometimes called "undemocratic," "un-American." In these features were hidden the germs of subsequent troubles and dissensions. In several Elderships Woman's Missionary Societies were organized which could not become members of the W. G. M. S. under its Constitution. This to some extent hindered that general co-operation which all desired. The W. G. M. S. also was not quite satisfied with its relations to the General Eldership. In 1891 it asked that the General Eldership Constitution be amended, "admitting the W. G. M. S. into said incorporation." And the Board of Missions instead of this, recommended "the Board of Incorporation to take the necessary steps to incorporate the W. G. M. S." The amount of funds gathered prior to 1896 was limited. In 1892 the Treasurer reported $144.90. It had a Home and Foreign Mission Fund; but it did little home mission work, except appropriate $100.00 to Fort Scott Mission in 1894, and smaller amounts to other points. Its Home Fund, hence, increased until it reached nearly $2,000.00. Its attention was directed to the foreign work in 1893, when the Board of Missions of the General Eldership took action, approved by members of the W. G. M. S. present, that "the entire foreign mission work of the Church of God be placed in the hands of the W. G. M. S." It also directed the Secretary and Treasurer of the Foreign Fund of the General Eldership to pay over to the W. G. M. S. all the money in his hands. The W. G. M. S. was to pay into the treasury of the General Eldership its entire Home Mission Fund. The W. G. M. S. was to be entitled to one delegate to the General Eldership. And while these actions were not accepted by the W. G. M. S., and so were non-effective, yet the providential trend was in that direction. For in 1894 J. W. Kingston offered himself to the W. G. M. S. as a candidate for the foreign field, and began to qualify himself as a medical missionary. In 1895 it decided to take up the foreign work along with the home work. In September of said year Clara Landes, of Iowa, having dedicated herself to foreign mission work, entered on a regular course of studies at the Brooklyn Institute, New York, for a course of preparatory studies. She was accepted by the W. G. M. S., and approved by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. By February, 1896, arrangements were made to raise an "Outfit Fund" to provide necessary clothing, bedding, furniture, a small library and medicine chest. Miss Landes made tours during the Summer and Fall through nearly all the Elderships from Kansas to East Pennsylvania and Maryland. She was present at the General Eldership at Harrisburg in 1896, when the W. G. M. S. asked that the Constitution of said body be "so amended as to admit a Woman's Board of Missions, consisting of five persons elected by the W. G. M. S., which shall act jointly with the regular Board of Missions on all questions relating to foreign missions, and to home mission work of the W. G. M. S." This was done. Everything being in readiness, Miss Landes left her Iowa home September 24, 1896, for her far distant field of missionary work in India. On her way to New York she stopped over to attend the session of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. October 28th she reached Brooklyn, N. Y., where she remained until November 1st, and then proceeded to Boston, Mass., where she boarded the "Armenian" and sailed for Liverpool, November 4th, and thence to Calcutta, India, from which point she wrote her first message home, on December 22nd. Her record as a devoted, self-sacrificing, efficient missionary in India is worthy of highest praise, and has received strong commendation from other missionaries in India.

Miss Landes was born near Harmony, Danville township, Des Moines county, Iowa. Her parents were devoted Christians, and trained their children in the ways of virtue and piety. She was converted at the age of thirteen, "the only convert of a Winter's meeting" held by A. C. Garner. The meeting was not a failure. An experience when sixteen years of age led her to place unusual trust in supernatural influence and guidance in all that concerned her, for when "all the doctor's remedies were exhausted, she was cured by direct answer to prayer." She became almost a recluse, as "the only place she would go was to church." Having, however, made sufficient progress in her studies, she began teaching school. She further pursued her studies at Denmark Academy, Iowa, and in 1889 she entered Findlay College, and remained several terms. In 1892 she first revealed "to her friends what she felt it her duty to do"—to become a gospel minister. And so in 1893 she went to the annual session of the Iowa Eldership and applied for license. The Committee on License reported, that "after a thorough examination they had found her deeply impressed by the Holy Spirit to do public work for God, and that her field is the foreign work." "A Certificate of Membership" was granted her, and that "she be allowed to preach the gospel within the Iowa Eldership." In 1894 she received a Certificate of Ordination, and was appointed to serve the church at Arthur, Iowa, in 1895, as pastor. This year she attended the annual meeting of the W. G. M. S., held at Deweyville, Ohio, and offered herself as a candidate for the foreign mission field. It was decided that she should spend a year at the Union Missionary Institute, Brooklyn, N. Y., preparatory to leaving for India. During the Summer of 1896 she visited many churches and a number of Annual Elderships, and spoke on the subject of missions. She was a woman of deep consecration, self-reliance and independence of judgment bordering on willfulness. She was inclined to mysticism, and in all her ways and work depended more on superhuman guidance as against the counsels of friends or the dictates of her own judgment. Yet she was extremely modest in her bearing, and most exemplary in piety, and became an efficient missionary.

It was not because the Church of God did not awaken to a consciousness of its world-wide mission, or its duty to bear the gospel message to the heathen, that so little was done prior to 1896. The General Eldership at its first session, in 1845, adopted this resolution: "Resolved, That this Eldership resolve itself into a Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society." The Annual Elderships early in their history took similar action. Ohio in 1848 adopted a "Constitution of a Missionary Society whose object is to send out and support both domestic and foreign missionaries." And in 1857 it directed ten-cent offerings to be taken from each member of the churches for the fund James Colder, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, was raising to educate Ting Ing Kaw, a young Chinaman, and send him back and support him as a missionary in his native country. Considerable sums of money were secured by free-will offerings and pledges for this purpose in the years from 1854 to 1857 from the churches and brethren in East Pennsylvania, Maryland and West Pennsylvania and Ohio Elderships. The East Pennsylvania Eldership in 1857 declared that "the time has arrived to take some efficient measures to sustain a missionary in heathen lands." In 1875 it "commended to the Board of Missions the advisability of establishing a foreign mission at as early a date as it may find it practicable, in connection with the Board of Foreign Missions of the Central Association of the Free Baptist Church of New York and Pennsylvania." This was the beginning of a series of negotiations with representatives of the Free Baptist Church which continued for eighteen years. In 1876 Dr. D. M. Graham, Free Baptist, was present at the East Pennsylvania Eldership and delivered overtures for co-operation with the Society of said Church. To those the Eldership responded, that it would "heartily join in an effort to promote the work of the Lord in foreign lands, as it felt a deep interest in foreign missions." In 1877 Dr. Graham revisited the same Eldership, with Dr. J. L. Phillips, also of the Free Baptist Church, a returned missionary from India. The Eldership was so favorably impressed with their pleas that a committee "recommended that this body organize a Foreign Missionary Society." This was agreed to, and a Board of Foreign Missions was formed, which was instructed "to bring before the Eldership a definite plan of work in foreign missions." The Board consisted of five ministers and five laymen. Phillips was granted the privilege to canvass the churches for funds for the Board. The largest amount he secured from any one church was at Middletown, which gave him $128.00. Altogether he raised during the Winter nearly $1,000.00. This was preparatory to the meeting of the General Eldership in 1878, which Phillips attended. Said body, after hearing the inspiring, earnest addresses of Phillips, decided that "we immediately proceed to organize a Board of Foreign Missions of the Church of God in North America." With this Board, consisting of C. H. Forney, M. S. Newcomer, J. W. Aukerman, R. H. Bolton and W. P. Small, the Annual Elderships were to co-operate. In 1883 the Free Baptist Board of Foreign Missions elected C. H. Forney as one of its members, and later J. R. H. Latchew was a member. He was appointed in 1884 by the General Eldership to be Secretary and Treasurer of its Foreign Mission Fund. Dr. O. B. Cheney and Dr. Ball, Free Baptists, attended the sessions, and strongly urged co-operation. The Eldership resolved "that this body co-operate with the Free Baptist Church in foreign mission work." This was considered by Latchew and others as "our opportunity," as it gave the Church the privilege to send missionaries into the Free Baptist territory to co-labor with theirs. Latchew was instructed to write up the subject of foreign missions, to gather funds, and to be on the alert "for a man" to go to India. As to funds, the first response came from Buda, Ill., to the amount of $3.00. Landisville camp-meeting, East Pennsylvania, came next, with $28.00. The different Elderships endorsed the plan and promised help. Illinois Eldership in 1884 organized a Sisters' Foreign Missionary Society. By April, 1886, Latchew reported the receipt of $515.75. In 1887 Newton Hill, of Kansas, offered to go to India; but on account of his apparently delicate condition the Board did not accept him. At the General Eldership in 1890 Latchaw reported $1,162.00. He was authorized to correspond with the Free Baptist Board of Foreign Missions with a view to securing a field in India apart from their work to which to send the missionaries of the Church. Though so far very little had been accomplished, the Free Baptist Board seemed not discouraged, and in 1893, through its representative, Thomas H. Stacy, submitted propositions for co-operation with it in its work in India. Of the two submitted the Eldership adopted the one which provided "that the Eldership of the Church of God shall be represented on the Executive Board of the F. B. F. M. S. in proportion to its membership and contributions to the foreign work compared with the membership and contributions of the Free Baptist denomination." It also resolved that the Eldership enter at once upon foreign mission work," and named J. R. H. Latchaw as a member of the Foreign Mission Board. The Board of Missions was given supervision of the work. The Board, however, decided, approved by the Eldership, "that the entire foreign mission work of the Church of God be placed in the hands of the Woman's General Missionary Society."

The W. G. M. S. sent out Clara Landes as its first missionary to India, who began her studies and work at the Free Baptist Mission House at Midnapore, India, about January 1, 1897. She at once developed an almost special aptness for work among the heathen, and early began "itinerating," with the ultimate purpose of selecting territory which should be exclusively for the Church of God. In this she co-operated with a committee named for that purpose. In December, 1898, she was in Ulubaria, Subdivision of Howrah District, upon which she finally decided as the territory for the Church. This was approved by the Joint Board of Missions on June 15, 1900. Here she witnessed the baptism of the first convert on May 3, 1900. She has continued her work in Ulubaria ever since, with the exception of a year's vacation at the expiration of her first term. She was quite successful in her work, and the results of her first ten years of faithful, diligent work were most gratifying.

But meanwhile the relations between the W. G. M. S. and certain other Woman's Missionary Societies became more or less strained. The Joint Board of Missions of the General Eldership did not prove as successful an expedient as had been hoped. There was considerable friction, so that some other plan was suggested at the General Eldership in 1899, but the plan of 1896 was continued. There were features in the Constitution of the W. G. M. S. which made it practically impossible for Societies of two or three Annual Elderships to join it. Then the idea of subordination to the Board of Missions of the General Eldership was not agreeable to some of the leaders of the W. G. M. S. Rather a spirit of independence prevailed; a disposition to claim autonomy for the W. G. M. S. Or as later asserted, that said Society is a co-ordinate body with the General Eldership. This developed in such proportions as to have the W. G. M. S. separately incorporated, and to amend its Constitution so as to relax the restraining power of the General Board of Missions. There were serious obstacles to co-operation on the part of several Eldership Societies. This was true of the W. M. S. of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, although Lydia A. Forney, of said Society, had been the first President of the W. G. M. S. for a short time, when she resigned, and later the Treasurer for four years. The East Pennsylvania W. M. S. framed a Constitution on April 26, 1893, and was fully organized at the Eldership in 1894, when Miss Forney was chosen for President, a position she has held ever since. She has also for many years been Missionary Organizer, appointed by the Eldership, and has labored and sacrificed year after year to advance the interests of the Society, of the W. G. M. S., and of missions in India. Mrs. Kate C. Wiley was the first Secretary, and Mrs. R. H. Thomas, Treasurer. These, with Mrs. F. W. McGuire and other true and noble women, have borne the burden of official positions in the W. M. S., and of the W. G. M. S. organized in 1903. The W. M. S. of East Pennsylvania Eldership was very desirous to be affiliated with the W. G. M. S., as was the W. M. S. of West Pennsylvania and the W. M. S. of Maryland. Conditions were embarrassing, but the obstacles to union seemed insurmountable. The W. G. M. S. would not amend its Constitution so as to receive these Societies. But on May 18, 1897, the W. M. S. of East Pennsylvania unanimously asked the W. G. M. S. to be received into organic fellowship with it. Conditions were, however, laid down which rendered such union "impossible." Hence, in July, 1897, this Society requested the Board of Missions of the East Pennsylvania Eldership to petition the Board of Missions of the General Eldership to grant it the privilege of nominating a person or persons from time to time for appointment as missionaries to India, and to guarantee their support. This being granted, the Society was ready to accept candidates. On September 4, 1900, Miss Viola G. Hershey was accepted. She was requested to go to Findlay College for several years, when the Joint Board of Missions would appoint her. On June 19, 1902, A. C. Bowers, licensed by the West Pennsylvania Eldership in 1899, and Mrs. Bowers were also accepted. This was in harmony with Miss Landes's urgent plea to the General Eldership, to send out to India "more missionaries, two men this Fall with their wives." In this work the three W. M. Societies of East Pennsylvania, West Pennsylvania and Maryland and Virginia Elderships co-operated, without formal organic union, as there was no disposition to organize a rival W. G. M. S. either in form or name. "One W. G. M. S." for all the Elderships was the rallying cry of the workers and the churches, endorsed by Miss Landes. The reasons for this position were forcibly set forth by Miss Forney in a paper on "Reasons for co-operation for all our Missionary Societies" read at the annual meeting of the W. G. M. S. in 1901. No action, however, was taken by the W. G. M. S., "because it involves previous action by the General Eldership." Within the W. G. M. S. there was also less harmony than was desired. The cry for union of all Societies, hence, became almost universal, and the manner of securing it, and an equitable basis, became absorbing questions. W. J. Schaner, Conductor of the "Mission Work" in The Advocate, took up the matter and calmly discussed it, as did leaders in the General Eldership by correspondence. Schaner, in January, 1902, stated that "W. M. S. of East Pennsylvania is not a part of the W. G. M. S., the obstacle being the basis of union." In March, 1902, he emphatically urges union: "Let the W. G. M. S. be composed of the W. M. Societies of all the Elderships," which was the original design. And in her letter to the General Eldership of 1902 Clara Landes says: "Oh, that I could do or say something to help bring about union." This was the atmosphere in which the General Eldership convened at Idaville, Indiana, on May 28, 1902. The matter pertaining to the W. G. M. S. was referred to the Board of Missions, which brought in a unanimous report, in which it recommended: 1. That a convention be held at Findlay, Ohio, in June, 1903. 2. That said convention shall consist of delegates to be elected by each Eldership W. M. S., in number not greater than one-third the delegations from their respective Elderships to the General Eldership; but each Society shall have at least one delegate. 3. That it shall be the purpose of this convention to organize a Woman's General Missionary Society, adopt a Constitution therefor, and fix the ratio of representation. It further defined certain rights and powers of the proposed Society. The discussion was participated in by members of the W. G. M. S., who were made advisory members of the Eldership for this purpose. When the yeas and nays were called on the motion to adopt the Report they stood: Yeas, 60; nays, 4. That the action was not wholly approved by some members of the W. G. M. S. was made evident before the final vote, and was emphasized when later a resolution was adopted by a vote of 27 to 26, "Instructing the Treasurer of the W. G. M. S. to turn over to the Treasurer of the General Eldership all Home Missionary money now in hand," which was $1,862.67. Yet this was the identical action approved by leading members of the W. G. M. S. and the entire Eldership in 1898. It was an unavoidable corollary of the actions touching the proposed W. G. M. S., as it was to supercede and displace the W. G. M. S. of 1890.

So generally was this action sustained as a wise and efficient plan for the settlement of all past difficulties and for united and harmonious work in the home and foreign field that the positive sailing for India of three more missionaries was cause for congratulation. The Societies co-operating together to send out the three additional missionaries went to work with added zeal and courage. Money was soon collected for "outfit" and for "voyage" Funds. And by October 15, 1902, A. C. Bowers and Mrs. Bowers, and Viola G. Hershey were aboard the steamer "Hanoverian" in Boston Harbor, ready to sail for Liverpool. Thence by rail to London, whence, on October 31st, they began their long voyage to Calcutta, India. Thence to Midnapore, and to Ulubaria, which they reached about the middle of December, where they "received a hearty welcome." Miss Hershey was a native of Lancaster county, Pa., a member of the church of God at Landisville. She was a young woman of excellent character, which had for its chief adornment a meek and quiet spirit and devout godliness. In addition to her home and common school training, she spent nearly two years at Findlay College in special studies for her future work in India. She was a lay missionary, having never been ordained to the ministry. She had sufficient self-reliance to brave unflinchingly the hardships of missionary life among the heathen. And she had a strong body and good health, an important qualification for a foreign missionary in a hot climate. Mrs. Bowers was not so robust; of quiet demeanor; a devout Christian and a faithful missionary's wife, ready to prove herself a help-meet to her husband in heathen lands. Bowers was a member of the West Pennsylvania Eldership, and was recommended as a young man of good natural talents, fair acquirements and a consecrated life. He had those traits of character which made him resolute in the face of dangers and difficulties, and which also might bring him into conflict with others equally firm in their convictions.

With these missionaries, appointed by the Board of Missions upon recommendation of Societies not in fellowship with the former W. G. M. S., working together in India, it seemed an auspicious hour for the Convention to meet to frame a Constitution and organize the one W. G. M. S. of the General Eldership in which all Eldership Societies would be represented. While there was quite general approval of the plan proposed by the General Eldership, there was some opposition, at first based largely on the action respecting the Home Fund of the W. G. M. S. But it was reasonably assumed that this would disappear when the Convention would meet and do its assigned work. By May, however, there were foretokens of more or less serious trouble, as the W. G. M. S. was called to meet at

A. C. Bowers and Wife, Miss Viola G. Hershey.

Columbia City, Indiana, but a few days before the convening of the delegates at Findlay, Ohio, where "very important business" was to come up. The opposition was led very largely by Mrs. M. B. Newcomer (nee Berkstresser), who at Columbia City was re-elected President. She was a regular ordained minister of the Illinois Eldership, having been licensed by the Standing Committee in December, 1880. She soon thereafter began writing for The Advocate in the way of a reporter of news of Church and Eldership work. She developed a vigorous, clear style of expression, and soon became a public speaker of acknowledged power and logical force. She was for a time Illinois Eldership Correspondent. A native of Illinois, she spent most of her time in that State. She was a regular pastor at Buda, Charleston, Martinsville and other points, and the assistant of her husband on other charges. In 1883 she was elected an alternate ministerial delegate to the General Eldership, and was also chosen to deliver the annual opening lecture of the Ministerial Association of the Illinois Eldership. In the Fall of 1886 she became a student at Findlay College. In 1887 she attended the General Eldership, before which body she preached one of the evening sermons. In 1889 she was elected a lay delegate to the General Eldership in 1890, of which she became a member. Her excellent character, her marked abilities and her qualifications as a public speaker and leader gave her prominence and influence in every capacity she was called to fill. Her presence at Findlay, though not a delegate to the Convention, was felt, in that she could do much to make or mar the work of that body. It convened on June 12, 1903, in the College Chapel. The enrollment of delegates showed that seventeen were present, to wit.: East Pennsylvania, 5; West Pennsylvania, 2; Ohio, 3; Indiana, Iowa and Illinois, each 2; Kansas, 1. A temporary organization was effected, with Mrs. C. M. Ritchie, of Illinois, President; Mrs. D. C. Komp, Secretary, after which Mrs. Charles Manchester was chosen President, and Mrs. G. W. Stoner, Secretary. The Committee to draft a Constitution was Miss L. A. Forney, Mrs. R. L. Byrnes, Mrs. Huldah Doyle, Mrs. D. C. Komp, Miss Lessie Landes, Mrs. C. M. Ritchie, Mrs. Abbie Dean, being one from each Eldership Society. With one unimportant amendment the Constitution reported by this Committee was adopted after long deliberation. It was then approved by the Board of Missions. Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning, June 15th and 16th, were spent in the organization of the new W. G. M. S., which consisted of the following officers: Miss Clara E. Stare, President; Mrs. Abbie Dean, Vice President; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Huldah Doyle; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. G. W. Stoner. Board of Directors—Miss L. A. Forney, Mrs. C. M. Ritchie, Mrs. Charles Manchester, Mrs. Alice Geddes, Miss Clara E. Stare. There was no disposition to disparage the work of the former W. G. M. S.; but with exemplary generosity its successful work was recognized. However, "in the union of all our Societies, according to the plan of the General Eldership," it "recognized a greater force to carry on our mission work." In the same sentence it commended "the great sacrifice that our missionaries, Miss Clara Landes, A. C. Bowers and wife, and Viola G. Hershey are making." Thus the work outlined by the General Eldership in 1902 was carried into effect by the thorough organization of what said Eldership in advance called the "Woman's General Missionary Society," to take the place of the former W. G. M. S. The Annual Eldership Societies, or State Societies, were not disturbed at all, only their allegiance was changed, and they were now to co-operate with the new W. G. M. S. The old W. G. M. S. was declared to have finished its work, and the results were to be turned over to the new W. G. M. S., to take up the work in charge, as also that of the Societies in eastern Elderships which could not work with the former W. G. M. S. The new W. G. M. S. was representative, modeled after the General Eldership. Under it all Societies could work satisfactorily. This result had been long and earnestly desired, and it merited the faithful adhesion and co-operation of every Eldership and every State or Annual Eldership Society. The brotherhood endorsed the actions taken at Findlay by an overwhelming voice. But even during the session of the Convention there was visible on the horizon a small cloud which was the augury of the coming storm. One of the delegates from Iowa resigned "as a member of the Standing Committee," and the other delegate was substituted in her place; but she also resigned later, and both ceased to co-operate with the Society. Mrs. Joseph Rice, of Danville, Iowa, was chosen to fill the vacancy on the Standing Committee. An earnest, active, loyal woman who, with others, maintained her allegiance to the General Eldership. The officials of the former W. G. M. S. at once began active work to reform their ranks; to create sentiment against the new W. G. M. S.; to maintain their organization; to hold western Societies in co-operation with it, and to retain possession of the mission field in India. In this they were so far successful as partly to divide the Ohio State Society; to capture a few Societies in Illinois, and to hold the Iowa State Society. But even in "Iowa there were many loyal members and ministers, who were not in sympathy with the actions of the former W. G. M. S." All other "State organizations of W. M. Societies fell in line with the new W. G. M. S." Also all the Elderships, except Iowa, which was divided. Clara Landes, either of her own volition, or through home influences, declined to accept the appointment from the new W. G. M. S., and to turn over to it the work in India, and cast in her lot with the former W. G. M. S. And before the middle of December, 1903, "the President of the former W. G. M. S. ordered Clara Landes to give the new missionaries," regularly appointed before the new W. G. M. S. was organized, and welcomed to Ulubaria, India, in 1902, "notice that they must vacate the mission home in India, and seek a home elsewhere." They accordingly removed, and temporarily located at Chandernagore, Bengal Province, India, while selecting a permanent field for future work in accordance with instructions from the W. G. M. S., in August, 1904. Bogra District was finally selected, in the eastern part of the Province of Bengal, with an area of 1,359 square miles, about 200 miles north of Calcutta. The town of Bogra had a population of 5,000, and there they established their headquarters. Bowers and Mrs. Bowers, and Miss Hershey reached Bogra in February, 1905, and since then have continued their work in that District, though Bowers proved unfaithful, and in the Fall of 1907 accepted work under the American Baptist Missionary Union, of Boston, Mass. During the Winter of 1903-4 the lines became clearly drawn, and one of the most acrimonious controversies began that was ever conducted in any ecclesiastical body in recent years. To gain better vantage ground in the fight the former W. G. M. S. secured a legal Charter from the State Department of Illinois. In April, 1904, it instituted legal proceedings "to prevent the General Eldership W. G. M. S. from using its name and collecting money under its name." In Illinois one of the most devoted and efficient supporters of the new W. G. M. S. was Mrs. Clara M. Ritchie, of Warrensburg.

She was a native of Illinois. Raised a Congregationalist, and at her conversion, when fifteen years old, joined said Church. Three years later she was immersed and united with the Baptist Church. At the age of twenty-two she became acquainted with the doctrines of the Church of God, and in 1871, with her husband, she became a charter member of the Fairview church, and a few years later she and her husband were instrumental in organizing a church of God in Warrensburg. For a numbers of years she was a school teacher. She always possessed a missionary spirit. At North Bend, Iowa, in 1890, she assisted in the organization of the W. G. M. S., and was a trustee for many years, and at various times was a member of its Board of Missions, as in 1896 when Clara Landes was sent to India. In 1903 she became a member of the new W. G. M. S., and was elected Secretary of the Board of Directors, a position she has since held. She was equally active and prominent in organizing the Illinois W. M. S. in 1886. Of versatile talents, she has for twenty-five years been active in the journalistic field. She rendered excellent service in behalf of the new W. G. M. S. not only in the Illinois Eldership, but in Missouri, Kansas, on the Pacific Coast and elsewhere.

In June, 1904, the first formal "effort was made by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership to end the unfortunate controversy." The Board manifested a strong disposition to go the fullest length consistent with loyalty to the General Eldership's action in effecting harmony and causing "a cessation of hostilities." But results of the most limited character were possible. The old W. G. M. S. was determined to maintain its organization and continue its work in India. As the General Eldership was to meet in 1905, the thoughts of all were turned to that body for a solution of the perplexity problem. The Iowa Eldership took official action, petitioning said body "to set apart a special time during the session, sufficient for a free and deliberate consecration of the relative merits of any and all grievances of the W. G. M. S. of 1890 relative to the acts or actions of the General Eldership, or any of its Boards or Agents." Instead, however, after some brief discussion, a committee was created, consisting of C. H. Forney and I. A. MacDannald, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership; C. T. Fox, of Ohio; G. W. Byrnes, of West Pennsylvania; I. W. Markley, of Indiana; J. S. Walls, of Illinois, and C. Fatland, known as the Judiciary Committee, Special, which was to present "what in its judgment would constitute a good and reasonable basis for general co-operation in carrying out the plan agreed upon in 1902, and put into effect by the Convention at Findlay in 1903." There was no receding from the position taken in 1902. The Committee's Report recognized the right, under Article XVIII. of the Constitution, of the Missionary Society, or Board of Missions, of any Eldership to employ, send out and support foreign missionaries; but under such rules and regulations as may be approved by the Board of Missions of the General Eldership. Under this Article it granted the Iowa W. M. S. and certain local societies in Illinois and Ohio to continue to support Clara Landes and her co-laborers, "all meanwhile laboring for general co-operation." The Home Fund was also directed to be paid back to the former W. G. M. S. so as to remove this "grievance." Suggestions looking toward ultimate union in co-operation with the Society organized in 1903 were also made. The Report was unanimously sustained. It did not result in the peace, harmony and union expected, though most magnanimous in its provisions. It was soon misconstrued, largely misapprehended, and became the occasion for the renewal of the strife in a more virulent form, though it secured the approval of every Annual Eldership. The most radical misconception was that it gave a new lease of life to the former W. G. M. S.; that it gave it official recognition, and that the General Eldership now had two W. G. M. Societies. Under this misapprehension the old W. G. M. S. accepted A. B. Chamberlin as "a candidate for the foreign field" in 1905, and in June, 1907, reported his appointment and the reappointment of Clara Landes as missionaries to India. This the Board of Missions disapproved, unless they would co-operate with the W. G. M. S. of 1903. Though they would not agree to do this, the former W. G. M. S. employed them and sent them out. Miss Landes arranged to return to

A. E. Myers.

America on a vacation, leaving India the 19th of April, 1906, and reaching Vancouver May 29th. Because of the indisposition, and even opposition, of the former W. G. M. S. to formulate a practicable basis of unification of the two Societies, on April 25, 1906, a "Commission" was appointed to do this work, composed of the members of the Judiciary Committee, Special, of the General Eldership of 1905. It met at Findlay, Ohio, June 12th. A Basis of Union was agreed upon, and was signed by all the members. It was reported to the Board of Incorporation, every member of which was present, and after a few minor changes the Roll was called, and every member voted for its adoption. It was then to go to the Societies for approval. But as the Board of Missions had adjourned to meet at Danville, Iowa, to confer with Miss Landes and the Board of Managers of the old W. G. M. S., it was placed in its hands. Before this meeting the basis was approved by the Board of Directors of the W. G. M. S. of 1903. It was disapproved by the Board of Managers in actions submitted to the Board of Missions: "We cannot endorse the plan submitted by the Commission." It expressed a "readiness to confer with the representatives of the Society of 1903." Three members of said Society being present, conferences were held, but were fruitless. Discussions in The Advocate were resumed, and every phase and aspect of the subject canvassed from the view-point of loyalty to the General Eldership. The Commission resumed its work, and its conclusions were generally approved. All the Annual Elderships adopted resolutions in unison with the propositions it submitted. Its final actions were sent out by the President Secretary from Harrisburg, Pa., December 22, 1908, and every item was adopted by a vote of 6 to 1. They were approved by the Executive Board of the General Eldership; submitted by that Board to the General Eldership at Fort Scott, in May, 1909, and, together with "The Final Action on the Missionary Question," were adopted by yeas, 63; nays, 0; absent, 5. This officially eliminated the W. G. M. S. of 1890, and required all Woman's Missionary Societies, local and State, to unite with the loyal Societies and co-operate with the W. G. M. S. of the General Eldership.

This unsettled condition from 1903 to 1909 militated seriously against the foreign mission interests. And as the time was approaching for Miss Hershey to return home on furlough it became a matter of concern what to do to continue the work in Bogra, India. But at the meeting of the East Pennsylvania W. M. S.

in October, 1907, the offer of "Miss Leah Becker to become the companion of Miss Hershey, was accepted, she having been in India for nine years. This in a measure filled the vacancy occasioned by the capricious defection of Mr. and Mrs. Bowers in 1907. In June, 1908, Miss Mary Witsaman, of South Milford, Ind., applied to the Board of Directors for appointment as missionary to India, and was accepted.

Miss Witsaman was converted at the age of seventeen years, and at once began to work for the Master. Her education was obtained in the common schools of Indiana, and at two institutions of higher learning from which she held certificates. In other ways she availed herself of all possible privileges for self-culture. Being impressed as early as 1906 that foreign mission work was her sphere of Christian endeavor, she surrendered her will to the divine will, and began preparation for her chosen calling. After touring to a limited extent among the churches, assisting in gathering funds for an outfit and the voyage, she sailed for India the latter part of October, 1908, reaching Calcutta Friday, November 13th, and the following Monday proceeded to Bogra. Mrs. Becker returned to the United States in 1909, and united with the church of God at Mt. Joy, Pa., having formerly been in fellowship with the Christian and Missionary Alliance. She expressed a desire to return to India as a missionary for the churches of God. She was accepted by the W. G. M. S., and on November 12, 1910, "sailed for far-away India to again take up the missionary work." Miss Hershey expressed a desire to have a furlough of one year, beginning in the Spring of 1910; but she agreed to defer her return another year, until her term of service should expire. Miss Becker having arrived at the Mission Station in India, Miss Hershey made all necessary arrangements, and on February 12, 1911, embarked for her native land, landing in San Francisco, California, April 13th, reaching Harrisburg, Pa., April 22nd. She spent a year and six months in America; not a year of rest, but largely a year of activity and mission work. At the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the W. G. M. S. June, 1911, Aaron E. Myers made application to go as a missionary to India. He graduated at Findlay College in the class of 1911. He was accepted, but was directed "to pursue a course of special study for one year." He was a member of the church of God at Elizabethtown, Pa., and had been ordained to the ministry by the East Pennsylvania Eldership. An unassuming young man of exceptional character, with fair natural talents, of robust health, he gave promise of usefulness in his new field of labor. In the Spring of 1912 Howard W. Cover, native of Highspire, Dauphin county, and pastor of the church of God at Columbia, Lancaster county, made known his determination to enter the foreign mission field. A graduate of Findlay College, for three years pastor of the church at Columbia, he was qualified intellectually and spiritually for mission work. Being of fine physique, there was promise of ample strength for the self-denials and hardships of life as a missionary in India. On Tuesday, October 22, 1912, his marriage to Viola G. Hershey was celebrated at the home of the bride's parents,

Mrs. O. B. Huston.

Long Villa Farm, near Landisville, Lancaster county, Pa. Farewell services preparatory to sailing were held at Harrisburg, Highspire, Elizabethtown, Landisville, Lancaster and Philadelphia. On October 31st the three missionaries boarded the steamship George Washington and sailed for Cherbourg, France; thence overland through France and Switzerland and Italy, where on December 4th they embarked for Colombo, South of India, and reached Bogra on New Year's Day, 1913.

During these ten years of unremitting care and disinterest labors on the part of the W. G. M. S. organized in 1903, there were encouraging indications of success in the foreign field. At home evidences of confidence multiplied year by year. Unexampled harmony and unanimity of sentiment prevailed in the Society, and a spirit of earnest co-operation spread throughout the Elderships. Much of this was due to the judicious management, as well as to the mild and gentle temperament of the leaders in the work. There were few changes in the personnel of the Society and its Board of Directors. It had but three Presidents in the ten years. Miss Clara E. Stare served in that capacity from 1903 to 1909. She was a native of Decatur, Ill., whose father was a prominent layman of the Church in that State. Mild and of a domestic disposition, she possessed those virtues which invite friendship and affection, but do not so much dazzle the public eye. Only because she declined to serve longer, notwithstanding importunities from all quarters, was her successor, in the person of Mrs. C. I. Brown, elected in 1909. Susan Hoffman Brown, wife of Dr. C. I. Brown, "who went at noontide, when life is so full" to the better country, served only about four months. She died September 9, 1909, and was buried near her childhood home, at Woodbury, Bedford county, Pa. She was a woman of fine character, of excellent judgment, of good talent and of Christlike spirit. For some years prior to the organization of the W. G. M. S., of which she became President, she was prominently identified with the foreign mission work in East Pennsylvania. In 1903 she was one of the five delegates from the East Pennsylvania W. M. S. to the Convention to organize the new W. G. M. S. From that date to the close of her beautiful and useful life she ceased not to do her full share of the work of the Society. On January 5, 1910, the Executive Board of the W. G. M. S., by correspondence, elected Mrs. O. B. Huston President of the Society and of the Executive Board. The wife and widow of a faithful, loyal minister of the Illinois Eldership, she had years of training for Christian work. She had proved her fitness for her new position by her diligence and efficiency in the discharge of her official duties. Her work in connection with the Illinois W. M. S. and local societies where her husband was pastor recommended her for higher positions.

DIVISION VIII.

HYMNOLOGY.

"The divine spirit of poesy," says Sherwood in "The History of the Cross," is "incarnated in large portions of the Old Testament Scriptures, and in the genius of such men as Milton, Dante, Watts, Cowper, Toplady and the Wesleys, and which has found expression in many grand old hymns of the Christian Church." By the sacred songs of these renowned men a hymnology slowly accumulated through the centuries as a priceless inheritance to the church. Great has been the influence of these sacred songs on the tastes, the devotions, the religious sentiments and the spiritual development of the church. Pre-eminently the Christian religion is the religion of music and song. Paul speaks of the singing of psalms and hymns and spiritual songs in such a way that his words have been by some interpreted to place these compositions on an equality with canonical Scriptures, including all Christian hymns which grow out of the word of God. They have been at least the poetic medium through which to give expression to the devotional feeling of Christian hearts. This is eminently true of the hymns of Doddridge and Watts, the Wesleys, Luther, Knox and scores of others. Many of them possessed rare lyrical excellence, and breathed the religious fervor of believing hearts, and became expressive of the varied Christian experiences of millions of devout souls. Hymnology relates to the hymns and sacred lyrics composed by authors of a particular country, or period, or of authors, or of any particular Church. Modern English hymnology has been regarded as "the beginning of a new dispensation in the Christian church." Watts is recognized as its founder, and the most prolific authors of sacred song are found in a cycle of seventy years of which he is the center—1713-1783. About two hundred other hymnists have made contributions to hymnology in small quantities, though of such a character that the church will not suffer their hymns to die. Hymnals are a little over four hundred years old, for it was in 1505 that the Unitas Fratrum (Moravian Church) was the first to publish a hymn-book in the Bohemian language, which contained versions of old Latin hymns, together with many original compositions, mostly by John Huss and Bishop Luke, of Prague, who was the editor. These hymns were a power in the Church and in the land; gave public life to worship; were familiarly sung by nobles and peasants in their homes, and they set forth the gospel in strains which captivated the hearts of thousands in the Catholic Church. The first English edition of the Moravian Hymn-Book was printed in the United States in 1813. In other Churches hymn-books were at first generally published by individual publishers, or firms. This was true of the United Brethren Church. Its first hymn-book was published in this way in 1807, and the first English hymn-book ordered by its General Conference was published in 1849. The same incidents are a part of the history of the Evangelical Association. Its first hymn-book was published by John Walter in 1810. In 1816 a large work was compiled under authority of an Annual Conference, and accepted by the General Conference.

Winebrenner followed in the steps of these pious men, though he published his first hymn-book relatively much earlier. In 1825, before churches of God were organized, he published a song-book entitled: "A Prayer-meeting and Revival Hymn-Book; or, a Selection of the Best Psalms and Hymns and Spiritual Songs from Various Authors, and for the Use of Social Prayer-meetings and Revivals of Religion." An epitome of the nature of the work in which he was engaged is revealed in this title. It was "entered in the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, 1825." It was a pocket edition, and its popularity is seen in the fact that in 1848 Winebrenner issued the tenth edition, and it continued to be the only hymn-book of the Church until 1859. It was the private property of Winebrenner. He was one of the best compilers of hymn-books of the century. As early as 1841 an effort was made by the East Pennsylvania and the Ohio Elderships to buy the stereotype plates of this hymn-book. It was what now is called "a monopoly," of which all the profits went to Winebrenner. The desire prevailed to secure this "monopoly" for the Church. Under official actions by these Annual Elderships subscriptions were taken for a Fund to buy the plates. Slow progress was made.

and so in 1849 Winebrenner published "a new and improved edition of the German and English Revival Hymn-Book." Again in 1853 another edition was issued, although the General Eldership in 1848 directed that a committee should be appointed to compile a new hymn-book, combining with it a Sunday-school hymn-book. The Ohio Eldership in 1843 had already taken some steps to the same end. It created "a committee of nine to act with reference to the preparation of a Church Hymn-Book." This was done after the plan to buy from Winebrenner the plates of the Revival Hymn-Book had failed. Winebrenner was not averse to the Ohio idea; but he insisted that the three Annual Elderships should work together; that a joint committee should be appointed. Under the caption—"Co-operation Defended"—he wrote two editorials which would apply at any time when there were divided counsels. It developed into a somewhat sarcastic and virulent controversy, as it largely hinged on the matter of net proceeds which should go to the Church to be used in supporting missions. But in July, 1844, Ohio yielded, and asked for a Joint Committee. In 1848 the question was not agitated at the General Eldership. But in 1851 the West Pennsylvania Eldership took up the matter, and declared that "we need a selection of hymns approved by the General Eldership, and published under its authority." The same year the General Eldership "appointed Winebrenner to make a collection of hymns for the new hymn-book." The project lay dormant for three years, when in 1854 the General Eldership directed the Board of Publication to publish a hymn-book, to be the property "of said body." Winebrenner began its compilation, but he was not expected to do the work without remuneration, and the Board had no means even to pay him the $300.00 promised for his part of the work. In July, 1855, he reported that "the manuscript was partly completed; but there are no funds to proceed." August, 1855, it was announced that the new hymn-book project was "still slumbering." It was estimated that the first edition would cost $2,000.00. In November, 1855, a pro rata division of this amount was made, as follows: East Pennsylvania, $716.66; West Pennsylvania, $300.00; Ohio, $444.44; Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, each $179.63. If these amounts were promptly raised the book could be off the press in the Spring of 1856. This was not done, and the matter went over to the General Eldership of 1857, when the progress made was reported, and the statement made that "now only the means are wanted." After considering sundry plans to secure the means, an apportionment of $1,500.00 was decided upon, as follows: East Pennsylvania, $600.00; West Pennsylvania, $200.00; Ohio, $350.00; Indiana, $100.00; Illinois and Iowa, each $125.00. As the Elderships at once proceeded with their work after the Fall sessions of 1857, Winebrenner and the Board of Publication resumed their labors with renewed diligence. The work was to be ready by May 1, 1858. But delays followed. May 11, 1858, Winebrenner announced that "I have partly finished compilation and indexes;" but it was not until a meeting of the Revision Committee in October, 1858, when Winebrenner "presented the manuscript to the Committee." The Committee "highly praised" the work. Winebrenner stated that he had used "great pains to get up a superior and standard work," which no competent critic could call in question. Waiting for funds, in March, 1859, George Ross, member of the Board, announced that the "issue of the Hymn-Book in a few months is a fixed fact." May 12th another bulletin announced that "400 pages are already stereotyped." July, 1859: "The Hymn-Book will soon be ready for delivery." But patient expectancy was so wrought up that when the Illinois Eldership convened, October 1, 1859, it put on record on its Minutes that "a stray copy of the new Church Hymn-Book found its way to our Eldership." The Eldership was "highly pleased." Ohio said: "It more than meets our expectations." This was the common sentiment. The first edition of 1,984 copies was exhausted by New Year's, 1860, and a second edition of 1,515 was printed in January, 1860. Winebrenner deserves the highest praise for the almost perfect work he did in the preparation of the manuscript of this Hymn-Book. It is true that some of the hymns are "perfectly frigid versification," and others only "versified doctrine;" little blame attaches to the compiler, for such defects are found in all hymn-books.

The Church Hymn-Book with all its superior features did not retain its popularity long. As early as 1875 the General Eldership heard and heeded the "demand for a hymnal," or a "Church Hymn-Book with suitable music." A great change had come over the spirit of the churches; an age of whims; a capricious, hysterical, frivolous age. It demanded frequent changes, some of the popular song-books lasting only a few years. Few of them had new hymns which had in them the breath of immortality. Their standard of poetry was not exalted. Sherwood criticises them as "containing too much 'gush,' 'sentiment,' human passion and machinery. There is less Christian doctrine, or serious, pious thought in them, less of the divine flavor, and richness, and depth and varied experiences." They do not compare with those rare and inspired hymns of Watts, and Cowper, and Toplady, and the Wesleys, which are found in all our best Church Hymn-books, and which have contributed so largely to the edification and spirituality of God's people in ages past. It was, however, the cry for music with the hymns which created the demand for a new song book. Hence, the resolution considered by the General Eldership in 1875 ordered "the Board of Publication to compile and publish a Hymnal, or the Church Hymn-Book with music." While it failed of adoption, the question would not rest, and in 1877 the Illinois Eldership and several others instructed their delegates to use their influence in favor of publishing a Church Hymnal. It was considered an "absolute necessity," as the Church Hymn-Book was being displaced by popular music books. As a result of this persistent and general agitation the General Eldership in 1878 appointed C. H. Forney and M. S. Newcomer a committee to be added to the Board of Publication, and instructed them to provide a Hymnal for the use of the churches of God. Later, in 1881, George Sigler was added to the Committee. Becoming impatient of delay, in October, 1879, the Executive Board called attention to the action of the General Eldership. In June, 1880, the Incorporate Board did the same, and desired to know why the Board of Publication failed to carry into effect the action of 1878. Annual Elderships took up the subject in the Fall of 1880. But the members of the Committee were quietly at work, and on December 7, 1881, it announced that it had "completed its work, and the book is in the hands of the printer." February 22, 1882, the new Hymnal was ready. The verdict on the work of the Committee was "generally very favorable."

Winebrenner had some talent for poetry. Not only as a judge of good religious poetry; but also as a writer of hymns. He wrote a dedicatory hymn which was used when the Lancaster Bethel was dedicated. In 1855 he published a dedicatory hymn:—

"On Bethel's solemn ground,
Great God, we've met to-day,
To dedicate this house to Thee;
To preach, to sing and pray."

And a little later another:—

"Here stands another Bethel."

He also wrote an "Eldership hymn":—

"Indulgent God of love and power,
Be with us at this place and hour;
Smile on our souls, our plans approve,
By which we seek to spread Thy love."

His hymn on baptism is partly hortatory:—

"People of the living God,
Walk the way that Jesus trod;
Down into the water go,
Be baptized, your faith to show."

One of his revival hymns was an earnest prayer:—

"Spirit of God, Thine influence shed
On us, and all around;
Hallow this place, and bless Thy word,
Make every heart to bound."

A prayer-meeting hymn was a devout prayer:—

"Teach us, O Lord, aright to plead
For mercies from above;
O come and bless our souls indeed
With light and joy and love."

He also wrote a hymn on Feet-washing:—

"The Church of God believes it right
To think and do as Jesus bade,
When on that dark and doleful night
He gave His law, and plainly said."

Not less than a dozen of these hymns were put in The Church Hymn-Book; but only the last one is in "The Church of God Selection of Spiritual Songs."

J. W. Weishampel had a vein of poetic sentiment, and wrote some very good verse. Two of his productions are found in The Church Hymn-Book. The one on Feet-washing:—

"Behold! our blessed Lord
Met with His chosen band,
And said to them in act and word:
'Keep this, my plain command.'"

It then rehearsed in rhyme the incidents in John xiii. The other one is on "The Heavenly Reunion," with a sprightly chorus:—

"Ye saints of God below,
Lift up your longing eyes;
And let your thoughts to glory go,
Away beyond the skies."

His earliest published hymns appeared in The Gospel Publisher, when in 1840 he became its Editor:—

"When Jesus left his Father's throne,
Where he in brightest glory shone."

In 1848 he published in The Advocate one of his best poems on "The Institution of Washing the Disciples' Feet." It had some similarity to Emerson's Threnody, considered one of the finest productions of this versatile genius. Another one the same year on "The Existence of God" has recognized merit. One on "The Expiation," in 1852, is quite superior:

"In the morning of creation it was said by God and prophet,
That the world should know redemption, by a sacrifice divine."

He published a number of camp-meeting and prayer-meeting hymns in German when he was Editor of The Kundschafter. In humorous vein was his lyric on "The Red Shirt." One of his last, and the most pathetic of all his poems, was headed: "How is it Now?" "on the happy death of E. H. Thomas":—

"By the side of the bed where the sick saint lay."

It has been well said that "poetry's future is immense." And this is true of the churches of God. There have been many of its ministers who have essayed to write poetry. This is natural, for poetry is the strongest part of what is called religion, because "in the very broadest and grandest sense that can be given to the words, poetry is religion." Besides, the diffusion of the poetic talent is more general than is frequently supposed, and if there are few poets of high distinction, there are many versifiers of more than mediocre ability. One of the earliest writers of the Church who sought publicity, after Winebrenner and Weishampel, was Wilhelm Bauermeister, a German preacher. In 1841 he published a poem of eleven stanzas, entitled, "A Pilgrim":—

"Arm ist hier mein stand und leben,
Leidensroll und oft betrübt;
Doch min Gott had es gegeben,
Weil er mich so sehr geliebt."

He was followed in 1849 by two ministers of widely divergent tastes and temperaments. S. B. Howard was argumentative rather than poetic. He lacked the power of poetic imagery. He wrote, "Where is Wisdom?"

"Tell me, ye pilgrims of earth,
Ye sages learned, or sons of mirth,
Ye men of wealth, or fame renown—
Tell me where wisdom may be found."

The other was H. L. Soule, a Perry county, Pa., farmer's boy with exceptional poetic powers. This was revealed in song and sermon, in his hunger for classic poetry, in his descriptive faculty. But he was not disposed to write poetry, but appeared twice, at least, in print. In 1849 he wrote "Lines on the death of Sister Megrew":—

"Weep not for her, Jehovah saith,
For I will take her by a stroke;
Bow to the scepter of my power,
And be submissive to thy lot."

In 1852 he wrote a fine poem entitled, "Ode to Death," which has some resemblance to passages in Dante's "The Vision."

In 1851 John A. Plowman, a matter of fact man, published a "Baptismal Hymn":—

"In the writings of the gospel an ordinance we find,
And in the third of Matthew this ordinance enjoined;
Enjoined on all believers who witness, like the Son,
Who came and was baptized by his forerunner John."

In 1855 James Colder published a "hymn" to be used at a "Musical Festival" held at Mt. Joy, Pa., February 5, 1855:—

"We come, O God, thy praise to sing,
And name thy goodness, rich and free;
With heart and life we tribute bring—
May it acceptance find with thee."

And in 1858 he composed a hymn doubtless to be used in the Sabbath-school, entitled

"A Song of Welcome."
"Welcome, friends, welcome all,
Whom here to-day we meet;
Your presence fills our hearts with joy,
And makes our labors sweet.
Awhile we leave our happy homes,
And to this lovely place,
With joy in every heart we come,
A smile on every face."

Three years earlier, in 1855, Geo. W. Wilson published his first poem:—

"The Returning Sinner."
"What a wretch, O Lord, am I!
Made of earth, and born to die;
Must endure eternally
Peace or endless misery.
Thou to me a law hast given,
Perfect as the light of heaven;
But against the law I sin—
Most rebellious I have been."

He did not re-enter the domain of prosody until 1880, when he published "From Shore to Shore." A few months later, December 29, 1880, he published

"Memorial of Dr. George Ross."
"Awake! Awake! of muse of sacred song,
An elegy prepare of this sad news!
Put on thy mourning habit, dark and long;
A solemn dirge to sing; do not refuse!
Hark! from the East the mournful news we hear
Of one that's fallen by the hand of death!
A man, a Christian; yes, a brother dear,
His soul surrendered with his mortal breath."

There was good sentiment in it, but as poetry, open to criticism. Wilson was a reasoner; he was not a poet. Yet beginning again to woo the muses in 1902, he published a half dozen poems in as many months. He continued at intervals to publish his poetic productions during 1903, numbering nearly one dozen. There was nothing frigid or dull about them. They were sententious, strong in expression and elevated in conception. But they were mainly versified doctrine. He was a vigorous, trenchant writer, and probably no reader, and less a student, of poetry. In July, 1906, the shadows were growing long, and in that month he published:—

"Reflections on the Near End of This Life."

"A few more steps below, and then
My earthly race is run;
So near the end of life, that when
My work will all be done,
I'll go to my eternal rest,
With all the ransomed and the blest."

This was his last contribution, and on February 6, 1907, he went to that land of which in its closing couplet he sang:—

"And by a living faith I see My rest, my home eternally."

In 1861 another poet of the younger generation of preachers, who had little taste for fiction or poetry, was tempted to clothe his thoughts in rhymes. He had done so years before to read to near associates to a much greater measure; but in 1861 he gave to the public a poem entitled:—

"There Shall be No Night There."

"Rejoice, O ye children of sorrow, rejoice,
For a time will soon come, saith Jehovah's voice,
Wherein there shall be neither day, nor yet night,
But the darkness, now thick, shall be flooded with light."

This was followed by the song, adapted to some popular music often heard some years before, entitled:—

"The Saints' Rest."

"Far away in glory
Where the angels sing,
In their heavenly beauty
With their King,
Are the holy mansions
Where the saints shall rest
Free from cares, forever blest."

Chorus:—

"Then to the Father,
Jesus their King,
Unceasing anthems
They shall sing;
For the blood that bought them
And the grace that saved,
Bringing them to heaven, their rest."

This was followed in December, 1861, by

"The Unfading Choice."

"No time so fair that will not wear
Upon our natures frail;
So golden morns which grace adorns,
Will soon with age be pale.

"Oh, then in youth walk in the truth,
Prepare for worlds on high;
Hear Wisdom's voice, and make the choice,
That crowns you when you die."

Evidently his lute broke, for its sounds were not heard thereafter, though for many years Editor of The Advocate, and a copious writer.

And now after a lapse of years "young Lochinvar comes out of the West," in the person of M. S. Newcomer. The hymnody peculiar to him was characterized as a rule by emotional and rhythmical language. It was not mere rhyme, but was often strikingly metrical. It was artistic in form, subjective and meditative. Much of his poetry which appeared in print was not intended for singing, but consisted of odes of a good degree of beauty and power. He first appeared in print on January 28, 1880, with a poem entitled "The Hour Cometh," written on the accidental death of a Christian brother in Missouri. It contains some noble strains. He wrote the Semi-Centennial Hymn, used at the services held at Philadelphia, which was "authorized to be sung by every congregation at the Memorial services in October." He wrote a "Poem" which was read at the laying of the corner-stone of Findlay College in 1884:—

"Rising temple, speed thy glory!
God has set thy pillars fair,
'Neath the gild of song and story,
In the secret place of prayer.
Thou art but the milestone speaking
To the rushing flood of years,
As we hasten thou art keeping Record of our hopes and fears."

The mixing of his metaphors was one of the defects of Newcomer's poetry; but the literary expression was quite superior. In March, 1897, he published

"The Day is Breaking."

"The stars are fading from the sky,
The purple glints the golden light;
Tears can not dim the wakeful eye,
Which sweeps the breaking vault of night.
They are not dead! Though now they seem Merged in the pledge of Summer's dream:
The day is breaking, let me go!"

Many of his poems were published in "Golden Gleanings." Some of these were like the blast of a trumpet, while others were on subjects which gave "the wide horizons grander view." He was ambitious to fill a larger place in the hymnody of the Church, and on the Committee to publish the Hymnal he expressed a desire to write a number of hymns. But the book being a "Selection" of a hymnal published by Scribner & Co., with no alterations except the insertion of a dozen hymns on Feet-washing, this could not be done. However, the Hymns Nos. 830 and 832 were written by him.

Another Illinois minister composed and published a few poems in 1889. J. Bernard was moved to write in verse on the Johnstown flood, a task which demanded talent of a high order.

"The Conemaugh Wail."

"The waters rushed through the Conemaugh
Swifter than the eagle flies;
Many to untimely deaths did go
Under the surging tides.
And many wept in the Conemaugh
When so many to untimely deaths did go."

In August of the same year he wrote "Rachel Weeping for Her Children." A month later he wrote:—

"Hero of Calvary."

"Thou hero bold of Calvary,
Lift high thy crimson shield;
To all proclaim thy victory,
Make all thy foes to yield."

Bernard had the two angels of sincerity and conscience to guide him in his poetic dreams, but powers of imagery were not developed.

An ode to the steamship "Furnessia," caught in a storm at sea, on which T. W. Bellingham was returning to the United States, inspired him to write, in January, 1896:—

"After a Storm at Sea."

"Furnessia, thou brave and gallant ship,
On thee we stand, and patiently do watch and wait,
Until the star of hope shall rise and sit Across the pathway, bringing blessings while we wait."

It has been said that without meter and without form there can be no poetry; but these alone do not constitute poetry. As the religious element predominated in Bellingham he excelled in writing hymns. He was a member of the Ohio Eldership. In September, 1897, he published:—

"Power From on High."

"The Savior of men, who on Calvary's tree
Purchased redemption for you and for me,
Rose from the grave triumphant and brave,
And now reigns in glory, the sinner to save."

On a few occasions A. P. Stover, of the East Pennsylvania Eldership, ventured into the field of poetry. For the issue of The Advocate of January 2, 1901, he wrote:—

"The Closing Century."

"The years have come, the years have gone,
And many changes have been wrought;
The men of brains and thrift have done
That which of old the fathers thought."

He wrote a hymn to be sung at the services incident with the preaching of the Opening Sermon of the Eldership in 1901 at Mt. Carmel, Pa., when he was pastor.

L. B. Hartman, of Ohio, had the poetic temperament, but was deficient in the facilities which must accompany it. He published a poem suggested by his sermon, "The Trilogy," to be sung to the tune—Chestnut Hill:—

"The work of God you see,
Divided by the Lord;
So made of parts just three,
According to his word.
To each of these an ordinance stands,
Mid Zion's walls, by Christ's commands."

In 1876 he published, in lighter vein,

"Voices of the Storm."

"I love to hear the rattling rain
Beat wildly on my window pane,
And echo back the night's refrain
When day is lost in night."

J. Dennis, of Maine, wrote some verses in 1874, one on

"Washing Feet."

"Oh, that my Lord would count me meet
To wash his dear disciples' feet."

W. N. Yates, a few times, while minister in Philadelphia, Pa., composed poems which were well received by the readers of The Advocate. Gifted with the power of vision, of imagination, and of easy expression, were his tastes in the line of poetry or hymn-writing, he would stand equal with the best in the Church. In May, 1901, he published a short poem in two parts: "The Preacher's Sunday Morning"—"The Preacher's Monday Morning." The latter reads:

"The holy day is past. Some hearts believed
The story, and put their faith in Jesus Christ.
But scattered here and there is a doubting Thomas,
Who declares he never will believe until he sees
The sermon practiced. So now, dear Lord,
Help me this week to live in such a way
That in my body may be seen the marks
Of this same Jesus. Until the doubter,
Seeing Christ in me, may cease to doubt,
And call him Lord."

E. Tatman, of Indiana, essayed to write some hymns for publication. The first, "A Dream of the Last Day," lacked in the metrical element, and gave no evidence of adequate powers of imagery for so awe-inspiring a subject. When he appeared in the role of a hymnist, in December, 1899, it was in

"A Call to Duty."

"Zion's walls are falling,
Many watchmen are asleep;
Jesus he is calling,
Go and feed my sheep.
Will you go, my brother?
Or will you stay at home?
Shift your duties on another,
And let the sheep still farther roam!"

Better was his

"I Am Crucified With Christ."

"I am standing at the cross,
Down by the Savior's side;
The world to me is dross,
With Christ I'm crucified."

H. W. Kruzan, of Illinois, who was licensed in 1898, began the publication of hymns nearly a year earlier, on November 17, 1897, on "A Resurrected Hope." In some of his hymns were found flowers of literature most fragrant. He seemed to possess a picture gallery of pure imagination, stored with lofty and lovely images. He never desecrated his high powers, nor burned incense before unhallowed shrines. His second poem, December 8, 1897, was:—

"The Beautiful City."

"I hear of a beautiful city
With streets that are paved with gold;
With walls that are of jasper,
And wonders yet untold.
They say this city lies over
Death's dark and gloomy way,
And that 'tis heaven so glorious,
One bright, eternal day."

He also wrote "Christmas," and a touching sonnet about "my little boy, climbing on my knee," saying, "Papa, sing for me to-day." And possibly out of a sadder heart was born the elegy, "Only a Lock of Hair," which was "worth to him more than gems or gold." His "Memories of Childhood" touches a responsive chord in every heart. Prominence was given in The Advocate to

"Am I Contented?"

"I dream by day; yes, fondly dream,
And as I dream I ask:
Am I contented with my lot,
Each toilsome, irksome task?
Life's sunshine, is it bright enough,
Or would I change its hue?
Am I contented? This I ask
Each hour the long day through."

With equal power of penetration he wrote "Mother, Home and Heaven," "I Shall Rest," "Tis Night," "He is Risen," and "At the Window," and a half dozen more.

During the period Kruzan was making his contributions to the Church's hymnody, three other poets for a day shone in the ecclesiastical skies. The first was H. D. Boughter, a student at Findlay College, who published, April 5, 1899,

"A Voice From Heaven."

"There comes to man in accents sweet,
The voice from God the heart to greet;
Oh, listen to the strains of love,
Descending from the throne above."

W. W. Anderson, West Pennsylvania, on May 10, 1899, gave to the readers of The Advocate

"Then and Now."

"With trembling soul I used to sing:
 'Simply to thy cross I cling';
 But now on solid rock I stand,
 And walk with Jesus hand in hand."

The President of Findlay College in 1900, C. Manchester, sought to illustrate the dictum, that "the poets, better than any other moral teachers, lead us to 'the great in conduct, and the pure in thought.'" He wrote other poems, but on March 21, 1900, he published

"Four Tests."

"We ask for honor and power,
 But shrink from drinking their cup,
 We go to Jesus the Master,
 To ask for a place higher up.
 We long to sit at his right hand,
 We want his glory and fame,
 But shun the path of the Master,
 Who went to glory through shame."

"Faith in the Coming of Christ" was the subject of a poem by H. D. McIntyre, January 22, 1902:—

"I see the golden city with unclouded eyes,
 I see the holy angels descending from the skies;
 I hear the voice of Jesus that summons home his blessed,
 Farewell, farewell to death and grave, we enter into rest."

In November, 1900, B. D. Eden's name, of West Virginia, appears as a poetical contributor. As a prose writer he manifested certain attractive peculiarities. There was a cheerfulness and vivacity in his pulpit discourses which prepared his readers for piquant poems from his pen. His first contribution was

"Sin vs. Grace."

"What is this that makes me lame,
 That burns my soul with lasting shame,
 And makes me dread that precious name?
 Sin!"

He wrote "Advocating The Advocate," and "Too High," also in the interest of The Advocate, both about the Holidays of 1900. Three years later he again took as his theme: "Take The Advocate." But on March 30, 1904, he selected a theme better suited to metrical versification, and wrote

"My Grace is Sufficient for Thee."

"When the burden of my soul
 Called for the sighs and tears,
 Jesus heard my humble prayer,
 He took away my fears."

C. D. Rishel when pastor at Carlisle, Pa., in 1895, put his Christmas thoughts in poetic phraseology in a lyric called

"Farewell Old Christmas Day."

"Yes, Christmas comes, and Christmas goes,
 Like Autumn winds and Winter snows;
 Like rippling brooks and ringing bells,
 The glorious news it always tells.
 It tells us of a Savior's love,
 Who came with good intent to earth,
 To give to man immortal birth."

A new name appeared among the poets in June, 1901. Forney O. Eakin wrote

"God in Nature."

"God made the lilies fair,
 And every flower that blooms;
 The birds are from his care,
 He decked them all with plumes."

And two years later he published

"The Church Tramp."

"A tramp's a man without a home,
So far and near his feet do roam;
No aim in view, he wonders on,
He begs a crust, and then is gone."

In the next eight years more than that many new aspirants for poetic laurels came into the open. Chas. T. Ishler, of Illinois, May 13, 1903, wrote

"Courteousness."

"The verdure of earth comes forth in its season,
The trees rise forth from the sod;
The entire universe reveals infinite reason,
Because back of all is the infinite God."

F. W. Whittington, of Arkansas, on June 1, 1904, published

"Our Departed One."

"We sat with her when dying,
And tenderly held her hand;
And listened with eager yearning,
To catch the words she said."

During 1905 and up to March, 1906, W. H. Engler, of Maryland, published eight poems, of different metrical forms. The last was a heart-prayer:

"Stay Thou With Me."

"Stay thou with me, blessed Savior,
While my days are passing by;
For I see the shadows near me,
And the night it draweth nigh."

One of the pioneer missionaries to Texas, E. Marple, much later in life ventured into the inviting realm of poetic composition. He published two hymns, one on January 24, 1906, on

"The End."

"When the evening shades of life are come,
And life's work is nearly done,
Through many days of toils and cares
From the days of youth they were,
Even down to hoary hairs,
But how sad the end is here."

The other was "An Evening Song," which he sang February 17, 1909. He was far more of a logician than a poet.

T. M. Coleman, of Iowa, on May 2, 1906, without "the electric flame of the poet's genius," composed and published a readable poem, with a chorus, on

"Christ's Second Coming."

"Our Savior is coming once more to the earth,
And coming with power to cleanse it from death;
All sin will be banished and death flee away,
With joy, then, and gladness we'll hail the glad day.
A day long expected and loved by his saints,
O glory hallelujah! he heard their complaints,
And banished their sickness, sorrow and pain,
And nothing can hurt them, or grieve them again."

Geo. M. Hulme, West Pennsylvania, on May 30, 1906, gave to the public a production entitled:—

"The Lord Bless Thee."

"How shall he bless thee?
Not with earth's vain, empty blessing,
Joys that fade in their possessing;
Not with earth's poor, scanty treasures;
But with blessings of him
Whose light can not fade, nor dim."

A lyric poem, of rather exalted sentiment, was published by J. W. Kingston, Ohio, in January, 1902:—

"Mother's Grave."

"Step lightly here, for sacred clay
Enriches well this place, and Makes it bear a force that is not seen.
'Tis not such clay as turns from ploughman's share;
But such as well compounded
Holds in its solution a ruby pearl."

On June 13, 1907, Findlay College observed its "Silver Jubilee," on which occasion S. G. Yahn, President of the Board of Trustees, delivered the "Jubilee Address." He closed it with a poem of three stanzas, of which the first is quoted here:—

"As we calmly view the bygone years,
And the pathway marked by toil and tears,
God's guiding hand we plainly see,
In this, the year of jubilee."

As a close, careful thinker he shines with a luster he could not acquire as a poet, for he is numbered with the "Men who possess opinions and a will;

Men whom desire for office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office can not buy."

The author of "Burning Themes," O. A. Newlin, then of Fort Scott, Kansas, is the author of what might be called a sermon in rhyme, which has been well commended. It is

"The Passion of Christ."

"For three full years our Savior trod
The dusty plains, to work for God;
Without a pillow for his head,
No sumptuous table for him spread."

He has poetic ideals, and has given to the public other productions of greater poetic merit.

While this limited hymnology of the ministry of the Church of God lacks the merit to make an epoch, it has in its measure fulfilled the true conception of the aim of poetry: "To console the afflicted; to add sunlight to daylight by making the happy happier; to teach the young and gracious of every age to see, to feel, to think and therefore to become more actively and securely virtuous."

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Bibliography is a science which deals with the description of books, including details of authorship, editions, dates, etc. It is not necessarily general, or exhaustive. It may be restricted to a language, to an age, to a country, or to a Church, or subject. With this liberty the Bibliography of the Church of God will be limited to books, pamphlets, sermons, tracts and like publications of ministers of said body in so far as they have been reviewed or advertised in its periodical publications. As nearly as may be they will be arranged chronologically under the names of their authors.

I. Winbrenner, J. A Compendium of the Heidelberg Catechism; or, Method of Instruction in the Christian Religion, as the same is taught in the German Reformed Church and schools in North America. A. D. 1822. 47 pages.

Prayer-Meeting and Revival Hymn-Book. German and English. A. D. 1825. The title was changed in later editions, a number of which were published, as this was the Hymn-Book in use by the churches of God until 1859.

A Brief View of the Formation, Government and Discipline of the Church of God. A. D. 1829. English and German editions. Byrnes and W. B. Allen. 50 cents. Introduction to the Revised Edition by C. H. Forney.

Christian Baptism. A sermon delivered by Elder John Winebrenner at Harrisburg, Pa., August, 1830, on the occasion of his own baptism. A revised edition, with Introduction by C. H. Forney, was issued by the Board of Publication of the General Eldership in 1873.

A Reference and Pronouncing Testament, with a Gazetteer. "Ready for delivery" April 29, 1836.

Sermon on Baptism. Preached in the City of Lancaster, Pa., on a Baptizing Occasion, in the Bethel of the Church of God, on the 17th of December, 1842. A new edition was published by the Board of Publication in 1878.

In 1859 he completed the compilation of The Church Hymn-Book, and superintended its publication.

"Letter on Slavery, and Various Rejected Articles Addressed to J. Colder" were published in pamphlet form in 1858.

X. Hartman, L. B. In 1860, he delivered a sermon on the Ordinances, which he enlarged and published with the title, "The Trilogy of Gospel Ordinances."
